THE JUNIATIAN

Vol. XLVI, No. 2 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | September 26, 1969

Student Leaders Discuss Plans for Upcoming Year

by Mary Schmoyer
Lee Denlinger

After a vigorous game of volley ball, thirty JC student leaders assembled to discuss issues of concern to the Student Government and the student body. Sally Palmer, vice-president of the SG, opened the proceedings at Camp Blue Diamond Thursday, Sept. 11. She said that the purpose of the conference was to give direction to the student movement throughout the year.

The Rev. Robert Faus, the key speaker for the conference, told the group that the students were a part of the educational process and must be involved as leaders. This, he said, is the trend in higher education. At Juniata, the issues involving students, faculty, administration, trustees and alumni are trivial. The concern, especially of the campus ministry, should be an interest in the integrity of the total context of education—i.e. the classroom, dormitory and campus.

Campus cooperation is the answer to avoid the loss of communication. Lack of cooperation results in the formation of revolutionary and reactionary positions, the former representing demonstrations and the latter representing solidification. Rev. Faus said that confrontation and polarization were needed. Juniata students must find ways to overcome barriers to rid the campus of the "we" and "they" groups.

The faculty, administration and students must become involved in the total process of education. In this educational community everyone is a human being beyond which he plays a certain role. There must be a sense of community of all the people involved in the educational process.

Following a short discussion, President Stauffer explained the functions of the Task Force Committee, which was initiated at the end of the spring term. He explained that its main function is to examine the purpose of the institution. By the unanimous approval of the faculty members of the committee two students will be invited to become members. This is to be another step in the direction of the administration giving response to student needs.

After supper, the most important part of the conference occurred. The students broke up into four committees to discuss plans and resolutions which would become the basis for student government actions this year. The four committees each had a specific area to discuss. Two committees were Juniata Education: Present and Juniata-Curriculum: Future. It was the functions of these two committees to discuss and evaluate education at JC now and to make suggestions to improve the educational system. Among the subjects discussed were comprehensives, the pass fail system, student leaves of absence, deficiency notices, educational resourses, required courses and methods of educational evaluation.

The other two committees were concerned with other aspects of student life at JC. These committees were Juniata: General and Juniata in the future. Discussed on a campus level were topics like Student Government effectiveness, student elections, the lack of campus communication, punishment for alcohol on campus and "Frosh Regs". Finally, they discussed the problems of disadvantaged students at Juniata College and the lack of student involvment with the real college power, the Board of Trustees. The discussions on these subjects continued intently from 6:30 'til 10 p.m. A campfire-snack was held and afterwards the student leaders relaxed, played cards, and finally slept.

Cont'd on page 4

Rev. Rosenberger Leaves Juniata For Pastorate

The Rev. Clarence H. Rosenberger has accepted the call of the East Petersburg Church of the Brethren to be their pastor, starting Sept. 1. This congregation is located five miles north of Lancaster. Rev. Rosenberger, director of church relations at Juniata College since 1954, replaces Rev. Alan L. Whitacre.

Harold B. Brumbaugh, vice president, expressed "gratitude for the fifteen years during which you have given effective leadership to our program of church relations. The benefits to the College and the three church districts cannot be measured in statistics."

Active in community and church affairs, Rev. Rosenberger was recently cited for his outstanding work as chairman of the 1967 Cancer Crusade in Huntingdon County. He is on the Middle Pennsylvania Church of the Brethern District Board, chairman of the District Historical Committee and a member of the Men's Fellowship Cabinet.

Born in Lansdale, Pa. and educated in the Lansdale public schools, Rev. Rosenberger graduated from Juniata with a B.A. in 1936. He received his B.D. degree in 1941 from Bethany Theological Seminary and did graduate study at Temple University (1937) and Garrett Seminary (1941).

In the summer of 1945 he helped to organize the first "Heifers for Relief" shipments and served as crew chief on the "Zona Gale" the first relief ship to arrive in Trieste.

Prior to joining the Juniata College staff, Rev. Rosenberger served pastorates in Ohio and Indiana as well as Pennsylvania. His last pastorate was the Scalp Level Church of the Brethren, Windber, Pa.

As director of church relations at Juniata, Rev. Rosenberger arranged for the appearance of faculty and students in "Juniata Day" services in local churches. He was the first full time representative in church relations at Juniata College.

During the summer of 1968, Rev. and Mrs. Rosenberger toured the Middle East and Nigeria. A daughter, Joyce who is a Juniata graduate, is teaching in the Waka Schools in Nigeria.

The Rosenberger's have a son Bruce, a graduate of Juniata and of Bethany Seminary, who is presently parish minister at Bellville, Ohio and another son Bryan D., who is a student at Juniata.

Mrs. Rosenberger, the former Ida Rae Neiderhiser of Mt. Pleasant, is also a graduate of Juniata and was a junior high school teacher of English in Huntingdon.

Spirit of '73 . . .

Frosh Week Reveals Disunity

"Freshman Week" has drawn to a close and with it went some memories, as always, for the class of '73. Looking back one can only proffer a guess as to the success or failure of this week of initiation. Clashes between upper classmen and the Frosh resulted when they were ordered to button, practice air raids and mostly when the traditional raiding of the Arch occurred. An added attraction of this years calesthentics was a drill sergeant who obviously had the Frosh responding to his commands, or did he? Shouts of '73 could be heard as the Freshman boys went barrelling towards the wall of upperclassmen in the arch, who never-the-less restrained them. However, a few injuries were sustained as six Frosh pushed their way through to the other side. Terminating the week was the Frosh Court which was cancelled due to some dissention among the troups.

photo by David

Frosh women put up a courageous struggle, in the spirit of '73, against overwhelmed elder Indians.

As with any class, natural leaders arise during the first attempts to unite the class. Two such up-and-coming Frosh are Bruce Ketrick and Frank Pote, who both believe hazing and dinks were a good idea for promoting class unity. There is good spirit in the class of '73 but it does not seem to be in a unified direction. Each feels that the Freshman guys have potential but did not or could not take part in the "festivities" at hand due to new study habits and dorm life. Thirty to forty of them did show up for the raid on the Arch and were backed by the spirited girls of '73 who always outnumbered the guys at everything except the meals.

A number of the Frshman of the Freshmen had a marked dislike for the initiation they received. Jeff Laudenslager did wear his name tag and dink earlier in the week, but became a conscientious objector when he "got sick of it," not, however, because he was treated unfairly at any time. Many other Frosh followed suit. There was a lack of '73 dinks on campus and, with upperclassmen taking for souvenirs, many Frosh just had to go dinkless.

As the first week has passed and dinks are now mere decorations on walls, plans are underway for the Freshman float for Homecoming in order to unite the class and enable it to survive admid the hoards of upperclassmen.

Unsolved Campus Issues May Result In Increased Collegiate "Activity"

by Paul Keely

California's Governor Ronald Reagan has predicted a significant amount of collegiate "activity" this fall relative to the draft and the war in Vietnam; he foresees, concomitant with the commencement of the 1969-70 academic year, a resumption in the raising of that ever-growing voice of student dissent.

In view of the trends in student demonstrations with respect to issues both national and local over the past years, Gov. Reagan has probably made a pretty safe prognosis. Chances are that "activities" on college campuses across the nation will reach new heights, for most targets of protest remain unmitigated.

Here at Juniata life has been somewhat more active, relatively speaking of late, perhaps to some extent because of the growing awareness on the parts of various student groups intent upon gaining their own various ends. The difficulty of determining just what is in store in terms of issues on the Juniata campus this year might be lessened a bit by a review of the major concerns of last year.

Incoming freshmen may not realize the full import of conditions "new" to Juniata this year such as longer library hours, the five-day week class schedule, the "revolutionary" women's hours, the relaxed dress regulations for meals, the extent of student participation in College Center control and operation, increased postal efficiency, the appointment of a new athletic director, the continuing presence of Coach Russ Trimmer and the changeover in the position of registrar; but such were areas of concern in the JC community which were affected, directly or indirectly, by varying degrees of student voice last year.

After being frustrated in their attempts to operate through existing channels, a self-made Student Action Group (SAG) early in second semester organized a "study-in" in Beeghly Library in order to demonstrate to the Administration that Juniata students were interestd in extended library hours. The result was the institution of a trial period with evening hours lengthened from 10 p.m. to 12 midnight every night but Saturday.

JC's Student Government cooperated with the Faculty and Administration in working out the five-day week as we have it now and in providing Juniata women students (beginning last April) with more liberal hours, as were published in last week's Juniatian. A student- originated petition was instrumental in the eventual elimination of the coat-and-tie regulation for males at the evening family-style meals last year, and elsewhere popular student opinion had a few things to say about the former athletic director, Coach Trimmer, the operation of the post office and the former registrar which were effective in the long run.

Other issues from last year have yet to be adequately resolved in the eyes of JC students, to wit: increasing tuition and fees, drinking regulations, the need for psychological counseling on campus, Juniata's status as a liberal arts school (vis a vis the ever-burgeoning Division III), a change in the academic calendar (the 4-1-4 system has been mentioned), . . . and peace in Vietnam. Last May the concern of the Juniata community turned to the national and international scene as the Juniata Mobilization for Peace enlivened Oller Lawn with a day of speeches, entertainment and rallying which was more pro-peace than anti-war.

One other source of excitement and controversy on the campus last spring was the appearance of Ti-Grace Atkinson, and ex-member of N.O.W. (National Organization for Women), whose philosophy advocated the demise of marriage, an end to feminine oppression and the elevation of women into positions of power.

There is certainly no reason to doubt that this coming year on the Juniata campus and campuses elsewhere will be as lively, if not more so, as any other year.

More of . . .

Who's Who & New?

MRS. JAKOB (Renate) AMSTUTZ, Instructor in German
Mrs. Amstutz, a native of Heidelberg, Germany, is the bride of Dr. Jakob Amstutz, associate professor of classics and comparative literature. They were married on Sept. 3.
B.A.; M.A.; doctoral candidate.
Mrs. Amstutz taught at Bryn Mawr College as a graduate assistant.
Address: 717 Warm Springs Ave.

MISS CHRISTINE J. BAILEY, Instructor in Classics (part-time)
Miss Bailey is a native of Waynesboro, Pa. and has been an Instructor in Latin at the Lower Dauphin School District, Hummelstown, Pa.
B.A. Juniata College, 1967
Graduate work at Tufts University (summer 1968)
The Pennsylvania State University
Miss Bailey, during this summer, has been working in the L.A. Beeghly Library as assistant cataloger.
Address: 1132 Warm Springs Ave.
Telephone: 643-3188

JEFFREY M. BIXBY, Assistant for Visual Aids
A senior at Juniata College, Mr. Bixby has his office to assist in the use of visual aids, in the Brumbaugh Hall ground floor, where the Juniatian Office used to be.
He is the husband of Heather, who is the assistant in the Language Lab.
Address: 1807 Penn St.
Telephone: 643-0335

Cont'd on page 4

Huddle Club

Juniata College football fans will meet regularly at 12 noon on Mondays for soup-and-sandwich Dutch-treat luncheons beginning Sept. 29 at the Penn Hunt Hotel. The luncheons will feature films of the preceding Saturday's gridiron match accompanied by comments by the Indians' coaches.

College Receives Mellon Grant For Endowment

Juniata College has received from the Richard King Mellon Foundation of Pittsburgh a $50,000 grant for endowment purposes. According to Dr. John N. Stauffer, the funds will be added to Juniata's permanent endowment, the income from which is used for support of faculty salaries, financial aid to students, and library services.

The current market value of the College's endowment stands at slightly over three million dollars. Juniata is seeking to raise an additional five million dollars for endowment by Juniata's 100th anniversary in 1976 under the current "Margin of Difference" campaign.

In acknowledging receipt of the grant in a letter to the Mellon Foundation, Dr. Stauffer expressed the deep gratitude of the trustees, faculty and students of the College for the gift. "As we work diligently to obtain similar gifts, we know that we are adding strength and stability to Juniata's academic program," he said.

He noted that the current, first-phase drive in the College's ten-year, $10.1-million "Margin of Difference" campaign was nearing completion "nearly a year ahead of schedule." The latest report from the College's development office reveals pledges totaling $2.5 million toward a first-phase goal of $2.8 million.

Editorial . . .

Fussin' and Fumin'...

A few weeks ago two faculty members and a student led a discussion on the causes of student complaint. After some idealistic bickering these two reasons for the phenomena emerged: a.) the lack of a defined goal for the College and b.) violation of the student's "psychological space" (that part of himself where all falsehoods and hypocrisy stop). As we see it, both reasons can be applied to current student complaints.

The average student has a few gripes about Ellis Hall — long lines for the meals, inadequate banking hours, and a few more gems. We submit that the real complaint goes deeper.

He is concerned about the College. Money seems to be of the paramount importance. Tuition is being raised. Budgets are being squeezed until it hurts. But why is the surplus needed? Where is it going? What function is Floyd Roller preforming? ? No one knows.

There is a rash of student complaints about comps, grading, inefficiencies of committees, and "relevance". Now the student is trying to deal with what the school is doing to him.

What he would like is an honest statement of the rules of the game. Then he could decide if he wanted to play or take his marbles and go home. He would like to know if vacillation is going to be a permanent thing or if he can manuever from a solid base. Also he would like a promise (which could be trusted) that everyone will play fair.

Perhaps this is just more fanciful rhetorical idealism— maybe not. The only cure is a massive dose of valid communication. (The question of how to determine this validity is more that we care to tackle at this time.) But until this happens, cultivating a positive attitude is not something that is easily undertaken.

In Memoriam

Bill Schlichter

October 7, 1949

September 14, 1969

Letters Policy

Letters to the editor should be typed and double-spaced and should be submitted no later than 1:30 p.m. Monday. The editors reserve the right to print only non-libelous and responsible content and to edit all letters and commentaries submitted to the Juniatian. The staff also reserves the right to publish all full signatures unless the writer can supply very valid reasons for omitting his name.

Visiting Student Says, "Africa Is Emerging ! !"

by Sammy Buo '73

I am happy that I can now clear some of the minds of some of our students, concerning Africa, the great continent! From what I have heard from my friends here, the conception they have about Africa is a rather ridiculous one. I was coming with one of the— I thought, Juniata kids from town a couple of days ago, and he was asking me where I come from, and when I told him I came from Africa, he shouted at the top of his voice. I asked him why he did that, and he told me he was very surprised, because he has always thought that most Africans are very uneducated, and so they cannot go to college. This guy continued to say he has always thought that Africa is a sort of jungle, where mostly, monkeys can be found. He asked me if there is any town in Africa like Huntingdon. I continued to answer these childish questions, without discovering that this kid was really not a Juniata student but a High School kid. I concluded that he was very dull in his imaginations, because such questions and conceptions could only be heard about two or more centuries ago. This guy continued to talk quite a lot, of childish things, which I have no patience to write down. When I was fed up with this, I mustered enough courage and asked him whether he was a Juniata student. He said he was a senior at high school. I said "Oh! I see," and excused myself. I was satisfied he was not from this college.

The most important thing I want everyone to know is that Africa is rapidly emerging in international matters! During my course of conversation with this I thought Juniata student, I became somehow infuriated, that such underrating beliefs about my continent could still be existing. Africa is no longer the DARK CONTINENT we used to read about in medieval history. Most African nations are prominent in world affairs today, and some African statesmen are gaining ground in international affairs. Take away the more complicated and financial-exhausting scientific research and developments, and I tell you, we will measure up with most Western countries. The pace of our development projects is quite great. We believe that Rome was not built in a day, and every African today knows that we shall sooner or later also launch an international project which will give us world recognition as a world continent.

Most of my friends at Juniata here do not think like this high school kid, though it's only three months ago that some left high school. I am happy about this, because it makes me think that mature and intelligent students have been chosen to enhance the excellent academic position that Juniata maintains. . . But there is a question I would like to ask. This question is however not meant to hurt anyone's feelings. Do American students ever study world geography or do they only study American geography?

I have asked this question because most of those who have asked me my country of citizenship neither know it, which is Cameroon, nor do they know some of the prominent African countries like Ethiopia which I thought everyone knew, firstly because of her conspicuous and distinguished head of state, Emperor Haile Selassie; and secondly because it is the seat of the Organization of African Unity. In Cameroon, a senior elementary school pupil is able to draw the map of the world, and locate the major cities. This sounds incredible, but it is a bare fact!

I am however very impressed with some students, because they are well-informed about the current crisis going on in Nigeria and Biafra. Most of them seem to say that Biafra has a cause to fight for her freedom, just as they had to fight for their freedom and independence from the British. With the information I have gained from them, I can conclude by saying that most youths, the world over, support Biafra's fight for freedom. However, as a complete Cameroonian, I do not cast my vote for this struggle for independence. It seems to me as an individual struggle for power. However, it is not always my intention to talk about this topic.

I would like to continue now, and tell you about the feelings my countrymen have about Americans especially, and my own experiences in the United States for the few days I have been here. I will then invite all of you to see into it that you have a chance of visiting Africa and learning about her people.

Cameroon, among the numerous African countries building up a firm economic stand now due partly to American support, has an extremely congenial attitude towards Americans. We have always wished the best results to any American projects, because of the fantastic amount of aid given to us by Americans. The improvements done on our roads are partly financed by the U.S. government, in the medical field, the vaccines for small pox and the apparatus used, were given by Americans, and in fact, a lot of things which we dearly needed, have been given to us by Americans. We should not also forget of course that American agencies and colleges are fostering the educational background of Cameroon and other African countries, by awarding them scholarships and assistantships to study in her universities and colleges, and I am proud to be the happy recipient of one of these from Juniata! !

I have been in the United States now for only a few days, and I have already learned a lot, which I can summarize only in one sentence:

"AMERICANS ARE ALWAYS READY TO HELP."

I travelled in New York City for a day and a half, and everyone was always ready to help me since I did not know the city. I came right down to my campus, and a greater bunch of kindness was released. At first, I was confused and confounded, then I thought I was in a fairyland, just because the sort of people we so much esteem—professors were so kind in their talks, and very encouraging. Infact, I hardly have a way of describing this. Everyone is kind and congenial at Juniata. My fellow students are so friendly that I begin to think they are supernatural. When they see a foreign being quiet when they are gay, they think this student needs help, or is not happy, and then they come nearer you, try to cheer you up, and invite you to ask from them whatever you need. That is great! !

The kindness I have seen in Juniata will ever remain in my memory, and I wish the course could be extended to seven years, because I do not like to miss the frinds here on campus.

Upperclassmen, come right into my room, talk over matters with me, and always end up by saying:

"You are welcome. Always ask what you need, and I'll see if I can help you."

This is really great, and gives a very good impression about this country to me. Sometimes when my mind is idle, I begin to think why God made people so different in character. I do not think that with this friendly air on campus, I will ever feel nostalgic. Moreover, the variety of facilities will at least exhort me. It is a very friendly, and beautiful Juniata College that I am in! I therefore promise to do for Juniata as much as Juniata is doing for me, if not more. I will also try and see to it that my academic standards are acceptable to faculty and staff, so that I do not eventually become like some other students in the world, a drop-out from college. I am prepared to face the battle ahead of me.

I will therefore end up my essay by inviting you to visit some African countries. When they know you are Americans, they will add an extra 10% to the normal percentile kindness they show to visitors. You are all welcome. Why not spend a year as an exchange student at the Federal University of Cameroon in Taounde?

Why not visit the beautiful Nairobi in Kenya, like one of our students on campus did recently? Ask her, and she will tell you. If you decide, why not visit the beautiful veldt in South Africa, or if it pleases you, why not fly to Addis Ababa in Ethiopia and see the O.A.U. secretariat, and the country ruled by the eminent Haile Selassie? While in East Africa there you will climb the historic Mount Kilimanjaro, which is the highest mountain there, and see the East African Rift Valley System. From there you may decide to fly to West Africa. Spend a fine night at the Hotel du Cocotiers in Douala, Cameroon, and if you do not want to go right up to the north, board a Pan Am 707 on Wednesday at 10 a.m. in Douala, on your way home. You will drop at Cotonou in Dahoney, drop again in Abridjan, Ivory Coast, drop in Monroria, Liberia with the large American Firestone Company there, drop in Dakar, Senegal and finally, you drop in New York. You are then back home full of ideas about the African continent, and able to wipe out some of the dull conceptions which might have been existing, for all of these capital cities are beautiful and appealing.

I hope that one day Juniata will have her one-year-abroad program scheduled for Africa. Have a good time.

Letter to the Editor

Our new college center is like a 2 million dollar earring which is set on a cancerous ear in order to hide the ugliness and decay that lies beneath. Juniata needed a student center, a business center (book store, bank, post office etc.) and new dining facilities. The ideal would have been to erect multiple buildings. However, if one building was to suffice for these complex necessities, then the entire building should have been conceived of in terms of the function of every available space. It is immediately evident this has not been the case with our center.

This ornamental building with its ten lounges, conference room and dining rooms styled in early Victorian furniture gives one the impression it was built as a convention hall for retired Civil War officers. The dining area has not enabled the students to move smoothly and rapidly through meal times. Instead, we stand for hours as hunger mounts with each passing minute.

The one game room has two foosball machines, two pingpong tables and three pool tables and is expected to entertain 1200 students. The ballroom is ridiculously small. It is easy to understand then, for the most part, the functional aspect of the college center has been a failure, thus making this brand new building obsolete!

The question now arises, what are we to do about the center, boycott it? The decision to boycott the center would border along the realm of foolishness. What then? If we can persuade the center's director, Mr. Will Brandau, some of this useless lounge space could be converted into more game, craft and shop rooms, it would certainly be a step toward correcting a rather obvious mistake. The walls of the snack shop could be painted and pictures hung to make it more appealing and interesting. Let us get behind Mr. Brandau and the center's student board with a firm determination to remedy, as best we can, this ornamental error which has been placed before us.

Mo Taylor
Class of '72

Musical Notes . . .

Bits and Pieces

The Music Dept. is exploring the possibility of engaging the services of a woodwind teacher on campus. One is available and would come here to teach if there is sufficient response. All students interested should contact Dr. Robert King, Swigart Hall, and faculty members and their children may also avail themselves of this opportunity.

All students interested in joining one of many small ensembles now being planned should contact Dr. King. Student response last year was very encouraging and the response from new students this year is equally so. Anyone wishing to participate should see Dr. King about an audition and other details.

The first meeting of the Brass Ensemble will be held this afternoon at 4 p.m. in the basement of Swigart. Since there will be some conflict with labs, please come even if you must be late. This will be an organization meeting only, so no instruments will be required. Any student interested in joining the ensemble should come to the first meetng.

The Altoona Symphony has a limited number of positions open for string players as well as for French Horn and certain other instruments. All players receive a small stipend and travel expenses will be paid by the symphony. For further details, please contact Dr. King at Swigart Hall.

Any Junior interested in running for the Student Government Legislature may pick up a petition in the Office of Student Affairs. Petitions must have at least 100 signatures and be returned to the same office by Oct. 1. Voting will be held Oct. 8.

The Juniatian

ASSOCIATED COLLEGIATE PRESS ACP — COLLEGIATE DIGEST I.P.

Student Weekly at Juniata College

Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED NOV. 6, 1924

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891

BARBARA CLAAR, editor-in-chief
PAUL KEELY, associate editor
ADELE ABOUTOK, copy editor
J. PATRICK TYSON, news editor
JOEL SCHANTZ, business manager
RICHARD ABLARD, advertising manager

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Don Laine

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000

Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVI, No. 2

September 26, 1969

Varied groups . . .

Child Service Program Needs Aids

What is the Child Service Program?

The Child Service Program will provide volunteer student staff for the Salvation Army Tutoring Program and the Constructive Play Sessions at the Crawford Apartments. The children from the Salvation Army Program are from families served by the Army and range in age from 5-12 yrs. The children in the Crawford Apartment sessions are residents of this low-cost housing project, ranging in age from 3-12 yrs. The majority of the children are 6-10 years of age.

The activities possible with the planned facilities include Athletics, Arts and Crafts, Story Reading, Semi-Organized Games, Dance and Acrobatics. Within each activity the staff-to-child relations assumes an intimacy limited only by the initiative of the staff. We seek a one-to-one relation if we have enough staff.

Who will staff the Program?

Any student is welcomed to apply his interest in the Child Service Program. No skill is prerequisite. All skills are welcomed. All that is required (more by the children than the program) is dependability of attendance and sincere concern for the child.

Students with experience are returning to fill a portion of the staff in each program. However, many more are needed to equal, and hopefully exceed, last year's program. Frshmen generally comprise the largest percentage of our workers. Guys are particularly urged to volunteer. Unfortunately both programs have, in the past perpetuated the imbalance of female supervision these children experience in school and at home. We must offset this imbalance.

How will we conduct the Program?

An Introductory meeting will be held Wednesday, Oct. 1 at 7:30 p.m. in Rm. A-100. Students will be free to choose within the range of activities planned or to initiate and organize any new activity they wish.

Training sessions for all staff members will be conducted on a weekly basis. This will involve workshops on inter-group communication, lecture-discussions on child behavior, lecture-discussions on the community, its education system, and social structure, and workshops for the specific skills used in each activity of the program.

Work assignments will be made to the limit each student chooses to commit himself.

Staff members who have experience in both programs have been assigned as specialists for the various activities. They will make information available to all staff concerning sources of background information and people who can be consulted for further information in each activity. Those assigned are as follows: Valerie Derrickson — Arts and Crafts; Susan Hohl - Reading and Perceptual Skills; Linda Merz - Dance; Karl Erdlitz and Sue Dobson - Athletics; Richard Sackett - Child Behavior and General Program Organizer (self-assigned).

Why serve in the Child Service Program?

Serve, because you can help!

Any person who makes time each week to work with a child or group of children is helping.

Any questions?

Contact Rich Sackett, Box 704; Bruce Allison, Box 6; Sue Dobson, Box 393; or Sue Hohl, Box 21.

Better yet, come to the Introduction Meeting, Oct. 1 at 7:30 p.m. in Rm. A-100.

Long-Haired Students Sought For Amish Spectacular

Looking for a different, but exciting way to spend next summer?

Then, perhaps you'd enjoy being part of the team that's planning to produce a wide-screen, technicolor, feature-length motion picture entitled JONATHAN during the summer of 1970.

To be filmed completely in Lancaster County by local young people, JONATHAN involves a story of the Old Order Amish of Lancaster County. The picture is based upon a novel and screenplay written by Dan Neidermyer and will be directed by Stan Deen, a graduate of Millersville State College and Pasadena Playhouse and currently director of the Garden Spot Performing Arts.

Young people to work on the picture are now being sought throughout the county. Especially needed are high school and college students who can sport long hair and beards in the style of those of the Old Order Amish sect. Artists, set builders, costume designers and musicians are also needed.

JONATHAN is being produced by a locally-based and locally-staffed non-profit production company known as Maranatha Productions, Inc. The production company was organized by several college students to provide an opportunity as well as a creative outlet in the communications media to young people desirous of expressing, developing and pruning their talents and abilities in communicative expression. The company plans to produce films with a general family rating.

Major distribution companies that have expressed an interest in viewing JONATHAN include MGM, Universal, United Artists, Twentieth-Century Fox and the Walter Reade Organization.

The young people also need financial assistance from the local community.

Aside from the fact that JONATHAN will be the first major attempt to record accurately and honestly the life of a local sub-culture that may vanish within the next fifty years, the picture will show the natural beauty and blessings that Lancaster County holds. The impact of the simple and Godly Amish way of life as well as the pleasant living surroundings of the county should greatly strengthen the local community's public relations efforts throughout the U.S., interesting more people to visit and tour this area, perhaps even to remain and rear a family here.

Any individual interested in helping to make or support the picture is welcome to contact the movie's producer, Dan Neidermyer, phone 859-1556, or write R.D. No. 2, Ephrata, Pa. 17522.

Plans for Center Require Student Body Cooperation

by Peggy Haines

As Mr. Will Brandau sees it, total success or failure of the new Student Center depends fully on the student body. The Center, consisting of the meeting rooms, lounges, ballroom, listening areas and recreation room, are only part of Ellis Hall, which also houses the dining area, Post Office, bank, snack shop and bookstore. As Director of the Student Center, Mr. Brandau's job, a very important one, is to help coordinate and provide a rich program of entertainment for the student body throughout the year. The tall, youthful, Juniata graduate is extremely willing to do his job, if the students are willing to do their's.

Tentative plans drawn up promise to make the 1969-1970 school year a busy and exciting one. As it stands now, the schedule consists of eleven informal dances, four formals, ten non-dance events and eleven "specials." Thus, the weekly Saturday night dances of past years are being discontinued in order to bring a greater variety of entertainment to the campus. The eleven informal dances will be held in the ballroom, which at times will also serve as a lecture hall and center for art exhibits and class meetings. The four formal dances will include the traditional Homecoming Dance, Christmas Dance, Midwinter Formal and May Day Dance.

The eleven "specials" tentatively include the appearance of six Big Name entertainers and five shows featuring up and coming groups. Already scheduled for Oct. 11 is David Frye, the famed comedian and the Peppermint Rainbow is scheduled for Oct. 17. The ten non-dance events will provide a wealth of varied entertainment, scattered throughout the school year. The chartered bus to Albright College for the football game on Sept. 27 is the first offering of the non-dance events. Other possibilities include car rallies and a raft regatta on the Juniata River in the spring. There is no end to the possibilities. In fact, there is a very real possibility that an Island trip, probably to Puerto Rice, will be offered Juniata students for a week during spring vacation.

As stated before, however, the success of the planned schedule lies totally with the student body. If the students refuse to support the planned programs, especially those with Big Name entertainers, the later scheduled will have to be cut due to lack of funds. For example, the combined cost of bringing David Frye and the Peppermint Rainbow to Juniata will be $3400, which leaves a mere $1100 to pay for the four Big Name entertainers following. Student support for each concert is desperately needed so that Juniata will not have to cancel any concert, popular or not, because of financial problems. Student tickets for Big Name entertainment will only be $1; there will be an admission charge of 25¢ for the up and coming groups.

Student support in the form of active planning will also be needed. It is not the job of the Director to plan all entertainment and see that all necessary arrangements are carried out. After all, as the name implies, it is the Student Center, and Mr. Brandau's role should be more as an adviser and coordinator than as the chief planner.

Three committees have been set up for the express purpose of planning student activities: the Recreation Committee, headed by Betsy Barboni; the Social Activities Committee, led by Emily Gates; and the Fine Arts Committee, under the leadership of Joel Schantz. Student volunteers to work with the heads of all three committees are desperately needed. There is no excuse for complaining that "There's nothing to do around this place" if the students have not voiced their ideas and opinions to any three of the committee chairmen or Will Brandau. Mr. Brandau has said that his office is open to any student wishing to make the program a better one. It's up to you, Juniatians!

Selective Service Info

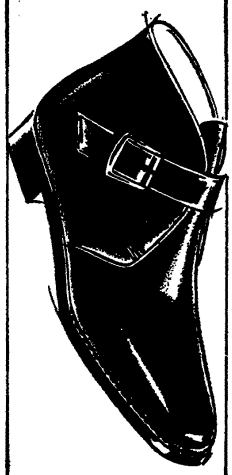
The full-time degree student at Juniata is eligible for a student deferment through his local draft board as long as he meets certain requirements. Juniata College has no part in establishment or retention of a student deferment other than to furnish pertinent information to the local board as requested by the student. Questions about your particular status should be directed to your local board.

In order to be considered for a II-S student classification in Selective Service, it is necessary to submit an SSS Form 104 to the local board. This form is available at all local boards. In support of the request for student deferment, an SSS Form 109 is required from the college to verify the student's enrollment. Juniata College will not submit the SSS Form 109 unless a signed request is received from the individual student.

The SSS Form 109 includes information relative to the student's enrollment: Full-time or part-time status, class, expected graduation by the student, it is submitted shortly after the start of each fall term as long as the student is enrolled. In addition, the local board is informed of changes in the student's status.

Students desiring to have an SSS Form 109 sent to their local board should complete a Selective Service request form available in the Office of the Registrar. There is no need to request an SSS Form 109 until a Selective Service number has been assigned: students who have not been assigned a number should delay completion of the request form until they receive a number.

THE GEORGE BOOT



DEXTER

Very British . . . buckled up for style and comfort. Reserved as a stiff upper lip. Styled for this season's fashions.

Westbrook Shoe Store
515 Washington Street
Welcome Students

Black's Jewelry
See our Juniata College mugs on Sale Now
423 Penn St.
643-1700

"WHAT'S IN"
We've Got Famous Farah Slacks
Stop in
DOLLINGER'S
SHOP FOR THE MAN
711 Washington Street

Welcome Juniata Students and Parents
To The Holiday Inn
OF HUNTINGDON
Restaurant
Red Fox Lounge
49 Rooms
All Types of Banquets
643-3934

Split a hair or two (three maybe) Dunlap's BARBERSHOP
314 mifflin street

BUCK'S LAUNDRY and Dry Cleaners
643-2252

ALBUM OF THE MONTH
"Oliver"
in Stereo
Reg. $4.79
$2.98
Record Shop
at Miller's
In '69 . . . A Center For Family Shopping

M & M RESTAURANT
On Rt. 22 East of Huntingdon Motor Inn
643-2640

PROBLEMS ? ? . . .
Consider them better in one of our easy chairs.
Bare Floors . . . Cold Feet? ? ?
Warm up with our carpeting and throw rugs.
Logan Brothers
FURNITURE — CARPETS — DRAPERIES
"Serving Huntingdon County For Sixty-five years"
705 Washington St. Huntingdon, Pa.
Telephone 643-0390

Dup. of previous page

Who's Who & New??

Cont'd from page 1

ROBERT B. BLAKESLEE, Director of Publicity
For the past two years, Mr. Blakeslee has been assistant news editor and community relations assistant at the State University of N.Y. at Stony Brook. A Pennsylvania State University graduate, he served as assistant director for development at Penn State's DuBois Campus from 1964 to 1967.
He is a native of DuBois, married Sue Ann Shively of DuBois, May 1968 and they are the parents of a daughter, Jennifer Kathryn, born Aug. 1969.
B.A. The Pennsylvania State University, 1964
While working professionally in DuBois, he served as program director for the DuBois Area Arts Center, vice president of the Community Concert Association and editor of the prize-winning Jaycee newsletter "Do-Boys-On-The-Move."
Address: 312 Mifflin St.
Telephone: 643-1609

GERALD J. CROCE, Instructor in Humanities (fall semester only)
Born in Brooklyn, N.Y., he is a lover of fine music, especially opera, and writes short stories in his spare time.
A.B. Brooklyn College, 1966
M. A. The Pennsylvania State University, 1968
Doctoral work in English Literature, also at Penn State.
Mr. Croce has worked for three years at Penn State as a teaching assistant in the freshman composition courses and as a graduate student representative on the Committee for Freshman Composition.
Address: 774 Whitehall Rd., State College, Pa.
Telephone: 814-237-7542

DAVID REED DREWS, Assistant Professor of Psychology
Born in Toledo, Ohio, Drews and his wife Julie Latane are both from the University of Delaware and will give Juniata another husband and wife teaching team.
B.A. Denison University, 1965
M.S. University of Delaware, 1968
Doctoral degree to be awarded in June 1970.
Residence: 315 17th St.
Telephone: 643-2331

MRS. DAVID (Julie Latane') DREWS, Instructor in Psychology
Mrs. Drews is a native of New York City. She has published in the Journal of Experimental Social Psychology and has been both a Research Fellow and an Instructor at the University of Delaware.
A.B. University of North Carolina, 1963 (with honors)
M.A. University of Delaware, 1966
Ph.D. University of Delaware, 1969
Residence: 315 17th St.
Telephone: 643-2331

MISS IRENE M. ENGLE, Assistant Professor of Physics (one-year appointment)
Miss Engle is a native of Harrisburg and in 1968 was a participant in the CERN-NATO Advanced Study Institute "Ettore Majoran" in Erice, Sicily. She has been an Instructor in Physics at Ripon College, a Physicist with the Department of the Navy and most recently a teaching and research assistant at Penn State (1967-68).
B.S. The Pennsylvania State University, 1963
M.S. The Pennsylvania State University, 1965
Ph.D., expected in 1969
She is active in the League of Women Voters and was a Medical-Social Worker in Chicago (1966). She won the General Atomic Superior Teaching Award in College Physics.
Address: 81 Hilltop Park, State College, Pa.
Telephone: 814-237-7509

PHILIP FIELD, Instructor in Art (fall semester only)
Born in Brooklyn, N.Y., Mr. Field has been an art teacher at the Thomas Jefferson High School in Brooklyn from 1967 to 1969. He is single. In 1965 he won a Fulbright for study in Austria and has traveled extensively in Europe. He was a graduate assistant in printmaking (1964-65) at the Rhode Island School of Design and has had one man exhibitions at the Providence Art Association, Syracuse University and the Museum of the Rhode Island School of Design.
B.F.A. Syracuse University, 1963
M.F.A. Rhode Island School of Design, 1965
Yale Summer School of Art, 1962
Art Students League, N.Y.C., 1959, 1962
Academy of Fine Arts, Vienna, 1965-67

MRS. LOIS W. HERSHOCK, Instructor in Education (fall semester only)
Mrs. Hershock is a native of Bedford County, Pa. and her teaching experience includes the York City Schools, Jewish Community Center Kindergarten, University of Pittsburgh Lab School and assisted student teachers for Penn State, Millersville State College and University of Pittsburgh.
B.S. Elizabethtown College, 1960
M.Ed. Western Maryland College, 1967
She is a member of the AAUW, Association for Childhood Education and many other organizations. Her son, Craig, recently graduated from Kutztown State College; a daughter, Carla, attends Millersville State College and another daughter, Sue, is a student at Robert Morris College.
Address: 1216 Oneida St.

WALTER NADZAK, Jr., Director of Physical Education and Athletics, Assistant Professor of Physical Education, and Head Football Coach
A native of Ambridge, Pa., he is married to the former Shirley Meyer, a graduate of Muskingum College. They have four children: Cary Lee, age 11; Tracey Lynn, 10; Walter, 8, and Jeff, 6.
A.B. Denison University, 1957
M.S. in Ed., Xavier University, 1968
Nadzak was an outstanding football player in college and later played with the Quantico Marine Teams and the Columbus Colts of the United Football League. From 1960 to 1963 he was on the coaching staff of the Chillicothe (Ohio) High School and in 1963-64 was football and baseball coach at Utica High School (Ohio). The following year he was football coach at Sylvania High School near Toledo, Ohio. At Muskingum he was offensive line and interior defensive line coach and varsity baseball coach. He served as assistant football coach and instructor in physical education at Muskingum from 1965-69.
Address: Tory Square, 30th St.
Telephone: 643-0134

THOMAS B. ROBINSON, Administrative Assistant to the President Instructor in Psychology
Graduated from Juniata College in 1966 with a B.A. in sociology. Received Masters degree in Higher Education Administration from The Pennsylvania State University in Dec. 1967. (Masters specialization was Student Personnel Administration.) Robinson is currently a Ph.D. candidate at Penn State. (Doctoral emphasis is Academic Administration, with a minor in Psychology.) He is single. For three and one-half years he served in the Office of the Dean of Students at the Pennsylvania State University, holding various student personnel positions.
Address: 824 Mifflin St.
Telephone: 643-2163

FLOYD A. ROLLER, Controller and Chief Accountant
Mr. Roller, who has been business manager of the Selinsgrove Area Joint Schools, will have complete responsibility for budget control at the College.
From 1964 to 1967 he was director of data processing and accounting at Susquehanna University, coming to that position from the Williamsport School District and Area Joint Schools where he was an accountant.
He is married to the former Barbara Thomas and they have two children, Scott Arnold, 3, and Susan Lynn, 1. Mrs. Roller taught Spanish and English in the Williamsport School District.
B.S. Lycoming College, 1960
Presently studiyng for the master of Business administration degree at Bucknell University.
Address: 625 7th St.
Telephone: 643-0632

RICHARD SAHN, Instructor in Sociology
A native of Brooklyn, N.Y., he is currently a welfare worker in the New York City Department of Social Services. He is single. Mr. Sahn worked as a research assistant, psychology lab of the State University of New York (1963-64) and as a graduate assistant, sociology department, Duquesne University (1966-67).
B.A. Bard College, 1965
M.A. Duquesne University, 1967
Doctoral studies, New School of Social Research, 1967
Address: Swigart Apartments, 405 Penn St.
Telephone: 643-1851

GARY SHEPPARD, Instructor in Physical Education, Assistant Coach in Football and Director of Intramural Athletics
A winner of the Stanford Mickle Award, he was an outstanding football and baseball player during his undergraduate years at Juniata. During his junior year he received honorable mention for All-State football and in 1967 was named to the Middle Atlantic Conference Northern District First Defensive Team. In baseball he was named to the All Conference First Team in 1966. He is single.
A.B. Juniata College, 1967
Residence: Sherwood Dormitory

MILTON da SILVA, Instructor in Political Science (one year appointment)
Although he was born in the Azores, he graduated from the Peabody High School, Peabody, Mass. He is single.
B.A. Nasson College, 1965
M.A. University of Massachusetts, 1967
He expects to receive his Ph.D. in Political Science in 1970.
Address: 313 16th St.

DR. MARILYN HART STEPHENS, College Physician
Dr. Stephens has been in general practice of medicine for five years. She comes from Toledo, Ohio and is married to Donald E. Stephens, a teacher and coach in the Mount Union School System. They have three children, ages six, five and two years.
In the absence of Dr. David Croft, her office is 741 Washington Street. She attended the University of Toledo, Toledo, Ohio; Meharry Medical College, Nashville, Tennessee; and interned at Maumee Valley Hospital, Toledo, Ohio.
Address: Taylor Highlands
Telephone: 643-1804

DALE WRIGHT, Assistant Professor of Psychology (Chairman of the Department)
A.B. Chico State College, 1959
B.D. Berkeley Baptist Divinity School, 1962
Mr. Wright attended Western Michigan University and expects a Ph.D. degree from University of Vermont in Oct. 1969. His major area is Experimental Psychology, Specializing in Behavior Therapy.
Address: 1225 Moore St.
Telephone: 643-5311

MISS F. HELEN WYETH, Visiting Lecturer in English (fall semester only)
A.B. Denison University
A.M. Middlebury College
Address: 1815 Washington St.
Telephone: 643-1328

Student Leaders Discuss Plans for Upcoming Year

Cont'd from page 1

Friday opened early with breakfast at 7:30. After breakfast the students again divided into their committees to complete any unfinished discussion and to draft their resolutions. Then a general meeting was held and the resolutions were presented and debated among the student leaders and those of the administration present. The most important decisions were to attempt to present a useable alternative to comps and their deletion as graduation requirements, and the possibility of student representatives on the Board of Trustees.

After lunch, the participants returned to campus. At six that evening the student leaders attended the Faculty Dinner. After a speech by President Stauffer and a report on the Faculty Task Force by Dr. Wilfred Norris, Student Government President Eric Woodworth presented the resolutions to the faculty. The reaction to the conference was summed up in President Stauffer's closing remarks to the faculty. He admonished the faculty to give the student's requests serious consideration and the students to work on to acomplish their well thought out recommendations.

Student Resolutions

1. Pass/Fail
● We recommend that all courses designated by the College as required (i.e., Epochs, Judeao-Christian Heritage, and Nature of Man) be offered only on a Pass/Fail basis. This is in addition to the eight (or fewer) Pass/Fail courses which each student may take.
● We recommend that only the Registrar's Office retain knowledge of those taking courses Pass/Fail.

2. Leave of Absence
● We recommend that the possibility of granting a student a leave of absence for other than purely academic reasons be investigated. Interest related work, travel and other educational experiences could be possible.

3. Deficiency Notices
● We feel that the student should assume the responsibility for his own education. To aid the student in developing his maturity we feel the deficiency notices in their present form be discontinued.

4. We recommend that the Chairman of Communications publish an annual pamphlet which includes course descriptions, comments of content and interest.

5. Departmental Evaluations
● We recommend that Departmental Evaluations be initiated and that action be taken upon their results.

6. Educational Resources
● We recommend that the library resources be improved and that the necessary security precautions be taken to maintain them.
● We recommend that the student body be informed about such systems under discussion like MERC or the Inter-Library Computer Bank.

7. Budget
● We rcommend the budget be published.

8. We recommend that final semester exams for those completing comps be optional.

9. Comps
● We recommend that comprehensives be restructured, and not a determinant of graduation. Alternate plans will be suggested.

10. We resolve to make student elections more effective and successful.

11. We resolve that the "concern" of the lack of communication on campus can not be bettered until something is done to work for and achieve a united community of students, administration and faculty.

12 We resolve that "Frosh Regs" are a necessary part of the campus community, that their number and position be strengthened instead of weakened, that endorsement should be stronger and that everyone should participate and support them.

13. We resolve that student government be the leader in carrying out every phase of campus life.

KELLY'S KORNER
1340 Penna. Ave.
643-4900

Have You Tried
Poser's Beauty Salon ??
CALL 643-3210
for an appointment

KALOS
CLIFTON
NOW THRU TUESDAY
Matinees Sat-Sun — 2 P.M.
Evenings at 7:17 — 9:24
WALT DISNEY'S
THE LOVE BUG
Technicolor
Dean Jones Buddy Hackett

STARTS WED OCT 1st
Jack Lemmon
Catharine Deneuve
Myrna Loy
THE APRIL FOOLS
Technicolor

A REMINDER ! ! ! ! ! ! ! ! ! !
LADIES PAY 75¢ EVERY WEDNESDAY NIGHT

It's No Mirage
You'll find a complete selection of Bobby Brooks
Wool Bermuda
Shorts & Sweater
Coordinates
PLUS
A Complete Line of Lady Wrangler
and Russ Sportswear
at
ISETT'S

Stop in soon for our friendly service.
We appreciate your patronage.
COMPLETE AUTO SERVICES
EARL FLECK, prop.
"Service Just Doesn't Happen, It's Guaranteed" FREE AIR
14th Street ESSO 643-9890

English's Apparel Shop Welcomes all Students to Come in and see the
FULL LINE OF FALL FASHIONS
Contemporary Styles for the Exceptional Student

The

Colonial Gift Shop

We Take Pride in our Originality

Old Fashioned INCENSE

Soaps and Shampoos

Posters
and Unframed Prints

BREATHTAKING SIGHTS
SNOOPY & CO.

Most Unusual Imported Teas

Save
50¢

Beautiful Italian
Dolls

Princess Gardiner
Wallets
and Accessories

BRASS BELLS

Contemporary Stationary

This Offer Only to JC Students
50¢ off
on all purchases over $5.00!!
SAVE THIS COUPON

Earrings,
Pierced + Otherwise

Charm
Clubs,

Flowers and Colors

Joan

Good until
Oct. 10, 1969

Pins and Beads
Jewelry??
The Colonial Gift Shop
is THE PLACE

ITEMS from Walsh Anglund

Also Stop In And See Our Selection Of Moppet Cards

We Have So Much
For The Student
Who Has Everything!!

Gorden Freser
Cards
Panda Prints

The
Colonial Gift Shop
522 Washington St.
Next To Murphy's 5 & 10

JC Judo Club Hosts Olympic Team Coach

● Ryoto Nakamuro ●

by Paul Freeman

The first week of school is usually filled with surprises, but the biggest was given to the Judo Club. A six degree (There are ten degrees of black belt.) black belt, Prof. Ryoto Nakamuro, one of the fastest Judo men in the world and, undoubtedly, one of the best instructors gave the Judo Club a week of his valuable time.

Prof. Nakamuro, who has coached Olympic Judo teams the world over, taught everything from breakfalls to enabling the members of the advanced team to win a contest hundreds of different ways, from ever pyosition imaginable. The beginners were amazed with the ease at which they learned what Prof. Nakamuro taught them. Even the JC wrestlers were given some helpful hints as to takedowns and pins.

The Judo Club will see a great deal of competition this year. Due to the Club's sponser, Dr. Fisher, the team is off to an excellent start. Last year three of the clubs brown belts graduated leaving a gap in the team. The team which placd in both the Eastern and national College Judo Championships has one black belt, two brown belts and a few white belts coming back. Competitions, home and away, will be posted. Th Judo team, as all teams at Juniata, enjoyed the support of the students, faculty and administration given in past years. The club hopes this support will be seen again this year.

The Anvils of Hell . . .

M-IC Serves Vital Function

by J. Patrick Tyson

The Military-Industrial Complex is synonomous with the effort to put an American on the Moon; The Vietnamese War; weapons research and colossal power. This entity has spent hundreds of billions of dollars in the past decade. It is more than a simple set of vested interest and interlocking elites; it is a function of the total society. The Military-Industrial Complex is a vast network of communications, finance, industry, research . . . and beliefs. We are members of this entity as long as we perform any function in it; the conscientious objector kills as many of the enemy in his own way as the hard-core Marine when he does alternate service.

The Military-Industrial Complex is a system of individuals not a monolithic ruling class, nor even a conspiracy among the technocrats. It is evidenced by the vast number of "average men" who have placed flag stickers on there cars; this shows wide diffusion of a simmilar belief set in the mass of the people. Furthre it shows this vast number of pople is capable of unified action at least in matters of little moment. I think it is symptomatic of the ability of the mass of the people to react as a unified force every time and to do so as individuals with a collective goal. The belief that sets of these individual "average men" need only to be simi lar not identical, thus the conscientious objector who aids the system performs a function in the goal-seeking process as the Marine who voluntiers for Vietnam.

The argument may be made that such a contribution differs so greatly in degree as to produce a qualitative difference, but I would say it is not so when viewed from the numbers of people needed to reach a goal. If one would look at the proposition in this way he would see that the need for supporting effort (i.e. as in the war effort for Vietnam) is many times greater than that needed for actual combat. Therefore it might be said that the consientious objector and the Marine both contribute to reach a goal; they only employ different methods. The goal in this case was "To aid the country" and aiding the country results in an increased ability for the country to reach goals as in Vietnam.

Those who would wish to destroy the Military-Industrial Complex will have an exceedingly hard time for Napalm is as much an American phenomena as "Saran Wrap." It is in short the "Establishment" part and parcel of the American way of life. In the final analysis one would have to drastically change the belief sets of a vast number of people perhaps violently to destroy the Military-Industrial Complex. But this very entity is composed of a very tenacious breed of creature spawned in misery and want and toughened in the arena of world events the American masses are not week or cowardly. They have struggled in their left-handed way to a high level of existence and are quite capable of maintaining and improving their position. They are not composed of some "master race" but of the rabel, the broken ones. Little men with dreams and a great deal of courage. Our nation is strong not because only the strong survive in it but because the "broken ones" have forged on the anvils of hell a strong weapon.

So, World, watch out or your going to get run over by a herd of little old ladies in tennis shoes; get smashed with a Peace Sign; smothered under old "Impeach Earl Warren" billboards or spindled, folded and mutilated by I.B.M.

THE DOLL SHOP — Hand-made Dolls

International Gift Shop Items
2 mi. north on Rt. 25 Private home on left
Phone 643-0846

Indian Harriers off to Flying Start

Juniata College's 1969 sports program will get off to a running start on Sept. 27 when the Indians' cross country squad shows its heels at Albright College in Reading.

Beginning his second year as coach for the Juniata harriers, Russ Trimmer has high hopes for his five lettermen and six other returnees. The Tribe is scheduled to embark on the 4.3-mile trek at 2 p.m.

Juniata will be seeking to regain its 12-year winning record against Albright, having lost by a narrow 27-28 last year in their season opener on the home course. Prior to that loss the Indians had outpaced Albright's Lion squad in 11 straight meets. Last year the Indians won only three of ten meets. Trimmer is confident that the record can be improved this season.

The lettermen include seniors Aubrey Shenk (captain), Paul Keeley, Richard Paulhamus and Kerry Stanley, and sophomore Dennis Weidler.

Shenk and Weidler ran together at Annville-Cleona High School (Lebanon Co.) a few years back. The same school produced Juniata's record-setter Rick Beard, who captained the Indians for two seasons. Beard graduated last year leaving a record time of 25:15 for the 4.8-mile home course and 22 victories out of 38 dual meets. He never finished lower than fifth in his entire career.

Coach Trimmer thinks Dennis Weidler may push Rick Beard's records this year. "He's capable of doing it," he said, "and I think he's determined to make the extra effort."

Trimmer says he is also impressed with the performances of Tom Leaver, a sophomore, and freshman Scott Williams.

"They're working hard at trying to close the interval between our top runner and boys coming n fifth and sixth," he said. "If they continue to do well in training, I'm sure the team will be much improved over last year's."

After Saturday's encounter with Albright the harriers will travel to Dickinson Oct. 1 and will make their initial home appearance Oct. 4 against Susquehanna. The remainder of the schedule includes the following meets: Oct. 8, Indiana, away; Oct. 11, Geneva, home; Oct. 15, F&M and Bucknell, at Lancaster; Oct. 22, Elizabethtown, away; Oct. 25, Delaware Valley, home; Nov. 1, Lock Haven, home; Nov. 8, St. Francis, away; Nov. 11, Penn State, home; Nov. 15, Gettysburg, away; and Nov. 17, the Middle Atlantic Conference championship meet at LaSalle.

Run Redskins Run . . .

Pack Ready to Challenge

by Aubrey Shenk

On Saturday the JC harriers open their season at Albright. Under second year coach Russ Trimmer's tutelage, the 12 man squad has trained regoulously for 3 weeks in proparation for the coming season. In intrasquad runs, Dennis Weidler has been leading the pack. Only a sophomore, Dennis has a good chance to break the course record of 25:15 set last season by Rick Beard. Currently second is captain Aub Shenk who has shown the best form of his four year career.

Tom Leaver, a pleasant suprise in his first year of cross-country competition, hoods the number 3 slot. Presently 3 seniors and a freshman are vying for the fourth and fifth positions. Seniors Rick Paulhamus and Paul Keely, the most improved member of the squad, are well ahead of last year's pace.

Fourth year man Kerry Stanley, who is nursing a knee injury, may be hampered in the early meets. Freshman Scott Williams has looked good and shows great promise.

One senior, one junior, and 3 sophomores, all first year men, complete the squad. Senior John Civitts has improved steadily. Junior Ted Corcelius had a bad case of blisters and may miss the first meet. Sophomore Bill Elwell, Ken Kuehn and Kirk Wilson have shown progress, with Kirk ready to challenge for a scoring position.

This year's team had more depth then many previous teams have had. Thus for the team has run in a pack and has shown great spirit and desire. A successful season seems assured.

Grid Coach Expresses High Hopes for Team's Endeavor

Faced with what will probably be their toughest football game of the entire season next Saturday evening at Albright, Juniata College's Indians are concentrating on beefing up their defense for the opener.

Several minor injuries and a number of defensive weaknsses have been remedied, but Coach Walt Nadzak remains cautious about making too many optimistic predictions about that first encounter in Reading.

Nadzak is still concerned about some persistent mistakes in the Indians' defense, but after a scrimmage against Indiana last weekend he said, "I'm confident we can move the ball against anybody." His greatest hopes are for quarterback Terry Turnbaugh's throwing arm to be in shape for the opener, but some work needs to b done on the receiving end, according to the Coach.

Other promising signs in the Juniata lineup are senior center Jeff Bassett and sophomore split-end Dean Rockovan. Both boys performed handsomely in the scrimmage.

In the 18-game grid series between Juniata and Albright, the Lions have taken 13 away from the Indians. New Coach Nadzak has made no promises, but this opening game holds promise as one of the most spectacular of Juniata's entire season.

FROM THE TEE-PEE

by Tom Diehl
Sports Editor

In reading the 1969 Juniata Football Press Guide, I was immediately impressed with the final statements Coach Walt Nadzak made in his outlook upon the coming football season. They read: "In evaluating our overall prospects, we will need help from some incoming freshmen to blend with the veterans to give us the depth needed to be a contender for the M.A.C. championship. We could also use a little more team speed, but in the final analysis, we have to concentrate on the things that win games; namely, Desire, Dedication, Discipline, and Hitting!" These last four nouns stick in my mind as the crux of Coach Nadzak's statements, as they relate to him personally.

From my limited contact with him, I have found Coach Nadzak to be a man who typifies these four qualities admirably. His desire to become acquainted with the Juniata athletic program and serve the college ably as its athletic director has not gone unnoticed. Alighed with this first quality is his dedication, a personal trait which will become more apparent with the passage of time.

Discipline, the third of Mr. Nadzak's "Three D's", can be evidenced in the handling of his football players last Friday evening. As a team, the players attended a movie at the Kalos Clifton theatre. This action served not only as a "watchdog policy", but can also be viewed as a strengthening of team unity and companionship. Finally, his practicalness can be seen in his last philosophy, hitting. Fierce, yet legal, bodily contact is as much a part of football as speed and finesse are in basketball.

Thsee qualities, then, constitute Walt Nadzak's outlook, whether it be as football coach or one attempting to know and understand Juniata students through his part as athletics director. His four philosophies will be most evident this fall on the gridiron through his football players, yet they will also be discerned by others in the student body who learn to know and accept Coach Walt Nadzak, a new and welcome addition to Juniata College life.

MIKE'S SELF SERVICE SHOE OUTLET
715 Washington Street
"We have your style"

The Village Dress Shop
We Specialize In Clothing For The College Girl
Stop in and open an account for the year
729 Washington St.

Norris' Store
Convenient
15th & Moore St.
Open 8 'till 11

Mark's Corner News
4th & Allegheny St.
OPEN 24 HOURS
Kay Woodie Medico
Yellowhole Dr. Grabin
"The Pipe"
Choose from the largest selection in town
10,000 Items

EAST END PIZZA
THE BEST IN TOWN
No Slices
Good Pizza — Sandwiches Too ! ! !
643-4280

THE JUNIATIAN

Vol. XLVI, No. 3 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | October 10, 1969

Margin of Difference . . .

Building to Honor Ellis Ideals

by Peggy Haines

After a month's full use, Ellis Hall will formally be dedicated this Saturday, Oct. 11, at 4 p.m. in the building's ballroom. The two million dollar college center is the first building of the Margin of Difference program, whose goal is $14,100,000, to be raised before Juniata's one hundredth birthday in 1976.

Dr. John N. Stauffer, President of Juniata and a member of the Class of 1936, will preside over the dedication program, which will include a series of formal acceptances of the building itself by various representatives of the college. Among those to speak will be Dr. John C. Baker, Class of 1917 and chairman of the Board of Trustees; Dr. Paul M. Robinson, Class of 1935 and President of Bethany Theological Seminary; Mr. Charles C. Brown, Jr., Class of 1959 and a member of the Bellefonte law firm of Love and Wilkinson; and Carol Barwise, Class of 1970 and chairman of the College Center Board, who will offer the formal acceptance speech in behalf of the Juniata students. A reception for alumni, students, faculty and guests will immediately follow the formal dedication in Ellis Hall lounge. The Ellis Hall cafeteria will be the setting for a formal dedication-homecoming dinner to be served at 6:30 that evening.

Dr. Calvert N. Ellis

Honored guests throughout the dedication proceedings will be Dr. and Mrs. Calvert N. Ellis. The new Center is named in honor of Dr. Ellis and in memory of his father, Dr. Charles C. Ellis. Father and son, both past presidents of Juniata, have guided and served the college for a total of 79 years, and shown a deep commitment toward education.

Dr. Charles C. Ellis (1874-1950), president from 1930 to 1943, was a great teacher with a gift for inspiring students. Also admired for his public speaking and preaching abilities, he traveled widely in the United States on engagements. Three times he was elected Moderator of the Annual Conference of the Church of the Brethren; he was also President of the President's Association of Pennsylvania. In retirement he wrote a history of Juniata, his Alma Mater.

Dr. Calvert N. Ellis (1904-), president from 1943 to 1968, held many similar positions, in addition to being a spokesman for higher education in Washington. During his career he was elected President of the Middle States Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, of the Foundation of Independent Colleges in Pennsylvania and of the Pennsylvania Association of Colleges and Universities. In his last year as Juniata's President, he was elected Chairman of the Association of American Colleges. Today, as President Emeritus, he is still actively engaged in trying to solve the problems of colleges and universities.

Both father and son believed that students should be taught a way of life, rather than a means of making a living. Said Dr. Calvert Ellis of the Center when only in the planning stage, "Such a center will strengthen Juniata's ability to provide students with a wholesome environment in which their extra-curricular education may be expanded. The Center will serve as a meeting ground for students and faculty; a headquarters for student government and student activities; and a focus for recreational and social activities."

Ellis Hall has already become an important and vital asset to the campus, housing Juniata's cafeteria, bookstore, post office, bank, snack bar, ballroom, recreation and game room, numerous lounges, and listening and meeting rooms. Yet, the building is by no means totally finished; for instance, the radio station, and the newspaper and yearbook offices have still not fully moved in. Other problems, too, will have to be solved in time, such as the overcrowding of meal lines and inadequacy of the ballroom. But Saturday's dedication will be a celebration of all that's right with Ellis Hall and will honor those two men who have so helped to make Juniata the college it is today.

Hong Kong, South Viet Nam . . .

Doctor to Speak on Projects

Dr. Jim Turpin, founder and president of Project Concern, Inc. an international, non-profit medical relief organization, will appear at JC on Oct. 13 at 8:15 p.m. to speak of the work his medical teams are doing in Hong Kong, Vietnam, Mexico and the Appalachian area of the United States.

Dr. Stauffer Gives Statement

Oct. 15, many members of the college community will want to witness to their deep concern about our nation's involvement in Vietnam. It is anticipated that through a variety of constructive expressions many among us will give support to the Vietnam Moratorium.

I hope that each faculty member will freely determine whether his classes are to be held on Oct. 15. Plans for holding or canceling classes should be clearly announced. In turn, I hope that on Oct. 15 each student will be free to determine whether he will attend any of his classes that may be held. Absences from class should be without penalty.

Juniata College, as an institution, takes no position either in support of or in opposition to the war. As an arena for the free expression of ideas, the College must not force a particular position upon any person.

Let me take this means of expressing my personal opposition to our nation's involvement in Vietnam. It is my hope that Oct. 15 may be a day of earnest discussion and of critical examination of the issues relating to the Vietnam War. May it be a day for renewed dedication to the ways of peace.

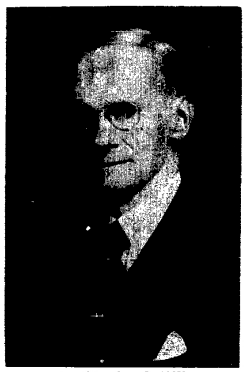
John N. Stauffer
President

Project Concern's field activities include four clinics in the British Crown Colony of Hong Kong, the most unique probably being the floating clinic which serves over 40,000 boat people in Kowloon Bay. These boat dwellers are born, raised, live their lives, and die afloat—many of them too superstitious to go ashore ever for medical care, so Project Concern has anchored a modern medical facility in their midst.

In South Vietnam, a 42-bed hospital and out-patient clinics in 25 villages are the Project Concern services. The most important contributions to the health and welfare of these near-destitute Montagnard tribesmen of the Central Highlands has been the training of over 35 of their own young men and women as Village and Hospital Medical Assistants. This training is a cooperative effort between Project Concern and the Government of South Vietnam, and is an investment in the future of the country. The Village Medical Assistants provide their fellow tribesmen with an increased understanding of modern health and sanitation standards, rooted in their own language and traditions.

In Mexico, Fumdacion Project Concern de Mexico, a medical/dental clinic and child-care center have been established. Future plans are to upgrade the present facility and to construct a modern pediatric hospital for the children of Baja California—serving primarily the city of Tijuana with a population of over 300,000.

In an abandoned doctor's office in Byrdstown, Tennessee, Project Concern initiated its newest program. An out-patient clinic and mobile medical teams offer help to the population of Fentress and Overton and Pickett County. Plans call for a new facility to be built in this area to meet the medical/dental needs.



Dr. Charles C. Ellis

Visiting Artist to Discuss Works by Melville, Daumier

Dr. Howard P. Vincent, University Professor of English at Kent State University in Ohio, will spend two weeks in residence at Juniata as a visiting lecturer in the department of English.

A man of international repute among scholars in his field, Dr. Vincent is one of America's foremost authorities on the works and literary philosophy of Herman Melville, the author of "Moby Dick," "Billy Budd," and other American literary classics. Melville's 150th birthday is being celebrated this year, bringing Dr. Vincent and his many writings on the great author to the fore in national literary circles.

During his residence at Juniata, Dr. Vincent will give two public lectures. The first was Monday, Oct. 6, A lecture on the great French lithographer and political cartoonist, Honore Daumier, will be given by Dr. Vincent, Thursday, Oct. 16, 8:15 p.m. in Alumni Hall. Although known as an authority on Herman Melville, Dr. Vincent has one of the largest collections in the States of Daumier lithographs. He is preparing a book on the artist. "The arts" says Dr. Vincent, "Are where the greatest realm of values is found. And the important thing is that no art worth a damn preaches. Its message must be found in oneself."

In addition to his public lectures at Juniata, Dr. Vincent will address numerous classes and meet informally with students and faculty of the College during his two-week visit.

Ann Reigns As Queen While Alumni Return

Ann Reganis

by Kathy Podgorski

Ann Reganis has been chosen by Juniata College students as their '69 Homecoming Queen. Her attendant from the senior class is Cheryl Diffenderfer and Susie Moyer will represent the junior class.

Homecoming begins Saturday morning at 10 a.m. with the traditional homecoming parade. Entering floats in the competition for the coveted first place are the four classes and the assorted clubs.

Following the parade will be Juniata vs. Geneva in a hopeful victory for the football team. Entertaining the crowd in pre-game festivities will be the Pom-Pom Girls, Majorettes and the Juniata Pep Band. Halftime will consist of a show by Geneva's band, awarding of prizes in the float competition and the crowning of Ann.

Immediately following the game there will be a reception dedicating the new student union building, Ellis Hall. Preceding the David Frye show will be a sit down meal to which all students are invited. Culminating the activities will be the Homecoming Dance. Entertainment will be provided by the "Music Masters" and decorations by the seniors.

Large Percentage Shows Anti-Comp Sentiment

by Lee Denlinger

Since their inception in 1943, Comprehensive Examinations have plagued every Juniata student at one time or another. Students have talked about the meaning and validity of Comps for years, but nothing was ever done except talk. However, the situation has changed since the beginning of the semester. The culmination of much hard work occured Monday, Oct. 6, with a campus wide student referendum held to determine student opinion about comprehensives.

A total of 1085 out of 1205 students voted in Ellis Hall's main lobby between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m. This breaks down to a voter turnout of almost exactly 90%, by far the largest response to a campus election in recent years.

The results of the referendum were publically announced at a student meeting held in Oller Hall Wednesday evening, Oct. 8. The figures are as follows: Abolition— 1029, Revision— 45, Retention— 11. In percentages this means that 85.4% of the total student body favor abolition of Comps, 3.7% favor revision and 0.9% are in favor of retention with 10.0% abstaining. These figures along with other data will be presented to the faculty along with student recommendations about Comps.

All the activity this week was the result of a special Student Government meeting held in Alumni Hall at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday, Sept. 27. Nearly 450 students attended this meeting where it was decided to call a student body referendum within three weeks of the meeting to determine a student opinion on Comps.

The meeting, called by SG President Eric Woodworth, grew out of discussions at the Student Leadership Conference. Comps had been extensively discussed, and it was decided that one of the Student Government goals for this year would be the "revision" of Comps. It was felt that the best way to determine student intent and support would be to call a mass meeting about the issue. This resulted in the standing room only meeting in Alumni Hall.

The meeting was opened with some general remarks by President Eric Woodworth. He then stated that he felt the purpose of the meeting was two fold: first, it showed the amount of student interest, and second, from it a committee of seven people should be picked to investigate various facets of the problem. These included questioning the faculty on the phrpose of Comps, finding out Alumni feelings toward Comps and preparing a position paper about the problem. The meeting was then opened for general discussion.

It immediately became apparent that many students disagreed with this method. Led by unofficial spokesmen, Jerry Eisenhour, a membes of the Class of '71, they pointed out several problems associated with kind of committee action. Foremost were the twin problems of slowness and the ease with which action could be sidetracked. Parallels were drawn with the length of time it took to revise women's hours, the lack of action in deficiency notices after a year and a half, and the fact that the Comp question itself has been on the Faculty Agenda for two years.

On the other hand, when students pressed for quick action on library hours, the revision came very quickly. Eisenhour suggested that immediate action was vital if the problem were to be solved in time for the students who will graduate in January. He suggested that the best course of action would be a student referendum to determine student feeling about abolition or revision of Comps. It was suggested that the referendum be held within three weeks.

The unsung "hero" of the meeting was the anonymous Freshman who asked just what Comps really were. After this was greeted with laughter, Eisenhour pointed out that this was an excellent question. The question "What are Comps?" became a rallying point.

It seemed that no one really knew what Comps are beyond this vague statement in the Pathfinder: "In a word, the examination is designed to inquire into the significance of what he has learned." What this really means seems to vary from one person to another. The necessity of educating the "Frosh" was immediately raised.

The debate finally congealed in a motion originated by Rodger Long that a referendum be held within

Cont'd on page 3

Editorial . . .

Games We Play . . .

This is a word to the frustrated garbage wrappers and fish cleaners on campus. You've probably been wondering what has happened to your old pal —the Juniatian. The need for our services is mounting constantly, and you're wondering what we're doing.

Well, we're down in our new offices playing Nanook of the North. This consists of sitting on piles of old Alfaratas (There are no chairs.) and rubbing two Bic pens together to start a fire (There is no heat.). It is considered a forfeit to open the window to let in warm air.

The more avid members of the staff have concocted a racier version. For this one sits in the dark (There are no lights either.) and watches the activities of the men's dorms. The Northern lights have been particularly commended.

Reliable sources promised us a few weeks ago that in "a few days" this form of entertainment will be a thing of the past. Then we can get right down to churning out our weekly offering.

'Til then, please bear with us, and pass the word to our subscribers that they need not send us Xerox copies of their cancelled checks. The Circulation Dept. is trying very hard, but they're running out of floor space on which to pile their correspondence. And we're trying to maintain a neat office.

Violins to Accompany Organ Recital by Prof. Johnson

Prof. Donald S. Johnson will give his 26th annual fall organ recital at 3:30 p.m. Sunday, Oct. 12, in Oller Auditorium.

Assisting him will be his daughter and son-in-law, Claire and John Prunchak, violinists. Program material for the recital will draw on the works of Mozart, Bach, Handel, Mendelssohn, Leo Sowerby and Joseph Rheinberger.

Mrs. Prunchak, a Huntingdon Music Club scholarship winner, is at present finishing work on her Master's degree at Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh. She has studied violin with Mischa Mischakoff at Chautauqua, N.Y., with Dr. Jack Brammer, formerly of Juniata, and with George Grossman of Carnegie-Mellon.

Her husband, a graduate of Carnegie-Mellon University, is the string instrument instructor in the Beaver (Pa.) public schools, and has served as concertmaster of the University-Community Symphony Orchestra in Pittsburgh.

Professor Johnson, college organist at Juniata, is also organist and musical director of the Huntingdon First United Methodist Church, where he trains two choirs. He has played organ recitals in St. Joseph, Mo.; Dallas; New York City; Geneva, N.Y.; and many communities in this state, in addition to his annual series of recitals in the fall and at commencement ceremonies at Juniata College.

He is a graduate of New York University and has studied at Bush Conservatory, Chicago, the Christiansen School, Juilliard School of Music, Union Theological Seminary School of Sacred Music and at the Church Music Institute at Alfred, N.Y.

The senseless bloodshed continues . . .

What Can We Do?

by Don Laine

The purpose of the Vietnam Moratorium next Wed., Oct. 15, is to maximize public pressure to end the war by encouraging Americans to work against the war. This will be done by curtailing "business as usual" Wednesday and working in local communities to urge public action.

Over 300 student body presidents and newspaper editors from colleges across the nation are supporting the Moratorium. The Undergraduate Student Government of the State College campus of Penn State University voted last week to allot $200 for publicity for the Moratorium. At Franklin and Marshall College, the F & M Moratorium Committee plans to distribute leaflets, circulate petitions, picket the local draft board and a nearby RCA plant, and perhaps picket the Hamilton Watch Company, which makes Mark II antipersonnel bombs for the army.

But what can we at Juniata do?

We can put our bodies in gear and take to the streets next Wednesday. Leafletting and talking to the citizens of Huntingdon can help, and it's up to us to do it. Referring to the Oct. 15 Moratorium, the Juniata College Student Government has issued a statement "that the student government strongly supports the ideals behind the movement and individual action should be a personal prerogative". Dr. John N. Stauffer, President of Juniata, has stated that it's up to each individual to make his own decision regarding the Moratorium; that professors may or may not cancel classes as they wish, but that they should not penalize students for being absent if class is held.

There will be a rally on Round Top starting at 10 a.m. From there we'll form small groups and distribute leaflets door to door and in the shopping areas of Huntingdon. The leaflets explain the purpose of the Moratorium and urge people to lend their support. By distributing the leaflets and talking to the people of the community we hope to gain some support from this rather conservative town; and help, if only in a small way, to end the insanity of Vietnam.

As Senator George McGovern said: "I would hope that the Moratorium observance will make clear to the Administration that in the continuance of this senseless bloodshed lies the seed of national tragedy. It is an effort which merits the responsible participation of all Americans who are anxious to reverse a policy of military attrition and moral disaster".

SG report . . .

Comps, Task Force, Trustee Lunch Hold Student Interest

by Donna Knupp

At its recent meetings the Student Government has discussed the faculty Task Force. On Sept. 25, Marta Daniels represented a group that had previously voiced its concern for student representation on the Task Forre to the committee itself. The members distributed copies of the context of this speech and asked that SG members read them to understand their ideas. According to Marta, the group wanted, and still wants, to work with SG, but organized itself because SG hadn't done anything. Donna Roppelt was appointed as student member to the Task Force at the Oct. 1 meeting.

Since the Board of Trustees will be on campus Oct. 18, Eric Woodworth appointed a four-member committee to plan a luncheon with the trustees to discuss proposed student membership on the board. In this way, the trustees can think about the possibility before their meeting.

SG has also discussed the comprehensive exam issue. Jerry Eisenhour offered to research the system used at other colleges. Bob Krouse and Lee Denlinger reported on the telephone poll taken of recent alumni. Because the information on comps won't be presented to the faculty before Nov. 3, it is hoped that more alumni graduating in 1964-66 can be contacted.

In other action, SG voted to strongly support the ideals behind the Vietnam Peace March, although it recognized that individual action is a personal perogative. Don Laine announced the group's plans for the campaign on Oct. 15.

Ink in Your Veins?
The JUNIATIAN Needs You
No experience necessary
Meeting Tues. 7 p.m. K-216

Trustees Buy Poultry Farm For Expansion

The purchase of a Huntingdon County farm tract by the trustees of Juniata College was announced Oct. 1 by Dr. John N. Stauffer, president of the College.

The tract, known as the Metz Poultry Farm and formerly as the Hilltop Farm, comprises 170 acres of fields and wooded terrain located in Oneida Township on a ridge directly east of Warm Springs Avenue and is in close proximity to Huntingdon Borough near the site of two new residence halls on the Juniata College campus. Buildings on the property consist of a two-story frame dwelling, a frame bank-barn and a large chicken house.

The sellers of the property are Charles J. Metz, Robert K. Metz and Harry P. Metz and their wives, all of Belleville, who have owned and operated the farm since 1948. The purchase price was not disclosed.

In announcing the purchase, Dr. Stauffer stated that several uses of the farm for educational purposes will be considered by the College's Board of Trustees. He explained that 'this acquisition by the College makes it possible to fulfill a long standing need for outdoor laboratory facilities in such fields as biology and geology. Other educational and recreational uses by students are also anticipated," he said.

The president explained that the purchase of the property will become effective over a four-year period during which time the present owners will retain use of the area presently used for poultry farm facilities. He added that at the conclusion of the four-year period additional educational uses of the property will be identified.

Dr. Stauffer pointed out that initial steps toward the farm acquisition were made possible through "a gift to the College designated specifically for this purpose," and added that "additional gifts of this nature are anticipated." He said the purchase represents acreage that is unlikely again to become available for the long-range development of the College.

Musical Notes . . .

Organ Recital, Choir Concert Head Upcoming Musical Attractions

JOHNSON ORGAN RECITAL:

Professor Donald S. Johnson will give his 26th annual fall organ recital Sunday, Oct. 12 at 3:30 p.m. with the assistance of his daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. John Prunchak. Mr. Prunchak is a music instructor at the Beaver (Pa.) Public Schools and his wife is finishing her Master's degree work at Carnegie-Mellon University. She is a violinist.

The concert will include music composed by Handel, Mozart, Rheinberger, Mendelssohn and Sowerby.

PARENTS DAY CONCERT:

The Juniata Concert Choir will present Gilbert and Sullivan's H.M.S. PINAFORE, Friday and Saturday, Oct. 24 and 25 in Oller Auditorium. The curtains will open at 8:15. The performance is under the direction of Bruce Hirsch and stage director is Mrs. Marjorie Hirsch. General Admission will be $1.50 and tickets are available at the box office. Ralph Blackstraw, the hero, is played by William Leverenz '72. Jane Crosby is playing Buttercup and Dr. Wilford Norris is playing Sir Joseph Porter K.C.B. Get your tickets early for a great show.

A MUSICAL MOSAIC:

The musical treats come in bunches and October will see the arrival of "The Hallelujah Train", presented by The Eva Jessye Choir and Ensemble Oct. 30, Thursday, at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Auditorium. A distinguished company of singers, actors, dancers and musicians will present a variety of folk songs, operatic arias, spirituals, jazz, blues and Broadway show tunes. Showmanship is the key to the fully lighted and costumed scenes in which the choir dramatizes work songs, gambling ditties, folk music and Negro spirituals. This performance is part of the Juniata FOCUS ON ART AND LIFE Series. There is no admission fee.

OPERA GOES MOD:

"The Impresario" (Mozart goes Mod) is to be presented Friday night, Oct. 31, at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Auditoirum. The Demitasse Opera Company, formed by the Franklin Concerts organization, will bring back to Juniata some old musical friends. Among the artists is Deborah Cook, soprano, who gave a recital here last Feb.

"The Impresario" by Mozart, was staged for Franklin Concerts by the distinguished Metropolitan Opera State Director, Henry Butler, in a delightful Mod version. It is sung in English and provides a marvelous introduction to opera as an art form.

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College
Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED NOV. 6, 1924

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891

BARBARA CLAAR, editor-in-chief
PAUL KEELY, associate editor
ADELE ABOUTOK, copy editor
J. PATRICK TYSON, news editor
JOEL SCHANTZ, business manager
RICHARD ABLARD, advertising manager
SUE BERMEL, layout editor

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Don, Laine, Mary E. White Barbara Boone, Lee Denlinger, Peggy Haines Cathy Podgorski

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000

Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVI, No. 3

October 10, 1969

Karen's 'Greatly Improved'

Miss Karen M. Alcorn, the Juniata College sophomore who was critically injured in a one-car accident near Trough Creek State Park on Sept. 15 while returning from a College choir picnic, has been transferred from Altoona General Hospital to her home-town hospital in Hagerstown, Md.

Miss Alcorn is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Alcorn of Hagerstown, and the granddaughter of Mr. Frank Alcorn, 1405 Mifflin St., Huntingdon.

Hospital attaches at Washington County Hospital in Hagerstown report that Karen's condition is "greatly improved," and that "her long-term chances for complete recovery are favorable." The 18 year-old oced was removed from the critical list at Altoona General Hospital on Sept. 26, but remained in intensive care until the transfer to Hagerstown could be arranged.

She has been placed in a private room in the Hagerstown hospital and friends who wish to send cards or greetings may address them to Miss Alcorn at Room 659, Washington County Hospital, King St., Hagerstown, Md. 21740

JC Students to Take Part In Viet Nam Moratorium

by Paul Keely

"WE SUPPORT OCT. 15," blared the full-page advertisement in the New York Times of last Sept. 28, and there followed down the page a listing of endorsements by 15 national notables from Senators Charles Goodell, Mark Hatfield, Eugene McCarthy, and George McGovern, to Doctors John Kenneth Galbraith, Reinhold Niebuhr, and Benjamin Spock.

What they've deemed worth supporting is, as the ad designated, the expectation that "on Oct. 15, students and faculty all over America will leave their classes for one day to ring doorbells and talk with their fellow Americans about the madness of Vietnam."

Initiated as a national proposal of two former aides of Sen. McCarthy, the "Call" for a Vietnam Moratorium has been circulated by a national V.M. Committee located in Washington, D.C.; organizations on some 400 campuses have signed the "Call," say the Moratorium organizers, and will participate.

Come next Wednesday, what will Juniata College be doing in response to such a plea for suspension of "business as usual" and devotion of a day to organizing members of the academic and outside communities "to work actively for an early withdrawal of all our troops from Vietnam"?

Barry Kotler and other interested Juniata students are organizing a rally to be held on Round Top at 10 a.m. that day. Efforts will be directed from there toward the possible distribution of literature from door to door in Huntingdon, and there are also plans for handing out anti-war leaflets on street corners downtown, together with talking to anyone who will listen.

Actually the Vietnam Moratorium scheduled for Oct. 15, though in itself an effort to maximize public pressure to end the war by encouraging a broad cross-section of Americans to work against the war, is part of a greater commitment directed toward building an enlarged and lengthened moratorium for November. A peace march in Washington, D.C., is scheduled for Nov. 13-15, and unofficial sources report that many Juniata students are planning to participate.

The Oct. 15 Moratorium, which (as TIME Magazine of Oct. 3 reported) has the pledged support of two dozen Democratic senators and representatives, is expected to have its largest initial success in the academic community, with subsequent rapid expansion into other segments of the community. And, although the primary focus will be on ending the Vietnam war, other related issues (e.g., the draft, militarism, taxes, inflation, and interest rates) are supposed to be brought in by participants on the local level.

Large Percentage Shows Anti-Comp Sentiment at JC

Cont'd from page 1

three weeks and that during that time a committee of seven be formed to collect data and opinions and to educate the "Frosh" and all others. This motion was quickly seconded and after some debate was passed almost unanimously. Students who were interested were asked to sign up for the committee after the meeting. A list of nearly 50 people was received.

In a closed session of the Student Government held the next evening seven people were selected for this committee. The members of the committee are: Jerry Eisenhour, Dennis Dwyer, Robert Crouse, Pam Smith, Kathy Snyder, Dehra Winters and Mo Taylor. The committee has been hard at work.

With the assistance of many other "leg-men" they set up the referendum, interviewed faculty members, conducted a telephone survey of recent alumni, held meetings for the Freshmen and dorm meetings for the entire student body, and with the help of the Registration and Standing Committee collected data on Comp results since 1960. The committee is continuing its work in correlating the collected data and drafting a student rationale about Comps which will be presented to the faculty before the Nov. meeing. The students have laid the groundwork, now it's up to the faculty to take action.

Album of the Month
"GREEN RIVER"
Credence
Clearwater
Revival
Stereo
Reg. $4.79
Now $2.98
ON SALE AT Miller's

KALOS
CLIFTON
TONIGHT and SATURDAY
ICE STATION ZEBRA
Technicolor
Rock Hudson — Ernest Borgnine
at 7:00 and 9:35
SUNDAY and MONDAY
Charlton Heston in NUMBER ONE
Technicolor
Story of a washed-up Pro-football star: Features at 7:15 and 9:17
TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY
W. C. Fields in THE BANK DICK
and
NEVER GIVE A SUCKER AN EVEN BREAK
Open at 6:30
All Seats 75¢ —

BUCK'S LAUNDRY
and Dry Cleaners
643-2252

THE PACKABLES
Ready Set Modacrylic Stretch Wigs for gals on the go $25.00
Curlettes & Falls $13.95
Includes Carrying Case and Dome Crown.
Completely Wash & Wear. Never Needs Set.
Ask For EILEEN at ISETT'S
Dept Store

WORK FOR PEACE

Ending the Vietnam War is the most important task facing the American nation. Over the last few years, millions of Americans have campaigned, protested, and demonstrated against the war. Few now defend the war, yet it continues. It is necessary for those who desire peace to again become active and help bring pressure to bear on the present Administration.

On Oct. 15, there will be a moratorium on "business as usual" in order that students, faculty members and concerned citizens can devote time and energy to the important task of taking the issue of peace in Vietnam to the larger community.

We call upon the students of Juniata to support the Moratorium. There will be a mass rally on Round Top at 10 a.m. next Wed., after which students and faculty members will form small groups to canvass door-to-door as well as the shopping areas downtown, distributing leaflets calling for a final peace in Vietnam.

OCT. 15

Sparks Leads Rushing . . .

Indians Tromp Albright 20-7

by Gene Galbraith

Coach Walt Nadzak and halfback Dave Sparks broke into Juniata football in supreme fashion in the opener as the Indians ran over the Albright Lions, 1968 MAC Northern Division Co-Champs, by a score of 20-7. While Sparks was igniting the Indian's ground game, Coach Nadzak was kept busy setting up plays in crucial situations and keeping the referees on their toes.

The Indians scored their first TD late in the first quarter, after moving the ball 62 yards on five plays. Sparks set up the TD on a 37 yard scamper to the Albright one yard line. On the next play, fullback Jim Hartland bulled into the end zone for the score. Bill McQuade converted the extra point, and the Indians were on top 7-0.

Juniata didn't waste much time, as they scored their second TD early in the second period. The Indians were faced with a fourth down situation on the Albright 32 yard line. The tribe caught the Lions completely off stride as Jim Hartland completed a 26 yard pass to Dan Rackovan on a faked punt play. Hartland staped in the meat of the action as he scored his second TD two plays later. After McQuade's conversion, Juniata had increased their lead to 14-0.

Albright finally hit the scoreboard midway through the second quarter. The Lions' halfback Dennis Zimmerman led this scoring drive with his powerful rushing, and quarterback Jim Strohl carried the ball in for the score. After the conversion, the score read 14-7.

The Indian's rugged defense was even more superb in the second half as they held Albright scoreless for the final two periods.

The tribe, however, hit paydirt once more before the game was over. This time the defense took on the scoring task. On a third down play Joel Delewski picked off a Jim Strohl pass and raced 23 yards for the score with two minutes to play. This score cracked Albright's hopes and the Indians went on to win 20-7.

Sophomore Dave Sparks, in his initial starting assignment, had a magnificent day as he led the Indians in rushing with 199 yards in 26 carries. Halfback Harry Gicking and fullback Jim Hartland accounted for 66 and 47 yards, respectively.

Mark's Corner News

4th & Allegheny St.

OPEN 24 HOURS

Winchester Ammo
Hunting Knives
Hand Warmers
Gloves
Thermos

plus 10,000 Items

643- 9932

Crusaders Defeat Juniata Through Air Competency

by Gene Galbraith

The Susquehanna Crusaders came to town with upset in their minds, and that is exactly what they got as they upended our Indians 31-14. Quarterback Ernie Tyler and end Calvin McCants played major roles in Saturday's setback.

Although the Indians led in first downs (16-8) and rushing (111 yds.–48 yds.), the Crusaders commanded the game from the air by passing for 239 yards and 3 touchdowns.

The Crusaders jumped off to an early lead on a 66 yard pass play from Tyler to McCants. Susquehanna added another score in the second period on a plunge by halfback Steve Smith, and the Crusaders held a 14-0 halftime lead.

Juniata took the next scoring opportunity as they drove the ball to the Susquehanna one yard line. Two plays later quaterback Terry Turnlaugh scored on a sneak through the middle.

Before the close of the third quarter, however, Susquehanna scored again on a 33 yard pass from Tyler to McCants to make the score 21-7.

The Indians scored again in the fourth period as Dave Sparks powered his way into the end zone from the three yard line, but a field goal by Steve Freeh kept Susquehanna out in the front 24-14.

Juniata threatened again midway through the last quarter as they drove the ball deep into Crusader territory. However, a fumble at the 20 yard line killed our drive and gave Susquehanna the ball. The Crusaders wasted no time as Tyler and McCants combined again for an 80 yard scoring pass on their first play from scrimmage. The score now read 31-14, where it remained until the final whistle had blown.

Dave Sparks again led the Indians' ground game as he rushed for 91 yards in 22 carries. Harry Gicking and Jim Hartland added 52 yards to the Indians' rushing totals.

This game was a tough pill to swallow, but the Indians will get their chance for revenge this Saturday as they take on the Geneva Golden Tornados. They will have to perform this task without the services of senior fullback Jim Hartland, who dislocated his shoulder in last Saturday's tilt. The Indians need this game to get back on the winning path and to shake last week's shocker.

East End

No Slices

643-4280

OH SO GOOD! Pizza

You'll Find'em at

BLACK'S JEWELRY

FROM THE TEE-PEE

by Tom Diehl
Sports Editor

Looking first at football and the hard-running Sparks, the speedy halfback from Indiana, Pa., set up two Juniata scores with several prominent broken-field dashes. All in all, he racked up 192 yards, a total which exceeded all his work of last year by 20 yards. His output was also twenty short of a new single game school rushing record set by Bill Berrier in 1958. What impressed both foe and fans alike in his performance was his ability to "turn it on" once he was in the clear. His speed complimented nicely the power of Gicking and Hartland, forming a backfield which could worry Juniata opponents this season.

Speed, as it relates to endurance, also played a major part in Denny Weidler's inspiring victory in the cross country meet. Stamina was a prominent force in his run, which brought him across the finish line a full minute ahead of the second-place runner. Many think that he will approach the times of last year's record-setting captain Rick Beard. Coach Russ Trimmer says of his star pupil, "He's capable of doing it, and I think he's determined to make the extra effort."

Dave Sparks and Denny Weidler are two boys to watch, then, as their respective seasons unfold. Both have the ability and desire to carry them to record-setting heights, goals which may come to these exciting sophomores in the near future.

Harriers Outpace Albright, Led By Denny Weidler

by Tom Diehl

The old cliche that upperclassmen "rule" a school may often be true, yet such was not the case in Juniata's first sports weekend. Two sophomores, Dave Sparks and Denny Weidler, led their respective teams to hard-earned victories.

Saturday, Sept. 27, the JC harriers successfully opened their 1969 campaign with a 25-30 victory over a tough Albright squad. Leading Coach Trimmer's pack was sophomore Dennis Weidler, who covered the 4.3 mile course in 22:54, beating Albright's first man by a full minute. Captain Aub Shenk crossed the line a close third in 24:24.

Finishing sixth, seventh and eighth in the final three scoring positions were sophomore Tom Leaver (26:19), senior Kerry Stanley (26:21) and frosh Scott Williams (26:32). Other JC runners included Rick Paulhamus, 11th; Kirk Wilson, 14th; Paul Keely, 15th; and Bill Elwell, 16th. The harriers travelled to Dickinson Wednesday, Oct. 1, and opened their home season Saturday, Oct. 4, against Susquehanna in a half-time contest.

JC Pack Loses To Power Squads By Same Score

The JC harriers suffered two defeats last week to powerful Dickinson and Susquehanna squads by identical scores of 23-38. At Dickinson Dennis Weidler finished first over the hilly 4.25 mile course in 23:34 which was two seconds off the course record. Aub Shenk was the only other JC runner to break up Dickinson's tight knit top eight by finishing 4th. Other JC scores included Scott Williams 10th, Tom Leaver 11th and Rick Paulhamus 12th.

In the home opener against Susquehanna, the Indians again ran into a buzz-saw. Dennis Weidler continued his winning ways by breaking the tape in 25:31. Aub and 3rd man Tom Leaver (29:04), however, Susquehanna packed six men within one minute which spelled defeat for the Indians. Scott Williams (29:18) and Kerry Stanley (29:21) completed the JC scoring.

Despite the two defeats, the outlook is optimistic. Saturday's encounter was the first time ever that JC has all their scorers under 29:30 on the home course. The "pack" is improving and this improvement should result in many victories the remainder of the season.

Baubles Bangles
Beads & Rings
at the
COLONIAL GIFT SHOP
Among other things . . .

Good Eating
Fast Service

Enjoy our delicious Food — Our Friendly atmosphere
Visit us Today

Kelly's Korner

1340 Penna. Ave
643-4900

Letters Policy

Letters to the editor should be typed and double-spaced and should be submitted no later than 1:30 p.m. Monday. The editors reserve the right to print only non-libelous and responsible content and to edit all letters and commentaries submitted to the Juniatian. The staff also reserves the right to publish all full signatures unless the writer can supply very valid reasons for omitting his name.

For an adventure in Eating . . .
MOTEL 22 BUFFET SUPPERS
Wednesday & Thursday 6-10 p.m.
The Buffet Service is in three Courses, Appetizers and Salads, Main Course (choice of meats + vegetables) and deserts.
Get china for each course at the Service Table.
Feel free to return as often as you wish.

Are All Your Car Lights ON?

When you put on the lights, do they all go on? Let us give your car a complete inspection—For a low cost, After all your Life depends on it

14th St. ESSO

THE JUNIATIAN

Vol. XLVI, No. 4 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | October 17, 1969

Brother's brother . . .

Doctor Talks of Project Concern

by David Beahm

This article never should have been written. And, because of this, I suppose it should never be read. For it is an attempt, in the awkward style of stilted journalism, to convey the emotion, the feeling, the pressing sense of urgency which Dr. James Turpin feels toward his world-wide work in Project Concern. It, therefore, cannot possibly succeed.

Those few of you who attended the convocation last Monday night realize exactly what I mean. Dr. Turpin, a graduate of medical school, is the head of a crew of 157 people from 26 different counties devoted to the immediate and long-range alleviation of world-wide medical problems. Project Concern operates in Honk Kong, Tijuana, Appalachia and Vietnam with prospective locations in New Mexico (with the Navajos).

Most of the evening, however, was spent discussing the problems in Vietnam where he has most recently been working since June 10, 1964. In an abandoned special forces camp, Project Concern has established a 42 bed hospital. Attempting to remain as politically and religiously neutral as possible the project has refused governmental assistance or religious affiliation.

Along with the direct administration of medicine and patient treatment, the base has set up a temporary six month medical school and has turned out 103 Vietnamese to man 23 health stations, treating the people for 90% of the common diseases and educating villagers in the areas of mosquito control, population control, dental practices and general hygiene. Hoping to expand this self-dependent program, Dr. Turpin feels that it could provide long range relief for medical problems.

There are 290 physicians in Vietnam, 90% of which are in the military. Most of the rest are in the large cities leaving most of rural Vietnam without doctors.

Working with the people for the past five years, Dr. Turpin has grown to realize that "we may be winning the war (although this even is in doubt), but we are losing the people. Although some did five years ago, no one in rural Viet Nam now really believes we are sincerely interested in them."

Last year we spent $263,000 to kill each Viet Cong, enough money to have made Vietnam the fifth richest nation in the world ($2,000 per person). But Viet Nam needs more than our wealth. It needs our sensitive understanding. As Dr. Turpin said, "I don't want people to be their brother's keeper, I want them to be their brother's brothers". Enough Ugly Americans.

We can no longer simply pour material assistance into the starving areas of our world as if we are "slopping the hogs." This can lead to nothing but hatred because it only emphasizes their dependence, doing nothing to provide for their human desire and right to dignity.

People are not interested in the concept of democracy when the only governmental figures they ever see are pilots and green berets. People are not interested in the idea of a loving heavenly father as long as their children are starving.

So, the war continues. For how long can the Great Mandala move on? What country will be the next Vietnam? Maybe this war will soon be ended by all the protests and moratoriums now going on. But if we fail to move into Vietnam with as much intensity and devotion non-militarily as we have sought to withdraw militarily, there will be no improvement in the world. Our own children will be next generation's protesters and we will tell them how useless it all is.

Project Concern is only one possible area for positive action for peace and understanding. It is not without hope. "A dream worthy of the dreamer can, must, and will be accomplished."

The Peppermint Rainbow will appear here tonight in Memorial Gym. Get your tickets at the Ellis Hall Information desk and come see an up-and-coming group.

Alumni Appreciate Ellis Hall, Comprehensives

Football, Ellis Hall, Vietnam Moratorium, Comprehensive Exams—subjects Alumni commented on Homecoming weekend. Encouraged by sunshine and the smiles of old cronies, the campus came alive once more for them.

Disappointment showed on the faces of Alumni and students alike as they sat bewildered watching Geneva squeak by Juniata 16-14. However, they were cheered up at the unveiling of Ellis Hall. It was stated that the elaborate furniture in the cafeteria and throughout the building makes the students behave and act like ladies and gentlemen. This makes the atmosphere more formal than cordial. For some the lounge and facilities seemed like a dream while others saw a nightmare in the slow moving cafeteria lines.

The Vietnam Moratorium raised many spirited conversations. The Alumni were surprised at the participation of the Juniata students in this protest. Many felt it was a good and worthwhile gesture while others held the view that it was useless.

Comprehensive Exams spurred on still other questions but still fewer answers. It was amazing how many alumni, primarily the males, felt comprehensives integrated knowledge and were just an overall good experience. One point brought forth was that one goes through life facing many hardships, and comprehensives are a good experience to assist in this struggle. (In other words, if you make it through comprehensives the rest of your life will flow easily? ? ? ?) The results of the comprehensive poll taken on Saturday are not yet available but should be very interesting.

As the Alumni pulled away and headed towawrd home, anticipation of the coming years for Juniata College filled every mind—wondering what will be new for next year.

Bridges, Portage Railroad . . .

Exhibit Features River Life

Life along the Juniata and Susquehanna Rivers during the early part of the 19th century is the subject of 20 paintings on exhibit in the Shoemaker Galleries through Nov. 4. Included are views of the Portage Railroad, canal boats and the famous Conestoga Wagon.

On loan from the William Penn Memorial Museum in Harrisburg, the collection was arranged by the Fine Arts Section of the State museums. Executive Director is Dr. S. K. Stevens and the Chief, Fine Arts Section is Mr. Donald Miner.

Included are paintings by Lloyd Mifflin (1846-1921) who was born in Columbia, Pa. and studied painting with the famous American landscape artist, Thomas Moran. He also studned in Dusseldorf, Germany and the paintings in the Juniata exhibition show the influence of the English romantic, J. M. Turner.

Mifflin painted many views of the Susquehanna below Wrightsville, Pa. One of these scenes shows the bridge which was burned on June 28, 1863 by Union soldiers to prevent a crossing of the Confederate troops under General Lee.

There are six paintings by George Storm (1831-1913), illustrating the various modes of travel common to the 19th century. Among other historical sites, he painted the Lemon Inn on the Portage Railroad. He also depicts the Conestoga Wagon.

A painting by William T. Van Starkenbur shows the first geological survey of Pennsylvania. Extending from 1836 to 1854, the work was directed by Henry Rogers, state geologist. The artist shows the party in camp in Somerset County.

Other artists in the exhibition include E. B. Black, Newbold Hough Trotter, J. W. Faulton, Robert Mills, William S. Reeder and E. E. Johnson.

October 15 at Juniata

by Don Laine

Wed., Oct. 15, began with a small group of students distributing leaflets to the passersby on the corner of Washington and Sixth. This began at 9 a.m. and continued all morning. At 10 a.m. a rally was begun on Round Top; Dr. Stephen Boyan, assistant professor of political science at Penn State, outlined the history of the Vietnam situation. He was followed by Dale Winter, of the United Christian Ministry, who questioned our reasons for being in Vietnam.

Barry Kotler, one of the organizers of the Moratorium at JC and a former GI, announced that the next step of the Moratorium was to get out into the community. 4000 leaflets had been printed to be distributed to the Huntingdon community, their message being that it is necessary for all those who are opposed to the Vietnam war to get out and do something about it. "To be against the war in Vietnam and do nothing about it is indefensible," read the leaflet's first line.

Between 80 and 100 students and faculty members agreed to participate in the door-to-door canvassing and divided themselves into groups of up to 12 people each. Canvassers also encouraged the people they came in contact with to write to their congressmen or senators, and in some cases distributed lists of representatives' addresses.

Generally, the Huntingdon Community seemed quite receptive to the canvassers. Although some doors were slammed and a bit of verbal abuse dished out ("commie," "traitor," "Naz,") most of the community respected the canvassers' rights to speak out, and regardless of their own views, were, at the very least, polite.

Not a part of the Moratorium but related to it, a silent memorial candlelight march was held through the streets of Huntingdon Wed. evening. 200 or more students, faculty members and a few townspeople met at Stone Church at 8 p.m. and were addressed for a few minutes by Rev. Robert Faus, Minister to Students. He emphasized that the march was a memorial service for all those that had died in Vietnam and everyone was reminded that the march was non-violent and must remain non-violent, no matter what. The procession walked from the Stone Church across to Washington, down through town to 6th Street, across to Mifflin, and back to school.

Juniata Hosts Chemistry Profs' Annual Meeting

Chemistry faculty from colleges in six states and the District of Columbia will be meeting on Juniata's campus Friday and Saturday, Oct. 17 and 18. The occasion is the annual meeting of the Middle Atlantic Association of Liberal Arts Chemistry Teachers, an organization which geographically includes the states of: New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, the District of Columbia, as well as Pennsylvania. Coordinator of the meeting is Dr. Donald J. Mitchell, assistant professor of chemistry.

The weekend program will get underway at 1:30 p.m., Friday in the ballroom of the new Ellis Hall with opening remarks and greetings by Dr. John N. Stauffer, president, and Dr. Donald M. Rockwell, academic dean of the College.

A series of afternoon discussions will explore methods of instruction, programmed learning, audio-visual applications, the role of analytical chemistry in the undergraduate curriculum, and upper division courses and research.

Following the afternoon group discussions will be a 6:30 p.m. dinner with an address by special guest of the meeting, Dr. Gordon Barrow, adjunct professor of chemistry at Dartmouth College. A widely acclaimed author of textbooks dealing with molecular spectroscopy and physical chemistry, Dr. Barrow has served as head of the Advisory Council on College Chemistry, which is supported by the National Science Foundation.

Group discussions focusing on laboratory experiments in first-year chemistry and sponsored research and a round-table discussion on "Activities of the Teacher" will occupy the Saturday morning attention of participants.

On and Off the Air . . .

WJC Offers Listeners Wide Variety of Services

Nearly everyone on campus is aware of the service WJC offers to the college community as a whole—music, news, and information on happenings both on and off campus. Fewer people know of the service available on an individual basis.

"Some people are already making use of WJC's facilities," said Larry Osborne, general manager of WJC, "but most students still think we just supply wake-up or study music. Actually besides position for disk jockeys, announcers, and newscasters we have on-the-air opportunities for sports analysts, local news reporters, and commentators."

Osborne also pointed out that WJC welcomes students who wish to produce programs on special topics. Persons interested in taking advantage of this opportunity should see Osborne at WJC's studios, where the feasability of the concept will be discussed and suggestions and technical assistance offered. Indicated as possibilities of this type of program are radio dramas, interviews with college or state officials, investigatory probes into such items as the college budget, and panel discussions.

"Our news and program directors are simply too busy to do this sort of thing themselves," said Osborne, "but both departments are eager to help students produce programs for their areas."

There are also services offered by WJC which do not involve the station's on-the-air aspects at all. For example, classes or clubs who wish to produce tapes involving speech and music may use the station's mixing facilities—it was pointed out that this might be useful for such events as All Class night.

The teletype also may be used by students involved in politics or international affairs. Students or faculty members may request that items pertaining to an area or event be saved for them. People interested in the Middle-East may request that all stories on Morocco and its government be held for their use. It is especially hoped that faculty members will make use of this service.

These examples serve to suggest how student and faculty may use WJC, but it is hardly exhaustive, and those who have ideas or suggestions are urged to contact Larry Osborne or another staff member.

To the Juniatian....

It is with a great deal of pride and admiration that I write this letter commending the behavior of the students who participated in the Moratorium last Wednesday. Your effort is bound to make deep impressions; first, because of your sincerity and second, because of the way in which you conducted yourself in spite of harassment in the community. As an older adult, I now, more than ever before, have greater confidence that the future of our democracy is brighter because of the kinds of involvement we witnessed last Wednesday. Whether one agrees or disagrees with the idea of the Moratorium, all reasonable people must acknowledge that your concern was shown in a way that all America must accept.

Many individuals on campus, including President Stauffer, concur with the comments expressed in this open letter. I just happen to be the one privileged to write it.

Charles W. Schoenherr
Dean of Students

Letters Policy

Letters to the editor should be typed and double-spaced and should be submitted no later than 1:30 p.m. Monday. The editors reserve the right to print only non-libelous and responsible content and to edit all letters and commentaries submitted to the Juniatian. The staff also reserves the right to publish all full signatures unless the writer can supply very valid reasons for omitting his name.

Letters to the Editor

To the editor:

The pass/fail system was initiated on a three-year trial basis. This academic year is the final year unless further consideration — specifically, by the Faculty Council—is given to the program.

Although such consideration has been given to the program, there are doubts in the minds of many faculty members as to the system's worthiness. Several faculty representatives on the faculty council also question whether the pass/fail system is fulfilling its intended purpose.

I believe pass/fail has benefitted and been properly utilized by a majority of students. It is my understanding that an important part of the purpose of pass/fail is to permit students to select courses that because of the aspect of the grade they formally would not choose, or the student's cum average might be adversely affected by particularly difficult courses (required and non-required).

Of course, I realize there are many students who abuse the pass/fail system. To these people I say don't ruin it for the rest of us.

While I feel the system is advantagous, I have several suggestions to offer. First, I think several of the required courses (with their high percentage of pass/fail grades) should be re-evaluated. Secondly, I believe that only two persons should know who is taking which courses pass/fail; the student and the registrar.

Lastly, I would ask any interested student to render constructive criticism and suggestions to the faculty council members (Dean Rockwell, Dr. Trexler, Dr. Norris, Mr. Church, Mr. Heberling, Mrs. Clemson, Dr. Crosby, Bob Marcus, or myself). Don't let this question go unattended. If you have any interest in the pass/fail system, show it.

Howie Grove
Class of '70

To the editor:

The recent poll of student opinion on the comprehensive examination resulted, I am told, in an overwhelming vote against it. Unfortunately this vote seems to have been the result of a propoganda campaign rather than of the facts which the student government committee on comprehensives had obtained from the record. Why were the facts not printed in the JUNIATIAN before the poll was taken? Why should they not be printed now? Such questions as "Would you like to spend $12,000 on an education and then not graduate?" answered by "You might as well buy a car!" are irrelevant and grossly misleading. The records show that in the last ten years only ONE STUDENT has failed to get a degree from Juniata College after taking all his options, that is, three attempts to pass a comprehensive examination. This same student refused help offered by his department chairman in preparing for a re-take.

It seems to me that if we are to vote as intelligent citizens of our college community we should have as many of the facts as are available. That the committee did not make these available to all students is a matter of neglect, but each of us is responsible for getting the facts as far as that is possible. I believe that many of the students who voted against "comps" were duped.

The purpose of this letter is not to extol the virtues of the examination (although I see many in it. I am asking only that we do not throw it out until we can find some better way by which all of us can evaluate work done in four years of college life. Last year the Faculty Council spent many long hours considering alternatives. None appeared to be better than the plan we now have. The Task Force will be spending more time on the problem this year. In the meantime, will the JUNIATIAN publish the facts and let us all take a look? Maybe some alternatives to "comps" or some ways of improving the present examination could be dscussed in these columns. Or is ithe student body saying, "We don't want to be evaluated at all?"

Esther M. Doyle
Prof. of English

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College

Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED NOV. 6, 1924

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891

BARBARA CLAAR, editor-in-chief
PAUL KEELY, associate editor
ADELE ABOUTOK, copy editor

J. PATRICK TYSON, news editor
JOEL SCHANTZ, business manager
RICHARD ABLARD, advertising manager
SUE BERMEL, layout editor

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Don Laine, Peggy Haines, Cathy Podgarski, Karen Kasimasas, David Beahm, Gene Galbraith

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000

Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVI, No. 4

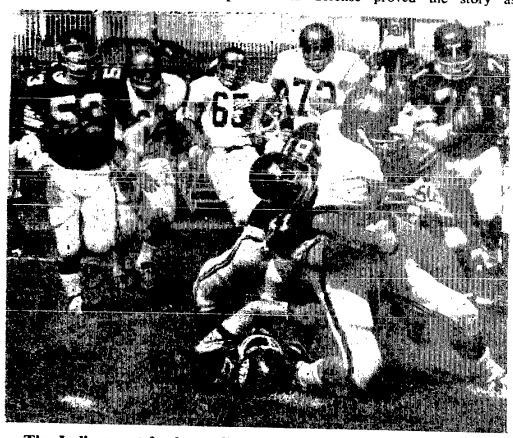
October 17, 1969

Homecoming Crowd Mourns . . .

JC Loses Close One to Geneva

by Gene Galbraith

One word can sum up Juniata's Homecoming game— SHOCK. The Geneva Golden Tornadoes, a team which was considered weak in the preseason ratings, brought their hidden strength out into the open as they beat the Indians 16-14. A well balanced anced ground attack and a solid defense proved the story as Geneva pulled what may be termed the upset of the year.



The Indians put forth a valiant effort but it was in vain. Oh, well, any team that hasn't won a game in two years deserves a lucky break.

After a scoreless first quarter, Geneva drew first blood midway through the second period. The Golden Tornadoes drove 77 yards on 16 plays with sophomore fullback Herb Braxton capping the drive on a 10 yard scoring jaunt. After the conversion, Geneva was on top 7-0.

Following the halftime festivities, the Indians fought back, as they scored twice in the third quarter. The first score came on a 59 yard bomb from quarterback Terry Turnbaugh to sophomore end Dan Rackoran. A pass for the two point conversion was unsuccessful, but the Indians were back in the game as they trailed by only one point, 7-6.

Senior halfback Harry Gicking set up the second score when he recovered a fumble on the visitors' 26 yard line after his kick off. Sophomore halfback Dave Sparks led this scoring drive as he rushed for 14 yards and also caught a 12 yard aerial from Turnbaugh. Sparks scored the TD on 3 yard dash. The Indians tried another 2 point coversion, and Sparks plunged over the goal to complete the 8-point play. Now Juniata had a 14-7 edge.

Geneva struck again on their second series of downs in the fourth quarter. Quarterback Phillips put the topping on a 48 yard drive by plunging over the goal from the one yard line. The Tornadoes tried to take the lead on a two point conversion, but Phillips' end run was stopped short of the goal. Juniata still held a slight edge, 14-13.

Everything seemed rosy for the Indians as time ticked away in the fourth period, but the Geneva offense was still open for business. The Tornadoes drove the ball to the Juniata 21 yard, where Dan Ieser kicked the go ahead fieldgoal. Now the tide was turned, and Geneva was on top 16-14.

The Indians stayed right in the ball game as they drove 60 yards to the Geneva 17. However, on the next play the Indians were penalized for offensive pass interference in the end-zone. The penalty gave the Tornadoes the ball on their 20 yard line. The clock ran out before Juniata could get the ball again, and Geneva won 16-14.

Roller Answers Questions On Budget, Surplus, Aid

by David Beahm

Over the past several years, the tuition at Juniata has continued to rise at an alarming rate. Meanwhile, scholarships and financial assistance have not risen proportionately. With the recent threat of the abolition of state aid, many students face critical financial problems.

In an attempt to find out where student money is going, an interview was held with the new controller of this college, Mr. Floyd Roller, whose responsibilities include "budget control and projection." Those of you who have tried must realize that getting any revealing information from the administration is very difficult and when money is concerned, almost impossible. The following is part of the interview held with our controller concerning budget surplus and apportionment:

Q. What is a college surplus? Why do we need a surplus?

A. I assume from this question that you mean the unrestricted current funds in the current operating fund of a college. The unrestricted current funds balance represents the net accumulation over past fiscal years of the excess of current fund revenues over current fund expenditures and transfers. This balance (if any) is used for current operating purposes or for any other purpose determined by the controlling board of a college.

As to the question concerning the need for a surplus, I would think that a reasonable surplus can be justified by any college. Usually unrestricted current funds are used as a contingency reserve in case the revenue does not meet expectations or expenditures arise which are not planned in the current fiscal budget. Many times a college board of trustees will use an amount of unrestricted funds to help finance a major capital project or establish a student scholarship fund.

Q. How could you tell where to cut the budget?

A. Budget cutting and additions are made as the result of meetings with the President, V.P. Finance, Academic, V.P. College Relations, Dean of Students and the Executive Director of Development. These key administrators are responsible for various areas of the budget. They recommend and justify the particular programs and items to be included or deleted from the budget. The budget is ultimately approved by the Board of Trustees.

Q. What general area is most of the money from increased tuition going?

A. New revenue is applied primarily to the instructional program, student aid and increased operational costs. In addition we are required to increase various areas of the budget just to meet the inflation factor which we are presently facing in our economy.

Q. Will there be an increase in the area of financial aid within the near future?

A. I am not directly responsible for determining the amount of financial aid which we provide to our students. Therefore, I feel that I cannot very well reply to this question. However, I am sure that the administration of the college is very well aware of the cost factor to the student and is seeking new and additional sources of student aid.

Ah—and now we all understand where our money is going—toward "the instructional program, student aid and increased operational costs." You say that your aid wasn't increased proportionately to rising tuition costs? What! It wasn't increased at all? Well, don't let it bother you. The administration is "very well aware of the cost factor. . ." And if the increase in tuition this year was just too much to take, don't be discouraged—there's always next year.

Dr. Stauffer Announces Resignation of Quigg

Dr. John N. Stauffer announced the resignation of H. Gerald Quigg, executive director of development, effective Nov. 15.

Quigg, 32, a native of Riverside, N.J., and a 1959 graduate of the University of Delaware, has been associated with Juniata's development office since 1964. He was named to his present executive position in May this year. He tendered his resignation to the College early this week in order to accept a similar position at the University of Richmond (Va.) beginning Nov. 17.

Dr. Stauffer announced the resignation "with very deep regret," noting that "Mr. Quigg has served Juniata with remarkable effectiveness. I have an especially high regard for him. He leaves us with our gratitude and best wishes." The President added that "The position Mr. Quigg is assuming at Richmond represents a large step forward in his career. His excellent work at Juniata has earned him this opportunity for professional advancement."

Dr. Stauffer further complimented Quigg for the important part he has played in Juniata's successful fund raising efforts toward realization of a $2.8-million first-phase goal in the College's $10.1-million "Margin of Difference" compaign. It is anticipated that the initial goal will be reached nearly one year ahead of schedule.

Dr. Stauffer said that immediate steps are being taken to find a replacement for Quigg.

THE JUNIATIAN

Vol. XLVI, No. 5 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | October 24, 1969

Opera, Luncheon Present Interesting Day to Parents

by Cathy Podgorski

Saturday, Oct. 25, Parents Day, begins at 9 a.m. with registration in the main lounge of Ellis Hall. Various activities are planned for the parents throughout the day.

In order to give the parents a full view of Juniata life there will be an open house in all residence halls from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Room judging for the neatest, most creative and best utilized rooms among the freshmen will be held from 10-11 a.m.

A Parents Association Meeting will be held 11 a.m. until noon in Alumni Hall. Featured speakers will be president John N. Stauffer and Eric Woodworth, Student Government President. Providing musical entertainment will be the 1969-70 Juniata Concert Choir.

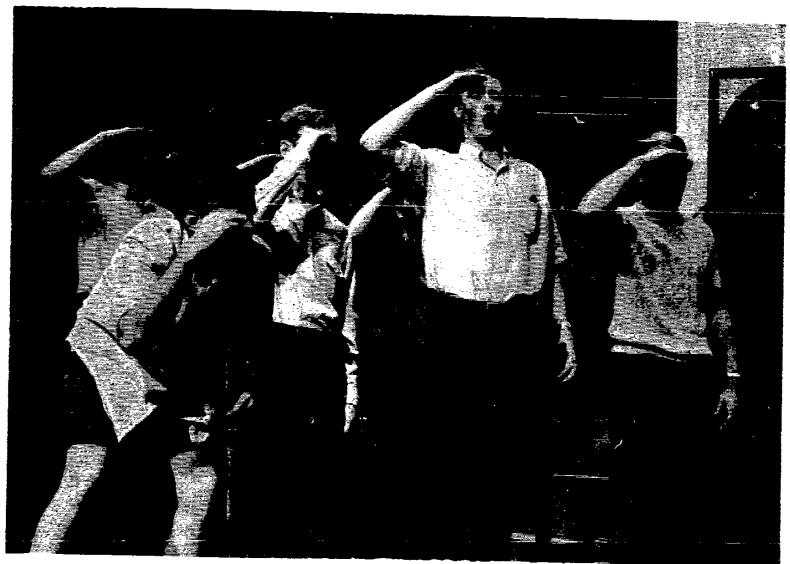
Following lunch at 1:30 p.m. will be the Juniata-Haverford game. At 4 p.m., immediately following the game, there will be an all-college mixer for students, parents and guests in the Ellis Hall Ballroom. The parents are free to speak with Dean Schoenherr, Dean Maxwell, and Dean Lee in their respective offices from 4-5 p.m.

During the evening parents are invited to the Juniata Concert Choir presentation of the popular Gilbert and Sullivan opera, "H.M.S. Pinafore," to be given in Oller Hall at 8:15 p.m.

Directing the production is Dr. Bruce A. Hirsch, associate professor of music, assisted by his wife, Marjorie, as stage director. The husband-and-wife team have combined their talents with Juniata students and faculty in what they are confident will be an "altogether see-worthy" performance and a pleasant evening's voyage into the theatre of a glorious era.

Featured in leading roles are William Leverenz, as the hero Ralph Rackstraw; senior John Over, as the villain Dick Deadeye; Mrs. Kenneth W. Crosby, English conference instructional assistant, as Buttercup; and Dr. Wilfred G. Norris, professor of physics, as Sir Joseph Porter, K.C.B.

Tickets for both evenings' performances will be available at the door. General admission for the public is $1.50 per person.



Saluting their captain are some members of the crew of "H.M.S. Pinafore." The villainous hunch back (far left) is Dick Deadeye (John Over). The shining example of English "sailor hood" (center) is Ralph Rackstraw (Bill Leverenz).

Day of Discussion . . .

Task Force Plans Moratorium

by Barbara Claar

Although the word "moratorium" may have adverse overtones, the Task Force (with the consent of the Faculty) is halting classes for a day so there can be a college-wide discussion on education. No definite date has been set. But when Dr. Wilfred Norris, Chairman of the Task Force was interviewed, he said it would probably be early November before all the arrangements could be finalized.

Even though the mechanics for the project are still tenuous, some definite plans have been made. The college community will meet in departmental groups; undeclared students are asked to go to smaller groups unless they have a strong preference. Department chairmen are responsible for finding students to serve as group chairmen. Beside the chairman, there will be two faculty members, approximately 15 students and two reporters in a group. The reporters will record the discussions of the group (plus take part themselves) and at the end of the day the deliberations of all the groups will be compiled and published.

Dr. Norris sees the discussions as allowing the college as a whole to examine the particular educational programs. All students are urged to attend since it is hoped they will express their opinions on the value of education.

The idea for the day of discussion grew out of the summer meetings of the Task Force where it was found to be easier to define what the College "is not". If everyone is involved in the dynamics of the question "What is an education?", the Task Force feels it would aid their work.

Dr. Norris stressed that this was not a moratorium in the "protest" sense of the word. The day is to be "very much a means of communication."

After faculty approval was given, the Task Force met last Tuesday night for further planning. The topics for the days discussion were divided into two parts. In the morning mechanical subjects such as interdiscplinary study, evaluation, and non-classroom education will be under scrutiny. And in the afternoon more philosophical questions such as: What is the point of having an education? What should an education be? What is the best thing that can happen to a person at Juniata? will be debated.

In order to make background information available for everyone, the Task Force decided that papers should be written on each morning topic. These papers will be posted on campus and printed in the Juniatian. Below is a list of topics and the chairmen in charge of the paper. Anyone interested in giving aid and/or assistance should contact theese people.

General Education — Hartman
Team Teaching — Hofelt
Dept. Cooperative Programs — Clemson
Student Evaluation — Shue
Instruction Evaluation — Nolan
Off-campus Opportunities — Dowling
Senior Thesis — Faus
Independent Study — Nolan
Calendar — Alexander
Innovative Classroom Practice — Blaisdell

Self-Awareness . . .

T-Groups Stress Learning Experience

by Peggy Haines

The weekend of Oct. 17-19 holds a special significance for seven people who spent that time in a cabin twelve miles from Huntingdon listening to a set of ten tapes. These tapes, aimed at helping to develop a deeper understanding of the self and the feelings of others, and just recently purchased by Juniata College, have already been enthusiastically received. With these tapes acting as the sole teacher, groups such as the one mentioned above have been formed to listen and respond to the tape's directions. Such groups are sometimes coined 'Sensitivity groups," although it might be less misleading to call them 'by their formal name, "T (Training) Groups."

The National Training Laboratory, greatly interested in group dynamics, first originated the idea of such groups in the early 1950's. This idea has rapidly expanded throughout the country, and it is only in the last few years that it has become college-oriented. The tapes purchased by Juniata are designed to be used by a group of no more than ten people at a time. Such groups are usually made up of relative strangers, and are more often of a heterogeneous rather than homogeneous nature. The groups get together, then, for a learning experience — not therapy — following the tape and performing the activities called for, which help the previously mixed group become cohesive and united. All formality is broken down as each person begins to figuratively step into the shoes of another and thus begins to see himself in a more complete way.

The weekend group, organized by Barry Kotler, a Juniata Senior, and consisting of six students (four females, two males) and one faculty member, left the college at approximately 5 p.m. Friday and returned to campus by noon Sunday. Most of the time between was taken up by the playing of the ten tapes, each one-and-a-half hours long. The group listened to two tapes Friday, six Saturday, and two Sunday.

It is to be emphasized here that there is no leader in these groups other than the tape itself. Mr. Philip Field, the only faculty member among the seven persons attending the weekend retreat, played no leading role in the playing of the tapes, nor did anyone else.

To give one a general idea of how the tapes work, a few examples might be given. It is on the first tape that each person is directed to communicate with every other person in the group in whatever way he feels, and then, afterwards, to tell the entire group of his first impressions of this person. These impressions may or may not be complimentary, but they are to be honest. Thus, a person may discover some facets of his personality that he never realized existed before.

On another tape, each person is told to write on a piece of paper one thing that is greatly bothering him, but that he has never been able to bring himself to tell anyone. Each person then takes one piece of paper, unsigned, and relates to the group how a person with this specific problem must feel. He is thus putting himself in the place of another.

Four different groups, made up of all the dorm counselors on campus, are also currently using the tapes, although only at the rate of one tape per week. Dean Lee, Dean Maxwell, Dean Schoenherr and Mr. Berrier each belong to a group, although in no way being the leader of that group.

The majority of the participants are enthusiastic about the program, although it should be emphasized that a person must be stable and normally adjusted in order to benefit from it. One person summed up the benefits by saying that the tapes help people to know themselves better, and that if one knows himself, he can get along better with others.

The use of the tapes is free to anyone who sincerely feels that he may benefit by them — that is, that they will serve as a learning device, and not as a means of therapy. Contact Dean Schoenherr for further information.

'Hallelujah Train' to Serve As Opener for Focus Series

The "Hallelujah Train" is coming to Juniata's campus Thursday, Oct. 30, and will be presented at 8:15 in Oller Auditorium. The first of the Focus on Art and Life Series events of the 1969-1970 school year, "Hallelujah Train" stars the Eva Jessye Choir and Ensemble, made up of a distinguished company of singers, actors, dancers and musicians. The presentation, described as a "Musical Journey through America," will include lighted and costumed scenes in which the choir will dramatize work songs of the South, Appalachian folk music, territorial gambling sons, and Negro spirituals. The "Hallelujah Train" ends with a step at Broadway where such musical classics as "Show Boat," "Hello, Dolly!", "Fiddler on the Reef," and "Man of LaMancha", will be in part presented.

Director of the American musical is Eva Jessye, described by many as the "First Lady of American Choral Music," and who was appointed choral director of the original "Porgy and Bess" by George Gershwin. The Chorus has won lavish praise already, and its "Hallelujah Train" has been described as "Splendid," and ". . . a constant joy, whether singing the big choruses in operatic style, spirituals, or the lively jazz syncopations." There will be no admission fee.

Future events in the Focus Series will include Francisco, Espinoza and Jose Grecco as sole guitarist on Jan. 9, and Bramwell Fletcher, a reader-actor, on Feb. 5 and 6, who will present a program on George Bernard Shaw one evening and a program on modern literature the other. The Will Judy Lecture, as the featured program of the series, will present the famed comedian, Dick Gregory, March 9 and 10. Also, on April 9, the National Players will present Christopher Fry's "The Lady's Not For Burning," a play whose subject has to do with witchcraft. In addition to the already mentioned events, films will be presented in the spring in the annual Focus Film Festival. The names of the films to be presented are not yet definite.

KVASIR

KVASIR, Juniata's Magazine of the arts will sponsor a poetry reading and student art show in mid Nov. The reading will be at The Human Element Fri. Nov. 14. The art show will be in the ballroom at Ellis Hall begining Nov. 15. The display will include items for sale.

All students desiring to take part in either the reading or the show should send pertinent information to KVASIR, box 841 by Nov. 1.

The deadline for contributions to the magazine will be sometime in mid Jan. Further information will be forthcoming.

Letters to the Editor

To the editor:

I would like to reply to Dr. Doyle's letter to the editor in last week's Juniatian. First of all, Dr. Doyle implied that the students' main argument for the abolishment of comprehensive examinations is that after spending $12,000 on an education a student should be entitled to graduate. It is my view that the vast majority of students realize this is an absurd argument. If Dr. Doyle truly believes that the students of Juniata hold such a view, then she must have a very low opinion of the intelligence of her students.

A second point I would like to make is the following. Dr. Doyle stated that only one student failed to obtain a degree from Juniata in the past ten years because of comps. This is not the point. It would seem that flunking comps and thus failing to graduate with your class is a punishment in itself. Failure to pass comps implies an inconsistency in evaluation of that student's knowledge. For in order to qualify for comps, a student must be a senior in good academic standing; that is, the student must have been deemed knowledgeable in the courses already taken. Therefore, there is an error in evaluation, which is the fault of the examiners, not the fault of the one examined. Then why should the one examined be punished?

But here I do not intend to put forth arguments against comps; this is not my purpose. This will be left to the student committee studying comps. When all statistics and pertinent information concerning comps have been tallied, such arguments will be presented to the faculty.

Lastly, I would like to state that the poll concerning comps is valid. There were dormitory meetings at which available evidence and arguments for both sides of the issue were presented. I feel that this cannot be termed "propaganda" as Dr. Doyle insists. I do concede that the faculty were not given these facts. The faculty did not vote. It is not the students' duty to educate the faculty, or is it?

Michael A. Regardie
Class of '70

To the editor:

I would like to take advantage of the "Letters to the Editor" column of the Juniatian to thank all those who helped with the meeting of the Middle Atlantic Association of Liberal Arts Chemistry Teachers recently held at Juniata College.

A special word of thanks should go to Mr. Jeff Bixby and his Audio Visual staff for the many hours they spent preparing video and sound tapes for the workshop on Audio-Visual-Tutorial methods of instruction in chemistry. Also due special thanks are Mr. Will Brandau who took care of arrangements in Ellis Hall and Mr. Bliven and the food service personel who prepared two special meals which were quite excellent for those attending the meeting.

The help of these and many others who contributed much to the success of the meeting is very gratefully acknowledged.

Donald J. Mitchell
Assist. Prof. of chemistry

Dear Dr. Doyle:

In response to your letter published in the Juniatian Oct. 17, the Committee on Comprehensives would like to present the facts to you and the college community. The committee is comprised of seven members: two seniors, four juniors, and one sophomore. Its members were selected by Student Government from a list of interested students.

The only purpose of the student poll was to determine student opinion on comprehensives to give the committee direction. The only previous knowledge the students needed to vote was a definition of comprehensives which was provided by the Pathfinder. The poll was never intended to be a final statement.

The only official publicity originated by the committee was the announcement of dorm meetings where the importance of the poll was stressed to increase voter turnout and the time and place of voting were made known. Any other publicity was the work of interested students in an unofficial capacity. Where were the interested students who support comprehensives?

The committee has been accused of neglecting to supply The Facts. It has also been suggested that it was the individual's responsibility to obtain The Facts which were available. The fact is, The Facts were not available. Another interested student has been compiling the relevant facts for four weeks and is still not finished. When he is, the data will be made available.

In addition, the alumni were polled. When these results are analyzed and compiled they too will be available to all concerned.

We are considering the problem in as much depth and from as many angles as possible. When we have completed our investigation and framed a viable solution we will present our findings to the college community.

Sincerely,
The Committee on Comprehensives

VISIT THE NEW CYPRESS BAR
AND DINING ROOM

The HUNTINGDON MOTOR INN

Huntingdon ,Pa.

Best Motels

JCT. ROUTES 22 and 26
Telephone 814 — 643-1133

The Juniatian

Associated Collegiate Press — I.P. Intercollegiate Press

Student Weekly at Juniata College
Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED NOV. 6, 1924

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891

BARBARA CLAAR, editor-in-chief
PAUL KEELY, associate editor
ADELE ABOUTOK, copy editor
BILL DAVID, photography editor
J. PATRICK TYSON, news editor
JOEL SCHANTZ, business manager
RICHARD ABLARD, advertising manager
SUE BERMEL, layout editor

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Don Laino, Peggy Haines, Cathy Podgarski, Karen Kasimasas, David Beahm, Gene Galbraith, Aubrey Shenk, Dan Hueglin, Sammy Buo, Donna Knupp, Mary E. White, Lynn Wuestoff, Janet Mason, Mark Hoffman

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000

Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVI, No. 5

October 24, 1969

Visiting Student Introduces Cameroon

by Sammy Buo

Many students have been asking me about my country, and since I cannot explain to everyone verbally about my country, I would like to say quite briefly what my country is like. Some of the students have also told me about their intention to join the Peace Corps volunteers, and I encourage that very much because while at high school I was taught by at least five American peace corps. My country is ready to receive more of them, not only teachers but also agriculturalists, and science students who can apply their knowledge practically, in laboratories, hospitals, and in the various industries. The American Peace Corps in Cameroon are especially well-treated, because they easily adjust themselves to the society, and do anything the citizens do. They work very hard, especially those in agricultural colleges and establishments .So, more will be welcome. Why not join the Peace Corp today and see Africa?

Cameroon lies on the east of Biafra (former Eastern Nigeria) and it has an area of about 183,000 sq. km., with a population of about five million people. It is divided in two states; West Cameroon which is English-speaking with a population of about one million, and East Cameroon with a population of about four million, and is French-speaking. Thus, the official languages of the country are French and English. The French system is more used than the English system in Cameroon, and that is why we do most of all our calculations in the metric system. East Cameroon, is the more developed part of the country, having the country's geratest industries, such as brewing, Chococam, Bata Shoes industries, Bastos cigarette industries and several other gigantic industries. The country's largest city is Douala, with a population of about 200,000 people, and it is in East Cameroon. There are several colleges here, and the country's international Airport is also situated here. Douala is to us as New York is to Americans. The federal capital of the country is Yaounde in east Cameroon, and like Douala it is a very beautiful and attractive city. Here, the country's federal University is situated, and it is bilingual. A medical faculty was recently opened, and the admission criteria into this university permit only those students with advanced standing and exceptional ability especially in the French language, for admission. The university works in collaboration with the famous Leeds University in Great Britain, and the French university. It has both Arts and Science facilities.

Cameroon has many minerals, and some have not yet been exploited. The Gulf Oil Company in the U.S. recently undertook an oil exploration on the coast of the country. Aluminium, bauxite, gold, diamonds and a few others, are mined. The Atlantic Ocean occupies a large portion of our coast, and the major ports are Douala, Tiko and Victoria. The country has many good hospitals and the one worth seeing, with its modern architectural construction is at Ebolowa.

The north of Cameroon is beautiful grassland, and the Cameroonians who live here dress like the Hansas in Northern Nigeria, and they have the same culture. It is a very beautiful place, with the modern towns of Garoua, where our President comes from, Maroua, Ngaoundere and several others.

Our country is democratic, and has a one-party system called the Cameroon National Union which was born on Sept. 1, 1966. Our President is His Excellency Alhaji Ahmadou Ahidjo, and the Vice president is Dr. John Ngu Foncha who comes from a town 50 miles from my home. The country was independent in Oct. 1961, after a long rule by the English and French. The Federal National Assembly meets in Yaounde, where with the dynamic Cameroon National Union Party, good laws are made for the satisfaction of everybody.

Each of the states however has its own House of Assembly, which has jurisdiction only over the inhabitants of its own state. Thus in West Cameroon where I come from, we have the West Cameroon House of Assembly made up of thirty-nine members. Out of these thirty-nine members, nine of them hold governing posts, while the other thirty are merely representatives of the people, from the various divisions of the state. The nine are: the Prime Minister appointed by the President, Secretary of State for Finance, Secretary of State for Natural Resources, Secretary of State for Education and Social Welfare, Secretary of State for State Development, Secretary of State for Public Service and Establishment, Secretary of State for Interior and Secretary of State for Works and Transport. The Prime Minister appoints the Secretaries of State. These Secretaries of State play their part only in West Cameroon and the Federal Ministers work for the whole country. The Federal Ministries comprise: armed forces, finance, justice, foreign affairs, commerce and industries, plan and development, telecommunications, public service, territorial administration, secretary to the Presidency, and the federal ministry of education, youth and culture. These federal ministers are responsible for the whole country. Our armed forces, navy, police and warders are federal and their administration comes from Yaounde the federal capital.

The educational system in East Cameroon is on the French model, while in West Cameroon it is on the English model. However, in West Cameroon high schools, French is taught while in East Cameroon English is taught so that everyone can be able to speak if he were to go either to East or West Cameroon.

Since I come from West Cameroon, I will therefore continue to talk about West Cameroon now since my knowledge of East Cameroon is not so full and accurate.

The capital of West Cameroon is Buea, and from here the government's administration to the people of the state comes. The Prime Minister, Federal Inspector of Administration, Secretaries of State and other important dignataries stay here and some of the churches, such as the Presbyterian Church in West Cameroon, have their administration from their heads, who also stay in Buea. The temperatures here, in the rainy season, about March to Sept. are very low, as low as 37° or 36°, and rain falls almost every day. The highest mountain in West Africa is found here in Buea. The American Cultural Centre has an office in Buea, one in Douala, a consulate in Douala and an Embassey in Yaounde.

West Cameroon is divided into nine administrative divisions, called Fako Division, Meme, Manyu, Ndian, Mezam, Mentchoum, Donga and Mantung, Bui and the Momo Divisions. These divisions have a Prefect, who is federally administered, and he takes care of the people in the division, with his assistant. He presides over any important occasions in the division, such as our independence day celebrations on Oct.1, Jan. 1, and the Youth Day celebrations on Feb. 11.

Fako division is about the most important division because it has the Vicoria and Tiko seaports, and also the Tiko airport. It also has the Fako mountain which is the highest peak in West Africa. It has some modern towns, like Victoria, and the commercial town of Tiko, and the W.C. headquarters, Buea. The largest corporation in the state is here at Fako, the Cameroons Development Corporation with plantations in many places. Here in Fako division we have the Federal Bilingual Grammar School, with its magnificent buildings and beautiful campus, the Saker Baptist College for giris, the St. Joseph's College for boys, the Government Technical College, and several teacher's colleges. Hotels of the first class type are Buea Mountain Hotel, Miramare Hotel, Oceanic Hotel, or the 'Hotspot', Crystal Gardens and Airport Hotel.

Meme division is like New York to West Cameroon, in the way the life goes. It is too fast and hectic. It's local headquarters is Kumba, and this is a centre of entreport trade. It has beautiful railway terminus, which links it with Mbanga in East Cameroon. Kumba has a very beautiful crater lake, the Lake Barombi which tourists the world over have visited. In Kumba, we have the modern and attractive Presbyterian Secondary School, from which I graduated. It is constructed in a modern German model, and has an admirable campus. Here, students of all faiths are admitted, and they are given a very sound academic, moral and social education. The school is particularly important because it was the first secondary school to become co-educational in West Cameroon, and to have a full Cameroonian principal, Mr. A. N. Sumbele who has brought to the school the glory it now has. It should be noted that all secondary schools in West Cameroon are boarding schools. A hundred meters from this school is the new Frank Harcourt Technical Institute. There are several teacher's colleges here and commercial colleges.

Cocoa, coffee, oil and several products are produced for local consumption and export.

Ndian division is a new division and it is not very far from Meme. It is reached by a launch, the "Rio". From Ndian, it is not very far to reach Calabar in Nigeria. Several export products are produced.

Manyu division is about 120 miles from Meme division and it has a beautiful river. It is noted for having the cheapest sale of meat and has fresh and sweet oranges, fruits of all types, coconuts and any type of food crop. It has the Queen of the Rosary Secondary School for girls, the new government grammar school, the Presbyterian Secondary School in Besongabang and several teacher's and commercial colleges. Note that all divisions have at least one large hospital. Manyu division also has an airport. The Biafran boundary with West Cameroon is here in Manyu division, and before the war, most of our merchants used this road into Biafra for their business, while other tycoons flew or used it too. Manyu's first class hotel is the Mamfe Hotel.

Note that by Presidential decree, all the names of the divisions are our 'native' names. The European names are no longer used! ! Pure Africanism. We are striving towards the Cameroonization of everything.

Let us then move up to Mezam division, formerly known as the Bamenda division. The grassland or savana region of West Cameroon begins here. Mezam division is the largest division in West Cameroon and the most thickly populated. There are too many historic things to see here—we have the most beautiful market in West Cameroon. The government residential area is placed on a hill, which overlooks the town. It is really beautiful to look at the town from the hill. Most of the Government offices are also on this hill and it is called the station. Most historic is the Fort, which was constructed by the Germans during the war era. It is a very important site to see and some of our offices now use it. The graveyard of the important German soldiers who died in the war is also in this station. The Vice President of our country comes from this division. There are many schools and colleges here and most important is the Cameroon College of Arts and Sciences, and the Ecole Normale Superieur, both twelve miles from Mankon. Other institutions are the Sacred Heart College, and Our Lady of Lourdes Secondary School for girls, both in Mankon. Sacred Heart College is Roman Catholic, and,built on a conspicuous site,it is worth seeing. The Cameroon Protestant College is in Bali, twelve miles away from Mankon, and here in Bali lives a strong traditional chief. There are too many commercial and teacher's colleges here in Mezam. Hotels are Skyline, Ringway and Highland.

Mentchoum division is about 50 miles from Mezam, and I come from this division. I live in Wum, which is the local capital. Conspicuous here s the magnificent Mentchoum waterfall which can liht the whole of West Africa, as one guy said. The Wum crater lake is worth seeing, because according to most tourists it has a remarkable site. The climate here is moderate. The Chinese rice farms from Tingo to Befang in Mentchoum are marvellous. The subdivision of Mentchoum is a Njinikom, and there we have the St. Bedes Secondary School. At Wum we have the Wum Agricultural institute, which was completed only this year, built by the German Government. Several crops are produced, especially corn and ground nuts, and coffee in Njinikon. There is Wum Central Hotel.

We then go to the Donga and Mantung division, and here we are embarassed by the cold. It gets too cold here, as low as about 35°, and here we have the large Ndu tea estate, which brings in a large revenue to the country. This division is near the northern region of Nigeria. Here, we have the Joseph Merrick Baptist College, where most of teachers were American Baptists, although there aren't too many there now.

We then conclude with the Bui and Momo divisions. We have St. Augustine's College in Bui division and a teacher's college, and in Momo we have the Presbyterian teachers Training College in Batibo. Your car will not run out of fuel for we have Mobil, Total, Texaco and Agip Petrol stations everywhere.

PROFESSORS' PHILOSOPHIES OF EDUCATION

VERITAS LIBERAT (or "Bird Lives")

by Dr. Dave Henrie

I lately find myself thinking that many students and educators regard an education as knowing (being able to reproduce) as many facts (and opinions, in cases where there are few, if any, facts; and, I guess, even in cases where there are many facts) as one can possibly cram into (and retrieve from) several million brain cells. This also implies that either the discovery of a new fact nor the formulation of a new opinion (theory) are very often regarded as necessary consequences of the attainment of "an education". "New" is used here to mean "previously unrealized by the 'discoverer(or?)' ") It frightens me to think that the majority regard "an education" as nothing more than a document, or even a piece of paper, which is necessary (and even sufficient, though deplorably so) to get a good job, two cars, and a nice-looking wife. (Although I respect the person who will candidly admit to this attitude.)

One might infer from what has been said thus far that the education I'm referring to need not be obtained in school, and it's unfortunately true that all too frequently school is a place where creativity (which I feel is THE important facet of "an education") is punished if not completely destroyed. Well, what can be done? First let's ask what "an education" should be. Hutchins, in "The Learning Society" (which is available at our own bookstore) states". . . education leads to understanding; it has no more 'practical' aim. It does not have as its object the 'production' of Christians, democrats, Communists, workers, citizens, Frenchmen, or businessmen. It is interested in the development of human beings through the development of their minds. Its aim is not manpower, but manhood."

In what manner, then, does the "programming" of a student lead him to a realization of his manhood (or, if you will, his uniqueness)? The behavioristic, deterministic view of man has resulted in a substitution of "training" (or conditioning) for what should be "education". Most of my anxiety in discussions of this sort arises from my present belief that I cannot really "educate" (using my own definition) anyone but myself, however I feel that I am able to "train someone and perhaps even help him to "educate" himself. This oft times results in extreme (though, as yet, not unbearable) frustration.

Some students are conditioned by the time they reach college to feel that school is something like a Skinner Box. This means that "studying" for an exam becomes a ludicrous exercise in attempting to apply a deterministic model to the professor (that is, "Whadya think HE will expect us to regurgitate on the exam paper?") Thus, in the extreme, the classroom experience can become just another game people play . . . the student trying to outguess the professor and vice, versa, and as such is doomed to failure (not just because of a faulty assumption*!).

To summarize (as I feel I must in a "treatise" such as this) I guess I am suggesting that:

I. "education" is not synonymous with "training" although the latter may be a necessary condition to the former.

II. a teacher can "train" but not "educate", the "educating" must be done by the individual (who desires to be "educated") perhaps with the assistance of the teacher.

III. if you really understand the title you're "educated" in a narrow sense of my meaning anyway.

* In order to play this guessing game, I recommend the use of ESP as a more plausible approach.

"What's It All About?"

by Richard Sahn

Since my first academic experiences as an undergraduate I have felt that if higher education doesn't do anything else for students it should help to formulate their own philosophy of education. Most veteran academicians, however, appear to become tongue-tied when asked to present in a "nutshell" what their ideas of a successful education are. As a younger member of the faculty I have not yet reached—nor do I ever hope to—that stage where one loses track of his intrinsic purposes for teaching.

For the most part, a college, especially a liberal arts institution should be mainly concerned with developing the student as a thinker rather than a storehouse of factual material. Philosophizing, sociologizing, psychologizing, as personal activities, should be emphasized more than the knowledge already established in those fields. Evaluations of students must consequently be essentially in terms of what the student himself does with a discipline after being exposed to its body of ideas, principles, premises, and factual knowledge. Encouraging a student to reflect objectively about himself, about his stream of conscious experiences, might offer, in other words, a better education than the retention of a single fact. What usually happens in this process is that a good deal of factual knowledge is retained anyhow. If it is agreed that the goal of a liberal arts education is to liberate the individual to question the presuppositions and values of his social time and place, then the emphasis on autonomous thinking is well placed.

As far as methods or procedures of higher education are concerned I would say that informal discussions, in the liberal arts especially, should be combined in equal proportion with lectures. It is just as vital for a student to say what he thinks and feels about a certain subject as it is to have something to talk or feel about in the first place which should really be the function of a good lecture. Students should be encouraged by a lecturer to think creatively, imaginatively, or even wildly about the subject on which the lecture is based. There still seems to be, at most American colleges, far too many inhibitions on what is said or done in the classroom.

On the matter of faculty evaluations of students, I believe that they are necessary considering the fact that students have to provide their institutions with a record of how they did in college if they want a stable career after leaving the campus. However, I would argue that the present grading system tends to frighten and alienate students from the subject matter and their teachers more than anything else. Although it would entail more work on the part of professors there is no real reason why, in a small college particularly, written evaluations of a student's performance could not be made. Of course this would entail more term papers as opposed to objective, short answer examination. Grades have too many semantic defects to them. While they might motivate the non-intellectually oriented student to work, they often discourage the creative student whose work, especially where objective examinations are used, may not lend itself to grades commensurate with his creativity. A significant advantage of the written evaluation is that it might indicate qualities that others would consider desirable, but which those writing the evaluation may not.

My most immediate academic concern is for the inter-disciplinization of the social sciences. I am thus very enthusiastc about the Integraton program at Juniata. Departmentalizing the various fields in the social sciences is still necessary because each does have its own unique contribution to make towards the total understanding of the human condition which can only be realized through concentration on that field alone at one time. Yet, unless an attempt is made to integrate these disciplines, they each run the risk of losing their humanity; they may fail, that is, to help the individual answer the universal questions of "Who am I?", "What shall I do?", "Where am I going?", and perhaps, "What's it all about?" A social science program which does not address itself to those questions is of value to the sthdent who is interested only on a prospective career in the business world or the military-industrial complex

My? Philosophy? Of? Education?

by Ralph Church

In twenty-five words or less? Do I even have a philosophy, much less of education? I have impressions. Tentative tentacles which I can spread before you, hoping they will tantalize.

Tentacle one. Education is merely and understandably personal. Tennyson said, in another context, "I am a part of all that I have met," which should be rephrased (to eliminate the pride), "All that I have met is a part of me." Or, as Mark Twain said, the man who carries a cat home by the tail is getting twenty or thirty times the education of the man who has not tried it. But an educational system can not expose us to All or Cats. A college is a system (with the inherent strengths and weaknesses of any system); hopefully, the college has decided, rationally and empirically, the length of its reach into the morass of education(ie it has set up a program of formal education).

Tentacle two. This tentacle has two prongs, like a snake's tongue: Cultural Heritage and Critical-Creative Thinking. The college does well with the right fork, Cultural Heritage. We pour out facts from the cornucopia of knowledge and the students whose minds are the biggest funnels catch much of the spillage—but not all, never all. There are those who say, of course, that the past is dead, the past is a bucket of ashes, but to ignore the past is to say that all knowledge begins with the present moment, an ostrich attitude that no one can seriously believe. We can not begin the chemistry study without basing it on heritage; starting each year with earth, air, fire, and water would give us experience, but not chemistry. Like it or not, the facts of the past are here to stay in education, whether they be facts of chemistry, psychology, or literature. Our mistake, though, has been to assume that the passing of facts IS education. We have ignored the left fork of the tongue: Critical-Creative Thinking. Largely, that is. Ideally, the individual courses would deal with both knowledge and creative- critical thinking, but in practice we tend to the factual far too much.

Here comes the third tentacle. The course system is one of the worst things that ever happened to education. The idea that knowledge and thinking about knowledge can be neatly carved up into nice three-hour chunks is absurd. And it is even more absurd that we actually say that when a student has had about forty of these chunks he is educated (he gets his degree). No matter how well we might do the individual courses, we are still dealing with fragments. We hand a student an odd-shaped bit of something; he studies it—even memorizes it; he tells the professor about it; then he goes on to the next odd-shaped bit of something. And so on, forty times. He is so busy with the fragments that he might not even realize that they are pieces of a gigantic puzzle. The old saw about the forests and the trees. Some colleges recognize the jigsaw-puzzle nature of education and attempt to get the students to try to put the puzzle together. They try courses (like Epochs and Integration and The Nature of Man). And they try comprehensive examinations. Admittedly, courses and examinations such as these are belated and they do not undo the damage that sixteen years of the other approach have accomplished, but they are a little better than nothing. Without comprehensives and over-view courses we would have a green-stamp education—you save enough stamps until you fill the book, then you take it to a Redemption Center (I love that term) and redeem it for a degree. Back in the dark ages (1930's) Robert Hutchins, then president of the University of Chicago, half facetiously suggested that the college should take the money from the student and hand him the degree on the first day, then those who wanted to learn should stay around for a time and learn if they wanted to; the others would be free to leave with the degree, which is what they were most interested in. Education without critical-creative thinking and some attempt to work with the large puzzle is just as much of a hoax as it would be to put Hutchins' suggestion into practice.

Tentacle four. We prize things which are rare. If diamonds were as plentiful as fallen leaves in autumn, we would not particularly want them. In the past a college education has been rare, but is is getting more and more accessable to more and more people. It is losing its rarity value. At the same time, people who covet something dream that the thing they so desire will be handed to them sort of like the prize in the box of Cracker Jacks. As more and more people try for the college degree the demand grows more and more for the degree to be easier to obtain. We say, theoretically, that each person who gets this prize must high jump seven feet. A few jump and are given the prize. Others try and fail to jump high enough. But we aim to please. We lower the bar to six feet. Still people fail. We lower it again. And again. Already the bar in high school is so perilously near the ground that some can crawl over it without being able to read the print on the prize they get on the other side. And the same pressures are at work in higher (ha) education. Let's do away with requirements, grades, comprehensive examinations, courses, professors, the whole establishment, the Cracker Jack kids say; that way we can all have the goodies without the trouble and worry. But they do not realize that if all can have it, it probably is not worth having (by our present rarity-value judgment, that is).

Last tentacle. I take the fifth. Sometimes I dream of an ideal education, and in my dream world, of course, there are no systems, no establishments, no deeply-rooted customs. I see myself through the haze as I learn, I see that I learn in two ways, from doing things my self (Mother, please, I'd rather do it myself) and from what I will obscenely call two or more minds rubbing against each other. So I do things and I rub minds with my own. And I learn. I could also dream, I suppose, that eventually some great hand would appear out of the fog and hand me an inscription written on a piece of the skin of a sheep which says "Thou Hast Arrived." But I have never dreamed that part. I am still learning and there is still no end in sight. I hope I never reach the end, ossified by some Power which says, "You are learned."

Two last frustrating thoughts. All education, formal and informal, has been designed to make the individual fit into and (hopefully) improve society; nonconformity is the aversion and the potentially destructive force in education, be it in a college or in a parent-child relationship in a tribe of aborigines in Australi.. Secondly, life is compromise; we yearn toward the ideal, but we take what we can get.

If you, too, have a dream like mine, and if you can show me how we can work out all of the little details (get around the system, but still make it reward us), then you and I can found our own educational un-institution. We might call it Rub and Do U.

SG reports . . .

Student Gov't Discusses College Support for JWSF, Big Name Entertainment

by Donna Knapp

At its most recent meeting the Student Government considered problems of increasing interest in the Juniata World Service Fund and getting more big name entertainment on campus.

Peggy Haines, representing JWSF, presented the group's problem of getting student support to raise money for their service projects. Suggestions from SG members included involving campus service organizations or contacting local churches for help in raising money. It was also mentioned that the group should plan more projects similar to those of the past which appealed to students.

Will Brandau from the College Center reported on the possibility of getting four big name entertainment for Juniata. The basic concern involved raising the price of tickets to students and outsiders, which would have to be done to finance the cost.

Dean Schoenherr distributed copies of the newly issued Statement of Rights, Freedoms and Responsibilities of Students. This will be reviewed at a later date.

Podgorski Replies

To clarify a statement in the last issue of the Juniatian concerning the alumni and their views on comprehensives. The results were not conclusive that the majority of the alumni were for or against comprehensives. Those interviewed were almost evenly divided as to their position, but the number of alumni interviewwed was only a small sampling of those who attended Homecoming.

Task Force Seeks to Communicate

How does a college carry out a thorough-going self-evaluation in preparation for its future.

It is in response to the challenge of this question and others like it that the Task Force has been involved, in matters both of procedure and of content.

The committee has decided that, since it is involved with matters which relate to the whole campus community, it will need to keep the community posted on its activities. As a result, the Tuesday evening meetings will be open, unless otherwise specified. In addition, regular reports will be given to divisional meetings of the faculty, posted on a special bulletin board in Ellis Hall and included in summary form in the Juniatian.

It was also felt that not only should the campus community be involved in knowing what the Task Force is doing, but it should also engage in thinking about the educational experience at Juniata College at a number of levels. Among other things, the faculty has already participated in a preliminary questionnaire. a sub-committee is examining a living-learning project proposal, a day of campus-wide discussions of education is being planned and alumni participation in off-campus education is being studied. As the need for systematic study of crucial issues arises, the Task Force will call further on persons within the college community for assistance.

Another Task Force responsibility is that of information-gathering. A special shelf in the Beeghly library has been set aside for the convenience of the Task Force and the wider community. Materials from other schools and individuals will accumulate there.

Since in this first public statement the Task Force is expressing its intention to keep lines of communication open as well as to call on the resources of this campus for assistance in specific tasks, it must be said in conclusion that the committee welcomes and seeks positive and negative feed-back as well as suggestions for the strengthening of the educational experience at Juniata College.

Task Force members are: Sara Clemson; Esther Doyle; Robert Faus, secretary; Donald Hartman; Carl Kendig; Thomas Nolan; Wilfred Norris, chairman; Donna Roppelt and William Russey.

Catalogues Available

Students and faculty are once more reminded that the 1969-70 issue of the College Catalogue can be picked up in the Admissions Office during regular office hours.

Veteran Gives Other Side Of Draft, Military Service

by Dan Hueglin

Since my arrival at Juniata, I've heard a good deal of discussion about Vietnam and the draft. Most comments have been negative in nature. The inconvenience and unpleasantness of military service are frowned upon and regarded as the whole of the military experience.

The draft is often viewed as the first step in a three step process. It means unpleasant military service which in turn means fighting and dying in Vietnam. This amazingly widespread belief is fallacy.

It's not my intent here to argue the legality, morality or oughtness of Vietnam or the draft. I was asked to write a few comments to point out the good aspects of military service. For convenience, I will use voluntary military service and the draft synonimously.

Time spent in the armed services can be both pleasant and rewarding. Opportunities for travel and learning are almost unlimited and the physical well being of a serviceman is well provided for. After service, a man is given assistance in returning to civilian life. Few employers provide as much for their people during and after employment as Uncle Sam.

Many servicemen are led off to slaughter by serving eighteen or more months in places like Germany, England, Italy, Hawaii, the Phillipines or Australia. Some less fortunate are compelled to endure service at Fort Dix (N.J.), Fort Carson (Col.), Fort Sam Houston (Tex.), or other locations throughout the continental U.S. In most cases, travel done in service will never be repeated. The majority of servicemen forced to travel to Europe would never be able to do so on their own.

In addition to demanding that a young man travel around the world, Uncle Sam also offers opportunities to advance one's education. Many bases have extension courses of the University of Maryland available. There is, naturally, a charge for this service, about thirty dollars a course, which includes texts, the lecturer's salary and a class room facility. If such facilities aren't available, correspondence courses are. Like real classes, a G.I. must pay to take correspondence courses, five dollars to enroll. The courses, however, are limited to those that encompass from high school to graduate level work.

Uncle Sam also spends money to train men as computer operators, electronics technicians, mechanics, medical technicians, etc. The list is too long to enumerate. In fields such as those I've just mentioned, civilian employment isn't difficult to find.

During military service, one may even take an occasional vacation. Thirty days of leave with pay plus reimbursement for meals is forced upon the G.I. There aren't many jobs that offer such a liberal vacation policy.

When military service is complete, a veteran is given assistance in furthering his education if he wishes to do so. Should a veteran have sustained injuries, he is given special training and allowances for his disability.

All things considered, the picture presented by military service isn't black. It can be a colorful, diverse and rewarding way to spend two or more years. I will openly admit that it is not always pleasant, but it is not a slaughter either.

War Reflects Conflict Over Values

by J. Patrick Tyson

War is a conflict over values between human beings using force through the directed, rational use of weapons. A weapon is an entity designed or used to destroy the object of its function; the object of a weapon's function is a target. Therefore, the object of war is the destruction of conflicting values by the use of weapons. The process of war is the attack and defense of values and consequently the conditions, entities, and all relevant elements necessary for the existence of those values). War never proves anything right or wrong it just decides the existence or nonexistence of values in conflict and/or the conditions, entities, and all relevant elements for the existence of values.

The object of the Vietnamese War has been the conflict of values between communist and non-communist, "democratic," groups over the definition of the good life for the population of an artifical political area. The population of the area values peace, food, shelter and freedom from fear, otherwise it is a case of diverse religions, ethnic groups and philosophies. As a consequence the population has been fought over not for. The population of the area will not care who controls it until it has the four basic values above listed and that will not happen untill the communist or non-communist forces win in Vietnam.

The specific target in Vietnam has been the effective strength of the enemy, and the resulting ability of the enemy to control territory, and therefore the population. Because in the past Vietnam has been a predomently rural, low population density area; those who controlled the land controlled the people. Further, the population was tied to an agricultural system of a very primitive, but efficent nature; the people were as much rooted to the land as were their crops. Thus, effective strength in this case is measured in the ability to control land.

The French learned this lesson the hard way in 1954; they were stretched too far too thinly. They had lost effective combat strength as the communist forces had planed, quoting Chairman Mao. . . .

"Make wiping out the enemy's effective strength our main objective; do not make holding or seizing a city or a place our main objective. Holding or seizing a city or a place is the outcome of wiping out the enemy's effective strength. . . "

The basic problem for the French as seen by Bernard B. Fall was, "Important numbers of troops and material had to be withdrawn from . . . vital sectors where they were sorely lacking and there absence began to create emergencies of there own." The most notable example of this is the crushing defeat of the French at Dien Bien Phu. The French lost because they tried to fight the whole cultural pattern in the area. If the French had dispersed their forces to control the land (home population) they could not have effectively fought the main force units. While the French were fighting the main forces in one area they were being nibbled to death by the local forces supplied with captured arms elsewhere. The French drowned in tight knots in the hostile sea of Vietnamese population. As a direct result of these tactics the French sought an out at any price, and they got it with a vengeance in the Geneva Agreements in July 21, 1954.

When the United States entered the War we had to devise some weapon to use against the communist tatic of "Peoples War." Here is the best statement of the problem I have come across; it is from "Time, Space and Will:" the Political Military Views of Mao Tse-Tung by E. L. Katzenbach, Jr. . . .

"We have fought wars of urban and industrial interdiction, while our own Asiatic opponents and the African opponents of our allies have patiently pursued a process of rural consolidation which has, in effect, given them an inviolable sanctury from which they can attack and withdraw at will. What, therefore, would seem to be needed is a military instrument capable of invading and controling this sanctuary, one that can maintain both law and order in rural villages and market areas."

The answer is simplicity itself; we have utterly annihilated the "rural sanctury" by destroying it as a population center. If you can't beat the enemy at his own game then change the rules on him in the middle of play! It is my opinion that the policies we have been following in Vietnam: Massive bombing, napalm, defoliation, destruction of the land and dispersed cultural pattern to/an urban, driving the common peasant off the land and into the city. There he fines jobs, vice, the black market, books, Coke, mini-skirts — in short the whole basic change from a rural, dispersed cultural pattern otan urban, concentrated life. Further, before United States involvement in the area it used to be a rice exporting center; now Vietnam imports rice, the French rubber plantations have been destroyed and the basis for an industrial economy has been developed by the population shift to the cities. We have destroyed the old cultural pattern of area and are building a new one on our model. United States money has supported the embryonic non-communist forces in Vietnam through this traumatic period and United States forces have protected it. The communist forces are now in the position of the French in 1954 but fighting a different cultural pattern. Now they must capture the cities, the national government's centers of power, to control the population. If they disperse they gain nothing and become weaker.

Don't let my words fool you, I understand the plight of the peasant, this is no fun for the man it is happening to; neither is any great social upheaval. Up to this point the population has only been fought over not for. Now is when the government in Saigon must be more responsive to the people, because it is in the position to provide the four basic needs of the population; peace, food, shelter and freedom from fear. Once these are met then the population of this area, the common men, will have a chance for a better life; more of a chance than he would have as human cannon-fodder in a death charge useful to the party only as a means to an end. Now and only now can the Vietnamese War begin and the anti-communist war end. This War, as all others, has not proved who is right and who is wrong; it has determined what values will exist in the area. It is my belief that those values are good if humanly imperfect and limited. Therefore I cannot merely condemn the enemy or absolutely support our side. AA I can say is it is my best estimate that we are right and they are wrong, but I will fight to the death for my beliefs as others must for theirs.

Mozart, Telephone Team Up For Mod Interpretation

The classical work of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart takes a turn for the Mod along with the presentation of a Gian-Carlo Menotti work by the Demitasse Opera Company next Friday evening, Oct. 31, in Oller Auditorium.

Mozart's "The Impresario" and Menotti's "The Telephone" will be offered in the dual production as the first of a series of free public attractions by the Juniata College Music Department this year. Seats are available on a first-come, first-served basis. Curtain time is 8:15 p.m.

"The Impresario" by Mozart was staged for Franklin Concerts, of Philadelphia, by the distinguished Metropolitan Opera stage director Henry Butler. The Demitasse Opera Company operates under the auspices of Franklin Concerts, Inc., which has in the past sent many outstanding musical productions to Juniata.

The Demitasse production of the hilarious one-act opera is performed in England, half in dialogue and half in music, and provides an excellent introduction to opera as an art form. Featured in leading roles are soprano Linda Burkhart as Miss Sweetsong; coloratura Deborah Cook as Madame Silverklang; Allan Keene, tenor, as the banker Mr. Eiler; and baritone Daniel Eby performing in the title role as Sol Surehock.

The story is about an aging prima donna and an ambitious ingenue who are both after the same part in a new production. Complications arise when the man with the money discovers he has to appease both ladies.

"The Telephone" depicts — in chamber opera form — a young man's frustrating battle with the telephone in winning his lady's attentions. His attempts to propose are persistently interrupted by the ringing phone, and he finally resorts to leaving her apartment to go out to a phone booth and call her to propose.

Barwise and Barboni; To Represent Center At Union Conference

Two Juniata coeds, Carol Barwise and Betsy Barboni, will represent the JC student body and the College's new Ellis Hall at the 1969 Region IV Conference of the Association of College Unions (A.C.U.) at Duquesne University in Pittsburgh, Oct, 26-28.

Representatives from A.C.U. member colleges and universities in Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia, and the District of Columbia area will participate in conference workshops and seminars to discuss cultural, social, recreational and educational programs offered by college unions.

Highlighting the three-day conference will be a Monday evening address on "The Methods of Student Activism," by well-known Pittsburgh Group W radio commentator Rod MacLeish.

Is She Still Mad at You?
Get her Fragrance from the
COLONIAL GIFT SHOP
See What She Says

Album of the Month
"GREEN RIVER"
Credence Clearwater Revival
Stereo
Reg. $4.79
Now $2.98
ON SALE AT
Miller's

Welcome Juniata Students and Parents
To The

OF HUNTINGDON
Restaurant
Red Fox Lounge
49 Rooms
All Types of Banquets
643-3934

FOR SALE
Wanted, responsible party to take over low monthly payments on a spinet piano. Can be seen locally. Write Credit Manager P.O. Box 35, Cortland, Ohio.

East End
Pizza
643-4280
On Washington St.
near
the County Building

Did you see that Beautiful mug last week?
Get One at
Black's Jewelry
Next to the Friendly well . . .

Mark's Corner News
4th & Allegheny St.
OPEN 24 HOURS
Winchester Ammo
Hunting Knives
Hand warmers
Gloves & Thermos
10,000 Items 643-9932

Buck's Laundry (Two blocks From Campus)
1424 Mifflin Street 643-2252

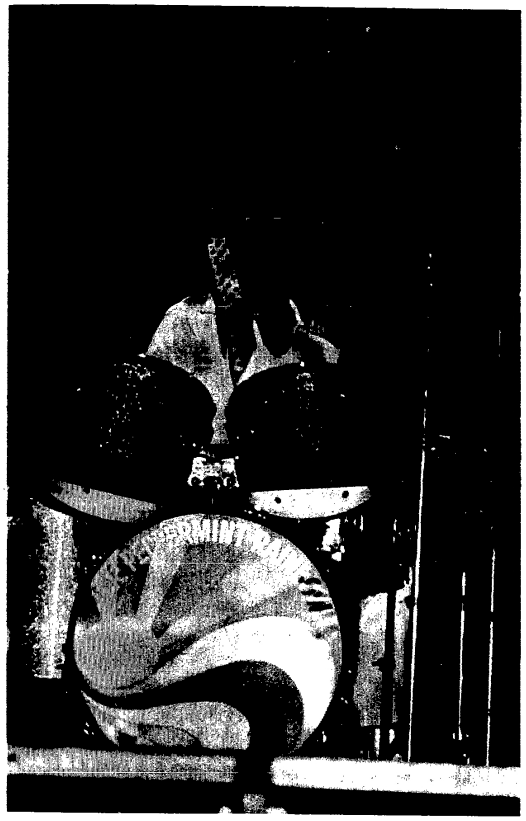

photo by Hoffman

First Lady . . . Music . . .

"Hallelujah Train" to Stop Here

More than twenty internationally celebrated Negro singers, dancers and instrumentalists, under the direction of Dr. Eva Jessye, will appear here Thursday, Oct, 30, at 8:15 p.m. when the Focus on Art and Life series brings "The Hallelujah Train" to the stage of Oller Auditorium for its only local engagement.

The Eva Jessye Choir and Ensemble is recognized as the most famous black musical aggregation in the world today. It has made numerous tours of North America, South America, Europe, Africa and Asia, and has been acclaimed in leading music and theatre centers on both sides of the Iron Curtain. Critics have hailed the group as "Dramatists of American Music" and have labeled Dr. Jessye "the First Lady of American Choral Music."

photo by Hoffman

Flashing light on a dark background these members of the Peppermint Rainbow do their own thing at their free-wheeling concert Oct. 17 in Memorial Gym.

Though her experience in the field of show business has been vast her vitality and energy belie her years. She is one of the most adventurous, imaginative and progressive figures in show-business today, always eager to explore new areas and try new methods of arranging, staging, creating musical entertainment for today's audiences. She is noted as a trend-setter, a pace-maker, a forger of new paths, as "The Hallelujah Train" so excitingly proves.

Kansas-born, Eva Jessye has achieved renown in the fields of education, poetry, musical comedy, drama, opera and choral work. She has composed more than a hundred vocal and instrumental works, has created arrangements for several hundred more. As an actress, writer, singer, director she has won plaudits on Broadway and throughout the world. With her choir she has toured twenty-six European countries, and more than two score other nations in other nations on other continents, in concert appearances.

George Gershwin selected her to cast and coach the ensemble and soloists in his original Broadway production of "Porgy and Bess", and so great was her success, she has been identified with every major revival of this masterwork throughout the world subsequently. She was the first to interpret Virgil Thomson's and Gertrude Stein's "Four Saints in Three Acts" for American audiences, and was musical director for King Vidor's epic motion picture "Hallelujah". As American consultant to the BBC for many years, Miss Jessye was responsible for introducing Britons to Negro music and Negro musicians on a mammoth scale. Recently, as one of the featured performers in the current motion picture hit, "Slaves," she has won nation-wide critical acclaim.

Perhaps no other Negro musician in America has been so widely honored or has received so many awards and citations for cultural contributions and patriotic services to her country as has Miss Jessye. More than a dozen colleges and universities have awarded her honorary degrees.

In "The Hallelujah Train" Miss Jessye has assembled fifty or more songs from all parts of America, songs which have been associated with a particular phase of our nation's growth, development and history, songs which have become identified with one or another of the ethnic groups that comprise its vast populace. She has ingeniously woven these songs into a fascinating, colorful tapestry that reveals the richness and the diversity of the culture and the people in this land tat she loves so dearly.

This is not a sentimentalized look at America. Far from it. It is often hard-hitting, trenchant, sometimes tongue-in-cheek, frequently poignant, but always hopeful, for above all, Miss Jessye believes in the future of America. The show, which took months to research and write, is presently embarked upon a cross-country pre-Broadway tour. It represents Miss Jessye's newest and most ambitious endeavor in musical theatre, and features many of the leading Negro musical artists with whom she has been associated over the years.

Tickets for "The Hallelujah Train" may be obtained at the box-office.

Penn State Campus . . .

C.A.S.H. to Report on Social Education

Marion B. Long and Gene Albright, assistant directors of the Central Pennsylvania Special Education Center will be guest speakers at the fall meeting of the Central Assoc. for Speech and Hearing. The meeting will be held on the Pennsylvania State University campus in Willard Building, room 173, Wednesday, Oct. 29, at 7:30 p.m.

The topic for the evening will be A Key—Innovation Media and Resources Evaluation Demonstration—To strengthen the quality of education and training for handicapped and youth, a new associated Special Education Instructional Materials Center, supported by the United States Office of Education, has been established by the Dauphin County Schools, Department of Education at University Center in Harrisburg. It will serve a region of twenty-six counties in Central Pennsylvania. The Special Education Resource Center will provide services to special education personnel working with children who are mentally retarded, emotionally disturbed, physically disabled, visually handicapped, and those who have speech or hearing handicaps.

Mrs. Long and Mr. Albright serve state institutions, non-profit schools and all public schools in the central region of Pennsylvania with the mobil center. The center will be responsible for the collection, evaluation, dissemination, and research related to a variety of instructional materials. Plans include the development of demonstration and training workshops to serve professionals in each county.

Further information on the meeting can be obtained from Mrs. Lynn Shine, Graduate Circle, University Park, Penna.

Trustees Elect New Member, Select Names for Buildings

Juniata College's 30-member Board of Trustees met on Saturday, Oct, 11 and elected to their membership Mr. Edwin L. Kennedy, a New York investment banker from New Vernon, N.J.

In their regular Fall business session the Trustees approved proposals for the naming of the new East Houses residence halls after four distinguished trustees, the naming of a recently-acquired 170-acre tract of land and the naming of the new academic building after one of the College's greatest benefactors.

The new residence halls, known as the East Houses, will be dedicated upon their completion to the honor of: Mr. William R. Flory, of Harrisburg, president of Grenoble Hotels, Inc.; Dr. Joseph V. Kline, retired senior partner of the New York law firm of Mudke, Rose, Guthrie and Alexander; Dr. W. Newton Long, president of Miller Chemical and Fertilizer Company of Baltimore, Md.; and Mr. Robert E. Miller, deceased, Johnstown businessman, who was a member of the Board of Trustees for 12 years.

The 170-acre parcel of land near the campus, formerly known as the Metz Farm tract, will be designated as the John C. and Elizabeth Baker Nature Preserve, after the chairman of the Board of Trustees and his wife.

The academic building, renovated in 1968, will now be known officially as Good Hall, after Mr. J. Omar Good, who died in January, 1969, leaving Juniata College one million dollars.

Good Eating
Fast Service
Enjoy our delicious Food — Our Friendly atmosphere
Visit us Today
Kelly's Korner
1340 Penna. Ave
643-4900

KALOS
CLIFTON
TONIGHT AND SATURDAY
Feature at 7:23 - 9:27
Cliff Robertson Claire Bloom in
CHARLY
Best Award Actor to Robertson for this show.
SUNDAY AND MONDAY
Gregory Peck in
THE CHAIRMAN
Feature at 9:20
Geo Segal Robert Vaughn
BRIDGE AT REMAGEN
Feature at 7:16
TUESDAY IS JC NIGHT
Peter O'Toole
THE GREAT CATHARINE
75¢

M & M RESTAURANT
On Rt. 22 East of Huntingdon Motor Inn
643-2640

"The Hole in the Wall"
UP TOWN CUT-RATE
Lunch — Drugs — Ice Cream
1229 Mifflin St.

PROBLEMS ? ? . . .
Consider them better in one of our easy chairs.
Bare Floors . . . Cold Feet? ? ?
Warm up with our carpeting and throw rugs.
Logan Brothers
FURNITURE — CARPETS — DRAPERIES
"Serving Huntingdon County For Sixty-five years"
705 Washington St. Huntingdon, Pa.
Telephone: 643-0390

Stop and See
Our Beautiful
Synthetic Wigs complete with Head Form
Carrying Case
For $20.00
Very little care, washable, no need to be set. Good selection of colors, one size fits all.
Poser's
CALL 643-3210

Get a Load off your mind — Start with a haircut at . . . . Dunlaps

"WHAT'S IN"
We've Got Famous
Farah Slacks
Stop in
DOLLINGER'S
Shop For The Man
711 Washington Street

Win Fame
and other tangible prizes in . . . . The
CRICKETEER OPENING LINE CONTEST
Write your own original opening line in the Entry blank provided by Englishe's
Two Tested Opening Lines
1. Would you like a Massage?
2. I don't dance, but, I'd love to hold you while you do.

JC's Strong Defense Routs Lycoming by Score of 21-7

by Gene Galbraith

Lycoming's homecoming was turned into an Indian War Dance as Juniata thumped Lycoming 21-7 on Saturday. The Indians' defense was superb, and the offense literally ran over the Warriors of Lycoming.

Our rugged defense held Lycoming scoreless for the first three quarters. The highlight of the defensive action was a spectacular goal line stand, when the Indians held the Warriors on their two yard line for a complete series of downs.

Juniata's ground game was also in full swing as the Indians rushed for 262 yards, compared to Lycoming's 97 yards.

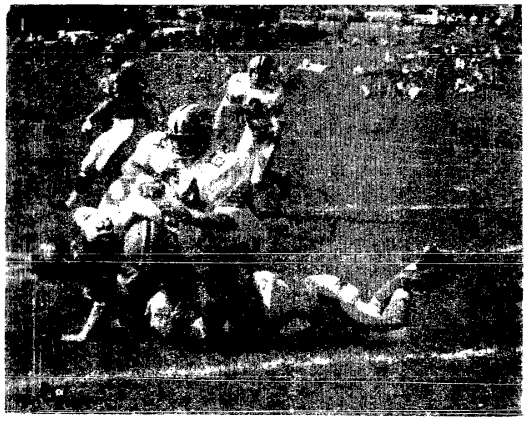
After a scoreless first quarter, halfback Dave Sparks powered into the end zone from the five yard line to give Juniata the first score. Bill "Pip" McQuade's conversion gave the Indians a 7-0 lead.

Juniata scored again in the third quarter on Joel Delewski's phenomenal 55 yard punt return. Joel broke numerous tackles as he picked his way into the end zone. McQuade's coversion made the score 14-0.

The Indians didn't waste much time before they scored again in the third quarter. Dave Sparks scored his second TD of the day on a nine yard run. McQuade's kick put the Indians ahead 21-0.

Lycoming finally hit the scoreboard in the fourth quarter on quarterback Dreschler's 22 yard pass to end Steve Miller. The Warriors added the conversion, but they were still two TD's behind, 21-7. Both defenses held for the remainder of the quarter, and Juniata gained the victory.

The Indians were keyed up for this game, and the win lifted them out of a two game slump. Juniata will carry a 2-2 record (2-1 in MAC) into Saturday's Parents Day game with Haverford College.



"This ball is going nowhere." The Indian defense held Lycoming to only 97 yards.

Harriers Dash Toward Winning Season

Kneeling: Ted Corcelius, Ken Kuehn, Kirk Wilson, Scott Williams, John Civitts, Bill Elwell. Standing, Kerry Stanley, Aubrey Shenk (captain), Dennis Weidler, Paul Keeley, Rick Paulhamus, Tom Leaver, Coach Russ Trimmer.

by Aubrey Shenk

The J.C. harriers evened their season's record at 3—3 with two wins and a loss last week. On Wednesday, J.C. defeated Pittsburgh - Johnstown 24½ - 30½ and lost to Indiana 22-39 in a trianular encounter.

Dennis Weidler continued unbeaten as he came home first over the 4.5 mile Indiana course in 23:34. Aub Shenk was the only other J.C. runner to break the top ten in the overall standings by finishing 5th. The final three scoring slots were filled by Tom Leaver, Scott Williams, and Kerry Stanley.

On Saturday in the homecoming meet, the "pack" reached the .500 level by defeating a tough Geneva squad (4 - 1) by 25-31 in the best team effort thus far. Dennis Weidler again broke the tape, covering the 4.8 miles in 25:24. Aub Shenk finished third in 27:15. A real battle developed for the next four positions. Kerry Stanley, Tom Leaver and two Geneva runners came on to the track together.

Down the backstretch the Geneva boys began to pull away. Going into the final turn, however, the picture suddenly changed. Aided by crowd encouragement, Tom Leaver (28:32) took off and sprinted by one man and almost caught the other in a close race to the wire. Kerry Stanley (28:40) meanwhile, gave it everything and just lost sixth at the tape. Scott Williams completed the J.C. scoring with a ninth place while Rick Paulhamus closed fast to displace Geneva's fifth man.

Last Wednesday, the JC harriers dropped a decision to the F&M Diplomats on the latter's course 20-43. Dennis Weidler continued his winning ways by covering the flat, 4.5 mile course in 24:03. After Dennis, however, F&M packed eight men within one minute, five within 25 seconds, to take the victory. Aub Shenk Tom Leaver, Kerry Stanley and Scot Williams completed the JC scoring.

Despite the loss, the harriers are still in good position for their goal of a winning season. The "pack" traveled to Elizabethtown Wednesday, and on Saturday will take on Delaware Valley in a Parent's Day halftime encounter.

START OK

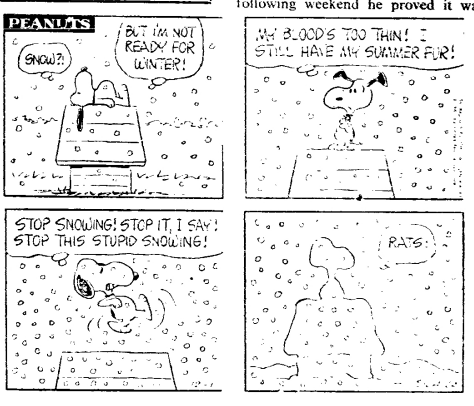
Esso

14th St. ESSO

Flowers Say More

13th and Moore St.

The Four Seasons



FROM THE TEE-PEE

by Tom Diehl
Sports Editor

For the past two and one-half years, the Naval Academy's loss has been Juniata's gain, as far as one football player is concerned. A transfer student named Joel Delewski made the transition from a midshipman to one of the most exciting punt and kickoff return artists that Juniata has ever turned out.

The transition made by this speedy senior from Reading became evident midway through the '67 season, his first on the Indian squad. In a homecoming game against Lycoming, he broke through with a dazzling 50 yard punt return to get the Indians off to a quick 7-0 lead, in a game which the Tribe won handily. The following weekend he proved it was not a fluke, as he scored twice on punt returns of 75 and 50 yards. The "super gnat" had done it again.

Last season he doubled his previous number of touchdowns scored, as he scampered into the end zone with two punt returns, two kickoff returns and two pass receptions for a total of 36 points. His ability to break tackles and keep his balance in these daring returns added to their appeal.

The 1969 season had been a relatively quiet one for him until last weekend when he tore away from six would-be tacklers to score on a 55 yard punt return. This display of agility led Coach Nadzak to remark, "He's got to be the finest punt runner I've ever coached."

And so it goes with Joel Delewski, number 26, in the Juniata football jersey, a relatively obscure figure until it comes time for an opponent kickoff or punt. He then springs into action and shows once again the skilled artist that he is with a football in hand.

Denny Weidler wins another one cheered on by Howie Grove, team manager (left) and Paul Keely, ailing teammate (center).

Milk & Ice Cream

Plant Phone — 643-2770

Enjoy a Sunday, Milk Shake or Ice Cream Cone

at

STRICKLER'S

The Strickler Shop

14th St. & Mifflin

For an adventure in Eating . . .

MOTEL 22 BUFFET SUPPERS

Wednesday & Thursday 6-10 p.m.

The Buffet Service is in three Courses, Appetizers and Salads, Main Course (choice of meats + vegetables) and deserts.

Get china for each course at the Service Table.

Feel free to return as often as you wish.

THE JUNIATIAN

Vol. XLVI, No. 6 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | October 31, 1969

Referendum to Express Deficiency Notice Opinion

On Tuesday, Nov. 4 a referendum will be held to determine student body opinion on the future of Deficiency Notices. Voting will take place in the Ellis Hall Lobby.

Students will be given three choices:

1. retain Deficiency Notices in their present form
2. have Deficiency Notices sent only to the student, not to the the parents
3. eliminate the use of Deficiency Notices

The following article will outline the function of the Deficiency Notices and some of the issues which have arisen from their use.

According to the College Bulletin, "Deficiency Notices will be issued by the Registrar any time prior to the end of each term when unsatisfactory progress (defined as that level of work normally graded as D or F) is reported by instructors."

In practice these notices are sent out near mid-semester for reasons including incomplete work, lack of class attendance, as well as poor examination scores. The reason for deficiency is stated on the notice, and the student is encouraged to discuss his academic status with his prof., as soon as possible. A copy of the notice is sent to the student and to his parents at the same time. If no progress is shown, a second notice is sent out, occasionally.

The use of Deficiency Notices has been a contested issue for some time now. Listed below are some of the arguments, Pro and Con.

Pro 1. inform the student that he is in academic jeopardy.
2. facilitate faculty - student communication on personal and general academic matters.
3. inform parents, who have a parental, as well as, a vested interest in the student's success.
4. encourage evaluation of the student, which may reflect on the course as well as the student as an individual.

Con 1. cause parent-student conflict
2. are a form of academic punishment with no rewarding counterpart.
3. increase the possibility of the negative effects of categorizing a student before his entire semester's work is completed.
4. perpetuate a dependent academic structure whereby the student waits to be judged by a prof.

These are some of the major issues. A referendum to poll your opinion will be held Tues., Nov. 4. Note to Freshmen: Please contact upperclassmen or a member of the Education Committee to answer questions or relate experiences concerning Deficiency Notices.

Education Committee
Roger Long
Sam Brinton
Rich Sackett

Non-graded Courses . . .

Faculty to Give Decision

by Paul Keely

Not only will this coming Monday's (Nov. 3) faculty meeting be dealing with student recommendations concerning comprehensive examinations, but also under consideration will be the action of the Curriculum Committee in response to two separate, yet similar, proposals by students in 400-level courses for having their classes conducted "experimentally" on a "non-graded" basis.

In "general agreement that there might be value in an upper level academic program which did not rely on the traditional standards of 'grades' for the evaluation of what was achieved in that program," the Curriculum Committee did pass a motion Oct. 15 to approve, with four stipulations, the requests received from the two classes, English 412 Shakespeare with Dr. Esther Doyle and Philosophy 410 Special Topics with Instructor Donald Hartman. The committee's action, however, is subject to the final approval or disapproval of the faculty.

Those 16 students who last Sept. 30 signed a request to take their Shakespeare course "without competing for grades" did so "in a small attempt to combat the unhealthy attitude towards marks and to study a subject merely for the 'joy of working.'" Pledging themselves "to do the work to the best of our ability," the class was, in conjunction with Dr. Doyle's conception of the course requirements and structure, agreeing to "prepare for each class by reading the play or listening to the tapes when they are part of that preparation" and to be present for class discussion as well.

According to Dr. Doyle, the idea behind the experiment would be an honor system where in her "only strategy is to confer with any delinquents, reminding them that I cannot certify that they have satisfactorily completed the work of a 4 credit course unless they have done so."

The proposal of Oct. 1 which Hartman and his 12 philosophy students signed indicated that they were interested in testing the hypothesis that "the elimination of competition actually facilitates the learning process." It was stated that credit would be "contingent upon meeting the requirements of the course," which center around the writing, distribution, and presentation of three papers.

The four stipulations contained in the curriculum committee's action of Oct. 15 run generally as follows:

1) Each student's transcript or permanent record will carry the title of the course and the number of credits granted as determined by the instructor: 4 in the case of the English course and 3 in the Philosophy course, or 0 if the student did not fulfill the original work agreement. (In no case can the result enter into the determination of the student's grade point average.)

2) A signed statement concerning the student's "Learning Experience," written by the sudent and/or the instructor shall be appended to the student's permanent record (in lieu of grades). It will be up to each student individually to decide who will write these statements. Also they should be in the registrar's hands within the week following the final examinations, or the instructor will furnish the statement with or without the student's consent.

(According to the committee's majority statement, "some objectified procedure was felt to be necessary in order to qualify the experience as deserving of academic credit, as distinguished from a purely personal or private experience.)

3) Those students who wish to agree to these stipulations and the original work agreement will signify so to the instructor immediately; those who do not will take the course in the conventional manner. All decisions should be in writing and will be binding.

4) The instructors and students will meet with the curriculum committee at their earliest mutual convenience (at the termination of the semester) in order to discuss and evaluate this experience.

In dealing with the curriculum committee's action upon the student proposals this coming Monday, the faculty will no doubt have to reckon with a "minority report" issued by

Cont'd on page 2

Kaleidoscopic . . .

Students Ready Production

The Department of Speech and Theatre will present an original film-stage musical production, "This Is Your Captain Speaking," on the Oller Auditorium stage Nov. 6 through 8, introducing to the world of the stage the work of Will and Debbie Brandau.

"The spirited saga of the airways wings characters and spectators through the labyrinthian corridors of international airports into the gullet of an elephantine stratojet, catching in action and song the flight patterns of distress and dyspepsia which have assuredly assaulted all who have sought airborne refuge from the earth's asphyxiated asphalt arteriosclerosis," according to Prof. Clayton E. Briggs, who is directing staging for the production.

While "This Is Your Captain Speaking" streamjets songs and dialogue, dances and plot, two student-formed musical ensembles will pulse rhythm and melody into the nine songs featured in the production. Two movie screens will kaleidoscope scenes of airport life as vignettes reinforcing or counteracting live action on the stage.

Members of the flight-crew-and-passenger cast are Salvatore Azzaro, Linda Markey, Anna Gary, Jeff Lesak, Blake Freeman, Carolyn Sander, Carol Olmstead, Gilda Spiotta, Vicki Bielek, Bruce Ketrick, Sue Bermel, Chris McFarland, John Loose, Valerie Derickson, Vicki Carman, and Linda Mertz.

Tickets are available — free to JC students — at the information desk in Ellis Hall. General admission will be $1.75.

Also "The Telephone" . . .

Mozart Goes Mod for Halloween

Soprano Deborah Cook makes a return visit to Juniata tonight in the Demitasse Opera Company productions of Mozart's "The Impresario" and Menotti's "The Telephone."

This Halloween Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart shows a new face as a Mod presentation of his "The Impresario" teams up with Gian-Carlo Menotti's "The Telephone".

This dual production by the Demitasse Opera Company is the first of a series of free public attractions offered by Juniata's Music Department this year. Seats are available on a first-come, first-served basis. Curtain time in Oller Hall is 8:15 p.m.

Henry Butler, the distinguished Metropolitan Opera stage director, staged "The Impresario" for Franklin Concerts. The Demitasse Opera Company operates under their auspices and in the past has sent many outstanding musical productions to Juniata.

Providing an excellent introduction to opera as an art form, the Demitasse production of the hilarious one-act opera is performed in English, half in dialogue and half in music. Featured in leading roles are soprano Linda Burkhart as Miss Sweetsong; coloratura Deborah Cook as Madame Silverlang; Allan Keene, tenor, as the banker Mr. Eiler; and baritone Daniel Eby performing in the title role as Sol Surehock.

The libretto is about an aging prima donna and an ambitious ingenue who are both battling for the same role in a new production. Complications arise when the man with the money discovers he has to appease both ladies.

"The Telephone" depicts — in chamber opera form — a young man's frustrating battle with the telephone in winning his lady's attentions. His attempts to propose are persistently interrupted by the ringing phone, and he finally resorts to leaving her apartment to go out to a phone booth and call her to propose.

Task Force Examines Communal Living Proposal of "Conscious Community"

by David Beahm

Several weeks ago on Mountain Day a discussion was held concerning a possible communal living experience at Juniata. As a result, a group of interested students met the weekend of Oct. 10 to specify more exactly the purposes and functions of their proposal. For the remainder of the campus, then, these are their ideas.

It is felt that Juniata has lost sight of its goals to educate each student in the liberal arts, which include the social factors involved in personal interaction. In part, these are the same problems the Task Force is analyzing as it looks at Juniata in totality. The communal living, then, hopes to break down the rigid barriers which have grown through impersonal student-professor relationships based on competition, not cooperation.

"A Conscious Community is personal confrontation: that is, each person in the community willfully makes himself available to every other individual (and to the group through a consciousness of purpose, i.e.—awareness of the need for and value of interaction. That personal confrontation involves two basic elements: 1) meaningful communication (through desire and availability) and 2) acceptance of the responsibility of sharing, i.e. equal give and take."

The immediate goals of the community are listed as follows:

1) To discover the role of human relations in education
2) To examine new educational theories, and
3) To examine existing educational systems utilizing these new theories
4) To suggest alternative educational situations at JC
5) To examine problems of implementing these alternatives at JC

"One of the highest priorities of the group is the search for new motivations. Each member will keep an individual journal of feelings and experiences which will record the effect of our methods and inspire new ideas.

"The examination of new educational theories entails outside research of learning theories in addition to those generated by our own experience. However, we must also examine situations using these theories through college catalogues, talking to those involved in concrete situations and possibly visiting those situations.

"Not only must we examine what exists at Juniata, we must suggest alternative situations and consider implementation problems through which our findings can be generalized for the whole campus.

"The entire community will be involved in a six-credit course dealing with a search for educational alternatives. The course will manifest the commitment to Task Force through the community structure. The concrete results will be compiled in a group paper submitted to Task Force and available to all concerned individuals.

In many cases we foresee students' needs being met within the community through students who have achieved competency in some areas acting as 'professors,' through students having common interests doing co-operative independent studies, and so on.

"We feel that in our search for new motivations, we must eliminate the base of our present, unsatisfactory motivations, grades. As mentioned above, evaluation will be arrived at through interaction between those learning. In some cases this will involve a mutual 'teacher-student' discussion and in others it will be the decision of a student or group of students about what they feel they have achieved. These evaluations will be written and attached to our permanent records.

Although the optimum number of people is dependent upon the housing facilities the ideal is no more than 20, including professors' families counted as 'professors.' The professor and his family will live under the same conditions as the students, but exact situations will be worked out in the community after considering the internal factors of the family group.

"Efforts will be made to get participants from all areas of study and from all classes.

"Money for the community for rent, food and other expenses will be gathered from participating students and faculty. The student will pay the semester fee to the college.

Cont'd on page 2

Editorial . . .

Utopia Revisited...

Probably IDEAL Communism is the best form of government, and possibly IDEAL Comprehensive Exams are the best way to round out four years of education. Unfortunately the ideal is interpreted by Stalins and Comp Boards and something gets lost in the translation.

Everybody has his favorite comp story. Ours is the one about the ten minute quiz on the frog's liver (or was it his pancreas?) For every comp that is a rewarding, integrative experience, there is one or more (probably more) that is trivial and picayune.

Yet there are those all too rare cases where "something" clicks and everyone says, "It was good to have been there." It seems a shame to toss that moment away.

We shrink from abolition yet the search for an IDEAL compromise will probably result in nothing more than proliferation of committees (of which we have quite enough —thank you! !)

Somehow IDEALS are always larger than their practitioners and live on despite the filth that clutters them. So until the IDEAL can stand alone (or until Niagara Falls, as the case may be) we would hate to exist in the U.S.S.R., and we view comps with deep distaste.

Letters Policy

Letters to the editor should be typed and double-spaced and should be submitted no later than 1:30 p.m. Monday. The editors reserve the right to print only non-libelous and responsible content and to edit all letters and commentaries submitted to the Juniatian. The staff also reserves the right to publish all full signatures unless the writer can supply very valid reasons for omitting his name.

'Round Campus

by Vic Rini

In the Juniatian's attempt to be fair in all matters concerning this college community, our staff recently conducted a survey of those students who are in favor of Comps. It was discovered that students plan to hold a rally to show their support for these traditional exams. When questioned on the expected crowd, most students replied that they would undoubtedly be there.

With Parents Day occurring this past weekend many shaggy heads and budding mustaches have gone to seed. Lovers of the clean cut look that was popular way back in the fifties, take a good look now! It probably won't be until we all return from Turkey Day vacation that we will see this many faces and upper lips.

Hats off to the Nature of Man Staff! In their never ending search for the Good, the True and the Beautiful, they have successfully proven that no matter what he thinks, the bumble bee cannot fly! !

A red flag is the symbol of excellence in many of the world's higher social circles, (the Daughters of the American Revolution, the John Birch Society, Hell's Angels, etc.) As a regular feature of this column a Red Flag will be awarded to some member of Juniata College who has distinguished himself in the past week. It is only proper that our first Red Flag should go to the highest member of our academic institution, President John N. Stauffer. This honor is bestowed upon President Stauffer for his following action: when approached by Bob Krouse, a member from the Student Government Committee on Comprehensive Exams, and asked if this committee could present it's findings before the Faculty at it's meeting Nov. 3, he responded that he would be happy to "assign Bob and his committee five minutes." If it was up to our President he would have listened to the committee's findings all day. The five minutes "gift" was all he could squeeze out of his condescending cohorts on the Faculty Committee. Thanks for your open mindedness and bravery in the face of the enemy. Good Work Pres.!

Indians Smash Fords on Ground, Air Delewski Returns Opening Kickoff

by Gene Galbraith

The Juniata Indians mutilated Haverford College 48-0, before a large Parents Day crowd. Haverford was definitely outclassed, as the Indians gathered 414 yards in total offense, compared to Haverford's meager 64 yards.

In the rushing department Juniata gained 296 yards, while Haverford could only manage a dismal five yards. The Indians also excelled in the air by passing for 118 yards, against the Fords' 59 yards.

Senior Joel Delewski started the afternoon's scoring parade when he took the opening kickoff for a 66 yard TD. "Pip" McQuade added the extra point to put the Indians in front 7-0.

Juniata quickly moved the ball into Haverford territory on their first series of downs before halfback Dave Sparks dodged in for the score from the ten yard line. Following the extra point conversion, the Indians had a 14-0 lead.

Sparks continued to lead the Indian rampage by sprinting 66 yards for his second TD. McQuade converted his third PAT to give Juniata a comfortable 21-0 bulge.

Halfback Harry Gicking completed the first period scoring with a ten yard run into pay dirt. After the conversion, the Indians were coasting along with a 28-0 lead.

The Indians added another score in the second quarter on a 61 yard pass from Terry Turnbaugh to end Dan Rackovan. McQuade's extra point increased Juniata's lead to 35-0.

Juniata continued their onslaught in the second half. Sophomore fullback Fran Fleischauer scored the Indians' sixth TD on a four yard run in the third quarter. After McQuade's conversion, Juniata commanded Haverford 42-0.

While the Indians' defensive unit continued to massacre the Fords' offense, our offense managed another score in the fourth quarter. This TD came on a six yard run by sophomore halfback Chuck Kensinger. The Indians failed to convert the extra point, but they still had a very respectable 48-0 lead, which they held until the final whistle had blown.

Dave Sparks, the MAC northern division rushing leader, had another outstanding day. Besides scoring two TD's, Sparks rushed for 158 yards on 11 carries. It is also noteworthy that Dave is just 54 yards short of Bill Berrier's all time JC rushing record for a season (736 yards). Sophomore halfback Chuck Kensinger also had a fine day with 59 yards on six carries.

After Saturday's impressive victory, the Indians now have a 3-2 record (3-1 in MAC). Juniata will travel to Washington, Pa. Saturday for a non-conference clash with Washington and Jefferson College.

New Catalogue

Students and faculty are once more reminded that the 1969-70 issue of the College Catalogue can be picked up in the Admissions Office during regular office hours.

Task Force Examines Proposal of Communal Living at Juniata

Cont'd from page 1

which will then return to the individual all money except for four courses (12 credit hours) and lunch at the cafeteria through the weekdays. This is being done to avoid difficulties with the sponsors of various scholarships involved.

"The students, combining the refunds from the college with a proportional amount from the faculty, will provide the monetary source for the community. All members will plan its use. The budget for the community will be planned on a monthly basis, the students and faculty giving like amounts at the beginning of each month. If a member wishes to withdraw, he may do so at the end of the month."

At the present time, these proposals have been made to the Task Force which has established a committee composed of both students and faculty members to look into the practical details of implementation (housing, legal problems, people involved). The committee will then report back to the Task Force for further action on the proposal.

Faculty to Give Decision Mon.

Cont'd from page 1

Dr. Ronald Cherry in reference to both the original proposals and the subsequent committee action. Along with noting similarities, Dr. Cherry instructively points out some differences between the present pass-fail option and the proposals as modified by the committee; but his "objection to the committee action lies in the confusion as to what makes the action significant; how these proposals differ from the existing pass-fail option."

In concluding his report, Dr. Cherry finds that "about the only clarity in the proposal is that it does NOT in any new or significant way make possible a 'no grade' course, which was, of course, the original request of the students. Let me be clear, however, that I do not wish the modified proposal to be defeated en tote. In the end I would prefer this mess to no proposal at all — but only as a last resort. Systematic amendment of the proposal ought to be made the most desirable course of action."

Weidler Breaks Course Records, Pack Wins In Best Team Effort

by Aubrey Shenk

Last week proved to be a giant stepping stone on the way to a winning season for the JC harriers as they picked up two important victories over Elizabethtown and Delaware Valley.

Wednesday at E-town the harriers, led by record-setting Dennis Weidler, conquered a much improved E-town 24-31. Dennis Weidler set a new course record in tooling the rugged five mile course in 28:12. Aub Shenk finished third in 29:43. Tom Leaver (30:15), Kerry Stanley (30:54) and Scot Williams (31:54) filled the fifth, seventh, and eighth slots respectively.

In the Parents Day clash with Delaware Valley, the "pack" displayed its best all out effort of the season in edging the Aggies 26-29. Weidler extended his winning streak to nine while setting a course record in the process. His time of 24:55 easily erased the former record of 25:15 set by Rick Beard last year.

Weidler's outstanding performance was only an indication of what was to follow. Coming into the final half-mile of the race three JC men and four Delaware Valley men waged an all out battle. Aub Shenk (27:02) who ran the best competitive race of his career, came around the baseball fence even with Delaware Valley's first man.

As they approached the track, Aub gained the advantage and held on to take second by ten yards. Kerry Stanley (28:17) also running his best competitive race, passed two DV men just before reaching the track. In an all out effort Kerry was able to hold off the charging Del. Valley men and take fifth by five yards.

The final drama was provided by Tom Leaver (28:32). In the closest race of the afternoon, Tom beat his man to the tape by two steps. Scot Williams equaled his previous best time 29:19 in coming home tenth. Rick Paulhamus, John Civitts, Kirk Wilson, Bill Elwell, and Ken Kuehn all were well under the previous best time.

Fired up by their two great team victories the "pack" (5-4) faces Lock Haven and Shippensburg in a triangular clash Saturday at 2 p.m. on the home course.

KALOS
CLIFTON

NOW THRU SATURDAY! !
DADDY'S GONE A HUNTING
Technicolor Suspense Thriller with Carol White
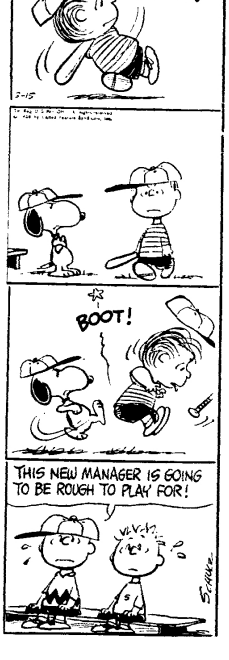
Paul Burke Mala Powers
Feature at 7:16 and 9:27

SUNDAY MONDAY TUESDAY
Grand Prize Winner
Cannes Film Festival
A MAN AND A WOMAN
in Color starring
Anouk Aimee
Feature at 7:15 and 9:15
LADIES PAY 75¢ WED.



Nasty Reviewer Forgives All Defects Charmed by "Beautiful Male Voices"

by Pat Balko

A lesser literary light would find the sentence: "The 'H.M.S. Pinafore' captained by Dr. and Mrs. Bruch Hirsch docked at Oller Hall Oct. 24 and 25" tempting as all get out, I refuse. My mother didn't raise me to be cutesy. In fact, she raised me to be nasty. So it breaks my nonexistent little heart to be nice to the choir, but musically they were in top form.

There are inherent disadvantages in any performance of the "Pinafore." The original satire of rigid Victorian class strata is outmoded. (Let's hear it for the working class!) The actors overcame this stale humor by being hammy, but we can forgive them because they sang as if they were being paid for it. Something might also be said for the lamentable attempts to do both upper and lower class English dialects. (We even detected a Southern drawl in there someplace.) Fortunately they gave up that heresy during the songs.

As for the non-student help, Mrs. Crosby and Dr. Norris were hysterical. The strut of Sir Joseph Porter K.C.B. was know to keep bolt upright at least one nodding father in the capacity Parents Day audience. Half the fun was knowing the real life occupations of Sir Joseph and the bumboat girl.

As Josephine. Barb Brogan was regal and aristocratic: however, towards the end of the second act, the strain of the high notes took their toll (less refined listeners would say her voice verged on cracking). Anne Hench's stronger soprano was better qualified for the role, her acting was not. Too bad both couldn't have fit in one dress simultaneously.

Then there's Bill Leverenz, the Dudley DoRight of the shipboard set. We hear he was a bit much from the front, but from the balcony he was terrific. The Captains William Dick and Glen Billingsley were an even match, you could take your choice as to which was better: Dick's sneer or Billingsley's superciliousness.

Annette Warrenfeltz's Cousin Hebe was pushy, crabby, and desperate—a girl after my own heart. We were relieved to see John Over standing up straight the other day. He is also to be complimented for making himself heard above the chorus.

And the Chorus! ! All those beautiful male voices belonging to all those beautiful male boys, I was thrilled. Everytime they opened their mouths in unison, my blood pressure increased to almost normal. The girls were fine too, but I'd rather talk about the boys.

The sailor's trio of Leverenz, Hockman and Huber should be mention as having real class. In fact, all the musical numbers should be mentioned as being something special; and if I had a thesarus and any more inspiration, they would be. Everyone connected with the "Pinafore" should be heartily congratulated.

The Juniatian

Associated Collegiate Press — Intercollegiate Press

Student Weekly at Juniata College
Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED NOV. 6, 1924
Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891

BARBARA CLAAR, editor-in-chief
PAUL KEELY, associate editor
ADELE ABOUTOK, copy editor
BILL DAVID, photography editor
J. PATRICK TYSON, news editor
JOEL SCHANTZ, business manager
RICHARD ASLARD, advertising manager
SUE BERMEL, layout editor

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: David Beahm, Gene Galbraith, Aubrey Shenk, Janet Mason, Pat Balko, Vic Rini

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000
Vol. XLVI, No. 6

Subscription $4.00 per year
October 31, 1969

THE JUNIATIAN

Vol. XLVI, No. 7 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | November 14, 1969

JWSF to Support Project Concern's Relief Program

JWSF Week — from Monday, Nov. 17, until Friday, Nov. 21 — is fast approaching, at which time JC students will be able to lighten their pockets of seemingly worthless accumulating pennies, fill their hungry stomachs with home-cooked foods, and be helping mankind at the same time. What is J.W.S.F.? The initials stand for Juniata World Service Fund, which for years has been Juniata's one and only charity fund.

J.W.S.F. has over the years had a variety of projects supporting both organizations and individuals. The first four publicized projects undertaken by J.W.S.F., in 1954, included contributions to the Foreign Students Aid Program, which has enabled various foreign students to attend Juniata, and to the World University Service, a general fund which aids college students around the world. J.W.S.F. at this time also supported the Japanese International Christian University and two Brethren missionaries.

In 1966, students felt a need to cut down on the number of areas supported, and so to concentrate on an expanding Foreign Student Fund and develop a Disadvantaged Student Fund. It was in 1967 that Jee Soo Kim, whose home is in Seoul, Korea, and Jim Thompson, who was born in Johnstown and now lives in Mississippi, came to Juniata as a result of J.W.S.F.'s programs. Jee Soo, presently a Junior, is a math major, and hopes to go on to Graduate School before returning to Korea. He is receiving aid from J.W.S.F. for all four years here at Juniata. Jim received aid from J.W.S.F. for his freshman year and two terms of summer school previous to this. He is a sociology major, because, he has said, "I am interested in people."

This year, a new dimension has been added to J.W.S.F. Much interest was aroused on campus when Dr. James Turpin, founder of Project Concern, spoke at an evening convocation about one month ago. There was so much interest, in fact, that it has been decided that J.W.S.F.'s major effort this year will be to support Project Concern, "an independent, non-profit medical relief program with a deep concern for humanity." Its philosophy is that those capable of helping others should actively assist those who desperately lack even the basic essentials of health, education, food, shelter, and job opportunities. Project Concern centers its work in Hong Kong, South Vietnam, Mexico, and Tennessee.

During J.W.S.F. Week next week, in support of Project Concern, penny banks will be placed on the dining hall tables as a reminder to all of the millions who are hungry and starving throughout the world. Each person is urged to contribute at least one penny per meal. Just "one penny can provide a nutritious meal for a starving child, a day's treatment for intestinal parasites, a mother's supply of 24 hours freedom from becoming pregnant again." If each person does his share, 18,000 pennies, or $180 can be sent to Project Concern, to be transformed from practically worthless copper into the "gold" of health, education, nutrition, and hope.

In addition to the "Pennies for Concern" project, there will be a bakesale and auction Monday night, Nov. 17, at 6 p.m. in the Ballroom. At this time, the home-made and (needless to say) delicious pies, cakes, cookies, etc. will be auctioned off to the highest bidder. Students may also vie for a dinner for perhaps as many as eight people at a professor's house, or for the use of a faculty member's car for an evening. All proceeds, again, will go to Project Concern.

INTRODUCTION TO LITERATURE
Exemption Test
Thursday November 20
K216 7 p.m.

The federal service entrance examination will be given on campus on Saturday, Nov. 15, 1969 from 8 to 12 noon, in room K222-Academic Building.

This test is for seniors and opens the door to approximately 60 different fields in many federal agencies at locations all over the country. Contact the Placement Office for further details.

Discussion Day . . .

Task Force Sets Nov. 19 as D-Day

by David Beahm

Wednesday, Nov. 19, Juniata College will hold its first Campus-wide Discussion Day. In every available space on campus there will be small discussion groups of about 30 people discussing many aspects of college life. The groups will be organized on departmental lines with student leaders chosen by each department heading the discussions. In addition, there will be two student recorders taking notes on every topic to help ensure an unbiased record of everything that is said.

Basically the morning discussions will center around the specific problems of education, especially as they pertain to Juniata. They will include general education, team teaching, interdisciplinary programs, evaluation (of both student work and instructional procedures), off-campus oportunities, senior thesis, independent study, the calendar, and classroom innovations.

The afternoon discussions will depart from the specific problems of education and deal with broader questions such as the following:

(1) What is the point of having an education?
(2) What should an education be?
(3) What is the best thing that can happen to me at Juniata College?

It is hoped that the day of discussion will involve the entire college community in the problems of analysis and program revision. So far, only the Task Force has been working on these revisions. For the changes to occur, however, introspection at the "grass roots level" must take place.

After the sessions an evaluation will be made by the student chairmen, faculty, and recorders to determine the effectiveness of the program.

Troy to Exhibit Ceramic Works In Harrisburg

Punch pots with a personality, wistful pitchers, "culture vultures," and "ceramic boxes with mellifluous creaking doors" are all part of the repertoire of Juniata College's poet-turned-potter, Jack Troy, whose exhibit of original ceramic works opens this Saturday at the William Penn Museum in Harrisburg.

Troy, a 31 year-old assistant professor of English, has gained a wide reputation for his creative work in ceramics, which began several years ago as an avocation. He has also achieved recognition for his academic work in 19th Century literature and American poetry.

The Saturday, Nov. 15, afternoon opening of his Harrisburg exhibit will begin with a reception for the artist from 7 to 9 p.m. at the William Penn Museum. More than 200 pieces of varying sizes and subjects in several media will be on display, all recent works, including numerous pieces in porcelain. In addition, Troy will have on display several of the hand-blown glass pieces that he made last summer while studying under a scholarship in Maine.

Most of the items in the exhibit will be for sale at prices ranging from 88 cents to $100.

Jack Troy's most popular creations in ceramic have been wistful creatures, such as his "Culture Vulture," or pots with a personality, such as "Ceramic Box with Mellifluous Creaking Door," which resembles a small oven fitted with mirrors and squeaking hinges.

"You just can't keep making cookie jars all your life," says Troy. "You've got to have a sense of humor." And a sense of humor is probably the artist's chief attribute as a salesman of his own works. "Some things are fun to make," he explains, while holding a 30-inch, double-decker ceramic ice cream cone. "'Ice Cream Cone' has been to about 2300 degrees, and never melted!"

A native of Towanda, Pa., and a graduate of West Chester (Pa.) State College, Troy received an M.A. degree in English and Art from Kent State University in 1967 before joining the Juniata College English faculty.

His ceramic works have appeared this year in juried exhibits at Pittsburgh's Three Rivers Arts Festival and the Associated Artists of Pittsburgh Sculpture Show, and at several Central Pennsylvania shows. This summer he was awarded a purchase prize at the Harrisburg Arts Festival. He has been invited to exhibit at the Delaware Art Institute in Wilmington next month.

Previously he has exhibited in Cleveland, Akron, and Chagrin Falls, Ohio. Last summer Troy received a scholarship in glassblowing at Haystack Mountain School of Crafts in Deer Isle, Maine.

On the literary scene, Jack Troy has had several articles published in the Thoreau Society Bulletin, and in "Ceramics Monthly" and "Organic Gardening" magazines. He is a contributing writer and exhibition critic for "Craft Horizons" magazine. In 1967 he won a poetry award from the Kent Quarterly magazine.

Troy's review of the new book, "Tough-Guy Writers of the 30's," by David Madden, will appear in the forthcoming winter issue of the "John Steinbeck Quarterly."

Colloquy to Present Total Involvement

Residential Colloquy, "Encounter '70" presents a total educational experience through discussion, action and community. Speakers with deep convictions are invited to campus to try to persuade students of the importance of their cause, to argue with the other speakers not of their opinion, to talk with, eat with and live with the students. An ideal number of guests would be enough so that one could room on every hall of every dorm—so that the combination of close living and dining arrangements, panel discussions and workshops would not give even the most "apathetic" student an excuse for non-participation.

Colloquys are centered around contemporary problems with panel members selected so as to give a range of viewpoints. Students are encouraged to ask questions or argue during panel sessions, and later to contact panel members personally.

"Encounter '70" is set for the nineteenth through the twenty-second of February. Colloquy is an experiment. If learning occurs, it will have been motivated by the students' own interests and by challenging men rather than by grades, graduate school, or an impending career.

Any aid and encouragement you could give the Colloquy Committee would be appreciated. A list of topics and topic chairmen follows. If you are interested in working, please contact:

Money — Carol Barwise and Kathy Snyder. Publicity — Ann Reganis and Dan Rosenberger. Housing — Greg Huston. Transportation — Steve Allman and Bob Winter. Secretarial Pool — Kathy Snyder. Photographs — Bob Burruss. Organization and Miscellaneous — Kathy Snyder. Arts and Crafts Show — Barb Grubb. Music Workshops — John Sollenberger. Sensitivity Training Workshops — Kathy Snyder (temporary). Racism — Donna Roppelt. Witchcraft and Mysticism — Priscilla Hill. Pollution and Ecology — Jerry Shue. Military and Industrial Complex — Myrna Laird, and Steve Sarfaty. Poverty — Marta Daniels and Sara Clemson. Law and Order vs. Law and Justice (Prison Reform) — Steve Allman. Drugs — Ken Florin and Kirk Barness. Sex — June Logan. Mental Health — Carol Barwise. Education — Kathy Snyder (temporary)

Expansion Means Better News Coverage for WJC

by David Beahm

Within the near future WJC will be expanding coverage to include approximately 4000 additional families throughout Huntingdon County. The signal will be sent out over the Huntingdon Television Cable Company's lines in one of two ways: (1) by using FM so that anyone with an FM set hooked to the cable will be able to get the station, or (2) by using a television weather channel, providing the sound background for a picture of meters and indicators.

The newly expanded coverage, however, will mean very little to the college student unless he is already hooked up to the cable. Reception for everyone else will be unchanged. Thus, community people miles away will be able to hear WJC much more clearly than the dormitories across campus.

What the expansion does mean to the campus is improved newscasts. It is hoped by radio officials that the added responsibility of an enlarged audience and probably increased advertising time will prompt newscasters to improve present methods.

Increased news coverage also means an expansion not only in quantity of news but also in quality. Reporters will be assigned to cover all the important meetings on and off campus—task force meetings, faculty meetings, student government meetings, elections and many more. There will also be more special reports featuring different aspects of campus, regional or national life. These reports will be made possible by an improved copy filing system in which major A.P. news stories will be cross filed by topics to make collective news stories from the more distant past possible in addition to the current event coverage.

Thus, students at Juniata may look forward to a revamped news system covering an increased number of topics with a more varied approach. In addition, at least those who are hooked up to the T.V. cable will now be able to hear WJC to a reasonable extent.

October 31, the student PSEA entertained first graders from Alfarata and William Smith schools at a Halloween Party. The party is an annual project of the club and was organized this year by Peggy Slaughter. The party gives the future teachers an opportunity to work with children and to try their skills.

The children were entertained with various games, readings, songs and a visit from the Great Pumpkin, portrayed by Richard Smith. Refreshments and costume judging were included for the children.

Both groups of students enjoyed the party; the children enjoyed the games and a free day from school, and the PSEA members enjoyed the practical experience.

Editorial . . .

You'all Come...

Long far gone is the time when "education" was the alphabet on a hornbook or 1+1=2. Also past is the time when Mom and the PTA saved the day and rescued the suffering student.

For the first time in a long, long while the Juniata student has a chance to say exactly what he thinks about education, evaluation, this institution and his particular department. He can do this in surroundings where his opinions are desired, free from the emotionalism which characterizes some groups on campus.

What this all boils down to is that the Task Force is just not another committee and Nov. 19 is just not another exercise in group dynamics. And what this inspiring message consists of is a thinly disguised plea that everyone read the position papers on the following pages and come to the discussion groups Nov. 19 ready to offer valid comment.

Letters Policy

Letters to the editor should be typed and double-spaced and should be submitted no later than 1:30 p.m. Monday. The editors reserve the right to print only non-libelous and responsible content and to edit all letters and commentaries submitted to the Juniatian. The staff also reserves the right to publish all full signatures unless the writer can supply very valid reasons for omitting his name.

Jessye Aggregate Leads Musical Tour Highlighted by Spiritual Segment

The half hour wait that preceeded the Eva Jessye Choir last Thursday seemed to drift away as soon as the portly conductor took the stage and the first songs began to fill Oller Hall. Although this is supposed to be a critique don't expect any criticism in this article. Leopold Stokowski said, "I enjoyed every moment working with the Eva Jessye Choir . . .the quick response . . .the humor and fine musicianship," and what's good enough for Leo is good enough for me.

Using a minimal number of props and only two guitars, a trumpet and a drum, Miss Jessye and her twenty dancing singers truly put the audience on a train that swept through the entire scope of American music. All thirty-five of the selections evoked a toe-tapping, handclapping spirit in both player and spectator. Mournful wailings followed happy camp songs and preceded joyous spirituals. Traditional arrangements led the way to tunes that have held Broadway audiences spellbound for years. Space only allows that the highlights of this American "Magical Mystery Tour" be reviewed here.

Probably the most memorable portion of the show was the six song medley at the end of the first act. Singing a group of spiritual numbers, the choir had an opportunity to display their talents at their best. Working from the soulful "Troubled in Mind," to the hopeful "Ain't Got Time To Die," through two Bible belt beauties, "Heaven is One Beautiful Place" and "Rockin' in Jerusalem," and finishing with "Soldiers In The Army of the Lord," the choir not only gave the audience what it had come to hear but also ran the gamut of Negro soulmanship. To us in our "nice little worlds" the feelings that inspired these songs shall never truly be understood; but for a moment last Thursday night one could almost see himself settin' in front of a shanty singin' these songs after the cotton'd all been picked.

Of the remaining songs three seemed to outshine the rest. As soon as that conductor-narrator opened his mouth to explain what the Hallelujah Train was all about it was obvious that with a voice like that he was bound to get into the singing part of the show sooner or later. When he finally did there was no doubt that this was no ordinary Penn-Central employee. Teaming up with one of the more spirited female members of the ensemble, a rendition of "Bess, You Is My Woman" was presented, which made the younger members of the audience start asking who this guy Gershwin was.

Following that with "Old Man River," the heavy man in the blue suit became kin to the low singing Mel of the Temptations. His volume was not loud, it was powerful. His bass was not just low, it was reaching, prodding, digging it's way into the hearts and memories of all that heard.

Finally we have "Let the Sunshine In" from "Hair." It seemed that many people were disappointed that the Choir did not actually sing it. Some came mainly to hear this particular song, presuming that the heavy, soulful, spiritual beat of this number would be an opportunity for the singers to pull out all stops and really offer us something special. Instead we received an interpretive dance to a drum beat that was faintly reminiscent of the song. The dance was something that could only have truly come off well on the stage. Miss Jessye used her medium to the fullest. You can't see a modern dance on an album; but you can listen to the song by the original cast or the Fifth Dimension or just about any other group. The sight of the young dancer expressing in motion his interpretation of the rhythm was an experience that the audience should have been thankful for.

Demitasse Production Reveals Latent Talents of Performence to Audience

by Anne Hench

Friday night, Oct. 31, the Juniata College community was treated to two Demitasse Opera productions, Mozart's The Impresario in mod version and The Telephone, a contemporary opera by Gian-Carlo Menotti, both in English.

Deborah Cook as Madam Callous, an aging prima donna, in The Impresario, gave the audiance quite a thrill with her clear and agile coloratura filigree.

Miss Sweetsong, Linda Burkhart, proved to the Juniata audience that opera singers can have more than one talent. Her striptease was, no doubt, a surprise to quite a few people. Miss Burkhart returned in The Telephone as a somewhat scatter-brained telephone addict.

Our special thanks must be extended to Allan Keene, tenor, for appearing on stage suffering from a severe case of laryngitis. He overcame his handicap and, dispite the fact that he was attempting to be easy on his voice, his Mr. Ding came over quite well as the pompous banker of The Impresario.

Having always especially liked baritones, I can't understand why I waited until last to talk about Daniel Elby, who did the role of the impresario. He was also Ben, the frustrated suitor in The Telephone and showed a good baritone voice in both operas.

I wanted to be particularly careful to remember the accompanist, Jeffry Smith. Opera is undoubtedly more impressive when backed up by a full orchestra and chorus, but this makes the cost prohibitive, especially for a small school like Juniata. Mr. Smith was an excellent subseitute for an orchestra under the circumstances.

It is unfortunate that more college students do not take advantage of such programs as this. It is undoubtedly disappointing to artists to perform for a half-filled auditorium, and Juniata College seems to be notorious for half-filled auditoriums. Despite this fact, the Franklin Concerts' Demitasse Opera Company presented two enjoyable operas in a very professional manner and seemed to enjoy it every bit as much as the audience did.

SG to Back Comp Revision

by Donna Knupp

The faculty reaction to the proposal that comprehensive exams be abolished has been the main concern of the Student Government. As the situation now stands, the Faculty Committee will vote on the motion of abolishment at its December meeting. The Curriculum Committee and Faculty Council were appointed by the Faculty Committee to make a recommendation on this motion. These groups are working on revisions of comps instead of abolishment. It was discussed whether the legislature should appoint a committee to present the students' viewpoint on revision, or stand behind its original objective of total abolishment. For the faculty to understand the viewpoint of students on revision was felt to be very important, and the student representatives to Faculty Council and the Curriculum Committee are to serve this purpose.

Eric Woodworth reported that the Faculty Council sees the main issues students dislike most about comps as the inconsistancies in evaluation between departments and the requirement that they are contingent on graduation. Its revision is to make comps not contingent on graduation. However, the Curriculum Committee's proposal would keep them as a graduation requirement. In addition, various faculty members have come up with revisions. Lee Denlinger mentioned that ideas of students on revision include having a senior thesis, a seminar course in one's major or a set-up where the student writes his own exam.

It was announced that the faculty has voted away deficiency notes as they had existed. Sending of them is at each member's discretion, but they will not be sent to parents or to the Dean. Student bills and grades will also go to the student, not parents.

Student Government has voted to support action on air and water pollution. Sally Palmer will investigate the possibility of bringing speakers to Juniata in addition to those who will speak at the Colloquy.

Lee Denlinger reported that although the Registration and Standing Committee had passed the idea of not letting the professor know who was taking courses pass-fail, the faculty had vetoed it. The reason was that students taking pass-fail courses slow classes down. The committee has considered a proposal to allow students to take leaves of absence for one year without withdrawing from school. Such absences could be for work, travel, or other related experiences. Lee also reported that the registrar is working on a change in procedure for course registration.

In accordance with a proposal made by Jack Rittenaur, SG will be appointing a student to serve on a sit-in basis on the college Center Board. According to Jack, the Center Board is working toward the purchase of a school bus for away athletic games or other activities. He also told plans for the Colloquy for which support is to be solicited from town merchants.

Because of the resignation of Donna Roppelt from the Task Force, a new appointment will be made. It was agreed that this person should be an upperclassman since the other student member is a freshman.

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College

Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED NOV. 6, 1924

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891

BARBARA CLAAR, editor-in-chief | J. PATRICK TYSON, news editor
PAUL KEELY, associate editor | JOEL SCHANTZ, business manager
ADELE ABOUTOK, copy editor | RICHARD ABLARD, advertising manager
BILL DAVID, photography editor | SUE BERMEL, layout editor

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Peggy Haines, David Beahm, Gene Galbraith, Aubrey Shenk, Donna Knupp, Mary E. White, Lynn Wuestoff, Janet Mason, Mark Hoffman, Deborah Fay, Vic Rini, Anne Hench, Shari Weir, Steve Crowley, Alice Herncane

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000

Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVI, No. 7

November 14, 1969

Hesse Weekend . . .

Group Equals Involvment

by Lynn F. Wuesthoff

When people begin to question, they begin to learn. With this in mind, seven students and three faculty members set out for Camp Blue Diamond last weekend with two Hesse novels rolled up in their sleeping bags. The ideas would be those presented in Siddhartha and Steppenwolf, but the focus would be upon the group itself.

Upon arriving Saturday noon we cast our immediate attention upon the most pressing problem at the moment and ate lunch. The afternoon was spent in discussion of several issues presented by Hesse, and after dinner we pursued these ideas further. Sunday brought more talk, and by the time we were ready to leave, plans for another session were already begun.

The time has come when thoughts must be shared, and this type of confrontation gives a group the momentum to get started. Living in common with others welds people together, if only for a weekend, and with this bond they have the courage to question what they as individuals might lack.

The Hesse Confrontation is the beginning of what has the potential of being a really good thing for Juniata College. Involvement is something that we see so little of; commit yourself to a group and find out what you think! Get together with interested people and start to learn.

French Company To Present Antigone at PSU

The celebrated French company, Le Treteau de Paris, hailed by the New York Times as a "brilliant scintillating theatrical troupe" will appear at The Pennsylvania State University Tuesday, Nov. 18, with a stunning new production of Jean Anouilh's poetic masterpiece "ANTIGONE."

The play, scheduled for 8 p.m. in Schwab Auditorium, features Jean Davy of the Comedie-Francaise in the role of Creon which he originally created and Reine Barteve in the title role.

Sponsored by the university's department of French, the French government, and the French cultural services, Le Treteau de Paris' performance of "ANTIGONE" will be the troupe's fifth appearance at the university.

Groups and individuals wishing to attend should request tickets immediately by writing to Mrs. Josette Caujolle, Department of French, S-409 Burrowes Building, Pennsylvania State University, University Park, Pa. 16802. All seats are $2. Make checks payable to "Department of French." Tickets will be on sale also at the Hetzel Union Building, HUB desk, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. starting Nov. 10 and at the box office on the date of the performance only.

KALOS
CLIFTON

NOW thru TUESDAY
Feature at 7:16 - 9:24
Paul Newman
Robert Redford
Katharine Ross
BUTCH CASSIDY AND THE SUNDANCE KID
Technicolor

STARTS WEDNESDAY Nov. 19
EASY RIDER
Technicolor
Peter Fonda Dennis Hopper
-REMEMBER!-! EVERY WED.-
LADIES PAY ONLY 75¢

Independent Study Lacks Enrollment New Form Sought

Juniata College presently offers several forms of study that are independent from the classroom. The major forms of the independent study program (Credit by examination, Tutorials, and Departmental Honors Program) were instituted to allow the student to do work for credit in a manner that he feels will be most beneficial to his academic program and to provide maximum curriculum flexibility. In brief, these were the purposes stated by the Committee on Independent Study when the program was instituted. In evaluating how nearly these purposes have been realized, statistics of participation in these programs may provide a yardstick. What good is a program if it isn't used? In the year 1968-69 a total of eight people took advantage of the Honors Program, twenty-two took advantage of the Tutorials, and one hundred and sixty-four took advantage of Credit by Examination. In light of a student body that numbers above twelve-hundred, this writer would rate the participation as poor.

Why has participation been so low? It may be that one reason for the lack of use of these programs is uncertainty in the student's mind of what is really involved in an independent study project. This probably comes from the lack of exposure to this type of work in the high school. To counteract this, there might be instituted an independent study project to be used with the Great Epochs of World Culture course. This would not need to be a complete course in itself, but merely some form of independent study to introduce the student to this type of work.

More Discussion Day Position Papers...

Variables Control Innovations

The only thing that is readily apparent to this committee is that no single classroom innovation will have universal applicability. The usefulness of any particular innovation will depend on a number of factors such as the subject matter, size of class, facilities, the capabilities of the students and of the person directing the class. A number of the suggestions which follow are certainly not unique. They would be innovative at Juniata only in the sense that they are not presently being used in the majority of classrooms.

Several suggestions, in no particular order, are as follows:

(1) The physical arrangement of the classroom should seek to minimize formality and maximize opportunities for student participation. Circular chair arrangements in many classrooms are one small step in the right direction. The presence of coffee in classrooms minght also serve to reduce unnecessary formality. It is difficult to have a classroom concept of community in a formal classroom situation.

(2) All courses should be preceded by a discussion (by students and professor) concerning the material of the course
(a) the course goals, the capabilities of the students and
(b) professor and the possible means of obtaining the goals.

(3) Programmed learning may be extremely beneficial, especially for large classes. A simple system of slides and tapes may be used. Two advantages of this technique could be:
1) it would allow the student to proceed at his own pace and thus help hold his interest;
2) routine material could be covered exclusively by the programmed instruction, freeing the classroom for more interesting discussions.

(4) More extensive use of films and video tapes. A library of these items should be established and they should be available for out-of-class use (idea of continuous classroom). The idea of video-taping students at work should be considered.

(5) Have students consider the material presented in one medium in a different medium. For example, ask students to describe a poem or a theory in terms of color, or music, or design.

(6) A variety of methods of evaluation should exist in any one course. The choice of the evaluative measure should be left to the student. For example, a student might choose to replace tests with a term paper or with class presentation or with original research, etc. This suggestion is part of a more detailed discussion of classroom innovation by Carl R. Rogers, Freedom to Learn, 1969, Ch. Z. Xerox copies of this article will be placed on reserve in the li-

(7) The subject matter to be covered in lectures could be announced several days in advance of class. Permission to attend the lecture might then be made contingent upon passing a short test covering related material.

(8) Upperclassmen could be given credit for assistance with lower level courses. This could take the form of supervising freshmen searching for position papers and planning their own presentation of a refutation of a previously presented paper or position. It could take the form of assisting a group in preparation of material and/or arguments for use in discussion or panel presentation. Or it could take the form of guiding small groups of students to critically evaluate their own writing or other works, or the work of another small group. In these ways students would become involved in the same cooperative procedures that every faculty member goes through as he deals with academic material.

Implementation Faces Values of Off-Campus Learning Experience

Based on personal experiences this committee feels that the off-Juniata-campus learning experiences can be very valuable in: (1) exposing sudents to problems which are presented and discussed in the classroom; (2) giving the student the experience of real life problem solving; (3) providing the student with the opportunity to integrate classroom theory and real problem situations; and (4) enriching the quality of the student's total educational endeavors. But for the off-campus program to attain its maximum effectiveness, it must be carefully planned, supervised and evaluated by students, faculty and cooperating field personnel. In discussing the various possibilities and ramifications of the off-campus learning experiences, the following questions seem relevant:

I. Educational Objectives and Off-Campus Experience
   1. What kinds of educational objectives can be met by off-campus experiences?
   2. What are the learning advantages and disadvantages of such programs in terms of:
      a. related experience, e.g., not being in a college campus environment?
      b. quality of learning experiences?
      c. quantity of learning experiences?
   3. How should the off-campus experience be structured, i.e., individual or group basis?
   4. What are some possible off-campus learning situations that can be established?
      a. by departments through (1) tutorials or (2) courses?
      b. by two or more departments in (1) one division or (2) across division lines?
      c. at the level of the whole division or some other combination?
      d. with volunteer programs for non-credit?
   5. What kinds of off-campus experiences are available or could be made available?
      a. field trips;
      b. work experiences on a semester or year basis with students living on-campus;
      c. summer programs;
      d. semester or year programs with students living off-campus;
      e. multi-college cooperative programs.
   6. What kind of simultaneous on-campus education is required to complement the off-campus experience?
   7. What is the desirability of granting no credit for off-campus experiences?
   8. If credit is granted for the off-campus experience, how and by whom should the grade be determined? Pass/fail?
   9. What are the educational advantages and disadvantages of such programs for the students?

II. Implementation and Supervision
   1. What kinds of skills (faculty and student) are needed to

Cont'd on page 5

Paper Suggests Replacing Grade With Class Rank

Education is a social institution which society supports to facilitate many of its own processes; several of these are society's preservation and evolution. Preservation, for example, includes the fulfilling of the needs and desires of its component individuals sufficiently to keep them satisfied with the total social fabric to that degree that they do not want to destroy it.

Education primarily functions to prepare an individual to perform well his part in the maintenance and development of some social institution, while being constantly critical of its purpose and successfulness as well as that of society in general.

As such education should undergo constant evaluation as to how well it is performing its social function. Our part of this evaluation is the examination of how well it has educated its students and of how capable they have become. This evaluation should be as thorough and correct as possible and should be published as clearly as possible.

The grades A to F should be replaced internally by rankings in class, as formerly done at Juniata and as is reportedly done at the Service Academies. Such rankings remove the anomaly of two students, one of whom receives a B, the other a C, even though their performances in class have been very nearly the same, and the anomaly of easy-marking and hard-marking teachers giving different grades for the same quality of work. For graduate schools and other situations in which letter grades seem necessary, the class ranks could be converted to A to E grades by a formal scale used at Oberlin for many years. I imagine that a search of the literature would find ways of combining class ranks to give an overall rank of the student for all his classes.

Since an examination is an evaluation simultaneously of the student, the teacher and the college, the final overall examination embodied in the comps should be constructed, administered and evaluated by outside boards in no way connected with Juniata College.

There will be a meeting for all seniors Thursday, Nov. 20, 1969 at 7:00 p.m. in Alumni Hall. Mr. David Lee, director of placement, will explain the procedures of the placement office—as they concern you. All seniors should attend this meeting, if possible.

Division III Proposes New Interdisciplinary Plan

Proposal: that Division III be divided into three main sections: Mathematical Sciences, Environmental Sciences, and Liberal Arts and Science (a different name may be needed for this). A Division III graduate would obtain his degree in one of the above fields with concentrations in biology, chemistry, geology, physics, mathematics, or any combination of two; for example, in Mathematical Science, geophysics, or Environmental Science, chemistry.

The program would be so constructed as to require no new courses immediately, although in time it would likely result in considerable numbers of changes.

The section of Mathematical Science would be primarily for students with mathematical aptitude who presume as a matter of course that they will go to a graduate or professional school. A primary feature of this degree would be the high level of mathematics required, i.e., at least through Applied Math I and II. The student's area of concentration would depend on which descriptive courses he took in the various departments.

The section of Environmental Science would be for those students who may or may not be mathematically inclined and/or who are not necessarily planning for graduate school. This option would permit the student to enter a graduate program should h later wish to do so and, at the sam time, permit maximum flexibility There would be a mathematics re quirement, but the main focus of th program would be on descriptiv science.

The final section of Liberal Art and Sciences would be primarily fc those students who have come to Liberal Arts College to be liberall educated in the traditional sense, an who want to do this with some coi centration in Division III; the pr gram would focus on those course in the college that would allow th student to relate science to the humai ities.

The possibility of including par of the programs of Division II in th section of Environmental Scienc should be considered and the system tic inclusion of Divisions I and in the section of Liberal Arts ar Sciences would be a necessity.

The departmental faculty structu would be changed somewhat. The d partments would retain their prese identity. However, in addition, ea faculty member would belong to o of the sections. Many of the depar mental problems of the curriculu and course structure would becom at least in part, a section proble There would be section chairmen addition to the present departme chairmen, and section meetings in a dition to the present departme meetings.

Rationale:

1. It is apparent that the traditior departments set up artifical bound ies that tend to be fairly narrow scope. This narrowness results in pi grams and students that are not cc cerned with the broader implicatic of the immediate discipline. Thus t interface (e.g.: geophysics) have ter ed to develop less rapidly than th might have in a more flexible syste A system such as that propos should encourage work in broac areas.

2. Since it seems that most stude make early and fairly accurate cisions about their interest in matl matics, the natural boundaries of proposed system, being based pri arily upon the mathematics requi ment, would permit early decisic as to a descriptive, a mathematical a liberal arts approach to scier while allowing the areas of conc tration to develop more slowly a with greatly enhanced flexibility.

3. The remarks in 2. above, correct, should effect a more e distribution of students across various departments of the divisi A student could restrict himself descriptive science and still conc trate in chemistry, for example.

4. Finally, further values made p sible by this proposal would incl cross-fertilization between dep ments, better utilization of cour and the possibility of team teachi

Evaluation Today Assumes Given Goal and System

Is evaluation necessary for a social institution? Is evaluation a necessary social function? The answer has traditionally been yes. Personal evaluation of one's self has always been praised but has usually been denied as sufficient because it lacks "objectivity" and ignores the realities of the broad social organization. If we assume that institutionalized education is fundamentally a social process requiring social judgments as to its goals and outcomes, then we must ask what is to be evaluated and what criteria are to be used in the evaluation.

There are three basic possibilities concerning what ought to be evaluated: 1) the student, 2) the educational system, and 3) both. If we evaluate only the student, as is generally done, we accept the educational system as given and necessarily assume that it is correct in its operation. On the other hand, we cannot simply evaluate the system, for it must be evaluated in terms of its effects on the students, and unless we view the student as a lump of clay that is completely shaped by the system he must be held accountable for his actions. It seems apparent then that a useful form of evaluation must reflect upon both the system and the student.

If the system and the student are to be evaluated, against what criteria is this evaluation to be made? It would seem desirable to use the stated goals of the system and of the student as criteria. The system suggests such goals as seeking "to broaden intellectual understanding rather than training for a particular skill," and achievement of "optimum intellectual, personal, and social development." No known statements of student goals exist. It would seem appropriate to draw up a realistic statement of student goals and see that these and the goals of the system are accurately reflected in the operation of the institution as a whole.

In summary, heavy emphasis upon classroom, course-by-course evaluation of student achievement accept the system as the given and the diploma as the satisfactory accumulation of the requisite number of largely independent "credit hours." Such a view is conceptually narrow, at best.

brary.

Can Inter-disciplinary Studies Aid The Student? Contribute to Goals?

A necessary pre-requisite to the consideration of anything inter-disciplinary involves a look at different meanings of education.

A college "education" means many different things to different people. Examples of this variety of meaning or expectation might be:

1) I want college to prepare me — efficiently — for a well-paid, reasonably prestigeous job.

2) I want college to help me see alternatives to the way I think about life, about issues, about ideas and ideals.

3) I want college to afford me the opportunity to learn skills and processes (of enquiry, of deliberation, of decision-making, of acting) such that I will be enabled to come to grips with whatever my concerns — now or later — may be — career, values, attitudes . . . .

Would inter-disciplinary studies expedite or hamper any, or all, of these goals?

I. What are the possibilities within one division for?
   1. core courses
   2. inter-disciplinary courses involving 2 or more departments

II. What are the possibilities between two or more divisions for
   1. core courses
   2. inter-disciplinary courses

III. On what levels should such offerings be given?
   1. tutorial?
   2. seminar?
   3. regular courses?

IV. What variety of approaches should be used in developing such courses and in carrying them out?
   1. Should a college curriculum revision study period (say 2 days) be incorporated in the college calendar to allow the entire faculty and student body to rethink curriculum matters?
   2. What advantages and disadvantages would be present in using some of the following approaches to inter-disciplinary work:
      a. Problems approach — an applied approach to attack some problem such as segregated education, land use, water pollution, nature of man, ultimate meaning.
      b. Systems approach — how each discipline conceptually approaches some quest such as learning theory, te nological change, social c flict, beauty, evolution.

V. In Division II and III should th be a distinction between mat matical and non-mathemat (environmental) sciences in flict, beauty, evolution.

VI.
   1) How can inter-disciplinary st contribute to educational g of a) students, b) faculty, the institution (curriculum f ibility and change)?
   2) Would the following advanta or disadvantages result?
      a. proliferation of courses
      b. greater comprehensive kn ledge
      c. framework for continuing ucation
      d. heightened motivation interest
      e. opportunities for team te ing

VII. To what extent may and sh such inter-disciplinary work developed in conjunction field programs or off-can learning experience?

DISCUSSION DAY POSITION PAPERS

Questions, (Hopefully) Replies

The purpose of Juniata Discussion Day is to bring together the entire college community for a day of self-inquiry, evaluation of its present structure and some proposals for future changes. Every so often an individual—and in this case a community of individuals—needs to take stock of what he is doing and where he is going. Juniata, like the world of which it is a part, is entering a new phase. Where are we now? Where do we want to go? What kind of education do we want and need? How is our learning here relevant to the human beings we are and want to become? What is a liberal arts education?

The following articles represent the work of faculty-student committees who volunteered or were invited to express varying points of view. They in no way express the views of the Task Force, or of any significant number of faculty or students. Their purpose is to stimulate the thinking of all of us who will participate in Juniata College Discussion Day. What position do you take on these issues? How do you want Juniata to change? Talk about these ideas (and any others you may have) with your friends and colleagues. Bring your contributions to the discussions on Nov. 19. See you there!

Instructor Evaluation Lacks Uniform Informative Basis

It has been the practice for the past seven or eight years in the Department of Economics and Business Administration to request the graduating seniors to submit a written evaluation of our program and instructors as well as any recommended changes in writing to the chairman and/or individual faculty members on or about the day of commencement. Our department has found this information extremely valuable in helping us to improve our program and/or teaching methods.

In the past evaluation of instruction has been carried out by the Dean's office, department chairmen, and students, but not on a uniform basis which is comprehensive and thoroughly informative.

T. C. Hartley, Associate Professor of General Engineering at the University of Illinois, has reported in the publication "Engineering Outlook" a more organized and statistically valid method of conducting instructor evaluation. Professor Hartley collects data from the student at the end of each year by having him complete an instructor rating form for each class he attended. The form rates the instructor on twelve characteristics on a five-point scale. These characteristics range from "enthusiasum in teaching" to "ability to explain difficult material" and conclude with an over-all rating of the instructor's effectiveness as a teacher.

The results in each section are computer processed and presented to the instructor in the form of a mean rating for each of his attributes. This allows him to see his own strengths and weaknesses. Same-course or course group tabulations afford a profile of item rankings which allows him to compare his own rating with those of his colleagues. This gives the teacher diagnostic feedback about his strong points and specific information about which areas he might improve. The ranking with his peers gives him motivation to improve or continue good performance. For the administrator, the ratings provide a way to assess the range of student evaluations received by staff on various teacher functions.

Professor Hartley stresses that although there are no absolute standards against which the student opinions can be measured, the comparative data prove to be useful. In addition, the results of the study seem to agree with some commonly observed teaching phenomena. For example, an instructor who teaches the same class twice in one day will do a better job the second time. He also does a better job in a course he likes. Desirable and undersirable teaching, grading, and personal habits are readily observed from the rankings, and the students seem to appraise their teachers seriously and fairly.

General Education Asks Universal Questions In Examining Humanity

It seems to us that there are three sorts of closely related questions that are or ought to be asked in general education courses: (1) what, if any, are the most general or universal principles we can find to help us to organize and explain our experience? (2) what, if any, are the most general or universal principles we can find which will enable us to connect, unify, and explain the various specialty disciplines? (3) what is man's nature, his relation and responsibilities to other men, and his role in the world and the universe, if any?

Believing that these questions are of greater importance even than merely factual questions, we contend that rather than there being only two courses which deal with them, there should be, under the present structure, at least one course each year which deals with them. On the other hand, almost every course comes to the point where such questions are raised, in some way. Were they dealt with, competently, no special courses in general education would be required. At the very least, we cannot conceive of anyone thinking of himself as learned—or even as a fully conscious human being—unless he has and can deal with such questions.

Someone may wish to argue this, but consider the following. Today's society demands of its members that they live and function under pressures on them as human beings far different from those of twenty or thirty years ago. It also asks every member to be capable of adjustment during his lifetime to the many and rapid changes of his society. Given, then, the pressures and the rapid change, general education seems to be the best way for an individual to be guided and helped toward living a satisfying life for him and a "useful" life for his society.

Recognizing that general education is not the only avenue which can aid an individual learn to know himself and come to terms with himself, and knowing that general education is not a guarantee that this examination will happen, we still feel that by its nature, general education is best suited to perform this function. eneral education deals with the universal questions of what it means to be human, to be a man.It is these questions which an individual must at some time in his life and on some level, superficial or otherwise, confront and seek answers to for himself. The person who does this is the one most likely to have the strength to survive the pressures of the society in which he lives.

Likewise, in a world of constant flux, rapid technological change, and problems whose nature changes within a decade, general education insures that the underlying and often universal needs and questions of men and society are recognized and understood, rather than merely the specific and transitory attempts to answer those questions and fulfill those needs. Problems and solutions of any society change and any man who wishes to seek solutions must know the questions change and any man who wishes to seek solutions must know the questions to ask which will pinpoint the needs to be met. These are the questions to ask which will pinpoint the needs to be met. These are the questions which do not change with time and place and are the questions general education raises.

Therefore, we feel that an essential part of every man's education must be that called General Education—that education which forces men to look at themselves as human beings, as men, and helps individuals to solve the problems of their society by examining the unchanging and universal questions of mankind and its needs.

As for immediate and concrete proposals, we make this suggestion: that in the first two years of one's college life, he take specialty courses in which he does nothing but sit around and memorize; that in the last two years he take nothing but courses in General Education, dealing with such questions as those listed in the first paragraph. The last two years would be considered occasions for wide reading in literature and other areas dealing with the human condition (e.g. theory and purpose in the enviromental sciences); and direct, immediate, and personal contact with other students and faculty could not be avoided.

Authoritarian vs. Check & Balance

Under the traditional evaluation system almost sole emphasis has been on evaluation of the student. It is my assumption, that this is an extension of authoritarian parentalism in which evaluation comes down from the authority. An alternative method would be a check and balance system of evaluation between the instructor or institution and the student. As the system exists now the question is, basically, what is the use of evaluating a system unless positive change can occur?

In what ways is the student presently able to shape the system by way of evaluation of his instruction? Student Government can act now as only a pressure group and is forced there simply because structurally, it is outside the evaluating system. A structure provided for the students, to influence curriculum does exist . . . at least in the pathfinder . . . in an Education Committee whose "scope" includes curriculum and scheduling changes. Where is it? Student members do have voting power on all the faculty committees except Faculty Council. Granted this is an important step in the right direction, but any effort to check or balance any administration or faculty interest is best because students are simply outnumbered, in my mind indicating a marginal commitment to student representation. Moreso, the major committee concerned with "interpretation of instructional excellence" or evaluation of the instruction, lies in the Faculty Council, which allows student presence as observers only. The only way a student can evaluate his instruction now is by choice of classes, attendence to a particular class or in final desperation by transfer. The professor has the authority, and the school's academic policy behind him, to isolate himself from these potentially honest evaluations of his class. This is accomplished through signed testing that forces attendance, by roll taking, and because some courses are required in the first place.

In summary, Juniata's curriculum is structured around a uni-directional system of evaluation and would necessitate a complete conceptual reassessment on the part of all concerned if a reciprocal evaluating program is ever to be a reality.

From school to college . . .

Seminars Could Aid Frosh Transition

We think that some conscious purpose or purposes should animate our curricular arrangements for the all-important year of transition from secondary school to college. The prime purpose, we believe, should be to provide the most favorable curricular setting we can for developing a commitment to the life of the mind.

By this we mean nothing more pretentious than creating recognition that the rewards of intellectual inquiry are commensurate with one's skill at it. Young people understand that point very well in relation to, say, skin diving. If they do not understand it in relation to the uses of the intellect, their educational institutions should at least be able to assert that they have made the effort. Intellectual inquiry is what the university is all about. Not everyone takes to it, but the rejection should be deliberate rather than inadvertent. We are not convinced that such is the case today.

For that purpose we propose to build the Freshman Seminar Program, making this form of educational experience, to the extent feasible, the central and common feature of the freshman year.

We visualize each regular member of the faculty offering a seminar on some problem or problems of interest to him, presumably arising out of his own scholarly work, and accepting the challenge (so successfully met by teachers of Freshman Seminars) of providing freshmen with enough orientation in relevant features of his discipline to make feasible their engagement with the process of serious inquiry.

Topics could range from literature to science, and each instructor would be urged to use his topic as a means of moving from the particular to the general. He might, for example, relate it to basic assumptions within his field, to other areas of knowledge, to current social problems, or to the relevant historical context. Each Freshman Tutorial would begin in the fall term of the freshman year. Enrollment would be limited to a maximum of 12 students, assigned on the basis of their expressed course preferences.

The tutorial would ordinarily involve one or more assigned papers during the fall term rather than an examination. After the first term of seminar work and of writing, those students who wished to continue and were judged capable of doing so by the tutorial instructor would spend the second term doing independent reading and research and would write a substantial paper under the direction of the teaching assistant. The tutorial instructor would continue to be available for consultation with students and with the teaching assistant, would review the final paper, but would have no other responsibilities for the work of the second term.

We see this program as having an important relationship to advising: on matters of intellectual and personal concern.

Thesis, Research Could Help Senior Learning Experience

The following is a quote from the Lake Forest College bulletin:

"With the approval of his advisor and the Dean of the Faculty, a student in his senior year may write a senior thesis based either on library or laboratory and library research. This thesis may take the place of one or, more commonly, two courses in the major field. The student prepares an outline of the proposed project for the examination of his advisor and the Dean of the Faculty. After completion of the work, the student is examined on the thesis by a committee appointed by the Dean of the Faculty. This committee will include the faculty member who supervised his thesis, as chairman, and three or four others, at least one of whom will be from another department than the one in which the thesis was prepared."

A member of the Juniata College faculty claims that the best learning experience he had in his undergraduate days was one such senior thesis, in which he wrote three major papers, met in seminar-fashion of consultation and sharing once a week, and for which he received six hours of credit.

He would like to see the majors of a department involved in a semester of seminar work followed by a semester of significant research and writing, both of which would be for credit.

Questions: Are Juniata students equipped to carry out such an extensive research project? Should this kind of project involve all members of the department? all seniors? Would this approach accomplish much more in the way of an evaluation than the comprehensive examination which is presently used by some faculty for a departmental final examination? Would the senior thesis be tantamount to a Master's thesis at the undergraduate level?

Calendar Proposal . . .

4-2-4 Revision Eliminates Present 'Lame Duck' Period

This proposal is based on the premise that our present calendar has many shortcomings that can be overcome by moderate revisions. However, in order to isolate the calendar from considerations of the total program, additional assumptions are made: the total number of hours needed for graduation will remain at 120; the summer sessions will remain substantially the same; and a totally unstructured calendar (no set meeting times for classes, etc.) is inefficient at best and more probably not even feasible. The revision suggested here might be labeled a "4-2-4 plan." It could be outlined as follows:

	Fall Term	Winter Term	Spring Term
approximate length	12 weeks	6 weeks	12 weeks
beginning	early September	early January	late February ending	before Christmas	middle of February	late May normal load	12 hours	6 hours	12 hours followed by	2-week Christmas vacation	1-week break	summer vacation vacation included	1-week Thanksgiving vacation and ½-week reading period before finals	none	1-week spring vacation and ½-week reading period before finals

Some of the virtues of this plan are that it eliminates the "lame duck" period we now have in January and provides a winter term devoted to concentrated study and/or experimentation in one or two areas. Besides the winter term which is especially designed to promote independent study, other changes could be incorporated into the fall and spring term to move in the same direction. Specifically, advanced courses with limited enrollments could be offered in a form that is much less structured than at present—that is, course titles and instructors of these courses could be published, with the details of time, place, and format to be agreed upon by the instructors and students.

It seems to me that it is somewhat inappropriate to even try to discuss "calendar" outside the context of the total program as I have tried to do. Maybe an exercise such as this will serve to focus our attention on some qualities that should be included in any calendar proposed to implement any given program and guide us away from pitfalls that should exist under no circumstances.

Here is one proposal: that there be a standard school opening, but no standard school closing or exam period. Each professor sets his own calendar according to the requirements of his course, and each student sets his own calendar according to the courses he is taking. Undoubtedly this is financially unsound. But just maybe it isn't. So, does hte idea have any merits?

Implementation Faces Value Of Off-Campus Experience

Cont'd from page 4

design, implement, and supervise the off-campus experience?
2. What amount of faculty supervision is necessary? Desired by the students?
3. If less than a semester program, when should the off-campus experience be undertaken, i.e., what portion of the semester?

III. Costs of the Off-Campus Experience
1. What are the costs in money and time to design, implement, and supervise an off-campus experience?
2. Should the student bear any responsibility in meeting some of the costs incurred in an off-campus experience?
3. How should the available funds for off-campus experiences be allocated to the various off-campus programs?

*IV. Off-Juniata-Campus Programs
We should make note that Juniata College already sponsors or participates in a variety of of off-campus learning experiences.
1. Drew University — United Nations Semester
2. Washington Semester
3. Junior Year Abroad
4. Business Intern Program
5. Volunteer tutorial programs
6. Sociology Institutional Social Service Program — for both the summer and regular academic year
7. Education Department has structured junior year observation and classroom participation
8. Student Teaching program
9. Field trips in many courses and departments, such as biology, geology, business, sociology, etc.
10. Honors program at Argonne National Laboratory for science students.

NOTE—Someone has suggested the creation of a new World University which would use the world's knowledge as its curriculum, the world's problems as its responsibility, the world community of scholars and students as its members.

Team Teaching . . .

Could It Aid Mind-Rubbing?

A few weeks ago in the Juniatian, Ralph Church gave us his definition of education as "mind rubbing." When two, or three, or thirty, or three hundred minds come together, there has got to be some scraping, some resistance, some electricity if there is to be education. The electricity, the thought — the process of thought — is education. Put it another way: "Education occurs when one is put in a position from which he cannot escape by thinking."

The problem is not what education is, but how it can be brought about. How do we motivate ourselves and others? "Thought is difficult," Stendhal said in another context, and it is. time consuming, exhausting, frustrating, BUT also the most exciting and inebriating activity in life. One needs no drugs, no alcohol, no stimulants if he can be turned on by ideas. Yet how, we keep asking, can we develop ways that will turn us, and others, on?

Answers to this question are especially difficult in a classroom setting. By the time many students reach college they have been trained effectively not to think, especially in in the classroom. Pressures from inside and outside the classroom force the student to dismiss education in our sense as entirely irrelevant. Most parents, we suspect, are interested in their child's education as a means of making him perform and conform: perform in the sense of working and "being respectable"; conform in the sense of belonging to the status quo and thus again "being respectable."

The student also learns early in his education that he succeeds much better in school, i.e., gets good grades, if he follows instructions minutely, if he does not upset classroom procedure in any way, and if he never questions the system openly. Success crowns the one who becomes most skilled at figuring out what the teacher wants. Furthermore, among his peers, he is made to feel that it is unpopular, even weird, to be interested in "learning." The pressure of this group, which demands conformity in speech, manners, and dress, forbids the student in the classroom to set himself apart by expressing an original point of view or asking a pointed question. The student, if he thinks at all, learns to keep the guilty secret to himself. Mr. Church's mind rubbing, terribly difficult to promote at best, is impossible, because it is undesirable, within a system in which "perform" and "conform" are synonymous.

At the college level, the mind rubbing problem has become two-fold: how do we show students there is such a thing and how do we make them want it? Some day, somewhere, a college will have the courage to handle the second question first by informing students who appear in the registrar's office to sign up for courses that none are being offered. "Go away," they will be told, "and when you've figured out what you want to know, find a teacher who is interested in whatever it is and convince him you want a reading list and someone to talk with about what you read."

Until parents can be persuaded that this kind of abandonment is worth paying for and teachers can sit calmly in their offices waiting for students to appear voluntarily (this abandonment they, too, are not ready for), we'll have to seek ways within Juniata's means to promote mind rubbing. Simply throwing freshmen into classes which allow discussion is not enough because too many students never see the game played often enough and well enough to learn the rules nor experience the joys it offers. The old reluctance of students to expose themselves forces the teacher to plead for an answer to the questions he tosses out, to give up and call on someone, or, at least, to give up and answer himself. Most of us aren't Socrates, and even he had trouble keeping the dialogue going at times.

Would two teachers on the scene at once promote real discussion and the exchange of ideas? Could the autonomy of the teacher be weakened and the students' concern with the teacher wants be undermined by proving to students that multiple methods and points of view not only exist, but are valid, respectable, and, ultimately, exciting to consider? Can students become aware of what mind rubbing is by seeing it happen? Can they learn the rules by seeing the game played? Can we risk trying it? Can we risk not trying it?

Peace Corps Offers Degree Program at Brockport, N. Y.

The officials of the Peace Corps and the State University of New York College at Brockport announced completion of arrangements for continuing and extending the unique Peace Corps/College Degree Program to admit a fourth group of candidates in June, 1970. The members of the first contingent completing the fifteen-month program which combines the upper division undergraduate education with Peace Corps preparation are now serving on bi-national educational development teams in the Dominican Republic; the second group is now serving in similar assignments in Peru and Honduras; the third group is now in the academic year phase of this joint project and is slated for overseas assignment in Latin America in August, 1970.

The candidates will be selected from the ranks of students in good standing at an accredited college who are completing their sophomore or junior year by June, 1970. Those selected will be able to earn an A.B. or B.S. degree and be eligible for a Peace Corps assignment in one academic year flanked by two summers of fully subsidized and integrated academic courses and Peace Corps training. They are expected to major in mathematic or the sciences; those who have completed their junior year prior to entrance into the program have the opportunity for a double-major

At the end of the second summer armed with the degree, a teaching license, indepth cross cultural preparation and fluency in Spanish, the graduates as Peace Corps Volunteers will be off on their Latin American assignment. As members of the staffs of teacher training institutions and/or consultants to secondary teachers of mathematics or science, they are important participants in the educational development efforts of their host countries. During their two year sojourn they have the opportunity to earn up to twelve semester hours graduate credits.

Peace Corps and college officials pointed out the several features which make this joint program unique including: academic credit for Peace Corps training, now fully subsidized summer sessions totalling thirty semester credit hours, in-depth Peace Corps training synchronized with the liberal arts and specialized professional preparation, individualized programming, opportunity for double majors and supervised overseas graduate work.

"This integrated program is based on our two fold conviction that (1) to combine the college and Peace Corps experiences is to make both more relevant and meaningful and the personal product more valuable (2) to provide much-needed skilled specialists—mathematics and science teachers —as Peace Corps Volunteers in Latin American is to make a significant contribution to all concerned," said President Albert Warren Brown, of the State University College at Brockport in announcing the extension of this unique partnership.

Remedial, Rehibilitation Center . . .

Devereux Offers Summer Traineeships

Undergraduates, who will be juniors, or beginning graduate students by the Summer of 1970 are invited to apply before Jan. 15, 1970, for Pre-Professional Traineeships at The Devereux Schools, a group of residential multidisciplinary treatment, remedial education and rehabilitation centers. Some consideration may also be given to freshmen and sophomores, as space permits. Summer traineeships for appointment as a Research Aide, Professional Aide, Resident Camp Counselor and Day Camp Counselor-Tutor are available at the Pa. branch in suburban Phila. A few traineeships may also be available at other Devereux branches and camps located in: North Anson, Maine; Santa Barbara, California; Hot Springs, Arkansas; Victoria, Texas, and in Rutland, Massachusetts. Acceptances will be announced on or before Feb. 15, 1970.

Tax exempt training stipends of up to $200 per month for a two to three month period are offered to qualified applicants who are U.S. citizens and unmarried. Room and board is available without charge and the trainees can count on the entire amount of the tax exempt stipend (from $375-$600) with no deductions. The traineeships are supported, in part, by a grant from the U.S. Rehabilitation Services Administration and are designed to provide an orientation to career opportunities for work with the mentally retarded and the emotionally disturbed in special education and vocational rehabilitation, in psychological services, in the mental health disciplines and in related research.

The Traineeships cover a full-time period of training combined with applied service-oriented work experience and observation of on-the-spot "milieu therapy." Depending upon their functional roles, some trainees will have an opportunity for work experience with mentally retarded and/or emotionally disturbed children, adolescents and young adults presenting problems of learning and/or of personal adjustment. Trainees who do not have direct contact with children will assist the staff as Professional Aides and as Research Aides in many behind-the-scenes activities and in related research and "writing."

Further information on the Summer Pre-Professional Traineeships and application blanks are available from Dr. Henry Platt, Director, The Devereux Foundation Institute for Research and Training, Devon, Pa. 19333. Tel: 215 MU8-2600.

For Sale

Wanted, responsible party to take over low monthly payments on a spinet piano. Can be seen locally. Write Credit Manager P.O. Box 35, Cortland, Ohio.

Win Fame

and other tangible prizes in . . . . The

CRICKETEER OPENING LINE CONTEST

Write your own original opening line in the Entry blank provided

by

Englishe's

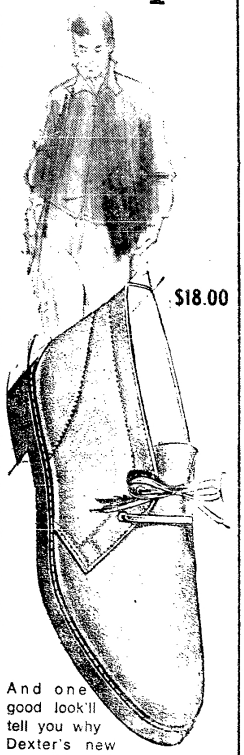
Two Tested Opening Lines

1. Would you like a Massage?

2. I don't dance, but, I'd love to hold you while you do.

Mark's Corner News
4th & Allegheny St.
OPEN 24 HOURS
Winchester Ammo
Hunting Knives
Hand warmers
Gloves & Thermos
10,000 Items 643-9932

Dexter's Desert Look goes country and campus



$18.00

And one good look'll tell you why Dexter's new unlined, uninhibited suede upper casual boot stylishly fits the outdoor occasion . . . wherever and whenever it's happening. Take a look at

DEXTER

Westbrook Shoe Store
515 Washington St.

The Heart is important. So give her a pin to go over it!

Black's Jewelry Shop

Penn St.

Poset's Says:

Christmas is Coming Can You Wait ?

See Our Fine Selection of Ladies Gifts

Indians Storm Over W&J for Win

by Gene Galbraith

The Juniata Indians extended their win streak to 3 games with a 41-21 victory over Washington and Jefferson College Saturday. Nov. 1. The Indians' ground game told the story again, as they rushed for 252 yards. Juniata also passed for 145 yards, but W & J commanded the air with a total of 351 yards.

Dave Sparks started the afternoon's scoring with a 43 yard run in the fifth play of the game. Bill McQuade added the extra point to put Juniata ahead 7-0.

Less than five minutes later, Sparks scored again on a 20 yard sprint. This run broke Bill Berrier's all-time individual rushing record of 736 yards. The conversion failed, but the Indians now had a 13-0 lead.

Juniata scored again, seconds before the first quarter ended, on a 34 yard pass from Terry Turnbaugh to Dan Rackovan. McQuade's kick was good and the Indians led 20-0.

Rackovan also scored the Indians' fourth touchdown when he recovered halfback Harry Gicking's fumble at the W and J 15 yard line and dashed across the goal line. McQuade's conversion gave Juniata a commanding 27-0 lead.

W and J's offense broke out of its dormant state in the second quarter. Their first score came on a 56 yard bomb from freshman quarterback Clair McClory to sophomore flanker Bob McLuckey. The extra point conversion made the score 27-7.

The McClory - McLuckey combo clicked again before the first half ended. This time the pass covered 9 yards for the TD. The extra point moved the Presidents closer, but Juniata still had an impressive 27-14 halftime lead.

Juniata widened their lead by scoring twice in the third quarter. The first score came on a 13 yard run by sophomore fullback Fran Fleischauer. "Pip" McQuade converted the extra point to give the Indians a 34-14 lead.

Dave Parks scored the Indians' final TD on a 47 yard pass from Terry Turnbaugh. McQuade's conversion completed the scoring, and Juniata led 41-14.

W and J scored once more before the game ended, as McClory threw a 35 yard pass to freshman end Bob Reck for his third TD strike of the day. Marshall coverted the PAT, but the Indians went on to win 41-21.

The Indians offensive attack was again led by sophomore halfback Dave Sparks. Besides scoring 3 TD's, Sparks gained 152 yards on 9 carries. Dave has gained 834 yards so far this season, and he will have two more chances to add to his record before the seasons ends. He also holds a wide lead over his closest challenger in the race for the northern MAC rushing title.

With two games remaining on the schedule, the Indians sport a 4-2 record (3-1 in MAC).

Slick Terrian Retards Indians in Close Win

by Gene Galbraith

path last Saturday with a 14-12...

The Indians stayed on the winning path last Saturday with a 14-12 squeaker over Western Maryland on a rain-drenched field. The muddy conditions were very noticeable in the Indians' ground game, as Juniata's powerful running attack was held to 137 yards, while the Terrors compiled a total of 153 yards. Western Maryland also excelled in the air with 137 yards compared to Juniata's 89 yards, but the Indians came up with the clutch plays needed for the victory.

Western Maryland scored first on Tom Mavity's 28 yard field goal in the first quarter. Mavity also put his foot into action early in the second quarter when he booted a 27 yard field goal to give the Terrors a 6-0 lead.

Juniata scored the games' first TD when sophomore tightend Moe Taylor gathered in Terry Turnbaugh's pass for a 14-yard score. "Pip" Mcauade kicked the extra point which gave the Indians a 7-6 halftime edge.

The Indians caught the Terrors completely off stride when they scored their second TD in the third quarter. Faced with a fourth down situation on the Western Maryland five yard line, Juniata shifted into a field goal formation with Denny Karli holding for Bill McQuade's kick. However, instead of attempting the kick Karli took the ball, and threw a TD strick to senior halfback Harry Gicking. McQuade converted the PAT to increase Juniata's lead to 14-6.

Juniata seemed to have things under control until the Terrors scored late in the final quarter on a 56 yard pass play from quarterback Yates to end Roy Brown. Western Maryland tried to tie the score with a 2-point conversion, but the attempt failed, and the Indians had a 14-12 margin.

Dave Sparks, Juniata's leading rusher, managed to gain 81 yards on 28 carries, but the slick terrain greatly hindered his breakaway running style.

This rugged win extended the Indians' streak to four games. Juniata now holds a 5-2 record (4-1 in MAC) with only Saturday's contest at Moravian left on the schedule.

JC Harriers Finish Second In Recent Triangular Meet

by Aubrey Shenk

The JC harriers remained above the 500 level by splitting a triangular clash with Lock Haven and Shippensburg. Dennis Weidler bettered the course record (24:55) he had set a week earlier with a 24:49, but found his winning streak broken by Steve Podgajny of Lock Haven, who covered the 4.8 miles in 24:39. Aub Shenk was the only other JC runner to reach the top ten in the overall scoring as he finished sixth with a 27:01. Kerry Stanley (28:45), Scot Williams (29:04) and Tom Leaver (29:31) took 13th, 14th and 16th places respectively to fill three scoring slots.

In scoring the meet as a double duel, JC picked up 2, 6, 10, 11, 12 against Lock Haven for a 20-41 loss, while against Shippensburg, JC placed 1, 2, 5, 6, 8 for a 22-37 victory.

The pack (6-5) faces a tough St. Francis squad on the latter's course.

FROM THE TEE-PEE

by Tom Diehl
Sports Editor

by Tom Diehl

While most local sports fans in the fall of the year are concerned with the fate of Juniata football and cross-country teams, there is one among us who has another sport on his mind—canoeing. Freshman Steve Draper, a Centre County native, has gained national recognition through his efforts in paddling canoes and kayaks.

Several weeks ago, the Icebreaker Canoe Slalom was held at Unadilla, New York, with Steve being a two-time winner. First he captured the kayak singles race with a score of 146 points, outdistancing the second place finisher by some 27 points. He then combined with a State College teammate to win the doubles canoe competition, again well ahead of the second place boaters.

Steve is a member of the Wildwater Boating Club, a national canoeing organization based in State College. This club meets with others (usually based in northeast U.S.) in the fall and spring of the year to engage in slalom competition. A club trophy is presented to the winners of these meets, and, thanks to Steve's efforts, his club won the N.Y. meet.

These races are run in fast-moving rivers and streams, so that the difficulty of maintaining balance while also running a fast race tests the boater's skill.

The work of Steve Draper then is to be commended for his dexterity in a relatively little-known, but fast-moving and rugged sport.

Juniata "Pack" Stomped by Penn And St. Francis

by Aubrey Shenk

The JC harriers suffered two defeats during the past week at the hands of St. Francis 22-36, and Penn State, 19-44.

In the meet at St. Francis, weather conditions played a prominent part in the poor JC showing. Juniata was forced to walk most of the hilly 5 mile course in a cold driving rain before the meet while St. Francis waited in a heated shed. Once the race began JC was out of it after one mile, as the pre-meet walk seemingly took the starch out of the effort. Dennis Weidler won the meet for his 11th victory in 12 starts. Aub Shenk 5th, Tom Leaver 9th, Harry Stanley 10th, and Scott Williams 11th completed the JC scoring.

On Tuesday, the mis-match of the year occurred, as Penn State, 3rd best in the East behind Georgetown and Villanava, easily defeated Juniata. Despite not entering 7 of their top 8 men, Penn State managed to take 11 of the first 12 places. State's Supulski set a new course record of 24:27 finishing well ahead of Dennis Weidler who ran his usual tough race in 25:04. After Dennis, State packed 10 men before Aub Slenk crossed the line in 27:30. Kerry Stanley, who has shown much improvement in the last two weeks, earned his best time over the home course, 27:53. Scott Williams (29:19) and Tom Leaver (29:42) completed the JC scoring. A much improved John Civitts in his first year of cross-country, broke the 30 minute barrier with a 29:57 clocking.

The "pack" now 6-7 completes its dual meet segment of the schedule tomorrow at Gettysburg.

CHICAGO
(CTA)

Sun. Nov. 23, 8 p.m.
Penn State University

All seats $3.00
send stamped,
self-addressed envelope to
Penn State Jazz Club
HUB Desk, University
Park, Pa. 16802

Welcome
Juniata Students and Parents
To The

OF HUNTINGDON
Restaurant
Red Fox Lounge
49 Rooms
All Types of Banquets
643-3934

WANTED: Does anyone within the radius of the Juniatian's circulation have a recording of the tune called "Tea For Two"? If you do and you are willing to lend, rent, or sell same, please come to the Chemistry Stockroom at the Science Center and see Sil for particulars. The recording does not have to be a single cut but can be included with other tunes.

International Relations Club
Car Wash
Saturday November 15 1 - 5 p.m.
At 14th Street Esso
Motorcycles our specialty

"The Hole in the Wall"
UP TOWN CUT-RATE
Lunch — Drugs — Ice Cream
1229 Mifflin St.

VISIT THE NEW CYPRESS BAR
AND DINING ROOM
The HUNTINGDON
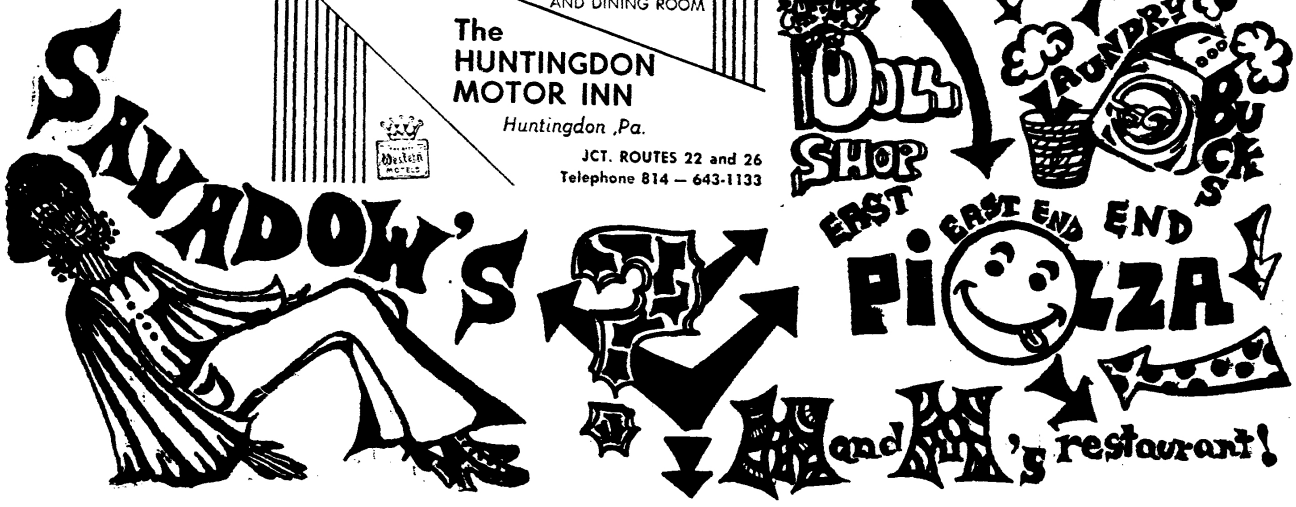
MOTOR INN
Huntingdon, Pa.
JCT. ROUTES 22 and 26
Telephone 814 — 643-1133



THE JUNIATIAN

Vol. XLVI, No. 8 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | November 25, 1969

Bandaids and Cancer . . .

Gaylin Talks on Youth Evolution

by David Beahm

Nov. 17, Dr. Ned Gaylin spoke to a large audience at Ellis Hall on the topic "The Woodstock Generation—Frankenstein or Golem." Dr. Gaylin received his Ph.D. from the University of Chicago in Human Development in Special Clinical Child Psychology and is presently chief of the section of Youth and Student Affairs in the National Institute of Mental Health.

After reading a short, prepared speech, Dr. Gaylin opened it up for questions from the floor. In a candid and rather shocking style he tried to get the audience to react to him and relate to his topic. His method, although probably "turning off" (the key phrase for the evening) a segment of the audience, did create quite a stir among some students who remained after the session to further question the doctor.

The prepared speech focused mainly on the youth movement which is demanding to be heard. Capable of mobilizing a large segment of its peers, this vocal minority is attacking many of the educational and social problems of its day.

In response to this new left, educators have reacted in two characteristics manners: "We agree with your goals, but not your methods" or "Don't tear down a structure unless you have something better to put in its place." This latter reply, Dr. Gaylin commented, is like demanding that the starving man present a proper dietary program before he is fed.

No longer is the term "youth" a biological description, in an age of Ph.D.'s at the age of 26, the under-30, over-30 categorization is no longer meaningful. Instead, "youth" today implies more nearly a state of mind or sociological boundaries.

Society today requires credentials before recognition. However, it denies youths the chance to earn these credentials and, therefore, denies recognition. Universities, as miniature societies, tend to perpetuate this and other social ills. Since youths are in constant contact with faculty and administrators, the university becomes a natural "whipping board" for unrelieved frustrations.

Colleges today tend to polarize the two opposing camps and widen the communications' gap. When students leave their families for college, emotional ties are usually broken and the youths are left with no new relationships to serve in the same role. Therefore, attention is turned horizontally—to the college peers—for the intimacy of human relationships. A barrier between age groups is, thus, established.

Dr. Gaylin's prepared speech ended with a glimpse back to the trials at Nuremberg. Since those days, parents have impressed upon their children the responsibility of every man to his own conscience, regardless of government demands. The love of mankind must surpass any strict obedience to man-made hierarchies. Yet, now, when youths are indeed questioning the demands of authority on individual consciences, the "adult" world reacts with horror and indignation, asking, "How can our own children question and disobey?" Basically, then, youths are promised frustration in their attempts.

Following the read speech, questions were asked of Dr. Gaylin concerning the specifics of his speech. Occasionally side-stepping, sometimes answering very bluntly, but usually rephrasing the question and handing it back to the audience, Dr. Gaylin attempted to arouse the listeners by provocation or prodding to answer their own questions. The biggest applause to his presentation came when he remarked, "This is a very uncreative student body."

Concerning the real gains by the movement since its beginning in 1964-1965, Dr. Gaylin cited basic changes in attitudes leading to initiation of draft law proposals and black studies programs. However, basic structures remain unchanged and things could easily slide back without a deeper committment if description and protests are halted.

As a personal preference, Dr. Gaylin suggested the use of evolution and non-violent aggression as opposed to revolution. Although this probably means that any change of structure will occur too late to be enjoyed by the initiators of reform, the methods of gradual change establish permanent alterations. "There is no revolution that has brought about permanent change; there is no evolution that has not." The only revolutions that appear to have brought change are the ones at the end of a long evolutionary shift—the final step of a gradual change.

Finally, turning to the questions of educational or curriculum changes (the topic of present discussion at Juniata College), he demanded to know what kind of a system of education needed to rely on the threat of grades to force students to learn. If the student is really interested in learning, evaluation as a threat can only stand in the way.

Protests, he said, take the band-aid off the cancerous growths of our whole system. They don't cure the cancer, but they at least force us to look at the disease.

"When you want a learning experience you don't ask, 'Father, teach me,' you ask, 'Father, let's learn together.' The possibilities for the future are almost limitless. Dream big. "If you're willing to take risks, you may be able to make some real gains."

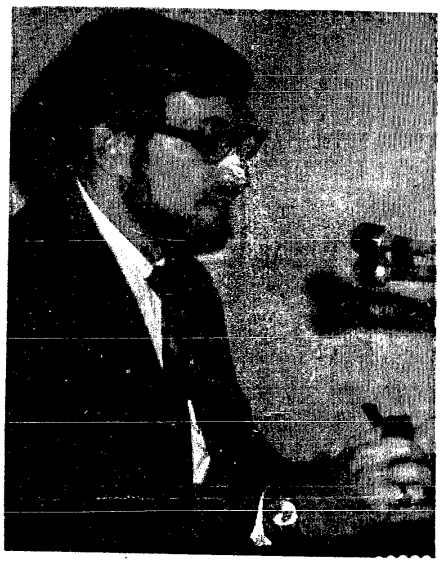


photo by David

"Father, let's learn together." Dr. Ned Gaylin speaks to Ellis Hall audience Nov. 17.

Tutors Fight Frustration With Personal Attention

by Susan Hohl

The first time you show up at the Salvation Army Center to tutor, you feel scared. A kid might run up to you and slug you in the stomach or jump on your back and want a horsie-back ride. Or a child may walk over to you and take your hand and ask you to be his tutor. Just then the coordinator gives you the hand of another child, telling him, "This is your tutor." What ever happens next is up to you.

You ask the child if there's any homework you can help him with. Chances are he won't tell you even if he does have work to do. School represents a 6½ hour frustrating experience which they don't wish to prolong another two hours. Again with good intent you suggest he draw something. "I can't draw," he may tell you. "Sure you can," you say to encourage him, so you ask him to draw a rabbit. He draws two big blobs with two smaller blobs for ears. You think to yourself, "Well, that's not too bad for a 2nd grader." The 5th grade boy beside him looks over and asks him what he's doing. "I'm drawn' a bunny." "Hey, I want a bunny too." He turns to his tutor and asks him to make one for him. "Why don't you make it yourself?" "I can't." "Sure you can." So he tries. You're surprised to hear the twelve year old beside you still refer to the animal as a "bunny," and you're even more surprised to find that he draws basically the same way your child does. Somehow you're not surprised when the older boy finally scribbles out his drawing and rips his paper in half. He and his tutor know that he can't draw. He's frustrated and he hits the child beside him.

Frustration, therefore, is one of the frequent feelings you come in contact with. Understanding the reasons behind this feeling may be the first step toward progress. The children have problems with language. At home they hear mostly action words, "Don't do that," "Go inside." They have little exposure to any reading materials within the home. The parents rarely subscribe to many magazines, and they own few books. They are rarely read to by parents. They lack motivation.

Along with this poverty of inexperience, these children have few consistencies in their lives. Meals are not served at any specific time, if at all. Often the child is left to eat whatever he feels like eating. The family itself is not very stable. You may be working with a child who has five brothers and sisters — four different fathers. Or you may be working with a child who has no father at all and a mother who was only in seventh grade when her first child was born.

The most important thing you can do for your child is to show him consistent, personal attention. Just being at the center, every week, is half the job. You'll learn the importance of this the first time you see a child's face when he is told that his tutor didn't show up. How can you possibly explain that the tutor's absence is no reflection upon him?

Not all of the children have extreme problems, not all come from very poor homes. But they all need self-confidence. Only after this is established can they have trust in adults. You may think at times that you are involved in a frantic struggle that is helping no one. But after tutoring a while, you realize that much is exchanged between you and the child. The child discovers abilities and capacities he never thought he had — so do you.

Moratorium: Why

by Jonathan Hunter

Washington streets once again belong to Washington people. The city has been recaptured by the bureaucrats and the citizens of the city which go about running the country's business. Gone are those who came to tell those bureaucrats that they had made some very serious mistakes. The Moratorium has been turned upside down and backwards by those, including myself, who attempt to analyze it and determine the worth it has had and then try to feed this to the public. It is perhaps unfair to the public that I add once again to the myriad of stories on the Moratorium, but I would like to spend a little time tying up loose ends of what I have said and reported.

I would first like to address myself to some of the more prominant criticisms that have been made of the Moratorium. I would like to address myself to three criticisms; that of the number of factions, the morbidity of the March Against Death and the carnival air of the Mass March and rally.

I hardly see how the wide and varied number of factions could be considered as damaging to the peace cause or the Moratorium. It is charged that this prevents them from ever becoming an organization and that the combination of such groups as the Computer Workers and the SDS reduces the effectiveness of the movement. I feel that quite the contrary is true on both counts. Perhaps it would be best to say that I don't feel the Moratorium will ever become an organization but that what I mean is this isn't necessarily so bad. One thing this country doesn't need is another organization! I think we have too many practical, pragmatic, pessimistic organizations as it is. It is time we had a few optimistic, contructive movements based on a new and fresh idealism! I think it is about time we had a revolution of the minds and hearts.

I hardly see how anyone can expect a direct confrontation with the morbidity of death to be anything but morbid. In trying to relate to the nation and its leaders that one feels death is ugly and unjustified should one carry flowers and sing pretty little songs? I hardly think so. But then maybe death in Vietnam isn't so morbid? Again, I hardly think so. The March Against Death was morbid only because of what it objected to; the killing and loss of over 40,000 young lives.

The Carnival air of Saturday was also in some way in this line. I am glad that Saturday was so joyous and exciting. The reason is this: one had presented to him the alternative to ugly death and that is beautiful life. If you said to me look out on these young people enjoying the experience of being together and living a happy life and then choose some of them to go and fight and die. . .

In my catch all I would like to bring up one more thing. I feel that the November Moratorium was indicative of something much deeper. I think it was indicative of the general Moratorium on life which is socialized and militarized and lived without love. It was an indication of the deeper revolution for life which is now moving through so much of the world's young. This revolution has not reached Juniata and sometimes I wonder if it will ever be able to prevent the apathy which accounts for the fact that most of the people this article is directed to will never read it or hear of its existence. Why do I write it? Because I was reinfected in Washington by the idealism that flowed so strongly through those who were there.

Kaleidoscope Players . . .

Actors to Create Shakespeare's World

The Kaleidoscope Players, New Mexico's State Theatre, will appear in Oller Hall Saturday, December 6 for a performance in Marchette Chute and Ernestine Perrie's play, "The Worlds of Shakespeare". The show is being sponsored by the English Department of Juniata College. Admission is free.

Shakespeare did nothing to perpetuate his works beyond what he put into them, but in the nearly 350 years since his death there have been many who worked to that end, beginning with his fellow players who published the "First Folio" in fond remembrance.

Marchette Chute is one of the ablest and most earnest disciples of this master of playwriting and stagecraft. She wrote a magnificent biography some years ago that reflected the light of his times and contemporaries on an otherwise rather shadowy figure. Still later she wrote "Stories of Shakespeare" basically for young people, more than a mere summarization of his plays, a book that projected with each story much of the feeling Shakespeare put into it, thus arousing the reader's interest in enjoying the original.

For eight years she and Ernestine Perrie collaborated on linked scenes from Shakespeare presented in high schools — Lyn Ely's Theatre in Education. Recently they had a more ambitious project, the production of portions of various plays to demonstrate Shakespeare's mastery in the creation of different worlds of the imagination, "The Worlds of Shakespeare." Its two acts will be titled "The World of Love" and "The World of Music."

The first act shows Shakespeare's immense diversity in treating love scenes from six plays. The second shows the playwright's mastery of the whole orchestra of verbal expression of mood, what Miss Chute calls "examples of pure word magic". The selections are superb for the purpose and the connecting dialogue is imaginative yet simple.

"The Worlds of Shakespeare" will avail itself of the services of two of the Kaleidoscope Players' outstanding actors. Ben Zeller has been with the Kaleidoscopes as actor, director and scenic designer for over five years, and his actress wife, Barbara DeKins joined the company two years ago. Together, they have been responsible for the Players intimate and experimental theatre at the Old Forge Theatre in Santa Fe, New Mexico. There they have written, directed and acted in numerous productions. Most recently, they have completed a successful engagement of "The Owl and the Pussycat" in Fairbanks, Alaska. Mr. Zeller is a veteran of theatre in many parts of this country and Canada. Miss DeKins has not only performed as an actress and dancer in the United States but throughout Scotland and South Africa as well.

To help the actors in their creation of Shakespeare's worlds, there will be a trunk from which they will take the properties and bits of costuming that will suggest the warriors and monarchs, lovers and clowns, that the script requires. Both players are onstage throughout the performance, and their roles are as exacting as any in the history of the theatre.

JC Coed Relates Impressions of Moratorium in Washington

by Eileen Flieg

The headline of the Sunday, Nov. 16, 1969 edition of The Washington Post read, "Largest Rally in Washington History Demands Rapid Vietnam War". All news, but a small article on Apollo 12 was pushed off the front page. Other headlines ran: "Thousands of Justice Department Gassed in Radicals' Assault", "Rabin: 'It's Like Peace is Respectable'", "City's Largest Rally is Peaceful", "Protest Has Many Forms: Slogans, Signs . . . and a Cross". On the inside pages were pictures: pictures of the masses of people on the slopes of the Washington Monument, of Pennsylvania Avenue, deserted after Saturday afternoon's march, of a D.C. policeman grinning and flashing a peace sign. But there is more to the story of Washington. There is the story each individual brought back with him. I I can only try to explain what happened to me that weekend.

Riding down to Washington Friday, I was excited and scared. I had become more and more convinced in the preceeding months that the Nixon administration needed prodding in regard to Vietnam. Actually being a part of the Moratorium meant a lot to me. I think I would have hitched down and slept in the street if I had to. As it was, I had a place to stay at the University of Maryland, and a ride down and back with Jim Plitt, but things were sill pretty uncertain. I had never done anything like this before, and my friends had not done much to build up my confidence. I even had an offer to have my grave dug for free.

Two other girls and I had decided to stick together, mainly for my sake. One of them had arranged to meet a friend from the University of Oklahoma in Dupont Circle at 7. By the time we got into Washington, there wasn't time to drive out to the University of Maryland, so Jim left us out in Dupont Circle so we could meet Hank. He and a friend named Rick found us. Hank had rented a Hertz van, and along with eleven others, had driven from Norman to Washington. Hank took it for granted that all three of us would stick with them, and we did.

The New York Avenue Presbyterian Church was one of the staging centers for the New Mobilization Committee. They provided food and housing for the bus loads of people pouring into the city. That's where we went. We checked the baggage we had, which wasn't much. I took very little along because I didn't know where I'd end up. Buses were leaving for Arlington and we got on one. A hat was passed around to help pay for it. Arlington was the beginning of the March of Death. It had been going on all day, with a steady stream of marchers.

When we got there, we were directed to a large striped tent. When about fifty people had gathered, directions were given by the Mobe marshalls. The route was explained, oranges and apples were passed around and we proceeded to the next tent. There we were given placards witth the name of one of the 40,000 men who died in Vietnam. The idea was to remember someone from your state. Most of those from my home state had been given out, but I got one of the few left. I carried the name Richard Bourne, from New York. I will never forget that name. Long, thin candles were passed out, and we started up the grassy path thousands of feet had turned into a mud slide.

Marshalls lined the route, about ten feet apart. They smiled, asked where we were from, and wished us good luck. Rick had no jacket, and one of the marshalls gave him a jersey to help keep him warm. I think the walk across the Potomac River was the longest walk of my life. It was much colder than any of us had expected, the damp kind of cold that seems to penetrate your bones. The wind on the bridge was fantastic. We marched in single file and the graveness of what we were doing hit me then. I represented an American who was dead, who I never knew, for whom the march was too late. But by carrying that placard four and a half miles, maybe I helped save someone else's life.

On the other side of the bridge, our candles were lit. As we marched along, they would go out, and little groups would form as marshalls would relight them. At different points along the route, cookies, coke, and cigarettes were passed out. After about an hour and a half, we reached the White House. The flood lights were turned on, all turned toward the street. Guards were posted along the sidewalk.

Right in front of the White House, each marcher stopped for a second and shouted out the name he carried. The next objective was the Capital and the coffins in which the placards were placed. It seemed to take forever to get there. By that time, I was shivering and had a splitting headache. Walking up the steps of the Capitol, a marshall looked at me and said, "Don't look so sad." It made me feel so much better. I don't know how they could bear the cold, standing there for hours, smiling, repeating the same directions over and over. I feel sorry for anyone who can really believe that we went to Washington for a Happening.

As I wrote this paragraph, I heard a news broadcast which said that the new Mobe marshalls were being investigated for violations of the federal law against inciting a riot. Any comment I try to make on that can't be repeated.

Eventually, Friday night, we ended up back at the church. There we met the rest of the kids from Oklahoma. We were accepted immediately, without any questions asked. One of the girls had a brother attending American University. He shared an apartment, and we ended up there for the night. Two guys from the University of Illinios slept there too. There were twenty in all. At least we could get warm again and stretch out, even if it was on the floor.

The next morning, we all piled into the van and headed for the march. The three of us, and Hank, separated from the rest. Hank brought a big hunk of cheese and a ring of pepperoni, and we walked down the street eating it and passing it between us. We stopped in one store, and were looking at a display of scientific toys, and a salesman came up to us. He showed us how everything worked, and then asked Hank how the march was going and wished us luck. There are so many other incidents of friendliness and helpfulness I could cite if I had the space.

We joined the march at about 11:00. We were lucky we got to march at all. All sorts of people were around us. There were kids from all over the country. One group of older people near us carried a sign proclaiming, "Over 40 for Peace." A man in a gray suit wore a sandwhich sign saying, "BEM Business Executives Move for Peace". Some people wore armbands saying "40,000 + How Many More?"

Again Mobe marshalls lined the parade route. Policeman stood along side of them, talking and laughing. Some gave peace signs and raised a fist in a black power salute, and were cheered by the marchers. Marchers started chants of "Peace Now, Peace Now", and "One, Two, Three, Four, Tricky Dick, End the War". Others can't be printed. The Beatles' "Give Peace a Chance" was sung at intervals. At one point, a clergyman, carrying a sign saying "Rockville Center Supports Peace", and his family started the Battle Hymn of the Republic. Many joined in, lending a serious, religious air to the march. That hymn has always done something to me.

After getting something to eat and finding a bathrooom, we headed back to the Monument. As the four of us got there, Earl Scruggs was playing. We missed Pete Seeger and I am really sorry we did, from what I have heard from others. We sat on the wet, cold ground and listened. S.D.S. members were on the hill at the bottom of the Monument with Viet Cong flags, trying to get supporters. They weren't succeeding.

Some people were wrapped in blankets, sleeping. Others nuddled around small fires. Signs were still in evidence. The one I felt significant was a chariacture of Nixon with the words, "Is This Face Worth Saving?" I saw one boy from my high school and talked to him, but I din't see any kids from Juniata. The rally ended with the cast of HAIR. Groups of people joined hands and danced around. One group of about twenty danced around a minister with an American flag. With the Monument in the background, it was a beautiful picture. Walking back to the van, we passed four M.P.s wearing peace buttons and talking to demonstrators.

Somehow, we missed the scurmish at the Justice Department. Some of the others from Oklahoma didn't, however, and they came back to the van with streaming eyes. They had gotten caught in it unawares, as many did. Their anger was directed, not at the Police, but at the radicals who caused it. They all agreed the police had to try to control the crowd, and they were glad the clubs had been used sparingly.

We stayed in the same apartment that night. When we left early the next morning, a little old lady was walking past. She looked at us and said, "We are all so sorry it was so cold here for you this weekend," and walked on. She just seemed so typical of the whole weekend in Washington. When the van left for Oklahoma a few hours later, I wanted to go with it. I have never met such wonderful people.

When I got back to Juniata, I was dirty, exhausted, and broke, but all I wanted to do was share my experiences with everyone. That is what I have tried to do here. I only hope I have succeeded. I know each person who was in Washington has a different story to tell. This is only one.

One Life to Live

by Karl Erdlitz

No sooner does the collegian become post-collegian when society mainstreams his mediocrity into the draft, marriage, graduate school or a nine to five occupation. Perhaps the change-over from sheltered educational robotism to practical reality is not a disaster, though for some it's as easy as turning on the Late Show.

What if two people got together and raised enough money for a down payment on a VW microbus and travelled the country for six months or a year? After sixteen years of education (?), why not? Learn about the country first hand rather than from Hometown, U.S.A. Travel broadens the mind by exposing the individual to new ideas and cultures while examining his own (in) abilities to fend his own for six months or a year. There's more to living than textbooks or a nine to five day shift. Celebrate life! Think of it—there'll be no other time you'll ever get around to breaking away to see what the U.S. is really like—unless you'd like to wait a few years and drag along your spouse and kids.

With no time limit you could venture through New England, cross the northern country during the summer and cavort your way back along the coast line in the winter. Stay overnight in state parks along the way. Catch up on all the reading and living you always meant to do but never had time for. Sleep in the economical VW bus and either eat at restaurants or cook your own food. Keeping clean would be a direct function of how often you went swimming. Grow your hair long or cut it short—it's your life.

Practically about $500 and a good draft deferment are all that's needed though the people and experiences are worth the trip alone. An individual has but one life to celebrate. . . or succumb to. What's to stop you from doing anything if you really want it?

Harriers Close '69 Season With Loss to Gettysburg

Last Saturday the JC harriers closed their dual meet season by losing to Gettysburg 20-40 on the latter's course. Dennis Weidler made it 12 wins in 14 starts as he covered the 5.1-mile course in 27:17.

Denny's victory was the only bright spot in the Juniata effort as six Gettysburg runners crossed the finish line together before Aub Shenk finished in 29:32. Kerry Stanley (29:54), Tom Leaver (30:55) and John Civitts (32:09) picked up 9th, 10th, and 12th places to complete the JC scoring.

In ending the season with a 6-8 record, the JC harriers showed a marked improvement over last year's 3-7 slate. The 6-8 mark also is JC's best since 1963, which was its last winning season.

Juniata will compete in the MAC championships this afternoon at Fairmount Park, Philadelphia. Dennis Weidler, Aub Shenk, Kerry Stanley, Tom Leaver, Richard Paulhamus, Scott Williams, and Kirk Wilson will represent Coach Russ Trimmer's charges.

Letter to the Editor

To the editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to thank all the faculty and administrators who contributed to the JWSF Bake Sale and Auction. A special thanks to Mrs. Rutstein, Mrs. Hofelt, and other members of the Dames who gave the last minute help we desperately needed to make the affair a success. Over $125 was collected for Project Concern. Thanks again to all who contributed.

Bruce Morton
for JWSF

Letters Policy

Letters to the editor should be typed and double-spaced and should be submitted no later than 1:30 p.m. Monday. The editors reserve the right to print only non-libelous and responsible content and to edit all letters and commentaries submitted to the Juniatian. The staff also reserves the right to publish all full signatures unless the writer can supply very valid reasons for omitting his name.

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College
Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED NOV. 6, 1924

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891

BARBARA CLAAR, editor-in-chief
PAUL KEELY, associate editor
ADELE ABOUTOK, copy editor
BILL DAVID, photography editor
J. PATRICK TYSON, news editor
JOEL SCHANTZ, business manager
RICHARD ABLARD, advertising manager
SUE BERMEL, layout editor

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Peggy Haines, David Beahm, Gene Galbraith, Aubrey Shenk, Donna Knupp, Mary E. White, Lynn Wuestoff, Janet Mason, Mark Hoffman, Deborah Fay, Vic Rini, Anne Hench, Shari Weir, Steve Crowley, Alice Horncane, Valerie Derrickson

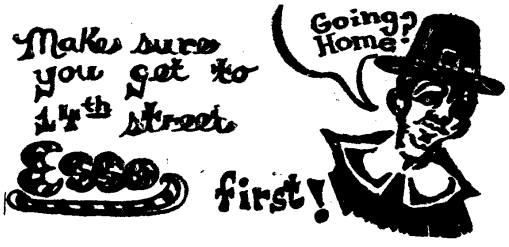
The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

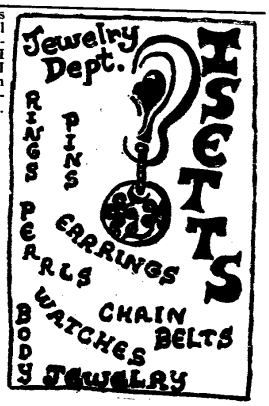
Circulation 2000

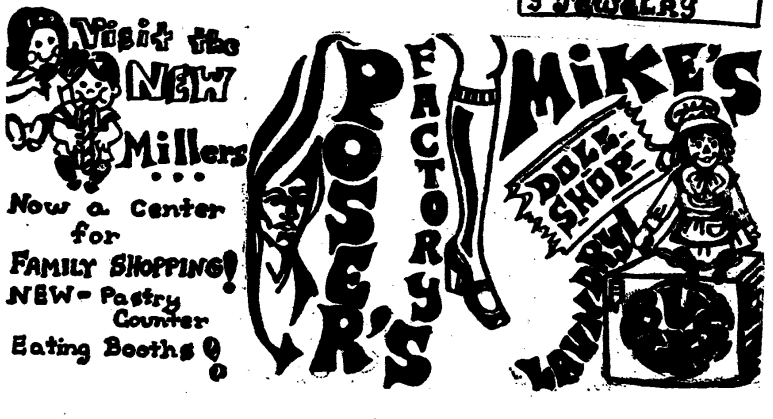
Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVI, No. 8

November 25, 1969







THE JUNIATIAN

Vol. XLVI, No. 9 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | December 16, 1969

Stauffer Names Ulrich As Quigg's Replacement

Dr. John N. Stauffer, president of Juniata College, announced the appointment of Foster G. Ulrich, Jr. of Lancaster as executive director of development for the College.

Mr. Ulrich will assume his full-time duties at Juniata Jan. 19, 1970, replacing H. Gerald Quigg, who recently left the College. A native of Lancaster, Ulrich is a graduate of Franklin and Marshall College and has been associated with F&M since 1961. He has served as assistant to the president for alumni affairs at F&M since 1967.

In announcing the new appointment, President Stauffer said, "Juniata College is very fortunate to obtain the services of Mr. Ulrich. The College's development program will benefit greatly from his leadership, and we fully anticipate that he will be an exceptionally fine member both of the campus community and of the wider community of Huntingdon."

Mr. Ulrich will be responsible for directing the over-all development program of Juniata College. His specific duties will include promotion of Juniata's new $100,000 Annual Support Fund, raising funds for endowment and buildings under the $10.1-million "Margin of Difference" campaign, and organizing programs of estate planning and retained income giving.

In addition to a B.A. degree in history from Franklin and Marshall, Mr. Ulrich holds a Master's degree in education from Temple University. Following his graduation from F&M in 1957, he served with the U.S. Marine Corps for three years and then taught social studies in the Governor Mifflin Joint Schools in Shillington, near Reading, for two years before joining the F&M administration.

Prior to his becoming assistant to the president for alumni affairs at F&M, Ulrich was assistant director of admissions (1961-64) and assistant dean of students (1964-67). While a student at F&M, he served as president of Chi Phi fraternity and played varsity football and basketball. Earlier, he assisted in coaching football and track while a teacher in Shillington.

He holds the rank of Major in the U.S. Marine Corps Reserve, and is president of the Lancaster Chapter of the Reserve Officers Association. He is a past president of the Lancaster Club of Toastmasters International and also of the Hambright Parent-Teacher Association, and holds membership in the American Alumni Council, the National Association of Student Personnel Administrators, and the Association of College Admissions Counselors.

Esso Gives JC $5,000 Grant On Contingency

Dr. John N. Stauffer, president of Juniata College, announced that the College has received a presidential contingency grant for undergraduate programs from the Esso Education Foundation.

Funds from the grant, amounting to $5,000, are to be expended at the President's direction to support various aspects of Juniata's academic program that are not now budgeted.

In acknowledging the grant, President Stauffer expressed his personal appreciation "because of my constant awareness of need for such grants as this to underwrite urgent items for which support is not presently available."

The funds will be used at Juniata in addition to current income from the new Annual Support Fund, which to date has produced nearly $45,000, for direct costs of the College's educational effort. Dr. Stauffer explained that gifts totaling at least $100,000 must be obtained for annual support during the present college year.

In presenting the grant to Juniata, Esso Foundation director George M. Buckingham said, "We hope to encourage and facilitate the constructive change that is so vital if our institutions of higher learning are to meet the needs of the present and the challenges of the future."

Similar Esso Education Foundation grants totaling $477,500 will go to 162 private colleges and universities this year under the Foundation's Presidential Contingency Program. The Foundation also conducts other programs of assistance including one that matches employee contributions to colleges and universities.

Continous Registration . . .

Nolan Gives New Procedures

by Paul Keely

In case you haven't noticed by now, registration for next semester's classes is going to be done a little differently this time around. Upperclassmen especially may conceivably be doubting the sanity of any Juniata registrar who thinks he's going to accomplish the monumental task of registration in the brief period of two days. But hold on: "there's a method in his madness."

First-year JC registrar Tom Nolan has brought to his new position a new perspective which he is utilizing in combat against the major problems, difficulties and inconveniences of the traditional course registration system. Not only the efficiency of his own office and that of data processing interest Mr. Nolan, but also the time wasted in the past by faculty and students alike over the seemingly toilsome registration process. No more will students have to while away hours by standing in another line, and never again will students need to track down relentlessly departmental faculty advisors in order to get those necessary signatures of approval for last-minute course changes — if Mr. Nolan's January experiment in Juniata registration proves successful.

What have we staunch conservatives to fear in light of the impending alterations in procedure? Very little, other than finding something to do with our added leisure time as a result of the likelihood of completing our registration for spring classes in a matter of minutes. Conscientious pre-registration is the all-important factor in an expeditious registration period, emphasizes Mr. Nolan; he wants to eliminate the past tendency for students to pre-register sloppily because they knew they could straighten things out during the course change period in early semester.

So bad was the situation this fall, when some 578 change slips were processed (close to 50% of the student body) with the possibility of one to six changes on each slip, that Mr. Nolan became determined to do something about it. Realizing that some of the changes were necessary ones caused, for instance, by the delayed assignments of laboratory sections, Mr. Nolan has taken care of sectioning labs beforehand in order that times are known in advance.

But the essential factor in cutting down the registration time involves careful pre-registration, i.e., making certain that the student carries no built-in conflicts in with him when he goes to register in January. The later dates for registration this time reflect the anticipation that students will know better what they want to take, and thus there will be fewer changes. The later the period of registration, the better, says Mr. Nolan, and he expresses the desire to register students eventually as late as the first day of a semester, having no classes that day, of course.

Registration will take place in the Women's Gym this time, continually from 8:30 a.m. until 5 p.m. (even during lunch time), Tuesday, Jan. 6, for all seniors, all juniors and sophomores A-L, and Wednesday, Jan. 7, for sophomores M-Z and all freshmen. Students are to check into the Women's Gym with their yellow schedule cards which will be in their mailboxes Monday, Jan. 5, the day after vacation and the day before registration begins. The yellow card gives proof of faculty advisor approval of student course selections.

In the Women's Gym along the outer walls will be located different department desks, one for each department, color-coded as to division. According to the courses he wishes to schedule, the student will report to the appropriate department desk, which will be manned at all times by some faculty member from that department. Upon indicating, then, the course he intends to schedule, the student will receive an individual course card, upon which he will print his name and the curriculum coding letter for that particular course. Having done so as many times as necessary at as many departmental desks as necessary (according to the number of courses and labs he wishes to schedule), the student will then turn in all the registration cards at a central desk, thus completing his registration.

The one big problem, especially for underclassmen, will be course closings. Should a student report to a departmental desk only to discover that the supply of individual cards for a course he wishes to schedule is depleted, that indicates that the course is closed (filled to capacity). The student's next step would then be to consult the faculty member representing his department at that time on the gym floor and have him or her advise and approve the necessary change of schedule. The student would then continue to proceed as before, with the course change having been worked out on the spot.

Students are once more reminded of the extreme importance of entering correct registration numbers (the ones in parentheses) for each course. It is also advised that students heed the innovative inclusion of curriculum coding descriptions in the pamphlet of proposed course offerings this time. Another technical item to consider is that of the change in room designations for Good Hall (G) rather than Academic Building (K) as before.

Mr. Nolan anticipates there being the proverbial "bugs" in the new system, but none that his office won't be able to resolve sooner or later. "We're hopeful," he says, and he asks for patience and understanding on the part of both students and faculty, realizing that the backing of the administration and the wholehearted approval of the faculty have helped implement the experiment.

As for John Hollinger, JC's former registrar, Mr. Nolan has many frank words of appreciation. Calling him predecessor a "darn good registrar," Mr. Nolan asserts that much of the criticism directed at the registrar's office last year was ill-founded. But Mr. Nolan's new perspective on things (yielded by his 15 years as a faculty member) has undoubtedly infused some life into an age-old process. After all, a guy who schedules "Great Epochs" during lunch time (12 noon-1 p.m.) in order to relieve congested meal lines can't be all bad!

Task Force Issues Compilation of Group Reports from November Discussion Day

Ed-Note — The following article was submitted by the Task Force. It represents the first look at the group reports from the Discussion Day.

A. Ideas of thoughts recurring most frequently:
1. Desire to participate in decision-making on issues affecting one's life (education).
2. Increased / improved student-faculty communication (on education and on non-educational matters). Discussion Day was seen as a small effort in this direction, but was was felt to be a tremendous success, which might be repeated periodically.
3. Need for student counseling service.
4. Greater flexibility and more student choice in curricular matters.
5. Increased off-campus and/or out-of-the-classroom learning opportunities.

B. Suggestions which could be implemented at once without additional cost, staff, or major change in programs, etc.:
i. Rearrange calendar to end fall semester before Christmas holiday.
2. More class time to be used for "something" other than lectures — discussion, role-playing, simulation, group presentations, student participation in teaching roles, etc. Lecture material to be presented on tape, hand-out, micro-film, bibliography, and/or reference materials, self-instruction, etc.
3. Continued faculty-student dialogue.
4. Improved public relation / campus communications — particularly on publicity concerning visitors (lecturers, etc.) to campus, and other non-classroom learning opportunities.
5. Student and faculty exchange programs with other colleges.
6. Students should have more information on special programs now available.
7. Budget information should be made available.

C. Gripes and concerns: (listed randomly, not in order of frequency)
1. The no-credit first-year language and math requirements.
2. Education should be more "personalized".
3. Need for increased independent study, etc.
4. Professors not excited, or really interested, in what they are doing.
5. Evaluation:
   a) need more self-evaluation
   b) repeat work to remove F grade
   c) discussion of progress

Contd. on page 3

Dolnikowski to Serve as Director Of Program of Studies at Marburg

A Juniata College professor and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. George T. Dolnikowski, have been named by Brethren Colleges Abroad, to direct a program of studies in Marburg, West Germany, for two years beginning in July, 1970.

An associate professor of Russian and a member of the Juniata faculty since 1954, Dolnikowski has been granted a two-year leave of absence from the College to assume the position in the Marburg program.

"Because of his interest in the program and his personal experience, Professor Dolnikowski is especially well qualified to assume the directorship at Marburg," according to Dr. Donald M. Rockwell, academic dean at Juniata. "The College is greatly pleased and honored by his having been selected," he said.

The program will involve more than 30 college juniors from six participating American colleges under the auspices of the Church of the Brethren, which established the program in 1962. The couple will serve as counselors, hosts, teachers and academic advisers to the students, at least five of whom will be from Juniata College.

Students under their supervision will attend Philipps-University Marburg/Lahn, the oldest Protestant university in the world, for their junior year of college. A similar Church-sponsored program places students at the University of Strasbourg, France, for their junior year abroad.

The intensive language training and orientation required of the students will be one of Professor Dolnikowski's chief responsibilities, and perhaps one of his most natural tasks. Born in Russia and educated at Moscow's Institute of Foreign Languages, he served in the Russian army as a German interpreter during World War II.

His experience not only qualifies Dolnikowski as a teacher of languages, but also testifies to an unusually gratifying American success story. While serving as an interpreter during the War, he was wounded and captured by the Germans and placed in a prisoner of war camp.

At the end of the War, with the help of the Church of the Brethren, Dolnikowski was able to come to the U.S. as a displaced person. Unable to read or write English, and barely able to understand the language, he entered Juniata College as a part-time student. To help pay his expenses he worked part-time as a janitor at the College. Fellow students and professors tutored him in English.

Within four years he earned a B.A. degree in history at Juniata and received his master's degree in Germanic literature from the University of Pennsylvania, the latter under a teaching fellowship. He passed his comprehensive examination for the M.A. degree at Penn With Distinction.

In 1958 Dolnikowski studied at Middlebury College in Vermont under a Danforth Foundation grant, and continued his work toward a Ph.D. degree as an N.D.E.A. Fellow at Harvard, where he completed residence requirements for his doctorate.

His academic success further complemented by marital bliss. Professor Dolnikowski married the former Joanne Phillips of nearby Alexandria, Pa., in 1958. They have a son, Gregory, who will accompany them to Germany next summer for the two-year experience in one of Western Europe's oldest and most picturesque cities, Marburg.

Juniata College has supported the Brethren Colleges Abroad program because of its inestimable value as a learning and living experience in a foreign country. More than 70 Juniata College students have participated in BCA programs in Marburg, West Germany, and Strasbourg, France, since their inception in 1952.

Shoemaker Gallery Exhibit Features Water Colors

A traveling exhibition organized by the Philadelphia Water Color Club is on view in the Shoemaker Galleries at Juniata College.

Selected from the 52nd Annual Members Exhibition, the show includes work in pastels, prints and drawings as well as demonstrating a wide range of techniques in water colors.

The Shoemaker Galleries in the Carnegie Building at Juniata, will be opened on the request of any group wishing to see the exhibit. Arrangements should be made through the Office of Public Information.

The Philadelphia Water Color Club was founded in 1900 and holds its annual exhibitions in the Philadelphia Art Alliance at 251 South 18th Street.

Editorial . . .

Pause to Consider . . .

June Allyson never had this problem. According to the 1950-ish scenario, oxforded and raccooned couples either meander across Oller Lawn crooning "Cuddle Up A Little Closer" or cheer frenziedly at the BIG GAME. June's consuming passion is figuring out some master plan whereby she can snag the handsome, athletic, intelligent Greek god manipulated alphabetical order has set beside her in Great Epochs. The heartstrings quiver. . .

The 1960-ish scenario features a small trickle of water wearing down Mt. Everest as the Beatles sing, "Why Don't We Do It In The Road?" This extravaganza could be entitled See Division I Erode: Erode: D.I Erode. Those critics in the audience may question how such things could come to pass. Over the last few years with a half prof (figure that one out) here and a half there, Division I has lost approximately 3½ profs. Forbid that they should brag, but of the 15-27 hours of each student's required courses and English Conference—Division I supplies 9-21 hours of said courses plus English Conference.

From whence cometh the eroder?—good question! ! A voice from on high (rarified) intones. "There will be no Greek." This is not a statement guaranteed to bring the campus to its knees. But it does raise the question —Who owns the voice and where does it come from? Could it be the same one that earlier decreed "All departments will be made equal—forcibly, if necessary"? Figure that one out and Department Chairmen (who are in mystery too) will love you.

The cold facts are these. The Humanities are the foundation of the liberal arts school. The performing arts are its laboratory and not a cultural status symbol. Division I supplies the majority of required courses and administrative positions related to them. This is not Juniata Tech. And poor relations usually have the most when it comes to deferred giving.

June never had to worry beyond the next commercial. We do.

Letters Policy

Letters to the editor should be typed and double-spaced and should be submitted no later than 1:30 p.m. Monday. The editors reserve the right to print only non-libelous and responsible content and to edit all letters and commentaries submitted to the Juniatian. The staff also reserves the right to publish all full signatures unless the writer can supply very valid reasons for omitting his name.

You've Come a Long Way, Baby?

by Dick Gregory

Recent human rights, student and peace demonstrations have brought into focus one of the longest standing injustices in America today, the continued denial of women's rights. Women of all ages have swelled the ranks of demonstrators against the war in Vietnam, none of whom are faced with the immediate problem of facing the draft. Personal self-interest cannot be their motive. But women put themselves on the line because the cause is right and they want to stand alongside men in protesting continued injustice.

The time is long overdue to recognize and do something about the unequal unjust and degrading status of women, in short, to demand first class citizenship for women. A nasty myth persists in America that women won their rights during the suffrage movement of the 1920's. True, women won the battle for voting rights, but in winning the battle they lost the campaign.

Spending as much time as I do on college campuses, I am continually reminded of the second-class status of women. Almost every campus has different dormitory regulations for women than they do for men. Women have to abide by an 11 p.m. curfew. Men can stay out and study together all night or sneak into the library after hours. Yet women have to compete with men on an equal basis with regard to grades. Women don't get a 30 percent head start on each test. Women came to college as students, not as women, and they should be treated on an equal student basis with men. And if parents do not trust their sons and daughters to be treated together equally as students on campus, they should keep them at home.

The above is the first of a series of bi-weekly columns written by Dick Gregory who will be coming to Juniata as part of the Focus Series.

Women work just as hard as men for their degrees; it takes them just as long to earn a doctorate, yet they know in advance they will never make the same salary as men holding the same degree. Women pay the same food prices as men. They pay the same hospital fees and doctor bills. Salaries obviously should also be equal

Marlene Dixon, writing in the December issue of Ramparts magazine, clearly domonstrates the salary inequity of working women, especially black and third world working women. She says: "Women, regardless of race, are more disadvantaged than are men, including non-white men. White women earn $2600 less than white men and $1500 less than non-white men. The brunt of the inequality is carried by 2.5 million non-white women, 94 percent of whom are black. They earn $3800 less than white men, $1900 less than non-white men, and $1200 less than white women."

Miss Dixon provides further documentation of the deprivation and degradation of women. For example the decline in educational achievement at a time when higher education levels are demanded. She says: "In 1962. . . while women constituted 53 percent of the graduating high school class, only 42 percent of the entering college class were women. Only one in three people who received a B.A. or M.A. in that year was a woman, and only one in ten who received a Ph.D. was a woman. These figures represent a decline in educational achievement for women since 1930s when women received two out of five of the B.A. and M.A. degrees given, and one out of seven of the Ph.Ds. While there has been a dramatic increase in the number of people, including women, who go to college, women have not kept pace with men in terms of educational achievement. Furthermore, women have lost ground in professional employment. In 1960 only 22 percent of the faculty and other professional staff at colleges and universities were women—down from 28 percent in 1949, 27 percent in 1930, 26 percent in 1920. 1960 does beat 1919 with only 20 percent . . . 'you've come a long way, baby'—right back to where you started! In other professional categories: ten percent of all scientists are women, seven percent of all physicians, three percent of all lawyers, and one percent of all engineers."

There is an insidious psychological superiority of men over women which pervades the moral structure of our society. A man can get drunk and lie in the gutter, but for a woman to do the same thing is an outrage. Men consider it a mark of manhood to chalk up sexual conquests, but are outraged if their woman is unfaithful. It takes two people to produce a child. But when population control becomes a problem, it is suggested that women take the pill.

It should be clear to any human heart that a political and social system which does not treat the mothers of the nation's children right will not deal justly with anyone. Women have the same physical problem with the oppressor that black people have always had. Black folks can't hide that skin color; it won't rub off. And women have the same physical visibility—they are immediately identifiable as women.

For a long time black folks tried hard to deal with that physical problem, but to no avail. We tried straightening out the hair, styles of dress and so on. Now black people have decided to go back to Nature. You can't improve on Nature. Black people have learned to be proud and accept the natural hair, thick lips, and wide noses. And if white folks can't accept black folks the way Nature put them on this earth, it is just too bad.

Women also have had an obsession with supporting the myth of femininity and trying to improve upon Nature. As society has told women their place is to be pretty and stay behind their men, women have put on the lipstick, rouge, perfume, cosmetics and pretty clothes. But all that will not improve their womanhood. I, myself, can put on all the cosmetics in the world, just like a woman, and it will not improve my womanhood one bit. Only Nature can take care of that. Women must be boldly proud of their natural womanhood and demand their rightful status in society. Human beings are human beings first, and sex is secondary.

Lottery Serves as Semi-Panacea, Volunteers Cure-All

by Paul Keely

So quickly has the whole thing come and gone that many Juniata males are still in the process of waking up to the fact that they've got little if anything to worry about as far as the draft is concerned. The haunting specter of Selective Service, which for so long played havoc with the minds of mortal men between the ages of 19 and 26, was exorcised for those who fared fortunately under the "fickle finger of fate" on the night of the Dec. 1 lottery.

But then there were those who weren't quite so fortunate and found, as a result of the lottery, that they will be serving for certain in some way or another in the armed forces of these United States. At least they're sure, though, of what is expected of them, for there is, finally, that borderline mass of eligible men — those who must "sweat it out" for a while not knowing exactly what will happen to them. The significant part of it all, however, is the fact that nobody is going to have to deal anymore with the possibility of being drafted anytime during the length of that formative seven-year period as before.

The new lottery system by no means constitutes a panacea for all the considerable public disquiet over the draft; President Richard Nixon himself has acknowledged that the lottery is still an inequitable way of doing things. just by virtue of the fact that some men get drafted and some don't. He won't be satisfied, Nixon has said, until the U.S. has a completely volunteer armed forces. Because of the continuation of the Vietnam War and its manpower needs, however, the attainment of such an ultimate goal is, for the moment, impeded.

Men of the U.S. may be assured, though, that wider draft reform is to come, for the recently-implemented lottery (signed into law Nov. 26 — the day before Thanksgiving) passed the Senate and the House easily only because an explicit agreement was made for holding extensive draft hearings beginning in February of next year. The lottery, as quickly as it seemingly popped onto the American scene, is but a step in the direction of the all-volunteer army that Nixon did advocate as a long-term goal during his election campaign.

The new draft reform law which paved the way for the lottery may, according to some, go down as Nixon's best known legislative achievement of 1969. It is the most extensive reform of the Selective Service System since the Korean War, yet it stands only as a modification of the present law (of 1951 vintage), which expires June 30, 1971.

When former President Lyndon Johnson wished to move toward a random selection method in the draft system, Congress responded with the 1967 draft extension bill, a one-sentence provision prohibiting the President from establishing, by Executive order (i.e. without prior Congressional approval), a Selective Service system based on the principle of random selection. Nixon's recent legislation was but a simple alteration removing that ban on a lottery.

Early in his administration Nixon proposed major draft reform legislation, including lottery; but eventually it became evident that the overall reform bill was going nowhere in the Congressional Armed Services Committees. For this reason various people, Nixon aide Peter Flanigan for one, urged merely the simple modification in the existing law. So this past September Nixon did ask Congress to pass a bill removing the prohibition against establishing the lottery on his own.

But then there were those who feared that institution of the lottery at that time would ruin chances of substantial reforms of draft reform — being the primary advocate in this case. Subsequent agreement among Nixon, Kennedy, and Senate Armed Services Committee chairman John Stennis to debate the matter next year paved the way for passage of Nixon's bill with little opposition. Having signed the bill into law, Nixon then issued the Executive order implementing the draft lottery.

Proposals for the elimination of the draft and the institution of an all-volunteer army will be considered in 1970, but (because of the present war) the more realistic consideration will no doubt be for retention of the draft with major modifications. Some proposals for revision include 1) the elimination of all student and occupational deferments, which supposedly embody inequities and favor the well-to-do, 2) more uniform guidelines for local draft boards, 3) provision for legal rights similar to those in courts of law, and 4) lowering the age qualification of board members (it is presently 30 years).

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College

Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED NOV. 6, 1924

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891

BARBARA CLAAR, editor-in-chief
PAUL KEELY, associate editor
ADELE ABOUTOK, copy editor
BILL DAVID, photography editor
J. PATRICK TYSON, news editor
JOEL SCHANTZ, business manager
RICHARD ABLARD, advertising manager
SUE BERMEL, layout editor

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: H. G. Grove, Esther Phillips, Pat Mae, Steve Crowley, Alice Herncane, Valerie Derrickson, Larry Carbonetti, Gene Galbraith

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000

Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVI, No. 9

December 16, 1969

Task Force Issues Compilation of Group Reports

Contd from page 1

6. Advisory system is not adequate — especially for freshman.
7. Lack of respect between faculty and students.
8. Eliminate comps., or have them each year.
9. Need for a chance to have experience in chosen field — especially for non-grad school students.
10. What changes in living arrangements (open dorms, visitation.
11. Too much "busy-work". No time for reading and research in areas of interest.
12. Students don't learn to ask questions!
13. Lack of concern for quality of interpersonal relationships.
14. Some faculty members talked too much on Discussion Day.
15. Students and faculty did not have imaginative alternatives for educational problems.
16. Campus radio, newspaper ought to play more vital role.
17. Arbitrary nature of grades — gets in the way of learning.
18. Education too competitive — need to learn cooperatively.
19. Education too tied to time-limits (4 yr. B.A., etc.)
20. Juniata does not assist students to try to understand themselves.
21. Education here is too much a compromise (tech. and Lib. Arts).
22. Policy is made on basis of abuses by the few (e.g. concern with P/F, and the threat of losing the privilege due to misuse by some).
23. Lock-step system (4 years, 120 credits, 2-3 meetings/weeks, set class length, "sterile classrooms, profs 'going cation, no time to learn — through the motions' of edu- esp. in class, etc.).
24. Drop prerequisites, requirements, majors, departments (This from science group who said science majors cannot get a liberal education here.)
25. Five courses at one time keeps learning too fragmented and superficial.
26. Real need for full-time competent professional counselor.
27. (Especially for science majors) A need for courses to help understand the purpose and value of science!
28. Desire for change in grading system. (Science majors asking to be graded on basis of creativity and motivation!) Brown system of not recording failing or unsatisfactory work was mentioned many times. Some groups thought the "unmotivated" student eliminated himself under such a system. Other groups were uncertain about the outcome for some students. (The reader found it interesting in that in all cases the unmotivated student was someone else. Does this mean the motivated students were at Discussion Day; others not? ? or are the problems always with someone else? Then who is this culprit someone?)
29. Introductory courses spend too much time on terminology and not enough on concepts, purposes, contemporary relationships, etc.

D. Interesting questions raised:
1. Why don't we plan informal academic activities on weekends, run by students; ex. seniors aid underclassmen, extra labs, bull/sessions, discussion sessions, lecture series, field trips, exchange activities with other schools, ...
2. How many courses can be digested at once?
3. Shouldn't introductory courses prepare the student to read advanced material on his own?
4. Why don't J.C. students learn to use a library?
5. Why isn't alumni office used as placement resource for summer employment to give students a taste of fields of interest? (This could also be accomplished through an expanded placement office).
6. Where is education? —lecturing vs teaching? non-interacting by mistakes? etc.
7. Where students realize the fallacy of the notion that a college degree increased the potential earning power to the individual, some groups floundered trying to find reasons for education.
8. Why not allow students to take all distribution courses in one area?
9. Why do all courses run for a semester? Why don't profs run a course until they have done what they set out to do, then stop!
10. If no one tells a prof what he is doing wrong or poorly, how will he find out so that he can change or improve?
11. Why not file written periodic evaluations of students, rather fiying' to employers and grad schools?
(Could this be done on tape? micro-tape? other?)

E. Comments from the readers
1. Team teaching as students have seen it at Juniata, was regarded as nothing more than
a) a sharing of lecture time, or
b) an extended panel presentation of opinion.
2. There were a number of expressions of surprise from the students on the fact that fewer students were apathetic than had been claimed!
3. Professors are not seen as people who are also learning. Generally they are seen as static store-houses for the stuff of which formal education is somehow fabricated.
4. There were a number of concerns related to the idea that the more specialized a professor is — the better he 'knows his stuff' — the less able he is, or might be, to communicate with his students.
5. There was what seemed to this reader to be an alarming reccurrence of expressions of fear that a wrong decision might be made, that someone (especially freshmen) might 'make mistakes'. In fact, freshmen seemed to be viewed generally as arriving here like a ream of new paper waiting and ready to be inscribed upon.
6. Profs are generally seen as not accepting or appreciating student suggestions. (Whether or not this is true is not the point; what matters is that they are perceived this way) Example, many groups apparently worked that D-Day would be another exercise in futility.
7. Students were generally apprehensive about too radical change occurring too rapidly (without understanding?)
8. There seemed to be much confusion about evaluation of profs and courses. Generally, evaluation seemed to be desired, with much diversion of opinion about what should be evaluated and how that should be done. Some groups suggested that profs and students should work out together the objectives of the course, then evaluate teaching and learning against those objectives at the end of the courses. Some suggested supplemental evaluation from outside sources such as: (A) other profs in the department; (B) profs and students outside the department; 'experts' from off campus (alumni, other colleges and non-academica) etc. Some science majors questioned whether profs should be required to take courses in how to teach.
9. Many recorders sensed that their groups were unable to formulate what an education ought to be!

In a gentle way, you can shake the world.

THE EQUITABLE

The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, New York, N.Y.
An Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

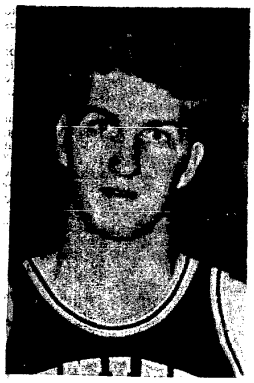
Flowers Say More

13th and Moore St.

The Four Seasons

Defeating F&M; Gettysburg . . .

Cagers Win Tournment at F&M



● John Smith ●

by Larry Carbonetti

The Juniata College Indians' hardwood team ended its first week of competition on a jubilant note as they took first place in the S. Woodrow Sponaugle Memorial Basketball Tournament last weekend at Franklin and Marshall College in Lancaster.

Fourth-year head coach Russ Trimer's cagers won the tournament opener against F&M Friday night by a score of 86-76. A shaky first half saw Juniata suffer a 2-for-15 loss at the foul stripe, giving the Diplomats an eight-point lead. But the Indians charged back in the second half. Led by top scorers Charlie Harvey and Leo Wentz, the Tribe took the lead with about 14 minutes left and were never headed for the duration. They registered 22 for 26 at the foul line.

Saturday night's game with Gettysburg was a different story. The Indians came on strong to build an early lead only to have a Gettysburg rally cut it down to four points at the half, 34-30. The second period was nip and tuck until a burst in the final eight minutes broke it open for Juniata. The Indians won confortably, 86-74, registering the first tournament victory ever captured by a Juniata b-ball team.

Juniata's 6-foot-3 center, John Smith, was named most Valuable Player of the tournament, having scored 19 points against Franklin and Marshall and 27 against Gettysburg. Junior co-captains Charlie Harvey and Leo Wentz also performed well, as did Freshman center Tom Rinaldi, earning high scoring percentages.

The Tournament victory placed Juniata's early season record at 2-1, as the Indians dropped their season opener by a close 84-80 to Indiana University of Pennsylvania.

Harvey	5	5-6	15
Smith	10	7-11	27
McCarthy	3	1-2	7
Leo Wentz	6	2-3	14
Bader	6	1-1	13
Rinaldi	4	2-2	10
Totals	34	18-25	86

Harvey	5	5- 6	15
Bucher	4	4-8	12
Thomas	2	1-1	5
Strunk	4	0-0	8
Gettle	10	0-1	20
McGarry	6	0-0	12
Eppeheiner	1	7-7	9
Kershaw	2	4-4	8
Totals	29	16-21	74
Score By Halves:
JUNIATA		34	52-86
GETTYSBURG		30	44-74
Harvey		6-9	18
Smith	8	3-7	19
McCarthy	4	0-1	8
Leo Wentz	6	2-2	14
Bader	4	5-8	13
Barnhart	0	0-1	0
Straley	0	0-1	0
Rinaldi	3	9-10	14
Totals	31	24-39	86
Bierley	10	3-4	23
Brown	3	1-3	7
Graham	4	2-4	10

● Charles Harvey ●

Bill Hiltner	0	0-0	0
Leonard	3	6-12	12
Farkus	0	0-1	0
Bob Hiltner	5	0-0	10
Moore	3	3-4	9
Trubisz	2	1-2	5
Totals	30	16-30	76
Score By Halves:
JUNIATA		34	52-96
F&M		42	43-76

Keggers Capture I.M. Soccer Title Led by Smith

by Rick Paulhamus

I.M. Soccer Winner: Keggers, captained by Terry Smith. The Keggers went undefeated throughout the regular seven-game season. Taking a close second was the Water Walkers, captained by Ed Baker, whose only loss was to Smith's team.

This is the first year soccer has been played on the Intramural level at Juniata since 1966. The participation of eight teams indicates a definite interest and will hopefully be continued.

Final Standings

1. Keggers
2. Water Walkers
3. Shin Kickers
4. Tussey-Terraces
5. Grabbers
6. Rugheads
7. Santos '73
8. Kicking Squad.

M & M RESTAURANT

On Rt. 22 East of
Huntingdon Motor Inn
643-2640

FROM THE TEE-PEE

by Tom Diehl
Sports Editor

The "super gnat" has struck once again. Juniata's defensive back Joel Delewski was named to the MAC Northern College Division All-Star football team several weeks ago. He was the only Tribe member to gain a first-place berth from this season's 5-3 Indian team.

Six other Indians were on the honorable mention list, including Dave Sparks (second leading rusher in the division), end Dan Rackovan, center Jeff Bassett, tackle Dan Browne, defensive lineman Sal Mercadant and defensive back Pete Straup.

Delewski, a 5'9" 160-pounder from Reading, gained his fame at Juniata with his adeptness in returning punts and kickoffs. During his college career, he returned ten punts and kickoffs for touchdowns. He also intercepted 16 passes during his career, including five this season, returning one for a touchdown.

"Joel is a deserving player. He did a good job in the secondary for us, but his real value was in his kick return ability. In that aspect there's nobody in the league to compare with him," commented first-year coach Walt Nadzak.

He added, "Every time Joel got his hands on the ball, he was a threat to go all the way. He forced other teams to change their kicking games and put pressure on their coverage. People kicked away from him many times in respect for his great ability."

Good kick return artists are not easily replaced, so that the loss of Delewski next season could leave its mark on the Indians. He has added vastly to the Juniata football program these past three years, and will be a hard man to replace in the Tribe lineup.

John Smith was chosen the Most Valuable Player in the S. Woodrow Sponangle Tournament for his outstanding play against F&M and Gettysburg. The award is based on a vote by the coaches and members of the press. For his efforts, John received a Hamilton watch.

According to Coach Trimmer, John has been very consistent, but his performance in the second half of the tight contest against Gettysburg was the best individual performance by any Tribe player since his arrival on College Hill. He scored 17 points in the second half, and ended up with 27 for the night, in addition to pulling down ten rebound.

Smith, a junior majoring in sociology, played high school ball under Jim Smith at Lebanon.

Warrior of the Week—Charlie Harvey

The Juniata College coaching staff chooses a Warrior of the Week throughout the basketball season. The award is given to the player who, in the eyes of the coaches, has shown leadership in practice preparation and has performed consistently well in the games of the week.

The award for December 1-6 goes to Charlie Harvey for his outstanding play in games against Indiana, F&M and Gettysburg. He scored 50 points and 36 rebounds in addition to playing stellar defensive ball. In his third year as a starting player for the Tribe, Harvey is co-caption of the 1969-70 edition.

Charlie played for Coach Don Thorn of Central Dauphin High School and is currently a junior majoring in economics and business administration.

Indians Drop Opener to Indiana 84-80

by Gene Galbraith

The Juniata College Indians opened the 1969-70 season by dropping a hard-fought 84-80 battle to Indiana University of Pennsylvania. Juniata was down five points at the midway mark, but the Indians came on strong in the second half, when they led by as much as 7 points at one stage. Indiana, however, gradually trimmed the lead until they clinched the victory in the last minute on field goals by Gary Gruseck and Dave Smith.

Both teams were equal in field goals with 32, but Indiana hit 20 of 32 shots from the foul stripe, while Juniata managed 16 of 26 free throws. Juniata shot a torrid 32 for 56 from the field for 57.3%. Indiana connected on 32 of 66 shots for 48.5%. Juniata also led in the rebounding department by a 31-29 edge.

Juniata displayed a balanced scoring attack by placing four men in double figures. Leo Wentz paced the scoring with 19 points. Charley Harvey, Tom Rinaldi and John Smith added 17, 15 and 14 points respectively. Indiana's Lee McCullough led all scorers with 32 points, while Dave Smith contributed 19 markers to the victory.

Indiana	FG	F-FT	Tot
Donnelly	3	5-6	11
Erney	0	0-0	0
McCullough	11	10-12	32
Mattocks	2	2-4	6
DeMark	5	0-1	11
Smith	8	3-8	19
Gruseck	2	0-0	4
Kerstetter	1	0-0	2
Frank	0	0-0	0
Rusnica	0	0-0	0
Totals	32	20-32	84

Juniata	FG	F-FT	Tot
Bader	2	4-7	8
Harvey	7	3-6	17
Smith	5	4-4	14
Leroy Wentz	9	1-3	19
McCarthy	1	3-3	5
Rinaldi	7	1-2	15
Griffin	1	0-1	2
Barnhart	0	0-0	0
Totals	32	16-26	80

Score by Halves:
INDIANA	46	38	- 84
JUNIATA	43	37	- 80

Poser's Says:

Christmas is Coming Can You Wait ?

See Our Fine Selection of Ladies Gifts

Seven Gridmen Receive MAC Recognition

Seven Juniata College football players have received recognition from the Middle Atlantic Conference Northern College Division for the 1969 All-Star selections.

Joel Delewski, the Juniata senior defensive halfback, was named an all-star defensive back. Delewski set a new all-time college football career record for kick-return touchdowns in his three years at Juniata, combining six punt returns and four kickoff runbacks for a total of 689 yards for touchdowns. He received 121 kicks for the Indians and returned them for for a total of 2,026 yards, which is also a near-record.

Honorable mention among MAC all-stars went to Juniata's sophomore end Dan Rackovan, sophomore tackle Dan Browne, senior center Jeff Bassett, sophomore halfback Dave Sparks, sophomore defensive guard Sal Mercadante, and senior defensive back Pete Straup.

Dave Sparks, who led the MAC Northern Division in rushing for most of the season, finished second in the league with 734 yards in 146 carries, just 19 yards behind Albright College's Dennis Zimmerman. Sparks set two new season rushing records for Juniata, breaking those set by Bill Berrier in 1958. The old record for rushing in Conference games was 601. Sparks' total rushing for the season, including non-Conference games, was 949 yards, breaking Berrier's old record of 736 yards.

Pete Straup extended his all time Juniata records for individual and conference-game interceptions to 18 and 11, respectively.

Juniata College ended its season with a record of five wins and three losses under freshman coach Walt Nadzak, having defeated Albright (20-7), Lycoming (21-7), Haverford (48-0, Washington and Jefferson (41-21), and Western Maryland (14-12); and suffering losses to Susquehanna (14-31), Geneva (14-16), and Moravian (18-7).

Millions in Scholarships Go Begging

With Federal funds more difficult to obtain and banks tightening credit on loans, thousands of college students are wondering where to turn for help in financing their educations.

Part of the answer may be found knowing where to look — and it can help, in some instances, if you, the college student, have participated in rodeos, come from Appalachia or are a woman of Japanese descent from Seattle.

According to Dave Dunn, executive director of Scholarship Search, "Millions of dollars" worth of scholarships, fellowships, grants and student loans of all types go begging each year."

Dunn's firm at 342 Madison Avenue in New York uses the computer to match college students with varied student aids. He cites the following often-neglected financial rewards that are available, for example, at the University of Arizona.

The school offers six "Vegetable Grower's" scholarships for $500 each. It provides the "Kenneth Gunther" scholarship, worth $500 annually, to students who have participated in rodeos as a roper.

Other college scholarships are awarded for an incredible variety of reasons. Some hinge on whether students are direct descendants of Union soldiers who served in the Civil War, or are direct descendants of World War I veterans. If a student has proficiency in voice or on the organ; has an interest in the turkey industry; majors in pottery; plans a career in the field of game and wild life management; is a young woman preparing for missionary work or has served as an assistant in the college dining room, he or she is eligible for aid.

The list is endless. Dunn says, noting that many scholarships are based on ethnic backgrounds as well. For instance:

The University of Chicago offers an American Daughters of Sweden one year scholarship to a girl of Swedish ancestry who will include a course of Swedish in her program.

Columbia University awards the Daughters of the Holland Dames Scholarship annually on the basis of ability and need to a young woman of Dutch ancestry.

University of Washington, Seattle, makes available the United Scholarship Awards, with variable stipends, for students of American Indian or Spanish - American ancestry. The Woman's Auxiliary Club of Nisei Veterans Scholarship, for $250, goes to women of Japanese descent who are preferably from Seattle.

"Each year," Dunn continues, "there are millions of dollars in financial aid available to students wishing to further their education. Once utilized, such financial aid may help prevent students from dropping out of college.

"Through Scholarship Search," he says, "students fill out an application which is then processed and matched against the world's largest data base of financial aid sources. A list of financial aid items for which the student is eligible is thus obtained. The list is mailed to the student and includes a minimum of 10 items of aid for a fee of $20. Many users receive a list of 20 or more items for which they are eligible," Dunn says. "The system locates and supplies a list of the financial aid items, but does not secure them for students. That is up to the student, of cource."

Mark's Corner News
4th & Allegheny St.
OPEN 24 HOURS
Winchester Ammo
Hunting Knives
Hand warmers
Gloves & Thermos
10,000 Items 643-9932

"The Hole in the Wall"
UP TOWN CUT-RATE
Lunch — Drugs — Ice Cream
1229 Mifflin St.

THE JUNIATIAN

Vol. XLVI, No. 10 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | January 13, 1970

$2.8,000,000

Margin of Difference Reaches First Goal

Dr. John N. Stauffer announced the successful completion of the $2.8-million first phase of the College's $10.1-million "Margin of Difference" capital campaign. The goal was reached nearly one year ahead of schedule.

In his annual Christmas letter to alumni and friends of the College the president reported that $2,861,312 has been received in pledges and cash contributions to date, and added that several small area campaigns still in progress among alumni will further increase that amount.

He explained that three recent gifts totaling $108,000 from trustees provided the thrust needed to put the initial campaign "over the top." Trustee gifts to the College totaled $610,876, while alumni contributed $577,980. Bequests and annuities favoring the College amounted to $1,207,858. Additional contributions from foundations and corporations, parents, students and associates of the College and from the Church of the Brethren amounted to $464,598.

Regarding the next phase of the eight-year campaign, Dr. Stauffer wrote, "The unfolding of the second chapter will occur in 1970-73, as we cultivate and obtain the support of individuals and foundations having special reason to be concerned about Juniata's educational strength and usefulness. We shall be counting on a number of major gifts, especially to the endowment fund, totaling at least $2.5 million."

A major portion of funds from the first phase of the "Margin of Difference" campaign was used for the construction of Ellis Hall. The second phase will concentrate largely on improvement of faculty salaries and further strengthening of the academic program. The third phase, seeking $4 to $5 million of additional endowment funds, will lead up to Juniata's centemnial in 1976.

"Juniatians everywhere may rejoice because of the progress their College is making," President Stauffer said. "Those who have contributed to this success should have a special sense of gratification and joy because of the generous and helpful part they have played in this achievement."

Do you remember when the campus looked like this? The future goal of Margin of Difference is to go beyond the physical plant to academic betterment.

Briggs Announces Tryout Dates For Rhinocerous

The Department of speech and Theatre announces tryout dates for its second major play presentation, RHINOCEROS by Eugene Ionesco. In its usual iconoclastic fashion, the sanctity of the finals period is eroded as tryout dates are scheduled for the most unusual entertainment format ever to bull its way onto campus. Tues., Wed., and Thur., Jan. 13, 14 and 15 at 3:30 p.m. in Oller Hall you are invited to join your friends and become a homo sapinoceros, Theatre Arts called the play ". . . a delightful and unavoidable theatrical experience." The New York News said "A cleverly crazy comedy." and as might be expected, the New York Times classified Rhinoceros as "An allegory for our times."

A Rumanian-born Frenchman, Eugene Ionesco ranks with Samuel Beckett, Arthur Adamov, and Jean Vauthier among contemporary leading exponents of the experimental European theatre. Other works by Ionesco include "The Killer", "The Bald Soprano", "The Lesson", "The Chairs", and "The New Tenant".

Break the Juniata ostrich syndrone and become a rhinoceros! Excellent rolls for men and women. Previous rhinoceros experience not necessary. Will be casting for both the one horned and two horned varieties of rhinos.

In "Rhinoceros", Ionesco has presented a savage commentary on the absurdity of the human condition made tolerable by half-delusion. He shows the struggle of the individual to maintain his integrity and identity alone in a world where all others have succumbed to the "beauty" of brute force, natural energy, and mindlessness. In "Rhinoceros", as in his earlier plays, the comic underlies, then supercedes, the tragic; sense makes nonesense or erstwhile sense. Ionesco confuses the ridiculous and the sublime in order to rid us of their confusion and fusions. Attend tryouts. Be a campus Rhino!

Free student tickets will be available Jan. 19 at the information desk in Ellis Hall for the Mitch Millar Community Concert on Jan. 28.

Bloomsburg Prof. Exhibits Works In Ellis Hall

An exhibition of paintings by Kenneth Wilson, associate professor of art, Bloomsburg State College, is on view in the Ballroom, Ellis Hall, at Juniata College.

The exhibit is sponsored by the Fine Arts Committee of the College Center Board. It is open to the public through Jan. 20 from 8:30 a.m. until 9 p.m.

Wilson, who is well known to many artists in the area as an outstanding teacher, has won numerous awards for his work, in the Harrisburg Annual, at Pennsylvania State University and the Painters and Sculptors Society exhibits.

Paintings by Wilson are in the collections of Penn State, Bloomsburg State College, St. Albeins School and private collections in Texas, California, New York, Connecticut and Pennsylvania.

Before assuming his present position at Bloomsburg State College, Wilson was art supervisor, Rothrock, Lewistown, Granville public schools. He is known locally for his work as a director of the Standing Stone Art Colony in 1960,'61 and '62.

A graduate of Edinboro State College, Wilson earned a M.Ed. in 1959 from Penn State and studied painting with Hobson Pitman, a well known Philadelphia artist.

His work has been included in the Traveling Exhibitions of the Mid-State Artists. Other exhibitions in which Wlson participated included the Bucknell National Drawing Show, the Butler Mid-Year Exhibit, Youngstown, Ohio and The Westmoreland Museum of Art Invitational.

There will be a Convocation Jan. 26 at 10 a.m. in Oller Hall. This will mark the first day of the Spring '70 semester.

English 450 Prepares Colloquy Displays in Library

by F. Helen Wyeth

Jane Kelly, chairman, and her committee of Barbara Claar, Don Hockman, and Jeanne Moore are currently preparing Beeghley Library displays of materials relevant to the Juniata College Colloquy beginning Feb. 20.

These four people are members of Miss F. Helen Wyeth's English 450 class in Methods of Teaching Secondary School English.

The various, changing displays will feature the multi-media, thematic approach. They will show many ways — reading, listening, viewing — to prepare for the Colloquy.

On view will be materials in many categories. In addition to the conventional literary types — novels, short stories, plays, poems, essays, and biographies —, there will be, on view, materials in areas such as magazine articles, recordings, film strips, tapes, popular songs, reproductions of plastic and graphic arts, as well as a listing of current films.

Six other members of the class have prepared mimeographed lists of materials available in the library. Debbie Faye's and Ruth Machtley's lists are on Poverty. Donna Lane's and Helen Shumaker's show research on Sensitivity. Carol Burns' listing has to do with Law and Order. Greta Wenger's list shows various ways to gather information on Drugs. These six lists, each three pages long, use as many as eight different categories. They are free at the library desk.

Other Colloquy topics which are interesting to these juniors and seniors who plan to teach soon are Education, on which Barbara Claar and Jane Kelly did their research; Pollution — Cynthia Cleck; and Racism — Nancy Renz and Jean Brindle.

These future English teachers have agreed that the Colloquy subjects center on those great moral dilemmas of the Western world which are at the heart of any English class presentation. They find that such a thematic approach is the way to make the study of literature relevant. During the class discussion, they plan to encourage each pupil to come to his own conclusion. Then he is ready to write a paper presenting his own relevant ideas.

However, the English 450 people have also agreed that the English teacher needs to be aware of what is available in the fields of art, music, and the performing arts, as well as in the areas of philosophy and literature.

In their preparation for this approach to the Colloquy, they used, in the Beeghley Library, many topical indices, including the two-volume Syntopican of the Great Ideas books, A Guide to the Study of the United States of America, and Public Affairs Information Service.

Ax-grinding made easy

Colloquy to host Articulate Speakers

Encounter '70, Juniata's residential colloquy, has joined forces with the Junior Class to make the weekend of Feb. 19-22 cataclysmic.

While the Juniors handle social events, Encounter '70 has been writing to everyone from Margaret Mead through Spiro Agnew, contacting anyone with an ax to grind, or a grindstone to grind an ax against. Tentatively, the list of speakers includes Mrs. Hope Lopez, Chief Organizer of the Philadelphia Branch of the United Farm Workers' California Grape Strike; Dave Gottlieb, Research Professor at Penn State's College of Human Development, one of the founders of the Job Core, and Executive Officer of the President's Council on Children and Youth. Dept. of Health, Education, and Welfare; Ti-Grace Atchinson, feminist; Senator Jerry Kaufman, of Pittsburgh; Dr. Clifford Adams, psychologist and expert on love and marriage; Clayton Fox, fundamentalist minister; and other artists, musicians, sensitivity trainers, and what have you.

Encounter '70's biggest problem has been the conservative blackout. In spite of Vice-president Agnew's plea, it just doesn't seem that, there's a surplus of articulate conservatives available. Any suggestions would be welcome here. Also, students willing to help with general office work as colloquy weekend draws near, or students who would like to host a speaker or provide a bed for one should contact Kathy Snyder, or any of the multifarious Encounter '70 Staff.

Faculty Readers to Present "Lion in Winter" Feb. 18

"Lion in Winter" has been chosen by the Faculty Readers Theatre as their 1970 production. Featuring Ralph Church as King Henry and Esther M. Doyle as Queen Eleanor, the performance will be given Wed., Feb. 18 at 8:15 p.m.

Other faculty members participating are: Nancy Davis (Princess Alais), Bruce Davis (King Philip), Terry Hartman (Richard), Wilfred Norris (Geoffrey), and William Hofelt (John).

The plot centers around the domestic troubles of the royal household and, in particular, the question of which son will inherit the throne after the death of their father. Intra-personal dynamics is the key descriptive phrase.

The same week Peter O'Toole and Katherine Hepburn will be leading the cast enacting the same roles at the local theatre.

Schoenherr Reports On Dorm Move

Dean Charles Schoenherr reports his office is working on arrangements for the occupancy of the new residence halls. There is no definite date for the move, but juniors and seniors will be offered the opportunity when the buildings are finished. Even if this is not possible until March, seniors, who want to spend their last months in the new buildings will be allowed to make the move. The living units accommodate eight students and upperclassmen may select their own living groups, Dean Schoenherr said.

The Friends of the Library 1970 Spring Catalogue from Van Bourgondien Bros. will be delivered soon for the "Bulbs for Books" campaign.

Editorial . . .

Peace & Goodwill . . .

Since January is the month of reviewing and renewing, a few thoughts and resolutions are in order. Let us not continue to live in a sugar-coated fantasy or in a world of suffocating reality. Let us face the actualities of war, hate, poverty, misunderstanding, pettiness and insincerity, and refuse to accept them as inevitable. As students of America who are demanding attention and protesting for change, we must set the example. We must rise above our middle class complacency and not be overpowered by reality, in order to practice what we preach: Peace and Goodwill Among Men. These words were not created solely for the Christmas and New Year season.

Think about it during your next psych-break.

'Round Campus

by Rich Smith

Did you notice how many students have returned to College Hill with haircuts and trimmed sideburns and even one intended hijacker, from flight 709, is missing his mustache. Do you think that this is a new fad for the New Decade, or just a little friendly encouragement from home?

To those seniors who had the pleasure of returning for the New Year to take their comprehensive examinations this week, we hope that you did well. We do realize, however, that you probably had little time to study due to your holiday celebrations and due to all of the meetings with the faculty before vacation to discuss these very examinations.

Congratulations are in order to the Registrar's Office for our extremely well planned registration. Last Tuesday and Wednesday were almost like a fantasy dream in comparison to the nightmares of previous experience. (The Class of '73 does not know what it has missed from past years.) Congratulations and thanks also go to the faculty who manned the tables and tried to solve all of the problems with so much understanding.

That jolly little man with the white beard who visited the Christmas Dance and various parties last month has returned to his Northern home, but lights are still glowing in some windows on campus. Those rooms must have decided that if they left their lights up, then they would be ready early for next year.

A reliable source recently informed me that when the maintenance force cleared the lower Cloister parking lot, they found two cars — one belonged to a student and the other car crushed beyond recognition.

If you are looking forward to second semester, then you should note on your calendar that the one and only Mitch Miller will be in Oller Hall Jan. 28. Students with colds and sore throats will not be admitted without permission from Mrs. Woods.

It has been brought to my attention that some excellent 8mm and Super 8 movies will be shown in the Ballroom Friday evening. These will all be the fantastic student projects from Principles of Film and Theatre Arts and will include documentaries, commentaries, and even one rated x. See you at the flicks!

SG Reports . . .

by Donna Knupp

Student Government has appointed Mike Long as student representative to the Task Force and John Loose as an alternate delegate on the College Center Board. Both appointees are juniors at Juniata.

Greg Adams reported that the Camera Club's equipment was deteriorating because it can't afford maintenance. To get more money, Eric Woodworth suggested that the club show more interest and support.

To help inform the student body on news of the legislature, a bulletin board will be maintained in Ellis Hall as suggested by Sally Palmer and Greg Adams.

SG will be working on ways to get students on the various committees within the Board of Trustees. The President's advisory Committee has been interested in getting faculty members on these committees also.

Right on to the Seventies . . .

by Dick Gregory

With the approach of the New Year, and this time a new decade, evaluations of the 1960's occupy countless inches of typeset. Some evaluators see the sixties as a disastrous decade, a decade which began with such hope and promise, but ended up marred by tragic assassinations, urban unrest, political failure and social chaos.

The past decade was not disastrous for black people, indeed all minority people. It was only a disaster for those who were trying to maintain the status quo. Black people, though still a long way from liberation, are holding more good jobs than ever before in history. A quick glance at television commercials will indicate what the sixties did for that industry. Though unemployment and underemployment still plague the black community, especially young blacks, there is little doubt that urban unrest prodded positive action in cities under pressure.

It is the same for other oppressed minorities in America. Not until the 1960's did people become at all aware that there is an Indian locked into the reservation who is not at all happy about his lot in life. The past decade began to clearly show the hypocrisy and inhumanity of teaching Indian children that Columbus discovered America while imposing the most degrading conditions of poverty upon them in a land their ancestors once occupied.

Not until the 1960's did people begin to see on television that there are hungry, starving people in America, black and white, who are not at all happy with their empty somachs. It took the past decade to make people begin to realize that Asian Americans are not happy; that Puerto Ricans are suffering from the results of arrogant discrimination; that women are not yet liberated in American society and given an equal status with men.

So the 1960's was the moment of truth in American history. The whole panorama of movements — from the civil rights movement to the peace movement to the student movement to the welfare mothers' movement to women's liberation — all represent the moment of truth about liberation in America which will determine the flow of action in the seventies. We have had movements in American history before — the labor movement, the suffrage movement, peace movements and so on. The past decade was the first time America experienced the beginnings of a human movement.

What many people call the disaster of the past decade, I see as perfectly natural and necessary for the restoration of national health. I liken the past decade to brain surgery on the national mind. Whenever a brain surgeon removes a brain tumor, the necessary surgery involved will leave a scar. Those who call the sixties distastrous are looking only at the scar and overlooking the positive surgery.

But the scar is necessary and inevitable. During the past decade, oppressed people in America began to move for themselves. They began to seek some identity on their own. In seeking identity, they read the glorious rhetoric of American democracy, the United States Constitution and the Declaration of Independence, and they began to identify with America. And in so doing, oppressed people found that America was the problem. A malignant growth stood in the way of implementing America's rhetoric of freedom. During the 1960's, oppressed people began to operate on the national mind, to remove the tumor from America, and seek full implementation of the United States Constitution. And, of course, there will be a scar.

Oppressed people know that they have always been shortchanged on America's promises. Suppose all my life a man has been changing my dollar with 98 cents. I have always been led to believe that the dollar is good. I must assume that the 98 cents change is the result of something wrong with the man doing the changing and not the dollar. My first problem is to get the man out of my way to know if my dollar is really good. If I still get 98 cents change for the dollar, after the man has been removed, then I will know that the dollar itself is no good.

Some young white radicals disagree with me about the validity of the Constitution. They insist that the Constitution is not valid and must be replaced with another governmental form. My only reply is that it is fine for them. They have had the full benefits of the Constitution all their lives, which places them in a different position than oppressed people in America. They are in a position of being able to evaluate Constitutional validity based on past experience. They have experienced what oppressed people have only been promised.

It is true that the black man has been the vanguard of the human movement in America. During the past decade, the black man, the civil rights movement, was the first to become visible. But the black movement was like the tip of an iceberg. As the movement became a human movement, the rest of that iceburg lurking under the surface of America's troubled waters began to become visible. As we move into the seventies, we do so in full knowledge of how big the problem really is.

For those truly committed to human liberation, the past decade was not a disaster. It was a bad decade for the U.S. government and the institutional church. Both claim to be committed to humanity. If the institutional church is not careful in the seventies, it will be crucified, and three days after the church's fall, the people will rise.

Happy decade to all! And a personal word to my readers. To guarantee yourself a happy decade, please try to learn how and what to eat.

Letter to the Editor

Ed. Note: The following letter was given to us as an indication of some segment of freshmen sentiment.

Dear Mom,

This place is a real joke. I swear to God. Registration was ridiculous. "Uh, you can't take this course or one-half your other courses because even though Juniata offers them, supposedly, we don't have the facilities to back up our catalogue. And even if our art department is deteriorating and our English department has two decent profs. (which you can't have because upperclassmen get priority) we do have Ellis Hall with its drapes (that hide the sun) and its Ethan Allen Furniture (with approximately 337 empty drawers) . . . Juniata has a fantastic science department, so why should the humanities majors care if they are getting the royal shaft? ?"

I am wasting time and $3,000 which isn't mine to waste any way. . I'd like to make a sordid collage of fetal pig arteries, lab tapes, and "Understanding the Old Testament" And oh yeah, there was a note for us when we got back from vacation. (From Mrs. Neeley—the dear woman): "Radiators are to be left on all the time . . . " do you know that every picture is curled, posters have fallen down and a dollar-ninety eight-cents worth of illustrator's board is ruined, not to mention the rock-hard-dried Cover Girl Noxema—utterly beyond being a medication—etc. etc." . . . "I'm coming back, and I want these floors clean"—good lord! Oh, French . . . "By the way, even though I never told you in class before, I'll tell you two days before the final, I expect you to have it read and I am holding you responsible for it." Thanks, why don't you give us some more presents?

I love Juniata . . . Juliata. Why doncha transfer, Laurel Adele, Bob, Carlos, Timmy, Kathy, Marcy, Steve, John, Chris, Ken, Rene, Sue, and 20 million other people? . . . Well, actually it's because Juniata is 33rd in the nation of small secondary schools and is so hard you can't get the grades to transfer. Besides what other college wants Judeo-Christian Heritage or Great Epochs in World Cultures? Maybe another school would like a "D" in French?

I think I'm going to major in trivia. They ought to make it a major. Then we could all pass our comprehensive examination and after paying $20 graduation fee (besides $12,000) we could get a degree and know nothing legitimate. On second thought, I'm going to major in snack bar raps.

Love,
I beenhad

To the editor:

That American society is in many ways sick is nothing new, but not since the Nazi vs. Jew jokes at our Class of '71 banquet last year have we been afforded so excellent a picture of the germs in our own body as Sunday's Dec. 14 Christmas Party for Under privileged Children!

The puppet show was beautiful, the kids loved it, and there was even a moral to it if one looked closely enough. If only the party could have continued in this spirit. But no, when the wrapping paper came off the gifts, what appeared but a "The Sound of Power" highpowered rifle for one under-privileged child, and for another lucky tot a Sheriff Sharpshooter kit complete with holster, two '45 pistols, jail keys, and a ten-gallon-hat that made the kid look like a pathetic combination of Wyatt Earp and Lyndon B. Johnson! (Lee Harvey Oswald?) The piped-in "For Unto us a Child is Born" was soon drowned out by exploding caps, the smell of pine needles replaced by the odor of gunpowder. One little girl ran out to the lounge across from the information desk and hid behind a chair, scared of the noise. Our thoughtful senior-class president volunteered at least a half-hour of his time helping his under-privileged child learn the basics of armed combat. (concentrating on point-blank shots to the forehead) The movie film I shot of the affair might just replace The Magician as a classic example of military indoctrination of the young!

The second act to PLASTIC GIFTS was, of course, PLASTIC FOOD. The artificial fruit punch and Hydrox cookies served rival the pale-faced children's diet of starch, soda pop, and candy bars for their lack of nutrituion. Regardless how difficult the problem seems, doesn't this college have responsibility to send men and women back to society even slightly more aware of what they do, than before they came?

John R. Sollenberger
Class of '71

To the editor:

I am writing to you regarding the behavior of a minority of your students during our recent basketball game on your campus. These students, to whom I have referred, were sitting in the section directly behind our bench. My coach and the other members of our team were verbally insulted constantly throughout the game. These verbal attacks were so intense and degrading that we all found it impossible to concentrate on the game. I found the actions of these students to be repugnant to my conception of respect for the feelings of others.

Certainly school spirit and fan support is an integral part of athletic competition, but it seems to me that the incidents to which I have referred far exceede the limits of fairness and good taste.

Ken Kirby
Center, Washington & Jefferson College Basketball Team

Letters Policy

Letters to the editor should be typed and double-spaced and should be submitted no later than 1:30 p.m. Monday. The editors reserve the right to print only non-libelous and responsible content and to edit all letters and commentaries submitted to the Juniatian. The staff also reserves the right to publish all full signatures unless the writer can supply very valid reasons for omitting his name.

The Juniatian

ASSOCIATED COLLEGIATE PRESS ACP — I.P. COLLEGIATE PRESS

Student Weekly at Juniata College
Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED NOV. 6, 1924

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891

ADELE ABOUTOK, editor-in-chief
BARBARA CLAAR, associate editor
JANET MASON, copy editor
TOM DIEHL, sports editor
J. PATRICK TYSON, news editor
JOEL SCHANTZ, business manager
RICHARD ABLARD, advertising manager
SUE BERMEL, layout editor

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Steve Crowley, Alice Horncane, Paul Kealy, Donna Reppelt, Rich Smith, Esther M. Doyle, Ronald Cherry, Flavia Helen Wyeth

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

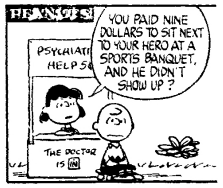
Circulation 2000 — Subscription $4.00 per year

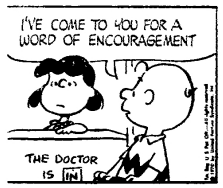
Vol. XLVI, No. 10 — January 13, 1970

Kaylor Gives Plans for Summer School

The Juniata Summer Sessions for 1970 offer a more balanced academic program than in previous years, according to Dr. Earl Kaylor, Jr., director. There are more offerings in the sciences and a better balance in the introductory courses. Special Topics for advanced students will also appeal to Elementary and Secondary School teachers. These include courses in psychology, biology and English. Also included are special summer courses in play production, humanisticpsychology and human development, as well as an introduction to philosophy titled "Existence and Inquiry." The Summer Sessions offer all core and required courses, Dr. Kaylor said. There will also be a ceramics course and an art studio course, both of which should appeal to adults from the community as well as Juniata students.

Registration for the Summer Sessions is April 13-17 for undergraduates and the tuition is $36.00 per credit hour.





Bubblegum Leads to Heroin: Mastication Can Be Fun

by joan eisenhart

Although bubble-gum is legalized, socially acceptable in some circles, and sold on the open market by friendly neighborhood- grocers, it is a popular opinion that bubble-gum leads to heroin. The argument for this opinion must be preceded, however, by three qualifications which refer to 1) the uses of both bubble-gum and heroin, 2) the number of people who progress from one to the other, 3) the series of steps involved in this progression.

It must be specified that it is only to the ordinary use of this gum, that of chewing, that this connection holds. Others uses of bubble-gum, such as its employment in practical jokes, in holding pieces of paper or light wood together, and in plugging up holes in plaster, have no relevance in this case. This particular instance deals only with the habit of chewing for the sake of chewing pleasure and not for any external play uses. It also should be clarified that the chewing of bubble-gum leads only to the use of heroin by a human being and not to the production through excessive mastication.

It is also true that not all people who are avid gum chewers will become heroin addicts. Many are content with the simple satisfaction achieved in chewing gum and do not feel tempted to try for a different or more intesified experience. One gum user that I know has admitted that she chews as many as ten pieces at one time in order to make her mouth relatively immobile. In doing this she has little control of her oral functions, and her chewing movements are slowed down by the quantity of substance on which they must act. Her tongue and, gradually, her teeth become imbedded in the gum and all begin to move in one slow, mechanical motion. She seldom talks while in this state, but when she does the words come out slowly and a bit slurred. Yet this bubble-gum chewer achieves such great satisfaction from her experience that she reverts to it rather than search for a replacement.

Children who attain the gum-chewing habit from their parents often gain a healthful respect for the habit. Because gum is always available and because gum-chewing is allowed in the house, part of the challenge which often accompanies the advancement to heroin is missing. Such children accept bubble-gum as an ordinary nicety, like chocolate cake, and as, no more. There is no concentrated thrill or challenge from chewing gum either, as there is with the person who enjoys chewing ten pieces at once. Gum chewing, for them, is a well integrated part of everyday living.

The third stipulation that must be made in supporting the generalized statement is that the use of bubble-gum does not lead directly to the use of heroin, but proceeds, in a series of advancements, through stimulants and depressants. The bubble-gum chewer moves through cigarette smoking, drinking, smoking marijuana and hashish, to dropping benzedrine, dexedrine and acid, to snorting or shooting heroin. Although a bubble-gum chewer may skip one or another of these progressions, he is spurred by social norms and regulations to the investigation of some, if not all, of these habits.

A child who chews gum associates with others who have attained the habit, and this identification creates a closely knit group. Once the child has this identity, it is very hard for anyone but himself to sever him from the group. He is quite likely to meet some who have tried the bigger stuff: hence, his introduction to the habit of smoking. As the child gets older, the same process repeats itself in introducing him to drinking, illegal smoking, and drug use.

Often the social norms are responsible for forming the habits, good or bad, of the people brought up within a particular culture. If the bad aspects of gum are not pointed out, and indiscriminate permissiveness and unlimited chewing is allowed, chances are that the same may eventually apply to smoking, drinking, and perhaps the use of drugs. When there is an understanding between the parents and the child, when the child is made aware of the good and bad aspects of gum and allowed to choose whether to chew or not, this leniency is specific and understood to apply only to one particular habit. However, often the parents, while not wishing their children to be gum-chewers, realizing the possible hazards of it, turn their backs and pretend that they don't know what's going on. This alleviates the guilt of the parents when their children develop these habits, yet does nothing to aid the child who has a tendency toward gum-chewing.

A negative factor influential in coaxing a child to chew gum is that it is so often a social taboo. Many parents, because of dentists' and orthodontists' reports that chewing gum pulls out fillings, lossens braces and is generally bad for the teeth, refuse bubble-gum to their children. In retaliation their children chew behind their backs. This process, known as "sneaking it," when developed in early life becomes invaluable to the child who finds it necessary to defy his parents in later life. A child who "sneaks it" in the bubble-gum stage can often be betrayed by a close perusal of the furnishings in his room. More than likely, there will be wads of gum, reminiscent of the times his parents walked into his room unannounced, stuck under his desk and his bed frame, behind his mirror and in the top drawer of his bureau.

It is in schools, however, that the greatest number of used chewing gum wads are found in the strangest places. The ban on gumchewing in most public, parochial and private schools is probably the most commonly ignored regulation. It precedes the ban usually found in high schools on smoking, and in college on drinking and the use of drugs. Therefore, if one has learned in his earlier days successfully to evade the bubble-gum authorities, he finds it easier to get away with other illegalities as he gets older. When the thrill of hiding a wad of gum in your cheek, so that the teacher won't see it, has gone, it is replaced by the secret smoke in the rest room during lunch. This is followed by the thrill of sneaking a six-pack into your dorm room; the intrigue of rolling joints behind a locked door; or of popping a fast two-trip tab.

Gum also comes in a variety of flavors ranging from mild to hot and spicy, designed to fit the personality of every bubble-gum gourmet. The same assurances are made with cigarettes and alcohol. The promises made for a certain alcoholic beverage that's a "completely unique experience" and for a certain cigarette that invites you to "come up, come all the way up" are also often used in reference to pot, hash, or drugs.

Bubble-gum is often bought not for the flavor of the gum itself but for the wealth of surprises it brings with it — jokes, cards, prizes, and coupons. Drugs are peddled in much the same way — not for the taste of the drug but for the high it brings. (An avid gum chewer that I know admits that he buys the gum only for the cards in the pack, and he really gets annoyed when he finds that the top card has gotten messed up from being packed next to the gum.) In this way it often happens that innocent victims who are curious about the "high" involved get messed up with a drug which they don't particularly want because what it offers seems better than all the others. And for those who can't adjust to inflation and changing monetary values, junk and narcotics are frequently sold in the nickel quantities familiar to a pack of bubble-gum.

There are those who could be said to be addicted to bubble-gum, and they often share symptoms with heroin addicts. Both are nervous people and hope to satisfy their nerves by chewing gum or by shooting dope. The main difference is that a nervous heroin addict only intensifies his condition by the increased use of the drug. Both bubble-gum and drug users are concerned with gaining the attention of others. One finds it as hard to ignore a cow-chomping, sugary smelling, slobbery gum chewer who crackles as he speaks, as he does the dreamy, bleary-eyed heroin addict who moves and speaks in jerky, sporadic intervals.

While bubble-gum is only psychologically addictive and heroin creates both a physical and emotional need, gum chewing is extended through several of the stages. Throughout the developing process from gum chewing to heroin shooting, bubble-gum forms the links in the habit evolution, and in some cases even accompanies particular stages. Drinkers and smokers often chew gum to rid their mouths of the after-taste which keeps

Contd on page 4

It wasn't too long ago that Bill Leith's future was still a big question mark.

Today he's a man with the answers.

Bill Leith started as one of our management trainees shortly after graduating from Lake Forest.

Two years later he was an administrative assistant, handling new business for our Equity Management service.

Just last June he became our youngest Assistant Investment Officer.

His job is a big one.

Our customers are likely to ask many searching questions before entrusting their money to us.

Bill has the answers.

Responsibility?

A small fortune's worth.

But then we have lots of responsibility to hand out.

If you'd like to know more about the opportunities at Marine Midland, please add your name to our schedule in the placement office.

We'd like to see you on. FEBRUARY 16, 1970

MARINE MIDLAND GRACE TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK
Marine Midland Building, 140 Broadway, New York, N.Y. 10015

We seem to be the only bank in town that thinks $7,000 of your money is worth investing.

That's about all you need to open an Equity Management Account. (Ask anywhere else and you're likely to find they're not very interested in anything under $25,000. In fact, don't be surprised if they think of $75,000 as a modest starter.)

What's more, once you've come up with the first $7,000, you can add as little as about $2,300. On the first day of any month.

This is not a mutual fund—your money is invested in about 20 stocks which are actually carried in your name. This means that if, for any reason, you decide to withdraw, you can take your stock in kind or you can elect to take cash instead.

Our Equity Management Service is a very unusual idea, so there are probably several questions you would like to ask before you entrust us with your money. We have a man who'll be pleased to answer them all—Bill Leith. Call 943-6192. Or write him at our Trust Department, 250 Park Avenue, New York, New York 10017.

MARINE MIDLAND GRACE TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK

END OF A DECADE AT JUNIATA COLLEGE...

Even pre-60's is this shot of the Academic Building (now officially known as Good Hall). Formerly the science center (can you believe it-), this was the site of many campus thrills as burning experiments were thrown from third-story windows.

Dynamic Processes Of College Change Little during '60's

by Ronald Cherry
Professor of Economics

Has Juniata changed in the last decade? An easy question— if! If you know what Juniata College is. Clearly the physical plant has changed. Even a cursory observation by an incompetent empiricist (there are no other kind) would yield this fact. Clearly the student body has changed —its collective dimensions as recorded by even so "nouveau" a register as "Black Tom" will point out this triviality. Have the faculty changed— or the administrators changed? A 1960 yearbook lists not only different names, but even for those names that are the same, the pictures are—well, different.

But has Juniata College changed? I think not. The college is primarily a dynamic process (the particulars of which are incidental) and this process has not changed nearly as much as one might hope. Ten year ago education was important, and it remains so. Learning, if it happens at all, comes about in spite of the education. Ten years ago students sought a social certification — a diploma — as recognition of four years penal service in the feudal baronies of the diverse departments. They still demand such certification — although they admittedly are working on some sort of a Bill of Rights. Ten years ago the pre-professional mentality dictated practical courses in the how-to-make-a-living game. It still does, although the newer name is "relevance," and the game is one of help-humanity-through-better-living.

Has Juniata changed in ten years? Alas—not much, not much. That it has not attests to the tenacity of social institutions and the persistence of a materialistic philosophy. And, in all honesty, I wonder if any of us have the energy to make it otherwise.

"The Hole in the Wall"
UP TOWN CUT-RATE
Lunch — Drugs — Ice Cream
1229 Mifflin St.

M & M RESTAURANT
On Rt. 22 East of Huntingdon Motor Inn
643-2640

Sand in the Sixties: Refining Process Has Three Steps

by Esther M. Doyle
Professor of English

In reply to the question, "What have the sixties been like for you at Juniata?", one can only answer from a particular point of view. If I were to describe in one word these past ten years of my life, I would say, "abrasive." Lest you think that abrasiveness is a negative quality, remember that only through the abrasiveness of sand is the wood made smooth, the pearl made lucent, and the telescope lens made clear.

My sixties divided themselves almost equally into three periods: the period of scholarship, the period of administration, and the period of student confrontation.

When the sixties began, the period of scholarship was already underway. I had spent a year at Northwestern University working as a graduate assistant in the department of interpretation at Northwestern University. Nothing in years had been so exciting as the opportunity to teach speech and drama majors. The rubbing against the brilliant minds of some of my colleagues and professors was abrasive, as the grain of sand must be to the pearl. But when I began to feel the polishing process at work, I knew that my pearl needed to grow.

Juniata granted me a second year's leave. Finally, on a day in July, 1961, the chairman of the department said to me, "You have passed your doctoral examinations." Back to Juniata! But I was not finished. There yet remained the dissertation. The abrasiveness of almost two years of trial and error plus a third of writing and re-writing hurt more than the time of study for no longer were there colleagues to share it. I was working alone. Day by day I persevered to the end. In May, 1964, I successfully defended my dissertation. My pearl was polished. Alas! It was not a pearl of great price. It was more, perhaps, like the baroque pearl, irregular and lopsided, but it was my own.

Now I moved into the second period of my decade and the administration of a department. It was during this time that great change came to the English department. Dr. Harold Binkley, retired from the chairmanship but still teaching in a department he had fostered for more than a quarter of a century, was replaced by Professor Donald Hope, fresh from the University of Michigan with new ideas for courses and curriculum. I moved away from the teaching of courses in speech and theatre to those in literature. Sometimes this process hurt, as sandpaper must hurt wood. Then within a few months the department collapsed. Professor Briggs moved from English to a department of speech and theatre. Professor Hope resigned to take a position in Massachusetts. In a tragic moment Dr. Binkley had a fatal heart attack just four months before he had planned to end his teaching career.

I was alone, the sole survivor of an otherwise non-existent department. I had already been asked to be acting chairman but what did I know of the ways of administration? How could I lead in the formation of a new department with a new curriculum? Fortunately for me, all of the English staff who came to Juniata in those years, Richard Hunter, Ralph Church, William Hofelt, and Jack Troy, were concerned people. We began together to build a new structure which is constantly under examination. Thanks to their generosity the abrasiveness was mild, like very fine sandpaper. As a group our ideas did not always agree, but as adversaries we were amiable. The rough edges of the wood began to be smooth as the second period of my sixties closed with the announcement of Dr. Ellis that he would retire from the presidency.

The third period, student confrontation, began with the trustee dinner for the faculty and the retiring president. For many years a student here and there had talked to a faculty member now and then about his discontent with the way things were. But only towards the end of 1968 did students find an effective way to be heard. With the help of administration, professors, and townspeople a group of students planned what we have since come to know as a confrontation. Marta Daniels, as chairman, presented to a group of trustees and faculty a statement of student concern about Juniata's relevance (or lack of it) to the community of which it is a part. Student speakers ranged from freshmen to seniors, from one who has known Juniata only a few months to one who has returned to it after a year abroad. Speakers who represented the community including a black man and a poor woman living on public assistance all spoke with dignity and decorum, earnestly and convincingly. This was a new kind of abrasiveness — very gentle for the moment — but it was beginning to polish the telescope lens through which I would look into the future.

Often in life one wishes to escape from the abrasive process which, as it polishes, also wears away. Perhaps once or twice in a lifetime such an opportunity comes. Mine arrived last spring in the form of a sabbatical leave during which I travelled in Europe. Ah, the freedom to take each day's adventure as it comes! The joy of new sights and new sounds in old cultures! Free from abrasion at last! But for all too short a time. The work of editing a book of studies in interpretation completed by the end of my leave was one of the most abrasive of tasks.

Then back to Juniata for the last year of the decade. Thoughts of a quiet time in one's last years before retirement quickly vanished when I learned that the faculty had elected me to a task force. Its assignment was to examine the entire structure of Juniata College and make recommendations for needed changes. But a lens, like a pearl and a piece of wood, also needs sand to polish it. Sometimes the sand can be too hard, hurting rather than polishing.

During the last semester my telescope lens has received a gash or two as a result of angry student takeovers, confrontations, and demands, but in the day-to-day polishing that comes through honest discussion and a developing trust I can begin to see through the lens more clearly. I cannot yet see the light of the farthest star towards which Juniata is moving but I'll keep on hoping that my lens will be made clear enough so that one day we will see that star. I realize that all life is abrasive, that only as we are willing to let the sand do its work will the pearl become lucent, the wood smooth, and the lens clear.

Bubblegum Leads to Heroin Mastication Can Be Fun

Contd from page 3

them from drinking another drink or smoking another cigarette. Even pot or hash smokers chew gum to momentarily quench the dryness felt in their mouths and the hunger they experience in their stomachs. However, bubble-gum doesn't do much for the heroin user since he usually hasn't the energy to chew. At this point we are so far from the "unique use" of bubble-gum that it has become "of no use" to the addict. It is as yet impossible to get "Juicy Fruit" through a hypodermic needle, and heroin addicts have not developed a successful way of snorting "Double Bubble."

THE JUNIATIAN

Vol. XLVI No. 11 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | January 30, 1970

Food-Glorious Food . . .

New Co-Management Stresses Teamwork

by Paul Keely

Aside from some of the usual changes in classes and schedules which accompany any new semester, Juniata students have been noticing two other different developments since last semester: there's a new face in the dining room and there's a kind of new "life" in the College food service. But the first person to de-emphasize the connection between the two is the owner of that face, Jack Williamson.

Sure, there is a relationship between Mr. Williamson's presence and the changes in dining hall operations, but it's not all that simple. Teamwork is the thing Williamson stresses: "Any improvement demonstrated since the end of first semester is the result of teamwork on everybody's part" — everybody, he says, from the dishwashers, line service, and cooks, to chef George Endres and food service manager Charles Bliven. "It takes a team to do a job — our staff works with us, not for us."

A representative of Crotty Bros. Food Management Service, Inc. (which is based in Boston), Williamson began work on the JC campus Jan. 19, as co-manager with Mr. Bliven. Since then they have been working within a framework of cooperation and teamwork in order to provide Juniata students with a food service of which the students themselves can be proud. One intent is to improve the speed of service to students; but they warn that with changes in serving procedure there may be some initial slowness until everyone becomes acquainted with the new methods — hopefully merely a temporary inconvenience for a permanent improvement, though.

With many more changes in the offing as the semester progresses the potential here is to be maximized to the point where Juniata will be serving as a "model school" for the company's district college and university food service supervisors who will be gathering on this campus from all over the country in order to attend an annual spring management seminar sponsored by Crotty Bros.

The co-managers are also interested in instilling pride in displaying food to its best adbantage. "Attractiveness of food display," they point out, "is secondary to its quality, but certainly not unimportant." the basic aim is to provide a "wide selection of nutritionally-balanced meals appealing to a broad spectrum of students here at Juniata."

Menus, therefore, which are designed by the dietetic department at the company's home office to suit particular types of schools, should provide students with a most "cosmopolitan" selection of foods, offering an increase in variety and choices. A day's menu would then be organized something as follows:

Breakfast is to include choices of four or five juices, four or five fruits (two always fresh), an egg variety, a wheat variety (e.g. pancakes, waffles, french toast), a hot cereal, a choice of bacon, ham, or sausage, with, of course, the usual beverages and peanut butter and jelly with assorted breads at every meal.

Lunch is to involve choices of four or five desserts, four to six different salads, soup, a hot meat entree, an "extended" entree (e.g. meated casserole items, spaghetti, meat loaf, salisbury steak), a hot sandwich, or a "deluxe" (e.g. club) sandwich, two vegetables, two potatoes, with beverages, etc.

The evening meal will follow the same basic pattern as lunch with a main meat item, a "fabricated" meat item, and — within steam table limitation — a third item, preferably meatless, with soup, vegetables, salads, and desserts.

It is planned that every Saturday night will feature a steak dinner (e.g sirloin strip, eight ounce chopped sirloin), in all cases making use of the top choice grade of meat. Also Sunday afternoons there will be a special meal of the students' own design, a buffet or family style affair for instance. Planning for such will be done by a food committee presently being organized through Dean Charles Schoenherr's office. With perhaps one representative from each dormitory, the food committee will meet weekly and will be responsible for ideas and recommendations.

Since a two-way flow of communication is essential between the students and the College food service, Williamson and Bliven expect to meet students informally on a group basis, in order to communicate to the student what he can expect from food service as well as to solicit constructive suggestions (not mere complaints, he says). Williamson has been pleased with the responses of Juniatians he himself has talked with in the dining room, and he hopes that they have been honest with him. He points out that the food service office door will always be open to students.

In answer to possible protests about the financial implications of such developments in the food service, Williamson and Bliven explain that it is actually less expensive to provide a wholesome food program. Their intention is to get the best value for the students' food dollar, thereby cutting downon waste and "ill will." Another future necessity is that of reinstituting and enforcing the meal ticket procedure in order to cut down on meals "handed out" to those not participating financially in the College Board Plan.

The food service does intend to work closely with student functions for the provision of eats at various promotional enterprises such as the upcoming Casino Night, Mid-winter Formal, Colloquy, etc., this semester. These extra expenditures will be absorbed, of course, by the various organizational budgets.

Williamson is a native of Portland, Maine, and holds a B.A. degree in psychology from the University of New Hampshire. His food service experience began with five to six years in part-time and full-time kitchen work as everything from dishwasher to night chef. For a year and a half he was an operations supervisor for Service Systems Corporation in the Bell Telephone Co. of Pennsylvania cafeterias in Philadelphia. Before coming to Juniata he served as food service manager with Saga Administrative Corporation at Wesleyan University, in Middletown, Connecticut.

Williamson (l.) and Bliven (r.) are head of the all-out effort to give Juniata students better food and service.

Touring Choir To Give Initial Concert Feb. 8

Plans for a Feb. 8 initial concert and the 1970 annual tour by the Juniata Concert Choir have been announced by Bruce A. Hirsch, chairman of the Department of Music at Juniata College and director of the Concert Choir.

The 61-member mixed ensemble will perform an initial concert at the College next Sunday evening, Feb. 8, in conjunction with the Juniata Chamber Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Robert F. King, associate professor of music. The program will include works by Ralph Vaughn Williams, Johannes Brahams, Henry Purcell, Edward Grieg and Franz Schubert, and will begin at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Auditorium. Admission will be free.

Professor Hirsch announced plans for the 1970 annual tour by the Juniata Concert Choir, April 4 - 12. The itinerary will include performances at the Roaring Spring Church of the Brethern April 4, at the Calvary United Methodist Church in Lemoyne April 5, at the North Patomic Middle School and the Hagerstown Church of the Brethren April 6, at the Clearspring (Md.) High School and the Waynesboro Church of the Brethren April 7, at the Waynesboro Area Senior High School and the John Dickinson High School (Wilmington, Del.) April 8, at the Calvary Lutheran Church in Cranford, N.J. April 9, at the Emmanuel Baptist Church in Ridgewood, N.J. April 10, and at the Greentree Church of the Brethren in Oaks, Pa., April 12.

Correction

"Lion in Winter" will now be Tuesday, Feb. 10 so that students can see the faculty production before the movie.

Ellis Humanities Series to Highlight Coming Attractions

Three outstanding public events in the coming months at Juniata College will bring to the area such noted performers as stage star Bramwell Fletcher, comedian Dick Gregory and the widely acclaimed National Players. All events will be free to public audiences on a first-come, first-serve basis as announced.

The first event, scheduled for the evenings of Feb. 5 and 6 at 8:15 p.m., will bring to Juniata's Oller Auditorium the distinguished international actor Bramwell Fletcher, who played the role of Henry Higgins in the Broadway production of "My Fair Lady" opposite Julie Andrews.

Fletcher has gained recent international acclaim for his theatrical portrayal of Bernard Shaw, which critics have hailed as "equal to Hal Holbrook's Mark Twain." A second Fletcher presentation, entitled "A Passion for Living," borrows from the writings of poets and playwrights ranging form Sophocles to Ferlinghetti to describe, in Fletcher's words, "The Spirit of Youth," "The Absurd

Cont'd on page 3

Calvert N. Ellis

Juniata Receives Three-fold Assists From Shell Co.

Dr. John N. Stauffer, announced Wednesday the receipt of $1,500 from the Shell Companies Foundation, Inc., in the form of three grants known as Shell Assists.

The funds represent separate grants of 500 each specified for use in each of three areas: institutional use at the discretion of the president; general faculty development at the discretion of the academic dean of the College; and additional professional development of individual faculty members in the College's natural sciences and mathematics division.

Taken individually, the grants recognize the importance of support for professional advancement of individuals in maintaining and developing the quality and strength of the institution: taken as a whole, the Shell Assists Program recognizes the national challenge to increase the general support of higher education.

The first two Shell Assists in the tripartite grant will be administered by President Stauffer and Juniata's academic dean, Dr. Donald M. Rockwell. The third Assist will be administered by Dr. J. Peter Trexler, professor of geology and chairman of Juniata's Department of Natural Sciences and Mathematics.

The program of Shell Assists was established in 1958 by the Shell Companies Foundation, Inc. to aid privately supported colleges and universities.

The first meeting of the Brass Ensemble will be Monday, Feb. 2 at 4 p.m. in Swigart basement. All persons who have played chamber music or are interested should see Dr. King and leave a copy of their schedule showing free hours.

Phase II . . .

Dana Foundation Gives Endowed Professorships

Juniata College has received a $250,000 challenge grant for endowed professorships from the Charles A. Dana Foundation, according to Dr. John N. Stauffer, president of the College.

Dr. Stauffer told students and faculty attending Juniata's annual Spring Semester Convocation of the grant, which is the initial gift in the second phase of the College's "Margin of Difference" capital fund raising effort. It is the largest grant ever made by a foundation to the Juniata endowment.

Acceptance of the grant by Juniata is the initial step in the establishment of four Charles A. Dana Supported Professorships at the College. The second step will consist of the College's efforts to raise funds to match the Dana grant, providing an additional $250,000 in endowment funds to help create and maintain the professorships. It is anticipated that at least two of the positions will become effective in September, 1971.

With its acceptance of the grant, Juniata College becomes the fifteenth educational institution in the nation to benefit from Dana Supported Professorships. Other Pennsylvania colleges holding Dana professorship are Dickinson, Franklin and Marshall and Lafayette Colleges.

The Charles A. Dana Supported Professorships are distinguished from fully-endowed professorships where the entire salary is paid out of the income from endowed funds. The Foundation established this program in 1966.

In announcing receipt of the grant to Juniata faculty and students. Dr. Stauffer stated, "We are deeply indebted to Mr. Charles A. Dana, the distinguished industrialist and philanthropist, for this gift. We are grateful, too, to Dr. Henry W. Littlefield, vice president of the Foundation, for his part in obtaining this grant which will enable us to advance the quality of teaching at Juniata. It is good to know that in future years four of Juniata's ablest faculty members will be identified as Charles A. Dana Supported Professors."

The President added, "It is especially encouraging to receive the Dana grant at this time when we are launching the second phase of our 'Margin of Difference' effort. The funds represent ten per cent of our $2.5-million objective in this phase. This total amount will be committed to endowment for support of teaching and for increased assistance to worthy students. The Dana grant fits perfectly the first of these two commitments."

President Stauffer announced last December the successful completion of Juniata's $2.8-million first phase in the "Margin of Difference" program, that goal having been reached nearly one year ahead of schedule. The total received in Phase One was $3,008,645.

Regarding the second phase of the eight-year development program, Dr. Stauffer said Juniata would seek "to cultivate and obtain the support of individuals and foundations having special reasons to be concerned about Juniata's educational strength and usefulness. We shall be counting on a number of major gifts, especially to the endowment fund, totaling at least $2.5 million."

The third phase of the development program, with a goal of $4 to $5 million in additional endowment funds, will begin in 1973 and will lead up to the College's Centennial in 1976.

"This amount is urgently needed," Dr. Stauffer explained, "to support the educational experiences of our students in the current academic year."

Editorial . . .

Whatever Happened...

"Just think how much better I could have done this semester if I had only studied a little more!"

"What's the difference if I study and get good grades? They don't mean anything anyway!"

These are questions which many students are presently pondering as they gaze at their little yellow slips of paper. How much truth is there in the statement that we can do better if we study more or that grades don't mean anything? Without concrete facts or statistics it is difficult to formulate a reliable answer. Nevertheless much can be discovered simply by listening to comments and discussions of fellow students. Often a student, who very seldom goes to class and doesn't study except for a couple of the more important tests, will come out with a 2.5 or a 3.0 when a conscientious student, who is interested in getting good grades, will come out with a lower grade point average. How can this happen? Just as often, or more so, several conscientious students will do well during the semester and then end up with a B or a C when they have earned an A in strict percentiles.

These things do indicate that grades don't necessarily reflect the amount of work a student does. The failing of our grading system rests on the fact that when dealing with people there can be no standardized system of evaluation. Each student's ability and interest varies. each course is not of equal difficulty and each professor does not have the same philosophy of grades and tests, attitude toward students or even the same grading system. With all these (and more) variables how can the grading system possibly be consistent? How can colleges maintain academic freedom and at the same time achieve a fair and consistent grading system?

Questions such as these were brought up during Discussion Day and seemingly have been forgotten. However, they are important enought not to be forgotten and it is up to students to initiate action for change.

'Round Campus

by Rich Smith

To those of you who have just joined the Juniata College community, we of the Juniatian welcome you. You will quickly learn many of the well-known traits of typical JC students, such as our famous short lines, excellent food and perfect attendance at convocations.

Ellis Hall has recently had a big addition to its Card Room. This addition is in the form of two machines which make strange noises and have bells that ring very loud. If you do not believe the strange sounds, go into the quiet Blue Room next door and listen. One freshman girl is known to call these machines "Pennies," but that nickname does not make much cents to us.

A visitor to the campus on one of those recent frosty nights when the Trimmermen were scheduled for a hardwood contest, would have found a not-too-silent reception in Memorial Gym. Much of the noise comes from the north-east corner of the mezzanine. The J-Band or "Pep" Band have added a great deal to the atmosphere on the home courts. Though the membership may vary from game to game their presence is greatly appreciated.

Congratuiations are due to the Indians' J.V. basketball team who, under the direction of assistant coach Tom McCormick, have completed over half of their season without a defeat. This could be a good omen of future basketball seasons as these roundballers join the varsity ranks next season.

NONCOMMITAL AMERICA

by Dick Gregory

The recent surrender of Biafra to the Federal Nigerian Government provided one more example of America's superficial commitment to human need. In the wake of Biafra's fall, America rushed in with the offer of food and supplies, only to be rebuffed by a clear indication that "blood money" was not welcome.

My immediate reaction was to raise the question, why don't we bring the food and supplies back home and distribute them to starving Indians? There is no doubt that food and essentials are needed by Indians who have been forced by governmental betrayals into the worse possible conditions of poverty, though it is a serious question whether or not such assistance is welcome in the light of those past betrayals.

America has long articulated a fidelity to treaty commitments. Justification for prolonging the war in Vietnam always ends up speaking of such commitments. Our State Department has justified American presence in Vietnam on the grounds that "the North Vietnamese have repeatedly violated the 1954 Geneva Accords." The fact that we did not sign that treaty or that America has repeatedly violated those accords is seemingly unimportant.

President Johnson was fond of saying that America must keep her commitments in southeast Asia or the world would lose faith in the promises of our country. Not too many years ago, Richard Nixon spoke of the evils of Russia because she had not kept any treaty or agreement signed with her. You can trust the Communists to be Communists and all that.

But when America's domestic treaty commitment is put to the test with regard to agreements with Indian tribes, democracy fails miserably. In an excellent new book by Vine Deloria Jr., CUSTER DIED FOR YOUR SINS: An Indian Manifesto (The Macmillan Company, 1969), the sad history of America's arrogant betrayal of Indian rights is revealed most clearly. Says Deloria: "America has yet to keep one Indian treaty or agreement despite the fact that the United States government signed over four hundred such treaties and agreements with Indian tribes. It would take Russia another century to make and break as many treaties as the United States has already violated."

Deloria also reminds a hypocritical government that the last treaty to be broken, the Pickering Treaty of 1794 with the Seneca tribe of the Iroquis nation, was violated at the very time America's bloody action in Vietnam was being justified as a commitment-keeping responsibility.

Self-interest is a more accurate description of America's true motives than fidelity to commitments. Indian treaties were originally made either to keep peace on the frontier or to acquire land for white settlers. Both reflect strong self-interest motives. When foreign conquest appeared to be an imminent possibility, the United States was quick to sign agreements with Indians to make sure they were on the right side.

"During the darkest days of the Revolution," says Vine Deloria, "in order to keep the Indians from siding with the British and completely crushing the new little nation, the United States held out equality and statehood to the Delewares and any other tribes they could muster to support the United States. But when the shooting was all over the Delewares were forgotten in the rush to steal their land."

The same thing happened during the War of 1812, when the United States government was eager to make sure Indians would not side with Great Britain. A treaty was signed with the Wyandots, Delewares, Shawanese, Senecas, and Miamies engaging them "to give their aid to the United States in prosecuting the war against Great Britain, and such of the Indian tribes as still continue hostile . . ." What was the final result of such honorable treaty commitments? Deloria gives the answer in these words: "Within a generation these same tribes that fought and died for the United States against Great Britain were to be marched to the dusty plains of Oklahoma, dropped in an alien and disease-ridden land, and left to disappear."

Indians are still denied hunting and fishing rights, rights guaranteed by original treaties, but not honored by government. And they remain the long suffering victims of outright land thefts, frequently for construction and transportation interests, again in violation of treaties made in good faith.

America's commitment to treaties any place in the world cannot be taken seriously until full commitment to treaty obligations are faced at home. And America's dealings with Indians reflect to the world her true motives. "America has always been a militantly imperialistic world power," says Vine Deloria, "eagerly grasping for economic control over weaker nations." America's dealings with Indian tribes are a superb illustration of such motives.

Imperialistic interests and military solutions go hand in hand. America's military obsession has dangerous precedent in world history. Speaking of the greatness of Egypt in the early days of human history, Paul Christian said:

"By means of settlement in Greece and Asia, Egypt promoted civilization. The great lawgivers and philisophers of antiquity admitted that they went to Egypt to learn wisdom. Peace, that majestic quality of all great states, was held a honor there, because peace, the companion of justice, is also the nurse of genius. When Egypt had her first war-like pharaoh, in the 19th dynasty, she said goodbye to the traditions that had laid the foundations of her greatness. When she conscripted soldiers for ends other than those of defense, she taught her neighbors to measure her strengths and to estimate the extent of her armaments.

"At first Egypt owed her great victories, taking her even to the Ganges, to the fame which preceded her. Conquering races who first without being drawn to war by any necessity in their nature only teach other races how to conquer them. Sooner or later they fall, conquered in their turn with their trophies among the ruins that they tried to build up again. That will always be what human glory comes to.

"The glory that was Egypt was to disappear under the heel of the Persians; as the Persians, in their turn, disappeared before the Greeks; who then themselves fell to Rome. And Rome finally fell to the barbarian hordes bringing a new world with them on the waves of their irresistible ocean."

The torrents of demand for world justice flood the American conscience. America will either become the ship of hope for all humanity or drown in her own selfish preoccupation.

Going, Going, Gone . . .

Disenchanted Students: Education or Institution??

by Lynn Wuesthoff

Rumor has it that there is a larger than usual number of students leaving Juniata College. Yet the Office of Student Affairs and the Registrar's Office do not see any such trend. So what are we to believe? Every day we hear the grumbling of our fellow students (and ourselves), and we listen to people with plans for transferring, or for just dropping out. And most of us know at least one person who won't be back for the new semester.

Why are students dissatisfied with Juniata? Are their reasons legitimate; are they centered about basic inadequacies in the college system or some failure on their part to adapt to college life? The answer to these questions would not only be valuable in assessing education at Juniata College, but could also be helpful to its students in putting important issues into focus.

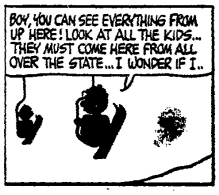
An often-heard complaint concerns the social life here at JC. What it boils down to is simply this: students need a break in their academic schedule, and there is nowhere to go to escape the hassel. Ellis Hall is provided for this purpose, but a steady diet of Ellis Hall is enough to drive anyone back to their books.

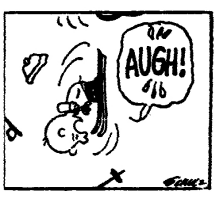
Even more can be heard from dissatisfied students about the actual curriculum offered. Juniata College is without a doubt science oriented—and those of us who expect the liberal arts college we see advertised in the catalogue are soon disappointed. And someone who wants to major in a field other than the sciences finds himself in required science courses that are more directed at turning out majors than at rounding out their education.

One characteristic of Juniata's campus that first impresses and overwhelms its students is its isolation from the rest of everything. Many students will admit to having lost track of world and national affairs to such a degree that it is almost shameful. The library does supply news magazines and papers, so what causes this attitude of out-of-touchness with the rest of the world? It is true, one student said, that a college should isolate its students somewhat to create a more academic atmosphere, but what Juniata tends to do is to carry this isolation to a point where it is no longer functional in aiding education. Any institution of higher learning should have as a primary goal the desire to produce educated people who can benefit by their years of schooling and become better prepared to take their place in society. Does Juniata College fulfill this basic requirement?

In speaking to Dean Schoerherr, I came to realize something that I found to be very enlightening. He said that of those people who are leaving more than ever before have admitted a disenchantment or disillusionment with education in general. These students, he said, are more honest about themselves than in the past, and some willingly admit their lack of readiness for education on the college level.

So the question that comes up now goes further than, "What is wrong with Juniata College, and why are so many students leaving?" It is becoming, "What are we looking for in a college education, and if we fail to find it, just where does the fault lie, with ourselves, with the institution, or with the way these two elements inter-relate?"





Convocation

Faculty and Students welcome,
This new semester begins blah blah blah
. . . .Love Freedom Justice blah. . . .blah
. . . . . Peace . . . . . .blah. . . . Margin of Difference . . . . . .nuclear war. . . . .blah money. . . . blah blah. . . . money. . .
relevance commitment . . . .
JUNIATA. . . . .

Rex Morris

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College

Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED NOV. 6, 1924

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891

ADELE ABOUTOK, editor-in-chief
BARBARA CLAAR, associate editor
JANET MASON, copy editor
TOM DIEHL, sports editor

J. PATRICK TYSON, news editor
JOEL SCHANTZ, business manager
RICHARD ABLARD, advertising manager
SUE BERMEL, layout editor

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Steve Crowley, Alice Horncane, Paul Keely, Donna Roppelt, Rich Smith, Esther M. Doyle, Ronald Cherry, Flavia Helen Wyeth

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000

Subscription $4.00 per year

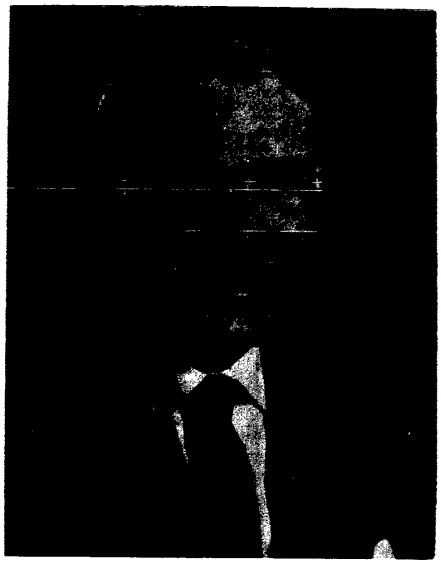
Vol. XLVI No. 11

January 30, 1970

Letters Policy

Letters to the editor should be typed and double-spaced and should be submitted no later than 1:30 p.m. Monday. The editors reserve the right to print only non-libelous and responsible content and to edit all letters and commentaries submitted to the Juniatian. The staff also reserves the right to publish all full signatures unless the writer can supply very valid reasons for omitting his name.

Ellis Series to Highlight Coming Attractions



— Bramwell Flecher —

Coming Events-

Cont'd from page 1

Heroes" and "This Uncertain Age."

The separate programs will be seen at Juniata College the evenings of Feb. 5 and 6 respectively, as Bramwell Fletcher appears in the inaugural lecturer's role in Juniata's new Calvert N. Ellis Humanities Series, honoring the recent past president of the College.

Dick Gregory, civil rights leader, comedian, author and actor, will turn lecturer at Juniata College the evenings of March 9 and 10. His message of freedom and equality, tinctured with the sardonic wit that has characterized his successful literary efforts will be heard at Juniata in the 1th annual lecture in Juniata's Will Judy Lectureship Series.

Author of "Nigger," an autobiographical best-seller, and a new book, "Sermons," for Doubleday, Gregory has spent more time in southern jails, prevented more racial violence and worked harder for the rights of the Negro than any other American entertainer. His paid appearances at colleges and universities during the past few years have been matched by countless benefit appearances in churches and at rallies and public demonstrations across the nation.

On Thursday, April 9, the National Players will present Christopher Fry's "The Lady's Not for Burning," a three-act comedy described as one of the most widely discussed and produced plays of the modern theatre, in Juniata College's Oller Auditorium.

The National Players, now in their 21st consecutive year as the longest running national touring company in America, are all former students of the famous speech and drama department of The Catholic University in Washington, D.C. The play they will present at Juniata enjoyed a long run on Broadway and also in London early in the 1950's. Playwright Christopher Fry rose to fame in the mid-1940's with two other comedies, "A Phoenix Too Frequent" (1946), and "Thor, With Angels" (1948), and is also known for his numerous excellent translations of classical dramatic works.

The three special attractions at Juniata College are featured events in Juniata's "Focus Series on Art and Life in the Twentieth Century."

For Sale

Wanted, responsible party to take over low monthly payments on a spinet piano. Can be seen locally. Write Credit Manager P.O. Box 35, Cortland, Ohio.

— Dick Gregory —

Dr. Robert King . . .

"Who's Who" Praises Juniata Prof.

Dr. Robert F. King, associate professor of music at Juniata College, has been named to "Who's Who In The East." His complete biographical sketch will appear in the forthcoming 1970 edition of the widely used reference work, a publication of the A.N. Marquis Co. of Chicago.

The head of the instrumental division of Juniata's Department of Music, Dr. King has been conductor of the Altoona Symphony since 1964. He is a director of the Blair County Arts Foundation chamber music series, and also is the founder and conductor of the Blair-Bedford Youth Symphony Orchestra.

A native of Mt.Vernon, Ohio, Dr. King earned his Bachelor of Science degree in education at Ohio State University, his Master of Music degree at the Eastman School of Music, and his Doctor of Education degree at the University of Illinois.

As a violinist, Dr. King has served as concertmaster with numerous orchestras, including the Eastman Little Symphony, the Rochester Chamber Orchestra, the University of Illinois Sinfonietta and Opera Orchestra, and the Albuquerque Symphony Orchestra.

He has served on the music faculties of Ithaca College (1951-54), the University of New Mexico (1957-58), the University of Kentucky (1958-61), and the State University of New York College at New Paltz (1965-67).

He served as musical director of the Ithaca, N.Y. Civic Opera from 1954 to 1956, and later, while on the faculty of the University of Kentucky, founded the Lexington Philharmonic Orchestra and served as its conductor and musical director until 1963.

The Louisville Courier-Journal at that time described him as ". . . an intense looking young man, who walks on stage with long strides and a dedicated air. As conductors go, he is . . .economical of gesture. A firm sense of discipline governs his baton and his orchestra responds with playing that breathes life as well as musical understanding."

The Central Kentucky Youth Orchestra which he conducted from 1956 to 1960 was later invited to perform in the White House before President and Mrs. John F. Kennedy. In appreciation for his work with that orchestra, the Seratoma Club of Lexington, a national service organization, presented Dr. King a national award for his outstanding contribution to youth in 1961.

Dr. King joined the music faculty of Juniata College in 1967. His teaching responsibilities include instruction in violin, music history and conducting.

As a conductor in central Pennsylvania, Dr. King has received numerous honors and accolades. In 1968 he was appointed special consultant in strings and orchestra for central Pennsylvania (Region H) under the federally funded Title III educational program. Consistently favorable reviews in the Altoona Mirror have reflected his keen ability: "The orchestra, under Dr. King's able guidance, is obtaining a degree of excellence which was frankly thought to be beyond the reach of a community orchestra."

He is a member of the American Association of Conductors and Composers, the Musicians' Union, the American String Teachers' Association, the American Symphony Orchestra League. He is a director of the Altoona (Pa.) Civic Music Association, and also the founder and director of a summer chamber music series in Manistique, Mich.

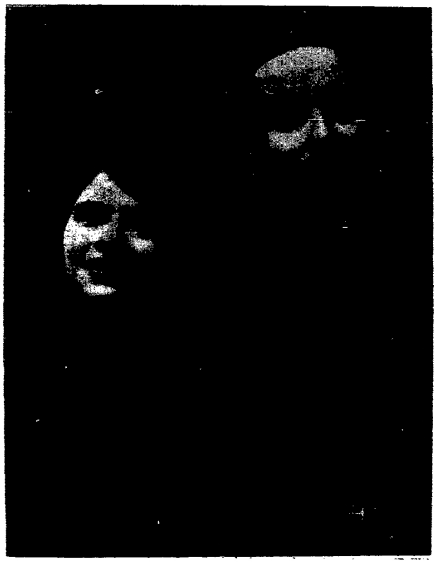
Dr. King, 45, is married to the former Mary Carver of Somerset, Ky. They reside in Hollidaysburg, Pa., and have one son, Warren, age 12.

AAC Elects Stauffer To Committee At Texas Meeting

Dr. John N. Stauffer was elected to the Commission on Students and Faculty of the Association of American Colleges (AAC) at the Association's annual meeting Jan. 15 in Houston, Texas.

The AAC is the national organization of undergraduate colleges of liberal arts and sciences. Its spokesmen represent the views of its 900 members on federal policy affecting undergraduate education. AAC Commissions seek to stimulate and communicate ideas which promise to improve the quality of undergraduate education.

As a member of the Commission, President Stauffer will meet periodically with 14 other leaders in higher education to discuss and recommend policies and procedures to the Association and its member colleges.



— National Players —

Mur's Jewelry

Pierced Earrings, Trophies, College Jewelry, Keys for Charm Bracelets, Pins for Special Occasions and We Engrave Charms Free of Charge! What more could you need?

Ask us maybe we still have it!!

Album of the Month

Reg. $4.79

Led Zeplin II

Now $2.98

Found on the "Words of Music Mezzanine"

Miller's

$6,000 . . .

DuPont Gives Two Grants

Dr. John N. Stauffer today announced that the College has received two grants from the E. I. DuPont de Nemours & Co. totaling $6,000.

The total represents a DuPont Science Grant of $5,000 and a College Discretionary Fund Grant of $1,000 for institutional needs beyond those normally met by restricted gifts.

Dr. Stauffer indicated that the major portion of the grant would be applied to the support of programs in Juniata's Department of Chemistry under the direction of Dr. William E. Russey, department chairman.

"As we seek earnestly to advance the quality of our program, we are especially thankful for the substantial assistance that the DuPont Company has given Juniata," President Stauffer told a company representative.

FROM THE TEE-PEE

by Tom Diehl
Sports Editor

While most ardent basketball fans recognize the efforts of Russ Trimmer and his Juniata varsity cagers, many overlook the job being done by another fine coach and his junior varsity squad. In games through Jan. 24, the "mini-Indians," led by Coach Tom McCormick, have posted an 8-0 mark.

Coach McCormick's face is not a familiar one on the JC campus, although it is a matter of necessity rather than choosing. A former head coach of Lewistown-Granville High School, McCormick is presently teaching in the Lewistown school system. He thus resides in Lewistown and commutes to coach at Juniata.

McCormick received his B.A. degree from Lenoir Rhyne College, where he lettered three times and was a member of several teams which competed in the NAIA national championships. Basketball then, has been a vital part of this man's life, with his transforming his dexterity as an athlete into an ability to teach the proper skills to others.

In molding the future Indian varsity cagers, McCormick instills in them the Trimmer "pressure" defense philosophy that presently has the Trimmer-men riding along with an 8-4 mark. The value of Coach McCormick's work will be appreciated more once his players attain varsity status, yet his present achievements should not be overlooked. Much of Juniata's future in the basketball realm lies in Coach McCormick's hands and, as such, he must be commended for a job well done. He may well be one of the best commuting coaches around.

86-79 . . .

JC Loses to E-town in Overtime

by Larry Carbonetti

After a ten-day layoff, the Juniata basketball team traveled to Elizabethtown for the second part of a home and away series.

The Indians started quickly and the game looked like a repeat of the earlier 96-74 victory. E-town, behind the hot shooting of Wilbur Richardson, came back, and at halftime Juniata led 37-36. Throughout the second half the game remained close, mainly due to the fact that the Indians were shooting a poor 35 per cent from the floor, far off their season norm of 54.1 per cent. With 30 seconds left, the score was tied at 69-all, and Juniata worked for the last shot. Jim McCarthy missed a 20-footer, several following shots were missed, and the game went into overtime.

Once again, no one was able to gain an advantage, and at the close of the five minute period, the score was tied once more; Juniata was in its first double overtime game since Susquehanna in 1967. It looked optimistic when they held a 79-78 lead with a minute left, but they were unable to keep the ball, and E-town capitalized to take the lead. Juniata fouled in attempts to get the ball, and the game ended with Juniata at the wrong end of an 86-79 score.

JUNIATA	FG	F-FT	Tot
Harvey	3	4-6	10
Bader	2	3-4	7
Smith	5	9-11	19
Lee Wentz	8	0-0	16
McCarthy	7	0-1	14
Rinaldi	0	2-2	2
Barnhart	0	5-5	5
Griffin	0	5-5	5
Straley	0	0-0	0
Totals	28	23-29	78
E-TOWN	FG	F-FT	Tot
Allen	5	5-6	15
Donahue	3	2-5	8
Kupres	3	5-5	11
Richardson	7	8-9	22
Snyder	6	1-3	13
Mock	7	3-7	17
Totals	31	24-35	86

Score By Halves:
JUNIATA	37	32	4(ot)	6(ot)	- 79
E-TOWN	36	33	4(ot)	13(ot)	- 86

GUYS ! !

Q. What happens on Valentine's Day?

A. Love and Kisses.

Q. When was the last time you took a JC girl to a formal dance?

A. uhhh I don' know.

Here's your chance to exploit the natural resources of Juniata College. Get on it! The 1970 Mid-Winter Formal and Valentine's Day coincide. Think of the opportunity!

Alumni Council Commends H. B. Brumbaugh for Service

Mr. Harold B. Brumbaugh, vice president for college relations at Juniata College, was commended last week by the Middle Atlantic States District of the American Alumni Council for having served as the organization's chairman for the past two years.

The commendation came in the form of a motion proposed by Mr. Morris W. Watkins, executive secretary of the Columbia University Alumni Federation, at a meeting held jointly with the Council's New England District at Grossingers in the Catskills, N.Y., Jan. 12-15. The meeting was attended by more than 900 AAC members, including two other Juniata College officers, Mr. Barnard C. Taylor, director of publications, and Mr. Glenn C. Zug, director of alumni relations.

During his two-year term as district chairman, Mr. Brumbaugh was credited with the establishment of a consulting program designed to offer counseling services to newcomers among the many colleges, universities and private secondary schools comprising AAC's membership. Under this program, the District was divided into 17 areas to which consulting services should be directed so as to serve the District's more than 1,000 members efficiently.

At the conference business session Mr. Brumbaugh presented citations to retiring alumni directors including Mr. Ridge Riley of Penn State, Mr. Osmar Steinwald of Johns Hopkins University, Mr. John Shott of Bucknell, Dr. Ellen Ganey of Trinity College, and Mr. Robert Harrier of Lehigh.

Delegates to the three-day conference represented alumni, public relations and development officers from some 600 educational institutions. The conference concedned itself with problems of violence on the campus, student activism and institutional governance, and the ways and means of communicating the problems confronting education to the public and alumni. Featured speakers on the conference program included Peter Schrag, editor of "Change" magazine, Dr. Peter Babbidge, president of the University of Connecticut, Yale Associate Chaplin J. Philip Zader, and U.S. Assistant Postmaster General Ronald Lee.

Summer Jobs in Europe

American Students are wanted to fill 200-300 good resort-hotel jobs this summer in the most beautiful regions of Switzerland. Room and board always included at no charge and standard Swiss wages paid. Jobs, work permits, travel documents and all other necessary papers being issued on a first come first served basis to students at selected accredited U.S. Colleges only. For application forms, job descriptions and full details by return air mail send $1 (for air mail postage and handling) to Swiss Placement Officer, American Student Information Service, 22 Ave. de la Liberte, Luxemburg, Europe.

WRESTLING ROSTER

Name	Weight	Class	Hometown
Jim Bookhammer	142	So.	Huntingdon
Ed Constable	134	So.	Huntingdon
Terry Buckwalter	118	Fr.	Lancaster
Dan Bryant	150	Fr.	Hollsopple
George Dunne	167	So.	Sparta, N.J.
*Jeff Elwell	158	Sr.	Blue Bell
Dallas Fisher	158	So.	Denver
Pat Fleagle	134	Fr.	Waynesboro
Dan Greening	167	So.	Lansdowne
James Guenthoer	Heavy	So.	W. Collingswood, N.J.
‡*Tom Light	142	Sr.	Hatfield
*Jeff Massingham	118	Jr.	Oreland
Doug Marschka	142		Lancaster
James McCartney	126	Fr.	Corning, N.Y.
*Michael McCartney	134	Sr.	Corning, N.Y.
Tom Mears	177	Jr.	Wheaton, Md
Mike Pekar	190	Fr.	York
Jeff Rudy	134	Fr.	Harrisburg
*Warren Scott	167	Sr.	Oakdale
‡*Pete Schuyler	Heavy	Sr.	Wilmington, Del.
Scott Taylor	177	Sr.	West Chester
Keith Van Horn	190	Sr.	New Enterprise

* Lettermen

‡ Co-captains

1968-69 record was 8 wins, 3 losses

1969-70 record to date is 1-2

Good Eating
Fast Service

Enjoy our delicious Food — Our Friendly atmosphere

Visit us Today

Kelly's Korner

1340 Penna. Ave
643-4900

Milk & Ice Cream
Plant Phone — 643-2770
Enjoy a Sunday, Milk Shake or Ice Cream Cone
at STRICKLER'S
The Strickler Shop
14th St. & Mifflin

IS READY TO SERVE YOU

WANTED:

Campus Representative
Unlimited Commisions
No Investment
No Paper Work

WRITE For Information To:

Miss Barbara Kumble
College Bureau Manager
Record Club of America
270 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y. 10016

MARK'S CORNER NEWS
4th & Alleghaney St.
Open 24 hours

Magazines
Greeting Cards
Timex
Pocket Books
Patent Medicines
643-9932

10,000 ITEMS

"The Hole in the Wall"
UP TOWN CUT-RATE
Lunch — Drugs — Ice Cream
1229 Mifflin St.

VISIT THE NEW CYPRESS BAR AND DINING ROOM

The HUNTINGDON MOTOR INN
Huntingdon ,Pa.
JCT. ROUTES 22 and 26
Telephone 814 — 643-1133

THE JUNIATIAN

Vol. XLVI, No. 12 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | February 13, 1970

Leave of Absence Proposal Fails To Gain Majority of Faculty Support

Student Leaves of Absence

The faculty at their February meeting, rejected for a second time the Registration and Standing Committee's proposal for a student leave of absence system. Although the faculty in general supports such a proposal, the wording of the recommendation has not met with the majority's approval.

The proposal of the Registration and Standing Committee of January 21, 1970, was as follows:

1. Application for a leave must be filed with the registrar prior to the term in which it is to be effective. The application, which must include approval of the faculty advisor and the Dean of Students, or one of his Associates, will be acted upon by the Registration and Standing Committee.
2. Leaves of absence may be granted for a maximum of one calendar year only.
3. Students granted a leave will be included on the official roster of the College with the notation that they are on a leave of absence.
4. a. Re-entrance of the student shall be automatic upon request and will be handled directly by the Registrar. Such request must be received one month prior to their expected return to guarantee re-entrance.
   b. Leaves granted by the Registration and Standing Committee will be reviewed when final grades are received. The Committee retains the right to rescind any leave if academic status of a student justifies such action.

If a leave is rescinded, re-entrance must be through normal channels, namely through the Registration and Standing Committee.

The Committee gave three reasons for this recommendation:

1. Flexibility—allowing students to decide what semester to take off instead of having the summer imposed upon them. It also allows students to gain education in other areas by working, traveling, or pursuing their interests.
2. Psychological reasons—students may want to get away from the campus. Under this proposal they would not be "tagged" as college drop outs.
3. Individuality—the college program would be more suited to individual needs.

The objections of the faculty arise with the wording "approval of the faculty adviser and the Dean of Students, or one of his Associates."

Male students with low draft numbers would not be able to take full advantage of this proposal due to the Selective Service ruling that significant academic progress must be made, meaning they would have to attend two semesters out of the year. They would, however, have the option of coming in the summer instead of the fall or spring term.

Poet-in-Residence

Juniata Hosts Bink Noll

The Division I Artist in Residence for the spring semester is the well-known poet, Bink Noll. Mr. Noll was born in Orange, New Jersey, graduated from Princeton University, and received his M.A. degree from Johns Hopkins University and his Ph.D. degree from the University of Colorado. He is presently a professor at Beloit College. In 1967-68 Mr. Noll was Resident Fellow in Creative Writing at Princeton University, and during that year he was at Juniata College to give a reading of some of his poetry.

Mr. Noll will be in residence at Juniata for about one month. During that time he will be working with some of the students who are interested in writing poetry, and he will make several public appearances. On Monday, Feb. 16 and Monday, Feb. 23 he will be giving a two-part lecture on "Order in Poetry: Some Aspects of Style" at 8:15 p.m. in G 202. This is an essay which he has been working on at the Newberry Library in Chicago for the last several weeks.

Mr. Noll's two collections of poetry are THE CENTER OF THE CIRCLE (1962) and THE FEAST (1967); his most recent publication was the poem "Angel" in the Christmas issue of the NEW YORKER magazine. Mr. Noll's office on campus will be in Founders Hall 322, and he will be happy to talk with students about poetry, art, revolt, cooking, war, peace, etc.

Spring Reading Festival

Mon. Feb. 16	Bink Noll Lecture on poetry	G 202 8:15 p.m.
Mon. Feb. 23	Bink Noll Lecture on poetry	G 202 8:15 p.m.
Wed. Mar. 4	Tryouts for Penn State Intercollegiate Reading Festival and Eastern Poetry Reading Contest	Shoemaker 8:15 p.m.
Wed. Mar. 11	Student readers to be announced	Shoemaker 8:15 p.m.
Wed. Mar. 18	Student readers to be announced	Shoemaker 8:15 p.m.

On the World and National Scene

Last year colleges and universities heard the cry for Black Studies on their campuses. The demands ranged from special courses to separate Black Studies programs. A study was done by the Associated Press to assess the results of the students demands.

The study showed that about 250 institutions offered courses related to Black Studies last fall for the first time. Bachelor's degrees in Black Studies in separate programs were begun in 14 institutions. The Atlanta University system and the San Francisco State College, both plan to offer Masters degrees in Black Studies.

Little movement was found toward establishment of seperate Black Studies departments. Controversy over the programs still reigns in issues like staffing, control and enrollment.

The major points of disagreement as the spring semester begins, appear to be the degree of student control and students' resentment over what they claim are traditional courses being rechristened Black Studies. Typical new courses reflect the contributions of Blacks to American literature and history. Other courses deal with Black rhetoric, Black Psychology and history of Black Christianity. Most courses are accredited but almost always are elective.

The annual celebration of the Mardi Gras was held on Tuesday of this week in New Orleans. Mardi Gras means "fat Tuesday" and has a history of bein a pre-Lenten festival. The celebration is officially on Tuesday but the festivities usually last for a week. Wine, women and song are the main entertainments.

This year the police of New Orleans have had to cope with a large eruption of violence. Roving gangs have been involved in a number of stabbing incidents. Joseph Giarrusso, the police superintendent, said that this year the crowds have been different in that they show less respect than usual for the police. Maybe if the students who were trying to go to the Mardi Gras from Juniata got there, they could fill us in on what a celebration of this sort is really like.

Classified Ads

The Juniatian is continuing to extend to its readers the free classified ad service which it began last fall. Each week, The Juniatian will print, free of charge all classified ads that are turned into the newspaper office in the basement of Ellis Hall. In order to be placed in print on Friday the ads must be received not later than Tuesday noon. Each ad should not contain more than three lines of 35 spaces each.

Division I Sponsors Evaluation

Division I hosted on campus this past week five national educators who, in the capacity of consultants, conferred for some three days with faculty and students of the arts and humanities departments.

The visitation was not one of evaluation in the sense of sanction for Juniata's accreditation, but rather was initiated and implemented by Division I, with College support, following similar such consultations held for the other two divisions in recent years. The purpose was to fulfill what the faculty felt was "the need for consultation with respected colleagues from other institutions who can help us to examine our enterprise objectively in order further to improve its quality."

As division chairman, Dr. Kenneth Crosby began in the spring of last year to make arrangements for the Feb. 9-11 consultation. By doing so, he allowed time "for our several departments to do the preliminary work of analyzing their operations, gathering data, writing statements and so on in order to have in presentable form a body of information to serve as a point of departure for the visiting consultants."

The five prominent American academicians each had responsibilities in particular portions of Division I, with some of the small departments pairing up:

1) in the areas of art, music, and speech and theater the College invited Professor Nelson Wu, department of art and archaeology, Washington University, St. Louis, Missouri;
2) the consultant in philosophy and religion was Professor Abraham Kaplan, department of philosophy, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Michigan;
3) consulting in English was Professor Tristram Coffin, department of English, University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia;
4) Professor Manfred Jonas, department of history, Union College, Schenectady, N.Y., served in history; and
5) to cover languages and comparative literature the faculty engaged Professor Wilmarth Starr, head of the department of romance languages and literature, New York University, Washington Square, New York, N.Y.

In order to guide and accommodate the five when during their simultaneous visits, Juniata professors were appointed as group co-ordinators in each area: 1) Prof. Steven Barbash, 2) Dr. Robert Wagoner, 3) Dr. Richard Hunter, 4) Dr. Philbrook Smith, and 5) Dr. Jakob Amstutz.

Shaw's Salty Wit Takes on J-Club Winning Stakes

Bramwell Fletcher in his role as George Bernard Shaw: acid, irrascible, misanthropic.

Eager enterpreneurs chance fortunes at Casino Night.

Letters to the Editor

Open Dorm Policy

To the editor:

During the course of the past weeks one concern of a large number of students on campus, particularly of the male variety, has been the subject of the proposed weekend open dorm policy for all men's residence halls. In order to clear up the misunderstanding that followed the vote that was conducted by Men's House, an explanation of the true situation is necessary.

At the last meeting of Men's House, the delegates were faced with a motion to establish open dormitory policy for all men's dorms on Friday and Saturday. Rather than make such a decision themselves they voted to hold an opinion poll of male students on the first Friday of the second semester. Men's House established a 75 percent vote on the part of the male student body as necessary to deem the poll an accurate representation of their opinion. Following the completion of this poll, in which some 394 male students voted, a set of statistics were developed. They showed the exact distribution of opinion as expressed concerning the issue of possible hours as well as the basic question of whether or not to initiate this policy in each of the four men's dorms.

As expected, male opinion was not unanimously in favor of this policy. As a result, these statistics, as well as a statement prepared by Men's House president, Terry Turnbaugh, suggesting the establishment of dormitories with both the open and closed dorm policies for next year, were submitted to the Student Activities Committee. It is hoped that this open dorm—closed dorm policy will allow the individual student to draw his room for the coming year on the basis of his choice as to whether or not he chooses to participate in the policy.

Pending action on this proposal by the Student Activities Committee, open houses have been granted to all men's dorms, under slightly revised hours, by the Office of the Dean of Student Affairs. This allows Men's House a period to test out the mechanics and feasibility of the sign in—sign out procedures. Also, it is hoped that upon favorable action by the Student Activities Committee that this policy could go into effect for the remainder of this semester on an entire men's dorm basis. The designation of those dorms to be open and closed for the coming year would occur preceding the room drawing in the spring.

Michael McCartney

A Dead Campus ? ?

To the editor:

Ever-present student complaints that nothing happens at Juniata seem particularly unfounded in the light of the program of the last two weeks. Leaving thesports report to those who know more about what is going on in that area, I turn to what, for want of a better term, we sometimes call cultural events.

Not many students appeared for Bramwell Fletcher's G. B. Shaw although it is one of the best shows of its kind produced on or off Broadway. In a class he visited one Thursday, Mr. Fletcher told us that the idea came to him when he was playing Higgins to Julie Andrews' Eliza in the new production of My Fair Lady. He has been an outstanding actor for many years, but how many students thought him worth an hour or two of their time?

Friday was a double-header. A few more students came to hear Fletcher's recital of prose, poetry and drama from Sophocles to Ferlinghetti, and then moved on to the Casino.

Earlier in the week JC Movie night had presented Truffant's Stolen Kisses and on Sunday evening the Music Department presented a moving memorial concert for two former choir members. We can be proud of the Juniata Choir Chamber Orchestra, yet townspeople outnumber Juniatians at this concert dedicated to their fellow students.

This last week a group of faculty members presented a double first: the first full-length Readers Theatre production at Juniata College, The Lion in Winter, starring Prof. Ralph Church and directed by Prof. Estner M. Doyle; it is also the first full-length faculty production of any kind within living memory. Listening to the acting version of the play presented in New York in 1966 was a good preparation for the scenario of the movie currently playing at the Clifton. What happens to the text of a play when it is transferred to a different medium? A visit to both productions might make an interesting comparison.

Then on Thursday night, Bink Noll, our poet-in-residence read a program of his own poetry, the first of three programs he will present this month.

"Nothing going on!" exclaimed one student. "There's too much!" But then, he is a student involved in two of the performances described above. If there were more like him, we'd have a lively campus indeed.

How sad that we couldn't have a Juniatian last week because no enough assignments were turned in to make an issue. (See Adele Aboutok.) And what has happened to such activities as the excellent Discovery program that flourished in Oller Hall basement three or four years ago? I'll not forget some of the student-produced performances of plays that I might otherwise never have a chance to see "live:" Strindberg's Miss Julie; Kopit's Oh Dad, Poor Dad, Mother's Hung You in the Closet and I'm feeling so Sad; Saroyan's Hello Out There; Sartre's No Exit.

A dead campus? Who makes it so? Attend the Focus Series and Community Concerts, join the Juniatian staff, start an experimental theatre, become a member of a music group, begin your own thing and invite some others to join you. Then there won't be complaints about a dead campus.

Dr. Esther M. Doyle

Hollow Bubble

To the editor:

As today's students strive for much needed educational reforms, one can't help but stop and think about what and where Juniata is in this overall movement.

It appears that the student movement towards change at this college is a bright, rising bubble whose unity enables attempts to expand on all fronts. It is a "snowballing" movement which gains more support as it attacks the more conservative college policies. From the outside this movement reflects all the aspects of a perfect bubble, but on closer inspection, this bubble is exceptionally hollow. The internal values which once formed this bubble are in a state of decay or have, in some instances, deteriorated entirely.

As proof of this statement, take into consideration the lunch lines at Ellis dining hall. It would appear after even a casual observation that the quality of being a lady or a gentleman has completely disappeared. The process of eating in Ellis Hall today consists of getting to the front of the line in any manner that presents itself, dis regarding your rightful place in line, and disregarding the rights of others who you have left behind you. The only advantage to this new procedure is the gaining of many friends who, by chance, always seem to be closer to the kitchen door. It is quite evident that some men and women of Juniata, when given simple freedom from authority, use this freedom with the finesse of a "snotty-nosed" fourth grader. Students then wonder why they are "treated like children." Is it really that hard to figure out?

Another example of internal decay stems from actions on campus which I'm sure all have witnessed. It seems that today when a "gentleman" of Juniata passes a "lady" on a snowy sidewalk, the correct procedure for this encounter is what used to be called "chicken." In "chicken," two opposing masses converge like jousting knights until they either meet head on or one "chickens out." In this test of nerve, a "man" has a chance to prove his ferocity and manliness by running a lady (young or old) into the snow. I'm sure that women want an equal place in society, but there used to be a word called "chivalry." Has it deteriorated beyond recognition also?

The Chinese proverb "One picture is worth a thousand words" rounds out the proof of my accusations. At Juniata today more and more hand gesticulations are being publicly displayed and, I might ad, by both sexes. To take up the slack between "one picture" and "a thousand words", other "ladies" and "gentleman" on campus are expressing themselves and what they have learned through "words" that make James Bond and Ted Mark books look like fairy tales. The values of these peoplea are publically shown at anytime and especially at basketball games. In the tense moments of Juniata's game with Kings, I found myself (I'm hardly angelic) violently blushing at remarks egressing from a fellow student. The most shockin thing from this encounter was that his date was putting his "verbal expression" to shame. Is this the behavior of a responsible "lady" or "gentleman or that of the supposedly coarse peasant? In fact, I must apologize for referring to that group of people.

Call me a reactionary if you wish and label my argument as based on trivia, but to construct any form of structure, a foundation is needed and each individual block is necessary for the overall strength and success. Instead of lightening the load by leaving values behind as we prepare to swim towards the shore of progress, take them along and use them for a block in the foundation of the new structure. "The house built on sand" washed away, but the one "built on a rock" survived. Which do you want?

Rick Ruddek

Guinea Pigs Unite

To the editor:

The night may have been for the iguana, but the day is for the guinea pig. Freshmen girls: you've been had. It seems there are some hoary myths that need up-dating, and I invite you to read on.

A few days ago, the Experimental Psych class ran a paper — yes, a petition — through the maze of Brumbaugh Hall. The "petition" (for want of a better name) was designed as a hoax (just another word for "experiment") and sought to provoke the provocative. The subject of this delightful little study was Ti-Grace Atkinson — known well enough to all at J.C. except to the Frosh. Now, the petition stated: "We the undersigned are concerned about the forthcoming appearance of Ti-Grace Atkinson during the Colloquy Weekend. As a radical feminist, she has already made it clear that she will not permit men at her lectures. We feel this is discrimination against men in the same way that she feels discriminated against by men. We further feel that this defeats the purposes of the Col loquy and will boycott, if necessary." WOW! That petition, whether a hoax or no, was misinformed, incomplete, loaded, and "psychologically" destructive — not just to Ti-Grace Atkinson and what she hasn't even said yet; not just to the frosh who played the guinea pigs; but destructive to much work which has gone into Colloquy on the part of many students. "My kingdom, My kingdom for a horse," might well be changed to read: "My petition, my petition for a guinea pig."

Let's be clear: Ti-Grace Atkinson has a contract with a New York agency which states that under no circumstances is she permitted to address a mixed audience for less than $750. But there is a clause, however, which allows her to speak — for free — to Women Only. (Remember, Colloquy Committee has no money with which to pay it speakers; they are here from no material motivation. And she will be more than willing — indeed delighted — to speak to a mixed group if that mixed group will come up with $750.00!) She will be sued if she breaks this part of the contract. And that was not pointed out either in writing or even in passing, to those who were asked to sign the petition. (Even if the petition was not geered or intended to promote any kind of action. . . . .)

Secondly, I would like to say that the petition was not lacking in another form of psychological subtlety — perhaps even more detrimental than misinformed melodrama. The originators of said petition failed to ask the Colloquy Committee what was planned for the discussions to be held on the topic of sex. If they had asked, they would have been informed that they could have assisted at six other Sexollogy panels — open to Men and Women. The Committee has made provisions for two other Women's Lib Speakers (from Washington); and has also insured the campus against a petti-coat tyranny by having Two Men's Liberation speakers plus Two Anti-Feminists (also from New York); not to mention the representatives from Gay Liberationists who will also be with us. SO. Petition signers — you didn't know, or rather, were not informed of that either. (Somewhere in the Constitution, I'm sure you'll find your right to petition — but get the facts straight.)

And I would like to call your attention (if you're not doing any thing in particular) to the fact that a good and valid psych experiment takes account of all its variables. Go ahead and vary your experiments — but please not your variable. . . . .

Marta Daniels

Femininity ? ?

To the editor:

Minis are a sign of servility rather than emancipation; girls who can advertise their femininity only by a vast exposure of the erogenous zone are pretty poor fish. . . .Girls have been driven to over-exposure by the increasing effeminacy of the peacock male. . . .

(Name withheld by request. Comment invited.)

On to the World

To the editor:

I am one of those "disenchanted students" who is leaving Juniata College next semester in order to find out what the world is about.

I think several good questions were brought up by your recent article "Disenchanted Students: Education or Institution." I felt it necessary to reply to them so that everyone can see my viewpoint. I have for the past few months been asking myself many of these same questions in an effort to assure myself that I am not running away from something that is too big for me, but am running toward something even larger.

I am presently a sophomore carrying a 3.0 average and therefore don't consider my cause for leaving an academic failure. I am applying to schools much larger than this in an effort to have the opportunity to come in contact with a wider variety of people, therefore I don't feel that my cause is a social escape.

I am leaving Juniata College because I have "outgrown it." It's "beautiful natural setting" has become a boundary between myself and the outside world. Perhaps this is my own fault, but one can only read so much of what is going on before one has to experience it. Attempts are being made here by innovations such as last spring's moratorium and the soon-to-occur colloquy. However, these should be every day occurances not merely "specials." hey happen in the world everyday. Juniata College, for me, prepares me to live in the community of Juniata College not in the world community.

The topic in the article of flaws in the ciriculum and in the educational program as a whole were well presented. It is true that our "liberal arts college" is a science-orientated college. There are flaws in other parts as well. Our elementary and secondary educational program is strictly for the elementary group. There are attempts being made to correct these flaws. Some professors are trying to modernize Juniata's education but for me their moves will be too late, because change here takes time and I don't have the time to wait for it.

I therefore, am leaving Juniata College, not necessarily because I have learned nothing from it, but to put my new-found ideas into work in the society of today. I am taking myself beyond these "hallowed halls" into the world.

Enlightened

'Round Campus

by Rich Smith

Now that all boarding students have dining hall cards, there is yet another number which must be remembered. Remembering the number seems to be an even smaller problem for some than the actual remembering of the card. Girls seem to have the biggest problem because they either do not have a convenient pocket or else they carry the card in their hands and if the latter is the case, this writer does not see how these cards will possibly hold up for the entire semester. (A reminder — students must also have their college I.D. cards which can be checked in the meal lines if necessary.)

Speaking of the Ellis Hall Cafeteria, I know of one young lady who returned her steak three times on Saturday evening until she received a cooked piece of meat that was to her liking.

There are various rumors spreading around campus concerning preparations for the upcoming All Class Night. Some classes are working on the finishing touches and casting, while others are still trying to select an idea. The big night is less than one month away and now is the time to make definite plans! Surely, since this year's theme is musical comedy, Dr. Johnson's Music Appreciation classes will be given credit for reporting on the evening's activities.

With the coming of Lent, many people elect to deprive themselves of various luxuries and/or necessities. For some this may be a snack or a smoke, but one young man was heard to say that he felt that the best thing he could do was to give up going to classes.

Open Dorms for the men's residences seems to be a popular question these days. Men's House wanted the students to vote so that the decision would be made by a larger body of people than the membership of Men's House. In the end, however, the decision will be up to the Student's Activities Council. If you have feelings either way, and happen to learn who is on this committee, please express your opinions so that they will be better able to evaluate the situation.

A special note to seniors: Cheer up! As you start to plan your membership for your Comprehensive Examination Board, somewhere you will find three members of the faculty who will be happy to help you out. These three may not always be your first choice, but somewhere there must be someone.

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College

Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED NOV. 6, 1924

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891

ADELE ABOUTOK, managing editor
BARBARA CLAAR, associate editor
JANET MASON, copy & proof editor
TOM DIEHL, sports editor

BILL DAVID, photography editor
JOEL SCHANTZ, business manager
RICHARD ABLARD, advertising manager
SUE BERMEL, layout editor
VALERIE DERRICKSON, art & coordinator

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Alice Herncane, Paul Keely, Donna Reppelt, Rich Smith, Esther M. Doyle, Lynn Wuesthoff, Joan Eisenhart, Kathy Podacrski, Gene Galbraith, Larry Carbonetti, Mike McCarthey, Barb Brice.

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000

Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVI, No. 12

February 13, 1970

ENCOUNTER SEVENTY

What's Happening - When

FRIDAY MORNING

9:00 Pollution: presentation with slides and film about the problems of pollution on the national level. (Lecture)
1) Morton Lebow

10:30 Population Control: Use and Abuse of Contraception
1) Martin Gorosh
2) Ralph Church
3) Dr. Clifford Adams
4) Rep. from Women's Lib. (name to be announced)
5) Rep. from the Catholic Church
6) Jonathon Pinkett

Gorosh will give a brief look at the problems resulting from the population explosion, ending with his suggestion as to solution. The rest of the paned will comment as to the benifits and disadvantages of birth control, specifically the pill (why not pills for men?) and specifically how birth control affects underprivileged classes. Whose rights aree being considered in contraception: individual males, indvdual females, socety in general?

FRIDAY AFTERNOON

1:00 Youth: Responsibility to Which Society?
1) Dr. David Gottlieb
2) Dr. Albert Myers
3) Dr. Ned Gaylin
4) Dr. Clifford Adams
5) Col. James Hafer
6) Donald Hartman
7) Ed Pitts

What responsibilities does a youth owe this country?
What does a youth do after he rejects the system; is there a real "counter-culture"?
Would you advise people to drop out of the system, and if so after how much education?
Does the counter-culture destructivelyy polarize our country?

2:00 Religion and Contemporary Society
1) Rev. Robert Faus
2) Rev. E. Loy Garber
3) Rev. Dudley Sarfaxty
4) Rev. William Drury
5) Mrs. Sara Clemson

What is and should be the role of religion in contemporary society? What is your definition of "relevance,?" of "Peace group?"
How do you see the futureof the Church as it exists today?

3:00 From the White House: Polarization of the American society which stems from the dichotomy of the Liberal-Conservative split; Ramifications of the Vietnam War. (Lecture)
1) Col. James S. Hafer

4:00 Education: Public and Private Philosophies
1) Nancy Wymer
2) Charles E. Wilson
3) Carl Bruno
4) Dr. Howard Crouch

What is the balance in your school between the socialization of the student and his individual needs?
What is your attitude towards mechanical teaching devices?
What types of subjects do you include in your curriculum? Why?
What are the problems incurred when you want to make a drastic change in curriculum?
Who should have the final say in curriculum — parents (includes school board) or professional educators?

FRIDAY EVENING

7:00 Workshop on Poverty: an Experiment in Reverse Colloquy Psychology (Surprise Happening)
1) Al Myers
2) Jerry Kaufmann
3) David Gottlieb
4) Albert Rojas
5) Cheerful Kidd
6) Ray Robinson
7) David Sands

8:00 Movie by the Citizen's Organization for a Sane World: "Defense Spending and Domestic Needs"

9:00 Juniata: A Qualitative Future?
1) Gordon Shedd
2) Carol Cross
3) Ned Gaylin
4) Sara Clemson
5) Representative from the Trustees, if possible

Given Juniata's standing in College and University statistics, what is your opinion of the significance of these statistics?
And is this significance valid given the problems of society?
Should education be relevant?

SATURDAY MORNING

9:00 Military-Industrial Complex: Its part in the economics and psychology of America.
1) Col. James Hafer
2) Mr. Bland
3) Dr. Albert Myers
4) David Sands
5) Bruce Martin

Is our economy so fixed in the military and industrial complex that we must fight wars?
Does the possession of a war machine imply that we must find a use for it?
What wouldhapen monetarily and to the security of the nation if we drastically reduced our defense budget?

9:00 Women's Liberation: An Explanation, The Metaphysics (For Women Only) (Lecture)
1) Ti-Grace Atkinson

10:30 Racism: Splits in Solutions
1) Clayton Fox
2) Albert Rojas
3) Jonathon Pinkett
4) Ray Robinson
5) David Sands

What are the alternatives to fighting racism and the problems of the underprivileged?
What are the implications of the solutions to American society and its economy as we know it today?

SATURDAY AFTERNOON

1:00 Women's Liberation: An Explanation, The Political Philosophy (For Women Only) (Lecture)
1) Ti-Grace Atkinson

1:00 Pollution: Problems on the Local Level
1) Elvin Hoover
2) Mayor DeForest
3) Francis Kemp
4) Dr. Zimmerer
5) Dr. Fisher

How do the problems of the Huntingdon area look in national perspective?
Is pollution control possible at the local level?
What are the problems of industry in combating pollution?

Who's Speaking On What

Ed. Note:
This list of speakers was submitted as is to The Juniatian by the Colloquy Committee.

Adams, Dr. Clifford — formerly professor at Juniata College and Penn State presently writing a book on abortion based on research collected at Penn State

Andrews, Raymond C. — member of the Black Coalition

Atkinson, Ti-Grace — President of the Radical Feminists, currently lecturing at colleges and universities

Barringer, Harold — Regional Director of Narcotics for 16 Pennsylvania counties from Somerset to the Poconos

Bland, Robert — Director of the Ordinance Research Lab at Penn State, expert in submarine warfare and head of the controversial "water tunnel"

Bruno, Carl — Huntingdon City Assistant Superintendant of Education

Church, Ralph — attended college on a football scholarship and has served time in the Naval Hospital Corps — in storage department

Clemson, Sara — homesteaded in Alaska for 10 years raising large cabbages and sweet turnips

Crouch, Howard — Professor of Education at Juniata; for a more human psychology; loves jacks if they're black DeForrest, Marshall — Mayor of Huntingdon, Chief Executive of the Huntingdon Business and Industry, Inc.

Drury, Rev. William A. — Minister of Philadelphia, director of Inner-City projects for juvenile delinquents

Faus, Rev. Robert — Assistant Professor of Religion; Minister to Students; groovey

Fisher, Dr. Robert — Professor of Ecology at Juniata, currently on the Conservation Committee of the Huntingdon County Planning Commission

Fox, Rev. Clayton — Fundamentalist Minister and Minuteman, has run for state Congress on the Constitutional Party Ticket

Garber, Rev. E. Loy — Minister from McConnelsburg; active in poverty programs and youth programs

Gaylin, Dr. Ned — child psychologist, currently director of the Child and Family Center at the National Institute of Mental Health

Gorosh, Martin — expert on population control, now a Research Fellow in the Department on International Health at Johns Hopkins University

Gottlieb, Dr. David — now a Research Professor in the College of Human Development, Penn State, formerly of the Job Corps. Also consultant to the U.S. Office of Education; President's Council on Youth Opportunity

Hafer, Col. James — Deputy Chief, Special Facilities Division, Executive Office of the President, Office of Emergency Preparedness; originator of the Green Berets

Hartman, Terry — Instructor of Philosophy; Pennsylvania Dutch; caught a 9½ lb. Rainbow Trout in Michigan, March 1968; only existing Mystical Empiricist. OM, OM, OM.

Hoover, Elvin — Regional Sanitary Engineer of Lewistown; a Representative of the State Health Department

Hunter, Dr. Richard E. — Professor of English Literature at Juniata; loves the stars

Kaufmann, Gerald — State Congressman from Pittsburgh: member of American Civil Liberties Union, consultant to the Federal Office of Economic Opportunity.

Kemp, Francis — Chairman of the Huntingdon County Planning Commission

Kevlas, Barbara — radical feminist, accompanying Ti-Grace of Women's Liberation

Kidd, Cheerful — Active in community affairs in Mt. Union, Pa.

Lebow, Morton — currently Executive Director for White House Conference on Children and Youth; has worked on problems of pollution, writing the two most important articles on pollution in the 1960's: "Pollution of the Mississippi River" and "The Death of Lake Erie"

Martin, Bruce — editorial page editor of the York Gazette and Daily

Myers, Dr. Albert — a social psychologist and key member of the Psychologists for Social Action.

Myer, Rev. Robert — minister from New York; does draft and youth counseling

Pinkett, Jonathon — Black Panther from Philadelphia; does professional speaking around the country

Pitts, Ed — originator of colloquies; organizer for Pennsylvania and West Virginia War Moratoriums

Robinson, Ray — civil rights leader in South; works on constructive solutions to the dilemma of poverty

Rojas, Albert — currently director for the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Grape Boycott in the Pittsburgh area

Sands, David — member of SANE from Philadelphia

Sarfaty, Dudley — Executive Secretary for the Commission of Church and Race for the Presbyterian Church; inner-city work in civil rights: politics and poverty

Shedd, Gordon — Resident of Huntingdon County, and Professor of English Literature of Penn State

Sneden, John — Regional Director for Narcotics in State College

Shick, Steve — Representative from SANE in Philadelphia

Steele, David — Huntingdon Pharmicist

Wilson, Charles E. — Educational Consultant, New Careers Training, New York University, former Superintendant of Harlem School district

Wymer, Mrs. Nancy — Teacher for the Walden School in New York. The new school is based of B. F. Skinner's controversial work, Walden Two

The following organizations will be sending representatives:

Gay Liberation — two people, a man and a woman from the homophile league in New York to speak on sex

Men's Consciousness — two men from New York, representing the male side of female liberation

Women's Liberation — one woman from Washington: to speak on the hearings and the pill

Pussey Cat League — representative of the traditional female role—in opposition to Ti-Grace

By Train, by Plane, by Car:

ENCOUNTER

If ever there was a time for Juniata to turn on — it's the time of Colloquy. Never before in the history of this school has such a weekend happened. Never before has this campus seen 40 professional people — all at once — come zeroing in by plane and train and car to live and eat and rap with students for three days of dynamite. Starting Thursday evening, Feb. 19, through Sunday, the 22nd, Juniata will be the scene of one big rap-in on every topic from pollution; to population; drugs to education; sex to sex and more sex; the war, the economy, the grape strike, the gripe strike; the power elite, politics, poverty — and the hippie scene — all at the hip scene in less than aweek.

You can also dig a sleep-in Friday night of that weekend, sponsored by the Jr. Class.Theall-nighter will include a gas of a light show, free films, eats, rock by the Sky Blue Pink Two Band, folk by well-known Burt Mayne and some fancy guitar work by Ira Parkman — accompanist for the leading Blue Grass guitarist in the USA — Doc Watson. You might also use the time that night to meet with speakers who will be making themselves available 24 hours a day.

How do Colloquies really work? ? Well first of all — remove any ideas you might have that make Colloquy out to be a three day exercise in classroom boredom. Whatever happens will happen spontaneously and freely. Student attendance is the only ground-rule we know of for making a successful Colloquy. Get yourselves out to where it's at, and the weekend will take care of itself. . . .

2:00 Traditional Sex: Role of Women (and therefore men) in Contemporary Society
1) Dr. Hunter
2) Dr. Adams
3) Rep. from Women's Lib.
4) Rep. from Pussycat League
5) Rep. from Catholic Ch.

What do you consider the proper role of women in society?
How do you seetheupsurge of feminism changing that role?
If the feminists "won," would it be only the women who benefit?
Given the "Sexual Revolution" (i.e., actual sexual relations should be easier to come by) how do you explain an increase in voyerism and pornography? Is such an increase contradictory or consistent?

3:00 Drugs: Fact, Fiction and Legalization
1) John Sneden
2) Harold Barrenger
3) David Steel
4) John Sollenburger

What are the real facts of harmfulness of drugs such as LSD and Speed? Has scientific experimentation produced the results, or government propaganda?
Is a person who is harmed by these drugs mentally unbalanced previously?
What is the best way to handle a person on a bad LSD trip?
Does the Government have the right to legislate a person's life?
Do the drug laws correspond to the degree of harmfulness in the different drugs?
What relations do the state narcotics agents have with school administrations?

4:00 Priorities: What Do We Do First?
1) Ray Robinson
2) Mr. Bland
3) Jerry Kaufmann
4) Jonathon Pinkett
5) Rep. from Women's Lib.
6) Dr. Fisher
7) Carol Cross

Given the money and the power, what problem of American Society would you tackle first, and why?

SATURDAY EVENING

8:00 Student Panel on Feminism (men invited with Ti-Grace in the audience)
1) Lenny Davis
2) Jill Duncan
3) Greg Heuston
4) another female to be announced

Plans for this evening's session to be announced and developed on hte spot.

SUNDAY MORNING

10:00 Women's Liberation: Sex and Alternative Communion (Women Only) Lecture

M & M RESTAURANT

On Rt. 22 East of Huntingdon Motor Inn
643-2640

Tale of a Lion : or . . .

Can JC Profs Ever Find True Happiness Offstage?

King Henry (Ralph Church, r.) and Queen Eleanor (Esther Doyle, l.) engage in a family duel as Alais (Nancy Davis, c.) schemes.

by Joan Eisenhart

Not having seen the cineramic, scenic version of James Goldman's play, The Lion in Winter, I must unbiasedly admit that the reading given this script by various Juniata faculty members emanated as both uproariously funny and chillingly dramatic. I must disclose however, that besides enjoying the expression of the individual talents of the actors, I delighted in the caustic interplay among those eminent professors usually seen as scholastic dedicants with littleanimation outside of the classroom. They let loose, turned on, and loved it . . . you could tell. Their exuberance echoed in every line.

Will the comedy team of Doyle and Church ever be able, in this isolated and familiar commpunity, to live down the reputations of the characters to which they were ably cast? Although lacking the booming, authoritative O'Toole-King Lear-type delivery of the dramatic portion of his part, Mr. Church, as King Henry II of England, intensified the humorous being of this character with a style that is uniquely Ralph B. That cynical-sounding laugh of his fits, perfectly, a king with the life history that Henry II boasted. But was it my imagination, or did Henry sound as though he had come from the south of England? His wife, Eleanor of Aquitaine, compellingly portrayed by Dr. Esther Doyle, showed this same satiric quality. Her characterization called for a talented enactment of emotions, realizations and admissions that one would never have associated with our respected department head. She only gained greater admiration for the marvelous display of her hidden diversities. Did we witness metamorphosis or an extension of personality?

Grouping the three sons of Henry, Richard, Geoffrey and John can only be done in their fraternal attachments. Their personalities and appearances are completely unique and separate from each other. Mr. Terry Hartman need only to have stood, as he did, hands on his hips, to be identified as Richard the Lionhearted. The divulgence of his character moved slowly at first but built competently to a crescendo that did not taper at the end. Dr. Wilfred Norris seemed limited at first in the development of the middle-child-complex of the second son, Geoffrey. The strength of his temperament was, perhaps, lost in his subtle scheming and it was not until the climax of theaction that energy was applied to his true nature. Using a very convincing pout, Mr. William Hofelt came on strong as the third son, John, who comes on weak. The comic overacting allowed in this part, enhanced by the particular (Shall I say peculiar?) talents of the actor created, from the beginning, a character that was consistently entertaining and strangely intriguing.

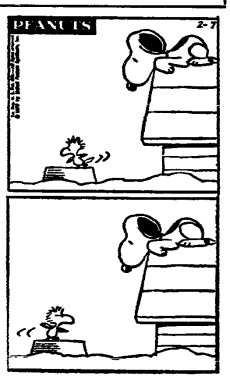
The acting talents of both Bruce Davis and his wife Nancy forced strong personalities from characters notably short of dramatic strength. The young King Philip of France, played by Mr. Davis, was constrained by the script to maintain a nebulous complexion until the sixth scene. Alais, sister to Philip and mistress to Henry, was precisely represented by Mrs. Davis despite the lack of forceful, lively dialogue attributed to her.

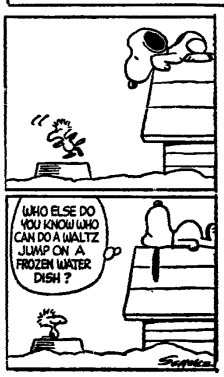
Complete enjoyment of the production was possible, not only due to the skill and efforts of the actors, but because of those same exacting qualities exercised by the stage crew and technicians. Their professionalism helps one to momentarily transcend the environment more suited to convocation than culture.

Beau Craft Sterling

Charms, pierced and pierced-look earings

Colonial Gift Shop





Super Tote Exposed . . .

Go There Some Friday Night

Amidst a murky fog at the foot of the campus stands Ellis Hall. Within are facilities for the various activities of students, faculty, and friends of J.C. The behavior of these people is affected by the area of the building occupied (note the people in the Post Office Lounge). But the Snack Bar reveals to any observer a most interesting campus phenomenon — the community of 'Super Tote.'

Several visits to this renowned highpoint of the J.C. campus will reveal several things. First, some of the people seen there upon first observation are still there, nursing the same cold cups of coffee, and are apparently well established. For the sake of convenience, these people will be called the Primary Group, since it is these very people that give Ellis Hall its true flavor. But this Primary Group is in the minority, so for a true appreciation of the sociological phenomena in 'Super Tote,' it will be necessary to continue the observation.

There are several classes of Secondary Groups, and together, these comprise the bulk of the population of 'Super Tote' at the busiest hours (during off hours the Primary Group tends to be its sole inhabitants). Professors and other such honorable people add an academic flavor to the scene, but their effect is often offset by the presence of students. Students come to 'Super Tote' to escape the academic atmosphere, and in so doing, strive to create a counter-atmosphere of absolute non-academia. All students are familiar with this process, but it may be helpful toreview the necessary steps.

Books are conspicuous among these groups, but are stacked in precarious piles and are used as shelves for empty cups, broken spoons, and other remnants of snack bar fare. A chronic shortage of ashtrays prevails, so one distinguishing characteristic among this element of the Secondary Group is the employment of very unusual and unorthodox substitutes. (See for yourself!) The posture of this subgroup is also indicative of their identity—usually a horizontal extension of their classroom attitude. But even without these clues. their audible presence is enough to betray their identity, One harks to strains ranging from "What are you doing about the assignment due yesterday?" "That ____ ____ had the ____ to give us one of his ____ ____ quizzes this morning! %&&(%*!!"

A third group is also evidenced by their audible signs, but they are much more easily identified by sight. They appear daily at 3:30, and on Friday and Saturday nights, complete with pouchy handbags, furtively smoked cigarettes, and uneasy side glances. A fine veneer of cool wears thin in spots, revealing the true nature of this Tertiary Group, a group we are all familiar with. And since we all are familiar with them, let that suffice in this observation of the community of 'Super Tote.'

Every campus has its spot, and 'Supor Tote' is the one that blotches old J.C. Spend a Friday night there sometime; observe a significant sociological phenomenan, unique to Huntingdon, Pa.

Keller's Stationery

417 PENN ST.

Office and School Supplies

Greeting Cards

Study Masters

Gift Wrap and Ribbon

WANTED:

Campus Representative

Unlimited Commisions

No Investment

No Paper Work

WRITE For Information To:

Miss Barbara Kumble

College Bureau Manager

Record Club of America

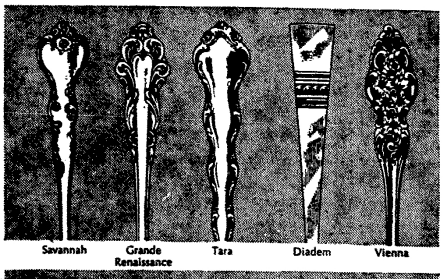
270 Madison Avenue

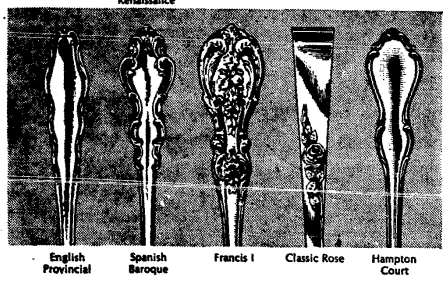
New York, N. Y. 10016

BUCK'S LAUNDRY

and Dry Cleaners

643-2252





We have your favorite sterling pattern . . . as featured in Reed & Barton's

SILVER OPINION COMPETITION

See the complete Reed & Barton collection as well as those of other famed silversmiths at

BLACK'S

421 Penn St.

643-1700

Enjoy your summer vacation at a cool New Jersey Seashore Resort working in one of

THE ORIGINAL KOHR'S FROZEN CUSTARD STORES

on the Boardwalk
Openings: at Asbury Park, N.J. and Seaside Heights, N.J.

IDEAL WORKING CONDITIONS
EXCELLENT HOURS GOOD WAGES

Living quarters provided at nominal charge if desired
Send for application to:

KOHR'S FROZEN CUSTARD

2620 Carlton Court
York, Pa. 17402

A CHICKEN IN EVERY POT JUST MAY BE ROT

by Dick Gregory

If you happen to be a hungry chicken-eater with aesthetic sensitivity concerning the appearance of food, take heart at this recent word from the wires of Associated Press: "A government panel of scientists has recommended that chickens bearing cancer virus be allowed on the market as long as the birds don't look too repugnant."

At the present time federal chicken inspectors condemn any bird carcass that shows signs of lesions or tumors traditionally accepted as an obvious sign of the presence of avian leukosis or Marek's disease viruses. These two diseases, lumped together under the single heading of leukosis in Agricultural Department records, are the greatest cause of frying chickens being rejected as unmarketable.

It seems that a longstanding campaign promise of a "chicken in every pot" has come close to being realized; that is until the food inspectors begin to evaluate the slaughtered birds. Of the 176 million frying chickens slaughtered under federal inspection during November 1969, inspectors condemned 2 million for leukosis.

A recently revised permanent advisory committee to the Agriculture Department wants to change such massive rejection of virus-ridden chickens. It seems, according to knowledgeable specialists, that virtually all chickens harbor such viruses in varying degrees in their bodies. But when the virus gets out of control, the chicken's body fights back and lesions and tumors develop. The panel of eght veterinarians and animal-disease specialists feel that the disease usually passes and that the tumors and lesions are not really reliable indicators of the amount of virus in a chicken's system.

The panel would continue to condemn birds whose internal organs showed active signs of the disease. But the specialists feel that chickens showing only signs of the virus which causes leukosis (like external tumors and lesions) could be placed on the market with no threat to human health.

The panel readily recognizes that a tumor-ridden chicken could pose a problem for the average American shopper. Thus it has okayed the rejection of such birds on an "aesthetic" basis. What does one do with the tumorous portions? The panel has a suggestion. Certainly it does not want them wasted. If tumors are detected on certain portions of a bird, that portion could be cut off and used in a product like hot dogs and the rest of the bird sold as cup-up chicken — all, according to the panel,without posing a threat to human health.

At the risk of spoiling your next picnic, especially if the menu includes both hot dogs and fried chicken, it is important to note that the panel's view is not universally held by specialists in the field. Dr. J. Spencer Monroe, a New ork University professor, definitely feels that the subject needs more research. Dr. Monroe injected a laboratory develped leugosis virus into monkeys back in 1963 and found that the monkeys developed tumors as a result. Human priorities are so distorted in this country, I would venture a guess that more Americans will harbor feeling of hostility toward Dr. Monroe for what he dia to those poor little chimps than will hed the word of warning from his research.

Rodney E. Leonard, administrator of the consumer and marketing service of the Arriculture Department during the Johnson administration, feels that the new panel recommendation is a concession to longstanding poultry industry pressure. The chicken folks feel that too many birds are being condemned for leukosis. It's hard to put a chichen in every pot, and subsequently in every stomach, if the government is going to reject a bird e very time it find signs that the chicken is diseased!

The panel recommendation is now in the hands of the surgeon general awaiting his evaluation which should come within a week. Richard E. Lyng, assistant secretary for marketing and consumer services, admits to having been startled by the panel recommendation. But Lyng and other agriculture department officials say they are keeping an open mind on the subject until they hear from the surgeon general. Any change in inspection regulations would have to come from Agriculture Secretary Clifford M. Hardin.

It would be hard to find a more accurate barometer of national insanity than government officials who recommend placing diseased chickens in every pot and at the same time seem to be definitely convinced that pot smoking is a disease. The point is that the government has a tendency to reject research indicating the harmlessness of marijuana as quickly as it rejects research indicating the harmfulness of the foods we eat — chickens being but one example.

The chicken controversy reminds me of a similar insanity which occurred during 1967 when for four months the newspapers reported congressional debates on whether or not the nation would have a Clean Meat Bill. Is that insanity or not? I could understand Premier Kosygin not wanting Americans to have clean meat. And I can understand the Vietcong not wanting us to have any meat at all. But it is unbelievable that our representatives debated four months on whether or not their constituents should have clean meat.

The most insane act came later. I picked up the paper one morning and read the headline: "Congress Reaches a Compromise on a Clean Meat Bill." Now I am a vegetarian, so it is understandable that I can't fathom what a compromise on clean meat might be. It says to me that Americans can't eat clean meat and they can't eat dirty meat. So I suppose the recommendation concerning chickens is consistent with congressional decision. The chickens are not clean, but don't let the consumer see the dirt.

Political debate on whether or not Americans should be given the benefit of clean food indicates a nation which has lost its mind. So let me offer a personal word of warning to the chicken-eaters of America. If it is true that you are what you eat, you are definitely on your own, and don't expect any real help from your elected officials in planning your dinner menu.

Letters Policy

Letters to the editor should be typed and double-spaced and should be submitted no later than 1:30 p.m. Monday. The editors reserve the right to print only non-libelous and responsible content and to edit all letters and commentaries submitted to the Juniatian. The staff also reserves the right to publish all full signatures unless the writer can supply very valid reasons for omitting his name.

Staff Meeting

There will be a Juniatian staff meeting Tuesday, Feb. 17 at 7 p.m. in the newspaper office. Any and all students are welcome and invited to attend.

Milk & Ice Cream

Plant Phone — 643-2770

Enjoy a Sunday, Milk Shake or Ice Cream Cone

at

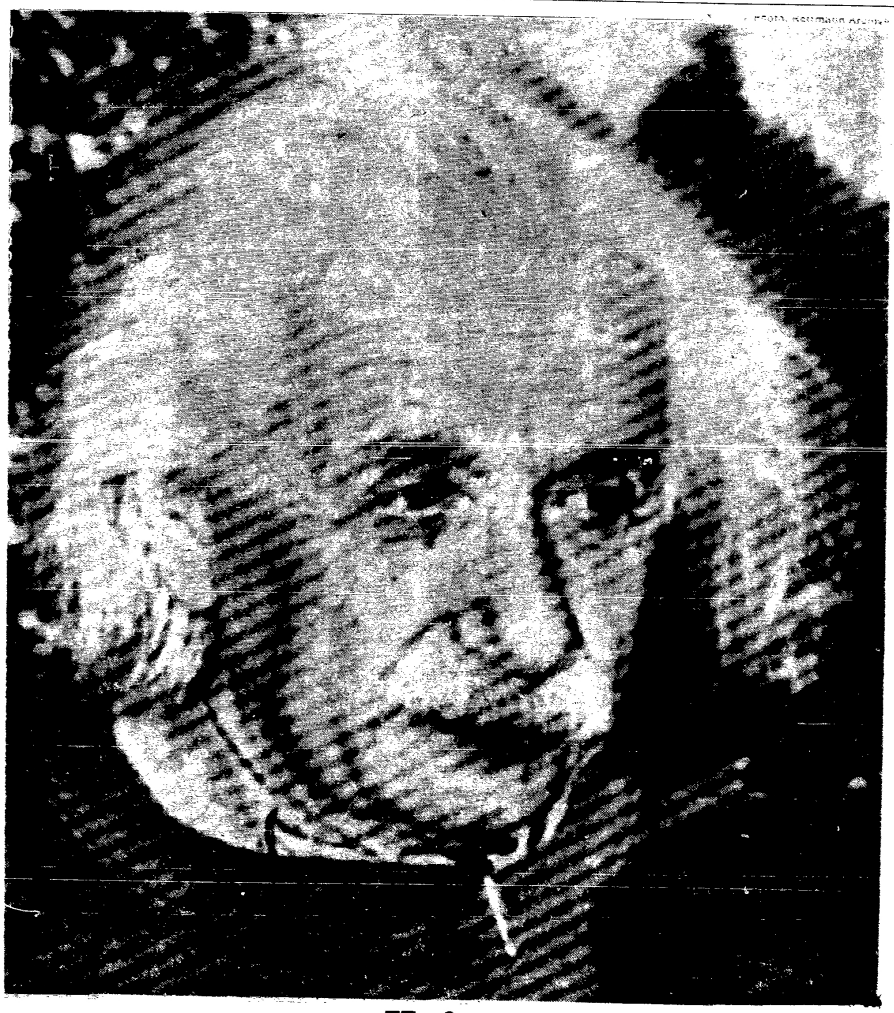
STRICKLER'S

The Strickler Shop

14th St. & Mifflin

For Sale

Wanted, responsible party to take over low monthly payments on a spinet piano. Can be seen locally. Write Credit Manager P.O. Box 35, Cortland, Ohio.



Hair.
It's not the style that counts,
it's what's under it

Helping people build a better life
THE EQUITABLE

The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, New York, N.Y. An Equal Opportunity Employer.M/F

For a free 18"x24" poster of this advertisement, write: The Equitable, Dept. B, G.P.O. Box 1170, New York 10001

Juniata Loses to Kings By Foul, Beats Albright

by Gene Galbraith

The Juniata College Indians gained split decisions last week, when they lost to Kings College 72-70 and bounced back to crush Albright College 78-52. The Indians now stand 12-5 for the season (7-2 in MAC).

The Indians' non-league tilt with Kings College went right down to the wire, but time ran out on Juniata's comeback effort. Kings actually won it from the foul line, since Juniata had a 28-26 edge in field goals. Juniata also held a 38-37 edge in the rebounding department. Although Kings made less field goals than the Indians, their shootin was very accurate, for they shot 58 percent compared to Juniata's 44 percent. John Smith was high man for the Indians with 24 points, while Charles Harvey added 19 markers. Kings' Yogi Eddinger was the games' leading scorer with 28 points. He received ample support from teammates Ralph Hohn and Dave Lampman, who scored 16 and 15 points, respectively.

Juniata never trailed Albright on Saturday night, as the Indians jumped out to a 38-21 halftime lead. The Indians made 35 field goals in 70 attempts for an even 50 percent, while Albright shot only 28 percent from the field. The Tribe also dominated the boards by a 42-34 advantage. Juniata placed five players in double figures, with John Smith's 20 points paving the way. Charlie Harvey added 18 points to the Indians' attack. Ira Goodelman paced the Lions with 16 markers.

JUNIATA	FG	F-FT	Tot
Harvey	9	0-4	18
Bader	2	0-0	4
Smith	7	6-9	20
Wentz	5	1-1	11
McCarthy	5	0-0	10
Rinaldi	5	1-1	11
Barnhart	1	0-0	2
Knepp	1	0-0	2
Straub	0	0-0	0
Griffin	0	0-0	0
Straley	0	0-0	0
Valasek	0	0-0	0
Bergstresser	0	0-0	0
Totals	35	8-15	78
ALBRIGHT	FG	F-FT	Tot
Goodelman	5	6-10	16
Docktor	2	1-2	5
Jablonski	0	1-1	1
Mackintosh	3	7-9	13
Lloyd	2	3-4	7
Clark	2	1-2	5
Zarubnicky	1	0-0	2
Holland	1	1-1	3
Sack	0	0-0	0
Totals	16	20-29	52

Score By Halves:

JUNIATA	38	40 — 78
ALBRIGHT	21	31 — 52

MARK'S CORNER NEWS
4th & Alleghaney St.

Open 24 hours

Magazines
Greeting Cards
Timex
Pocket Books
Patent Medicines
643-9932

10,000 ITEMS

IS READY TO SERVE YOU

M.A.C. Again ? ?

Trimmer Team Trounces Three

by Larry Carbonetti

During the past week, the Juniata basketball team took a large step ahead toward their goal of a second consecutive berth in the M.A.C. playoffs.

Playing at Lycoming, on what is at best a small, poorly lit court, they jumped to an immediate lead, led by twenty at halftime, and held off a late Lycoming rally to win by a 96-89 count. The J.V. squad remained undefeated by winning their game 68-60.

Back home once more, the Indians faced F&M for their second straight conference clash. Not nearly as sharp offensively as they had been at Lycoming, Juniata found themselves in a tough ball game, and needed a foul shot by Jim McCarthy and a pair by Bruce Bader after time expired to win 68-65.

With their third game in six days, the Indians figured to have a hard time with a strong Wilkes squad, but they came out hustling, from the opening tap, and played what probably was their best team game of the season. Junior center John Smith led the way with 41 points, most coming at the end of blazing fast breaks. Guard Jim McCarthy also had a good night, hitting on 8 of 12 shots for 16 points. The final score read 95-59.

With these three conference victories, the Trimmermen pushed their M.A.C. record to 6-2, but the road to the playoffs is a rough one, with Albright and Susquehanna on the road, and Philadelphia Textile at home.

F&M	FG	F-FT	Tot
Bierly	2	2-3	6
Leonard	10	5-9	25
Brown	4	1-1	9
Hiltner	1	1-1	3
Moore	2	4-7	8
Trubisz	3	8-8	14
Farkus	0	0-0	0
Totals	22	21-29	65
JUNIATA	FG	F-FT	Tot
Harvey	10	2-2	22
Bader	3	4-6	10
Smith	2	4-10	8
McCarthy	1	2-3	4
Wentz	5	5-8	15
Rinaldi	2	1-2	5
Griffin	1	0-0	2
Barnhart	0	0-0	0
Straley	1	0-0	2
Totals	25	18-31	68

Score By Halves:

F&M	37	28 — 65
JUNIATA	36	32 — 68

WILKES	FG	F-FT	Tot
Reimel	0	1-3	1
Umbach	7	1-2	15
Davis	6	3-5	15
Kurosky	0	0-0	0
Kemp	7	5-5	19
Grick	0	0-0	0
Jones	0	4-5	4
Ockenfuss	2	1-2	5
Breier	0	0-0	0
Jannuzzi	0	0-0	0
Hanak	0	0-0	0
Wetzel	0	0-0	0
Totals	22	15-22	59
JUNIATA	FG	F-FT	Tot
Harvey	1	3-3	5
Bader	5	4-5	14
Smith	15	11-12	41
Lee Wentz	1	0-0	2
McCarthy	8	0-1	16
Rinaldi	2	4-4	8
Griffin	0	2-2	2
Straley	1	2-2	4
Barnhart	0	1-2	1
Valasek	0	0-0	0
Straub	1	0-0	2
Totals	34	27-31	95

Score By Halves:

WILKES	24	25 — 59
JUNIATA	40	45 — 95

Berrier Boys Bow Again... and Again

California State

Juniata lost its third straight match last Thursday evening, but put up a stubborn battle in a 19-14 loss at the hands of California State. Coach Berrier's boys put up quite a battle against the Vulcans with the verdict being in doubt until a fall in the 177 lb. category put the match out of Juniata's reach.

The Indians' Jeff Massingham led off the bout with a draw, but Juniata could not put any points on the board again until Jeff Elwell gained a decision in the 150 lb. match. Dan Greening, Tom Mears, and Pete Schuyler also gained decisions for the Tribe, but it was not enough to overcome California, a team which has lost only four matches in their last twenty-two.

The summary:

118 — Jeff Massingham (J) and Tom Boudreau drew, 5-5.

126 — Adolph Davis (C) decisioned Jim McCartney, 7-4.

134 — Jim Jones (C) descisioned Mike McCartney, 11-0.

142 — Warren Zatezalo (C) decisioned Tom Light, 5-1.

150 — Jeff Elwell (J) decisioned Merle Johnson, 9-1.

158 — Randy Haught (C) decisioned Jeff Rudy, 11-0.

167 — Dan Greening (J) decisioned Dan Taylor, 13-4.

177 — Ken Tamburrio (C) pinned Warren Scott, 1:38 second period. Reverse nelson and body press.

190 — Tom Mears (J) decisioned Rich Arriconi, 2-1.

Hwt. — Pete Schuyler (J) decisioned Garee Piper, 6-0.

Gettysburg

Juniata's wrestlers lost an eight point lead last Saturday afternoon and had to depend on heavyweight Pete Schuyler to gain a 19-19 standoff with visiting Gettysburg. The Indians now 1-3-1 on the season, captured four of the first six bouts through pins by Jim McCartney and Tom Light plus decisions by Jeff Massingham and Jeff Elwell to build a 16-8 lead. The Bullets came storming back however, and grabbed a 19-16 advantage, with only the heavyweight bout remaining. Schuler did his best to pin Gettysburg's Joe Lemmon, but had to settle for a 6-2 decision victory and a tie match.

The summary:

118 — Jeff Massingham (J) decisioned Harry Wiggins, 8-1.

126 — Jim McCartney (J) pinned Mark Popow, 1:04 third period.

134 — Jim Ridinger (G) pinned Mike McCartney 1:06 third period.

142 — Tom Light (J) pinned Walt Coule, 2:36 third period.

150 — George Groff (G) decisioned Jeff Rudy, 5-3.

158 — Jeff Elwell (J) decisioned Bruce Young, 6-3.

167 — Don Cramer (G) decisioned DanGreening, 7-3.

177 — Dan O'Bryan (G) decisioned Warren Scott, 11-2.

190 — Ron Emenheiser (G) pinned Tom Mears, 1:43 second period.

Hwt. — Pete Schuyler (J) decisioned Joe Lemmon, 6-2.

Bucknell

Juniata dropped its fourth duel meet of the season last Tuesday evening at Bucknell by a 19-17 score. The Indians split ten bouts with the Bisons, but were seven points behind before the final match.

Jeff Massingham gave Juniata an early 3-0 lead with an 11-2 decision victory. However, Bucknell won the next four bouts to take a commanding 14-3 lead. Jeff Elwell and Dan Greening then proceeded to getback-to-back victories to cut the Bison lead to 14-9. Bucknell won the next match, however, and Pete Schuler's pin in the heavyweight match only served to cut the final margin to two points.

Co-captain Tom Light (142) suffered a shoulder separation in the second period of his match and will be lost to the Indians for the remainder of the season.

The summary:

118 — Jeff Massingham (J) decisioned Niel Shiffler, 11-2.

126 — Stan Czesak (B) decisioned Jim McCartney, 8-6.

134 — Bob Eidus (B) decisioned Pat Fleagles, 9-1.

142 — Mark Ramage (B) won by default over Tom Light.

150 — Tom Rivoire (B) decisioned Jeff Rudy, 4-0.

158 — Jeff Elwell (J) decisioned Pat Sullivan, 6-4.

167 — Dan Greening (J) decisioned Tom Hawkins, 7-3.

177 — Pete Sullivan (B) pinned Scott Taylor, 1:52 second period. Body press.

191 — Tom Mears (J) decisioned John Skinner, 5-3.

Hwt. — Pete Schuyler (J) pinned Joe Philips, 1.10 third period. Body press.

Mansfield

Juniata's wrestlers fell behind 28-0 last Saturday afternoon at Mansfield and suffered their fifth loss of the season. The final score read 28-8.

The Indians didn't get onto the scoreboard until the 190 class, with Tom Mears picking up three points on a decision win. Pete Schuler, the Indians' most consistene grappler, then pinned his opponent in the first period to give Juniata their final five points.

The Indians will return to the home mats on Feb. 17 against Elizabethtown, following two more road appearances at St. Francis and Dickinson.

The summary:

118 — Jack Martin (M) decisioned Jeff Massingham, 8-3.

126 — Walt Sorbor (M) decisioned Jim McCartney, 4-3.

134 — Jim Keenen (M) decisioned Pat Fleagles, 12-1.

142 — Jim VanBlarcon (M) decisioned Jeff Rudy, 7-4.

150 — Frank Rice (M) pinned Mike McCartney, 2:41 second period. Grapevine.

158 — Mike Picketts (M) decisioned Jeff Elwell, 7-2.

167 — Don McKee (M) pinned Dallas Fisher, 2:58 second period. Half-nelson.

177 — Cal Rodgers (M) decisioned Warren Scott, 11-4.

190 — Tom Mears (J) decisioned Doug Walters, 3-2.

Hwy — Pete Schuyler (J) pinned Gary Waksumski, 1:47 first period. Body press.

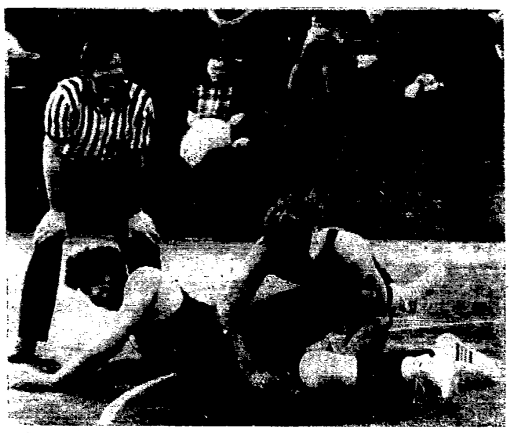

photo by Evard

"Knit one, Purl two."

Co-ed Phys-Ed Welcomes Miss Rosemary Daschback

Along with the initiation of a new gym program earlier this year a new face has appeared this semester in the Memorial Gym. The face is that of Rosemary Daschbach, the new Physical Education instructor. A resident of Mt. Union, Miss Daschbach came to Juniata from Indiana Jr. High School where she taught gym and health. She graduated form Lockhaven in '67, where she majored in Health and Pfiysical Education. She enjoys a variety of sports and works during the summer as a lifeguard for Project Headstart at the New Jersey shore.

Currently she is teaching basic net and carryover sports, and dance. The new co-ed gym classes run smoothly, and the boys have even become interested in dance with the combination of gymnastic and dance classes. She has a preference to teaching college level students and is especially interested in gymnastics. Her interest stems from her coaching of a Gymnastic team and her partiality of individual sports over that of team sports. Although relatively new on campus, Miss Daschbach likes it here and hopes to remain.

Basketball Gals Bow in Opener To St. Francis

by Cathy Podgorski

Saturday saw the Juniata College Girls' Basketball team defeated in the opener by St. Francis 46-16. The Juniata Squaws, coached by Doug Laird, and assistants Bob Marcus, Larry Huel, and Bill Hollyday, played a good game but were unable to catch the "gunner" from St. Francis. Scorers for Juniata were Charlotte Houchin with 11 points, Carol Diehl with 3, Ann Witt with 1, and Carolyn Hoober, who scored the first point of the game. Regardless of their loss, there is much potential for a good season in their upcoming games. The members of the 1970 squad are: Captain Charlotte Houchin, Carol Diehl, Nedra Rud, Ann Witt, Cindi Day, Carolyn Hoober, Debbie Ross, Pam Funch, Nancy Agnew, Judi Grove, Marsha Kershner, Joan Nretsford, Mary Ann Repman, and Cindi Sprenkle.

Good Eating
Fast Service
Enjoy our delicious Food
— Our Friendly atmosphere
Visit us Today
Kelly's Korner
1340 Penna. Ave
643-4900

Fight Blight
Try
Encounter '70

THE JUNIATIAN

Vol. XLVI, No. 13 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | February 20, 1970

WANTED:
Creative People for Assistant Layout Editor
Headline writer
Contact JUNIATIAN, Box 7

Congenial Prophet . . .

Bink & His Noll- Some Thoughts

by Marta Daniels

One of the highest mortality rates in the literary world these days comes from an occupational hazard that any true lover of modern poetry risks — that insufferable disease: Proof Reader's Eye. But anybody who attended last Thursday night's session at Alumni Hall with poet Bink Noll and his amazing amalgam of rhyme and rhythm didn't contract anything but pleasure and a bag full of fringe benefits. . . .

If you were in the mood for a therapeutic dose of the sublime — to one of Noll's poems add versimilitude, wit, nostalgia (not too much), humor, insight, and shake. A fertile firebrand with a pen, he'ss one poet not given to purposeless pity or empty analysis. His poetry is penetrating, exacting almost painful in its insistence upon clarity and thoroughness, pursuing an imae to distill the quintessential gfrom his experiences—those proloned bouts with reality.

When he comes across the special moment (and there are many for this poet) he can grasp it by the forelock, and halt the passing scene at the consequential second. No flat lines, boggy literary patches, or treadmill rhythms of maudlin verse here. The introspection and observation called Noll is also called sophisticated craft. The stylized pyrotechnics of a by-gone age are just that. By-one. But the mind of a modern poet is a pandora's paradox—open it, and you get caught up in the contained rhythms of exploding impulses. Where do they go—the rhythms and impulses? Noll harnesses them to images perfectly visualized, and cognate with a patience for form—reducing the risk of our occupational hazard to O.

Listening to Noll, one might well imagine that a very long time ago he came to corner a nice, clean-cut dragon called Life, and found himself—like Demosthenes—half-fighting, half-embracing his monster. What did he find?? Well, he found an island where the sun didn't shine every day, and the circular shoreline remained the same, the same—metaphorically threatening the somatic indefiniteness of his noll-hood. And he found a house to go into when the sun wasn't shining, and when there was snow on the ground—a house that was warm inside, with a Christmas tree and an angel that sang not, and children who were no longer children. He learned also, the proper way to shut the curtains, which he did with a serious dedication only befitting the head of a household. And when not drawing the curtains, he learned to perform another safeguard for intimacy — locking the doors at dark after the "pans" and the "advanced engineer of heat" were safely tucked away. . . .

But what did he really find? Well, in the Monticello "Air Tunnel," he found for one, that he couldn't escape the consequences of living. "The craft so hard, the life so long to live" — and as soon as that was understood, he went on to have "Martinis at the Sneiders" in Terza Rima (this is not in Italy—it's in the rhyme scheme) with surrealistic, musical metaphors, childhood memories, and "floating pastel wives," one of which would become the subject of his next encounter.

Thinking that Demosthenes was just learning to embrace his antagonist, we find him brandishing his sword again—this time at Marriage. This is a big dragon and one we might well be wary of, lest we find ourselves, like Noll in an Elliot-like dialogue with angst and accidia—that numbness of the heart that has no word in English —except perhaps, "Leave!" In "Marriage" he is beset by Herculean anguish, smashing up all the orderly classical parallels, rubbing out all the neat lines dividing the good from the bad, love from hate, the dragon—this time, the violence of his own history—came crashing down upon him like an Italian avalanche. And if Original Sin wasn't in this one—it is certainly in the next. . . . .

"All My Pretty Ones? Did You Say All?" is a poem about another consequence which he found to be inescapable—the loss of innocence in his three children—that "Congenital rage, shared tropisms, odd tics/And deeper intamicies of our blood/ . . . making "their signs in each pretty one." It's the dragon of time battling this one—with waste and glories, glories and waste watching from the strands where sits the lesson of mortality hunched up in its own backache: Alone. Waiting.

Waiting perhaps for the next lesson —from the absurdity of a world we no longer control. The setting—Normandy, France; the scent a "bucolic picnic;" the tenor—mortality, once again; and the tone—almost fantasy. "Lunch on Omaha Beach" or that "cosmic, sanctified cemetery" is a poem of controlled rage. Noll is protesting indecency here—crying out in desperation against man's inhumanity to man. Although he was describing a scene 25 years back, he might just as well have been dealing with 1970. And if the past rankles, the present itches:

To honor my thoughts against shrines, to find
The beast who naked wakes in us and walks
In flags, to watch the color of his day
I spill my last Bordeaux into the sand . . .

I am reminded of Zorba: "Why must the young die? Why must anybody die?" There is no answer. No rational one anyway so we succumb to the ludicrous or to fantasy because it is the only way to deal with the absurdity of a world we can no longer describe efficiently in rational terms. What can we say coherently about nations that club their children, about countries that exterminate what might have been a nation, about men who prefer throwing steel into space to feeding stomachs on earth?? (What except to say that it cannot be read. or if it is, we are not.) We can only eat our sausage and bread, drink our Bordeaux, write one little poem, and go to bed at noon.

But for those of us who cannot sleep—who live with nature's burglar alarms screaming one octave above middle C in the middle of the night, in the middle of the black "obscure." What of us? Mr. Noll has no solution —but he is very much aware of the problem. In his poem "To the God Morpheus" (which I think is one of his very finest) he comes across in those tight Noll-lines of energy and tension replete with the sensitivity of an open wound. (If you watch carefully, you can detect a thin blue vein pulsating in his temple like an epileptic worm—warning us of the tension in him.) The experience of insomnia in this piece is as calculated, crafted, and distilled as the workmanship of his other poems, but it seems that in this poem Mr. Noll has reached a certain critical point in his thinking—in his awarness of his limitations—of realty; double-blended, and triple-distilled. There is no such Eliotdream-state between waking and sleeping here. It's cold raw consciousness pounding around the Bink bush at 5 a.m. The accusing finger pointed at himself swings full round and is levelled at the pretence of others, the deceit, the illusion of calls, perhaps, for an all-purpose drug, but one doubts that relief is on the way. If anything redemption is in the reading. It was for me. But if love of poetry continues the way it has in the last few years —give Mr. Noll a saffron robe, a more emphatic baldness, and a begging bowl—for he will someday end up a congenial prophet.

The Grass Roots

The Grass Roots, one of the top-ranking concert attractions in the country, will appear in concert at Hershey Sports Arena Thursday, Feb. 26 at 8 p.m.

In both their music and personal appearances, The Grass Roots are rock conservatives. Their music is primarily soft rock with a dash of soul, rather than underground.

Since their musical breakthrough the quartet, consisting of Warren Entner, Rick Coonce, Rob Grill and Dennis Provisor, has delved into many types and styles of music in an effort to blend their own personalities into their work. Audiences have described The Grass Roots' sound as a "visual sound." It is exactly that—a sound to see!

Colloquy Committee Gives Additional Speaker List

Barbara Wagoner, National Coordinator for Earth Day, a nationwide moratorium against pollution to be held in most U.S. cities April 22, is is scheduled to appear at Colloquy on Saturday afternoon. She will give an address at 1 p.m., just prior to the panel on pollution in this local area.

Other changes which have been reported by the Colloquy committee include addition of a "Third World" Workshop on Friday afternoon at 2 p.m. in the Faculty Launge. Members of the "Third World" will address themselves to the problems of the underpriveleged, including education, politics, poverty and racism, with a teach-in on constructive avenues of change. The Third world consists of yellow, red, brown and black people.

High House, a group of professional educational entertainers whose specialty is happenings, sponteneity and joy, will be making several presentations during the weekend. Their "Celebrations for People" include a light show, a kazoo-in, and some events with a big, black polyethylene balloon.

Other people scheduled to appear who were not mentioned in last week's issue include Ira Packman, guitarist who has worked with Doc Watson and Josh White; Bert Mayne, folk singer who has appeared at Juniata twice this year; Jimmy Collier and Wendy Smith, soul singers from New York; Rev. Walter Smith, pastor of St. James Lutheran Church in Huntingdon; and Art Gish, lecturer and writer who was at JC in early January.

Colloquy Central, on the top floor of Ellis Hall, is open day and night for any up-to-date information.

New Dorms to Open in Sept. Women to Live in Tussey

by Donna Knupp

According to Dean Charles Schoenherr, the two new dorms at the east end of the Juniata campus will not be available for residency until next September. Although it was originally thought that they would be completed before April, construction has been slower than was expected.

The dean indicated that men's and women's house would formulate the plan by which students will move into the new dorms. The group of eight in each suite will most likely be chosen by the members living there.

"I feel strongly that upperclassmen should be in the new dorms," Dean Schoenherr stated. "Because each dorm unit is similar to an apartment shared by eight people, there is little chance for interaction with outsiders. During the underclass years new friendships should be formed."

Each side of the two dorms will be composed of half women and half men. The lounges and service areas are to be shared. Within each unit will be a connection for a telephone, but the members will have to share the cost (approximately $5 a month). Students can provide televisions for their living rooms, although there will probably be a television in the downstairs recreation room.

Dean Schoenherr stated that the rules for the new dorms will most likely be established by a body composed of one representative from each suite. After room drawing this spring, the representatives could be chosen and the rules established before next semester. It is entirely possible that the hours for visitations may vary from building to building since each area is separate.

Next year the Tussey Dorm will be occupied by 100 women students. The set-up will be similar to that in the new dorms where the lounge and rec-rooms will be shared with the men in the dorm, who will still live in Terrace. Renovations are being done to the washrooms in Tussey, and a buzzer system will be installed to accomodate the coeds. According to the dean, this plan of "coed" dorms will help to eliminate the idea of separate areas of the campus for men and women as it formerly existed.

Dean Schoenherr also indicated that there will probably not be a separate women's dorm for freshmen next year like the Brumbaugh-Oneida complex. It is hoped that upperclassmen will want to room in the new dorms so that frosh women can be assigned to rooms in Tussey, Lesher and South.

Starting next year N. J. Brumbaugh and Emmert House used for women's residences will house men, while Home Management House will be eliminated as a residence hall. This is designed to bring more men, especially sophomores who live in rooms off campus, closer to the college area. Students over 21 and seniors will still be able to rent apartments off campus.

Environmental Teach-In

With much thought and discussion being directed to problems such as air and water pollution, April 22 has been set aside for a nationwide teach-in on the environment. Activities will be coordinated on college campuses across the country with the help of environmental Teach-In, Inc. located in Washington, D.C.

The Juniata College Student Government will sponsor a program of events on this day. Suggested ideas include speeches by professionals concerned with environmental problems, classroom discussions, and community involvement.

Anyone interested in working on the Juniata teachin committee should contact Sally Palmer, Box 634.

From the National and World Scene

Arkansas, Colorado, Kansas, Missouri, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Texas will be the first states to try a new data system designed to enable school and health officials to trace the progress of migrant children as they travel with their parents from State to State.

Because migrant children move so frequently, it has been difficult to keep track of their whereabouts and their educational level and special needs to alleviate this problem, the Arkansas State Department of Education, under contract to the U.S. Office of Education, has developed the Uniform Migrant Student Record Transfer System to make background information on any migrant child available to any mainland State within 24 hours.

An extensive "debugging" process is underway in Little Rock, Ark., to insure success of the data system.

Twenty States were requested to submit data to the central bank to be used in debugging the system. In addition, computer-generated records, representing as many varieties of student records as possible, will be fed into the system to test its programming and output capability.

Winford Miller, Director of the Data Bank, said he expects the system to be ready by July 1. At that time, the seven States will be hooked into the communications system on a pilot basis. Other pilot States will join the system after six months. All 48 mainland States will eventually be phased into the system on a scheduled basis.

Miller said he and his staff will spend the next six months correcting any faults found in the data bank and training personnel from the seven pilot States to receive and transmit information. He said terminals will be set up in the States to create the communication linkage. Possible terminal sites are now being investigated.

The computer bank at Little Rock will store six major kinds of information on each migrant child: Specific patterns of mobility, family, attendance, and health data; special test scores; information on the child's special interests, abilities, and needs; general demographic data; and results of an analysis of basic student data.

States have been operating the record system on a manual basis since last January. Migrant students enrolled in schools with a federally financed educational program carried identification forms with them from place to place. However, the forms were often lost.

The electronic system is financed under Title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. A ceretain portion of the funds allocated for migrant education programs is set aside by U.S. Education Commissioner James E. Allen, Jr., to continue the system. In fiscal year 1970, about $550,000 was set aside.

More than 200,000 migrant children across the country participate in Title 1 programs.

WJC

"This is WJC— 620 AM, 108 FM, Huntingdon." If you have been wondering what the extra number stands for, our own WJC has been broadcasting on the local FM cable service since Feb. 12, under special FCC authorization. JC students are now being heard throughout the Huntingdon area.

Editorial . . .

Our World . . .

What is Juniata? What is its driving force? What is wrong with Juniata? What is right with it? Why do people either like it here or despise it here? What does it indicate about Juniata that on a dynamic weekend such as this a substantial number of students went home? What breeds the disease, apathy, in JC students? Is this lack of enthusiasm symptomatic of the middle class American attitude? Yes, quite probably! These are the middle-class-American parents who would want their children to come home during Colloquy weekend. These are the type of people who would let their environment become so foul it could kill them. These are the ones who cover their once-beautiful landscape with so-called architecture. These are the people who are giving their government an all-but-free hand in the governing of their country.

Can we, the educated people of these United States, bring these disease-ridden people to the awareness that they may be the ones to destroy one of the greatest civilizations in the history of the civilized world?

This is our world. This is what Colloquy is all about. What are you doing about it?

UNCLE SAM WATCHES YOU

by Dick Gregory

Those who look for signs of increasing police state manuevers in America are fond of citing such things as the "no-knock" section of the Controlled Dangerous Substances Act of 1969, the continued presence of concentration camps, the McCarran Act with its vague reference to "possible" saboteurs, or the FBI computer banks on groups and individuals. Few Americans are aware, however, of the extent to which the U.S. Army has engaged in, and perfected, the highly technical art of citizen-watching.

Christopher H. Pyle, who recently completed two years service as a captain in Army intelligence, had an eye-opening glimpse at the role and results of soldier-agent activities in a special article for The Miami (Fla.) Herald. All of Mr. Pyle's infomation is unclassified and comes from briefings, interviews and observations made during his years of service.

If the average American is aware of these soldier-agents at all, Mr. Pyle suggests they are known "only as personable young men whose principle function is to conduct background investigation of persons being considered for security clearances." But soldier-agents have had much more varied roles. Says Mr. Pyle: "Military undercover agents have posed as press photographers covering anti-war demonstrations, as students on college campuses, and as "residents of Resurrection City. They have even recruited civilians into their service — sometimes for pay but more often through appeals to patriotism." So Uncle Sam might not only be watching you; he might also have your best friend gathering the information!

You don't even have to be a militant radical to make the Army files. "Today, the Army maintains files on the membership, ideology, programs, and practices of virtually every activist political group in the country." Mr. Pyle warns. "These include not only such violence-prone organizations as the Minutemen and the Revolutionary Action Movement (RAM), but such nonviolent groups as the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, Clergy and Laymen United Against the War in Vietnam, The American Civil Liberties Union, Women Strike for Peace, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People."

Mr. Pyle's article raises a number of issues which should cause alarm to Americans who still feel that some degree of personal privacy is close to an inalienable right. One is the highly developed technology of Army information gathering about the doings of the private citizenery. The Army now has an extensive teletype reporting system which will soon be linked to a computerized data bank. The computer, to be installed at the Investigative Records Repository at Fort Holabird in Baltimore, will be able to produce instant print-outs of information in 96 separate categories.

At the present time, the Army periodically issues an eight-by-ten inch glossy-covered paperback booklet which is a sort of encyclopedia of profiles of persons and organizations, who, in the opinion of the Intelligence Command officials who compile it, might "cause trouble for the Army." Mr. Pyle says the booklet is known in Army circles as "the blacklist," similar to the less formal lists the Department of Health, Education and Welfare has kept up to make sure politically unpopular scientists don't get research contracts or consultant work.

The Army computer bank will differ from similar stores of information now in use at the FBI's National Crime Information Center in Washington and New York State's Identification and Intelligence System ini Albany. Such computer banks are restricted to the case histories of persons arrested or convicted of crimes. The Army's bank will contain files devoted exclusively to describing the lawful political activity of civilians.

The Army intelligencee file differs in another respect. It is not subject to congressional or presidential oversight and thereby enjoys uninhibited freedom for growth. Yet the Army file is located in one of the government's main libraries of security clearance information and access to it is not limited to Army personnel. Personality files can be readily available to any federal agency issuing security clearances, conducting investigations or enforcing laws.

Mr. Pyle closes his article with a quote from John Stuart Mill spoken over a century ago. Mill said: "A state which dwarfs its men, in order that they may be more docile instruments in its hands even for beneficial purposes, will find that with small men no great things can really be accomplished . . ."

Perhaps it would be well to carry John Stuart Mill's observation a bit further. The small men of history, those of insane vision and limited morality, who eventually succeeded in destroying their own nations, always began their insane exploits by setting up police state measures which specialized in keeping close watch on the citizenry. Then individual rights and eventually any semblance of human freedom disappeared. Mill is right. No really great things can be accomplished in such an atmosphere. Only loud, noisy, clamorous and sure destruction.

If Those Guys Can Do It, . . . There's Hope for Us All

It is obvious to most of us that our undergraduate years are numbered: we just can't continue attending Juniata College forever, for practical financial reasons if no other. Sooner or later (the normal stay amounts to about for years) we must press onward to bigger and better things. The reality of the "big, wide world waiting out there" is genuine in spite of any disputation as to the qualitative factor: whether it is "cold" and/or "cruel" is more or less relative to individual experience.

In any case, we're "bound for movin' on." Some of us come to know exactly what we're going to be doing, when, where, and how; others of us aren't so fortunate and proceed to play the game by ear, so to speak. (How about a plug for the College Placement Office here?) For those who may yet be wondering about it all, it may be instructive to take note of what some real, live Juniata graduates are doing (or have done) with their lives on the basis of their undergraduate experiences, which, we shall assume, were somewhat akin to what ours are now.

Basically, then, what the Juniatian is interested in doing here is running a column of alumni notes and news making it as relevant as possible to the present readership, i.e. the Juniata undergrads of today. If we grasp the full import of that two-pronged intent, we realize that we are limited in our reservoir of material (thank goodness!) to information concerning people whom we at Juniata now know or have recently known. That is to say, if we start talking about anyone who graduated before 1967, we've lost just about everybody.

A weekly column of this sort can thus be expected to appear for at least four weeks, covering one class each week (i.e., '69, '68, and '67) and drawing, for the most part, from alumni material which the JC Bulletin publishes twice a year under the associate editorship of Mrs. James D. (Nan) Hunt '56. The remaining installment, which we'll proceed to take care of this week, will make mention of those Juniata grads who are working among us right here and now: the faculty of this College.

Leading the faculty list (as presented in the 1969-71 Catalogue Issue) is Dr. John Stauffer '36, President of the College, who also doubles as a professor of psychology. Miss Gertrude Butler '31 is an emerita professor of home economics who still is with us after about 35 years of teaching.

Those JC alumni who presently hold the rank of professor here include Dr. Ronald Cherry '53 in economics, Dr. John Comerford '50 in biology, Dr. Eva Hartzler '32 in chemistry, Dr. Earl Kaylor '46 in religion (he's also director of summer sessions), and Dr. Wilfred Norris '54 in physics.

Associate professors who are Juniata grads are John Bowser '57 in mathematics, George Dolnikowski '52 in Russian (he teaches some German too), Mary Ruth Linton '38 in music, Dr. Kenneth Rockwell '57 in biology, and Grace Shuler '56 the catalog librarian.

Dr. David Henrie '62 in chemistry, William Hofelt Jr. '65 in English, Ray Pfrogner '60 in physics (he's on leave this year), and Thomas Woodrow '58 in education are assistant professors of Juniata origin.

And with rank of instructor we find William Alexander '66 in economics, Christine Bailey '67 in classics, George Benigni '68 in German, D. Bruce Davis '65 in humanities, David Lee '64 in psychology (he serves primarily as associate dean of students and director of financial aid and placement), Thomas Robinson '66 in psychology (he's really administrative assistant to the President), Nancy Shedd '62 in English (she was here for last semester only), and Gary Sheppard '67 in physical education.

Next week we'll fill you in on some of the things Juniata's class of 1969 has been doing.

Letters Policy

Letters to the editor should be typed and double-spaced and should be submitted no later than 1:30 p.m. Monday. The editors reserve the right to print only non-libelous and responsible content and to edit all letters and commentaries submitted to the Juniatian. The staff also reserves the right to publish all full signatures unless the writer can supply very valid reasons for omitting his name.

Pitt Expands Foreign Study Program

The University of Pittsburgh's one-term study program in Rouen, France inaugurated in the fall of 1969, is being broadened to include opportunities for highly motivated students with a minimum of French training.

The program, open to students enrolled in any American college or university, was originally intended for advanced French majors. Those students will still be welcome in the program, and opportunities commensurate with their abilities and interests will be made available. But Dr. Jerome Schwartz, associate professor of French at Pitt and director of the Rouen program for the 1970-71 academic year, says he is now actively seeking beginning French students who wish to acquire proficiency in the language in a minimum time and with maximum exposure to French language and culture.

Application will be considered from any student who prior to departure will have had one year of college French or three years of high school training in the language. Students with less training probably could not be accepted in the program since they must have enough French on arrival in Rouen to communicate with the families with whom they will be housed.

Students at both the beginning and advanced levels will have several course options open to them under the new program. They may construct for themselves a 12- to 15-credit program from among four offerings: a course in language skills (6-9 credits); a lecture course in the history of French civilization, French political institutions or French literature, taught by a University of Rouen staff member (3 credits); a seminar on the contemporary French scene conducted in English by Dr. Schwartz (3 credits); and independent study (3 or more credits). The typical beginning student would probably take 9 credits of language work, plus the seminar. The typical advanced student might take 6 credits of language work, plus the lecture course, plus the seminar and/or independent study.

Further program information and application forms may be obtained by writing to Dr. Jerome Schwartz, Director, the University of Pittsburgh Program in France, 1617 Cathedral of Learning, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania 15213, or by calling (412) 621-3500, extension 491.

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College

Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED NOV. 4, 1934

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891

ADELE ABOUTOK, managing editor
BARBARA CLAAR, associate editor
JANET MASON, copy & proof editor
TOM DIEHL, sports editor
RICK SMITH & WILL SCARLET, circulation
BILL DAVID, photography editor
JOEL SCHANTZ, business manager
RICHARD ABLARD, advertising manager
SUE BERMEL, layout editor
VALERIE DERRICKSON, art & coordinator
CINDY CARLSON, news & feature editor

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Alice Horncane, Paul Keely, Donna Koppelt, Dan Rosenberger, Dave Beahm, Donna Knupp, Marta Daniels, Susanne Babcock, Steve Wesley, Dick Evrard

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000

Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVI, No. 13

February 20, 1970

Alard Quartet to Present Concert in Ellis

The widely-acclaimed Alard Quartet will present a concert at Juniata College the evening of Sunday, Feb. 22, at 8:30 p.m. in the ballroom of Ellis Hall.

The program will feature the works of Scarlatti, Vaughan-Williams, Turina and Dvorak, and will be offered free of admission charge. The Quartet will appear at Juniata under the auspices of the Ellis Hall Fine Arts Committee, a division of the Juniata College Center Board.

The Alard Quartet has been in residence at The Pennsylvania State University since 1962. The most recent in a distinguished line of string quartets to emerge from the Juilliard School of Music, the Alard Quartet was formed in 1954. Prior to coming to Penn State the members of the Quartet have been artists in residence at the University of Taxas.

The members of the Quartet are violinists Joanne Zagst and Donald Hopkins, violist Raymond Page and cellist Leonard Feldman. The group boasts a continuity of personnel unmatched by any leading American ensemble. The Alard Quartet is the only chamber group ever to have won the coveted Young Artists Award of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Philosophy Prof Gives Lecture On Loneliness

by Susanne Babcock

Abraham Kaplan, Professor of Philosophy at the University of Michigan, came to Juniata last week for the purpose of reviewing the philosophy department in conjunction with the Division I evaluation. In addition, he delivered a lecture on loneliness, and conducted several discussions on related topics, ostensibly for the benefit of those students necessarily concerned with the nature of man.

And yet, what Professor Kaplan had to say is of elementary importance to all of us. From the premise that loneliness is a universal experience to the conclusion that it is possible to establish a close relationship with another without losing track of one's own identity, he analyzed a problem which is essential to human life. It is the implication in this, beyond anything specific he may have said, which is most remarkable — that the analysis of basic human problems is important and even respectable. There is a tendency in our society, particularly on college campuses, to put down such problems as strictly personal, 'something you have to work out for yourself', and therefore something which cannot be looked at objectively. Professor Kaplan leans strongly in the other direction, obviously feeling that rational consideration of subjective interests is not only possible, but also highly desirable.

Brave New Juniata : or It Can Happen Here

by Bill Miller

My eyes bolted open to the shock stimulus of my instant awake alarm. It was 5 a.m. and time to get in line to make 7 a.m. breakfast. I unhooked myself from the wall bed, and removed the instant awake alarm from my head. I wondered what it was like when there was enough room to sleep horizontally with only two students to a room. It must have been hard on the back. My 15 roommates were already awake and putting on their blue overalls hooked directly above the wall bed so as not to waste time. My micro-dot books were right where I had left them, taped to my hand under a band-aid. My mini-tape recorder was in the pocket of my overalls. Thank God, or whoever is responsible, I thought I lost it; this could mean buying a new one at the bookstore for 78.25. That's O.K., I had sufficient saved from my 90 cents an hour job at the cafeteria cleaning up the paper plates and plastic spoons for three hours, three days a week. I was dressed in three minutes as usual; no need to change into new Associated Burlap Overalls, since "no dirty" clothing was released to the public. I swallowed a few sanitary body tablets, and walked to the breakfast line. Too bad the escalators broke down again, with the ianatorial engineers on strike; now I'd probably be worn out for my first 3-hour class, "Thermodynamics of the Quantum Plasma," required for all Elementary Education majors. It didn't matter to me any more, I only had two more years to go and I'd be ready for Preparation to Graduate School, School. I felt sorry for the sub-freshmen with the full 12 years ahead of them. I met my friend No. 3561 on the line to breakfast; I let him cut in before the guard saw it. He talked the usual jabber about the war in Florida, and bringing home our senior citizens in Canada to help out. I expressed my memorized opinion of not wanting to go into the "kill forces" until the fighting was on our own ground. Besides J.C. was now separated from the rest of the area by a 17-foot stone wall, topped with electrified wire; we were relatively safe from any enemy, including outside opinions. Breakfast was gruel again, but still more substantial than the food pills. Anyway, the cafeteria was under new management now so we were promised sugar rations. The line was shorter to get to Q building today. I could hardly wait to hook myself onto the upright body hangers and rest my feet. I should go to the nurse for the pain I've had in my head for a month, but they still haven't heard from the doctor since last year. The professor isn't in Thermo again, just his 3-hour, tape-recorded lecture, so I left my mini-tape recorder to pick it up and I got on the line for "Float" (nickname for Floating Inn hovering 10 feet over the campus, to provide more room for lines). When I finally got in I bought my usual doughnut and victory coffee and paid $5 to the check-out machine. It rgeistered the wrong amount as usual and spilled half of the coffee. I rested for a few minutes at a booth in front of the 50-foot glass windows overlooking the rest rooms and thought about when that new dorm in Mill Creek would be ready for occupancy. I got on line for the post office building and checked out my box on the fifth floor. Nothing but advertisements for magazines again, and one letter from the school personally addressed: Dear No. 2224 — Blah, blah, blah, owe $4,000, Blah, blah, blah, Sincerely, Dean No. 346. I decided to cut my remaining two three-hour classes, "Calculus of 17 Variables," and "U.S. History since 1960," since tomorrow was my second try at the Comprehensive Ability Test, (a 3-minute question and answer seession integrating my past ten years of schooling in front of faculty members from randomly selected schools around the country). I stood on line to get back to the dormitory and took two four-hour sleep pills. After hooking myself to the wall bed, I daydreamed briefly about my future, but as usual, drew a complete blank.

Mrs. Ellis Has Surgery

Mrs. Calvert N. Ellis is reported in good condition and has been discharged from the hospital in Athens, Greece, where she underwent minor surgery recently.

Juniata College President Emeritus Ellis and his wife will remain in Athens for a few days and then will spend several days in Madrid before making the last stop on their world tour in Mallorca. Those who wish to correspond with Dr. and Mrs. Ellis before their return to the U.S. may address mail to the Hotel Fenix, Palma de Mallorca, Spain.

'Round Campus

by Rich Smith

Juniata celebrated Valentine's Day last Saturday with the Mid-Winter Formal Dinner Dance. There was a good crowd, many attractive JC coeds with very unusual hair styles, and plenty of good food. The decorations and planning was very well handled by the freshmen who had obviously put a great deal of thought into the preliminary stages of the event. Jake Bumgardner deserves a special note of recognition for his two huge Valentine cakes which were made in a heart shape and then well decorated. In talking to a number of students after the dance was over, this reporter found that many felt that this had been the best and most successful dance since they had come to Juniata.

If you should happen to see an extra large number of strange people living on your hall this weekend, they are probably here in conjunction with Colloquy. Greg Heuston is the man who has had the major headache of making housing arrangements for all of our visitors.

All students received a copy of the Ellis Hall House Rules and Second Semester Calendar in their mail boxes about two weeks ago. This seems to be a real addition for the general student body because they can now have at their fingertips, a complete calendar of scheduled activities. Many of the rules were new to me such as the item about the Post Office bulletin board and the fact that the desk will cash small personal checks for a dime. Coming up in the Spring are a Carnival at the Baker Nature Farm and also another Casino Night. Speaking of that last event, the J-Club and the Recreation Committee aree open to any suggestions which you might have to improve upon the last Casino Night.

I feel that it is necessary to urge all of the students to really support your class's All Class Nite presentation. These productions depend entirely on the ideas which may develop within the class. Even if you have little or no acting ability, there are many phases of this activity in which help is needed off-stage as well as on.

For Sale

Wanted, responsible party to take over low monthly payments on a spinet piano. Can be seen locally. Write Credit Manager P.O. Box 35, Cortland, Ohio.

It wasn't too long ago that Bill Leith's future was still a big question mark.

Today he's a man with the answers.

Bill Leith started as one of our management trainees shortly after graduating from Lake Forest.

Two years later he was an administrative assistant, handling new business for our Equity Management service.

Just last June he became our youngest Assistant Investment Officer.

His job is a big one.

Our customers are likely to ask many searching questions before entrusting their money to us.

Bill has the answers.

Responsibility?

A small fortune's worth.

But then we have lots of responsibility to hand out.

If you'd like to know more about the opportunities at Marine Midland, please add your name to our schedule in the placement office.

We'd like to see you on. FEBRUARY 16, 1970

MARINE MIDLAND GRACE TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK
Marine Midland Building, 140 Broadway, New York, N.Y. 10015

We seem to be the only bank in town that thinks $7,000 of your money is worth investing.

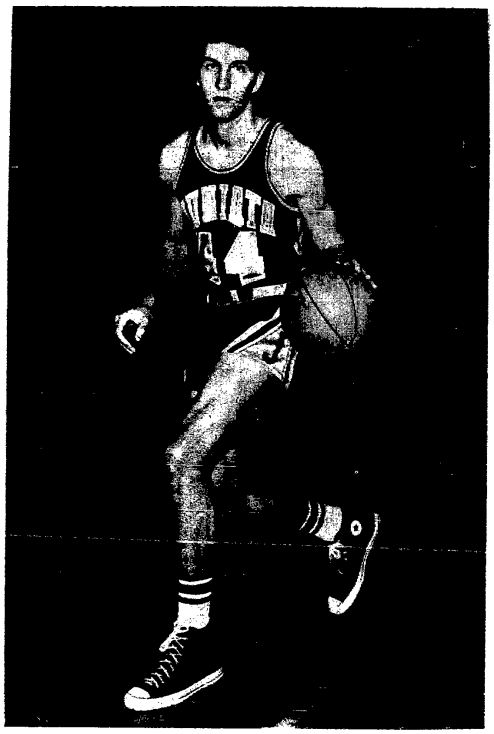
That's about all you need to open an Equity Management Account. (Ask anywhere else and you're likely to find they're not very interested in anything under $25,000. In fact, don't be surprised if they think of $75,000 as a modest starter.)

What's more, once you've come up with the first $7,000, you can add as little as about $2,300. On the first day of any month.

This is not a mutual fund—your money is invested in about 20 stocks which are actually carried in your name. This means that if, for any reason, you decide to withdraw, you can take your stock in kind or you can elect to take cash instead.

Our Equity Management Service is a very unusual idea, so there are probably several questions you would like to ask before you entrust us with your money. We have a man who'll be pleased to answer them all—Bill Leith. Call 943-6192. Or write him at our Trust Department, 250 Park Ave., New York, New York 10017.

MARINE MIDLAND GRACE TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK



FROM THE TEE-PEE

by Tom Diehl

On the Juniata basketball scene, scoring and John Smith have become synonymous. The six-foot-three junior center from Lebanon passed the thousand point mark last Saturday evening at Grove City. His 21 point effort in that game raised his three year total to 1,020 points. In accumulating this total, he scored 171 points his freshmen year and 460 last season.

In this current 69-70 season, John now has 389 points, averaging 20.5 points per game. He is also third in the Middle Atlantic Conference Northern Division (as of Feb. 9) with 206 points, or a 22.8 league average.

Head coach Russ Trimmer has praised Smith both as an excellent ballplayer and a sound student. "It's rewarding to see a well-rounded young man excel at something he enjoys. John has represented Juniata College very well in this respect during the past three years." he said.

As John is just a junior, he will have another season to add to his impressive achievement. In the past as well as the present, he has exhibited that certain intangible spirit or desire both on and off the court that molds achievers. Coach Trimmer's adjective "well-rounded" is appropriate when describing Smith.

Batten Down the Hatches!! Rhinoceros Coming!!

When Juniata College Department of Speech and Theatre tackles the avant-garde theatre, it chooses left of the mainstream of non-conformity and two stages above utter despair. In its March 5, 6, 7 major arena production the traditional conformable progression of direct comprehensible dialoge is exploded in microbes of malignant vollies of dissident diatribes inexplicable in substance and tone to the life style that should, but never will, be. To say that Ionesco's RHINOCEROS (the March production's title) defies comprehension would be to perpetuate a disservice upon the author who obviously knows something about the human species and who has gratuitously grafted we homosapiens onto the Rhinoceros, so in actualtity he is saying we are Rhinosapiens, unless, of course, you profess to be something else, which then becomes your own thing.

Humor is found on many levels, and Ionesco finds enjoyment inherent in the leatherly, course, green epidermis of the Rhino. He delights in challenging the observer (not to mention the production people with the "before your very eyes" transformation of one the play's characters from an "us" into a "them." When this feat is achieved in an arena setting, alchemy has reached its zenith!

RHINOCEROS is self-inflicted communications strangulation. RHINOCEROS is man capitulating himself to animal instincts and cravings — a carnivous carnival of consanguineous cavorters. To be more explicit about the play would be to give away the plot — to feign occultism with its meanings would be ingenious (so says the play's director Professor Clayton Briggs). If you itch for something entirely absurd — if you seek roaring companionship in convivial surroundings, RHINOCEROS is your bag. Rhino dates and times to anticipate: March 5, 6, 7, at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall.

Picnic Production Artistically Aided By Juniatians

The Huntingdon Community Theatre's forthcoming production of the stage play PICNIC finds four Juniata students carrying lead roles in the presentation. Mike Godfrey will be seen in the lead role of Hal with Judy Rosen as Madge, his center of attention. Joining Mike and Judy will be Ginny Tournier in the character role of Mrs. Potts and Richard Fellows as Alan, Madge's first suitor. These four young people from the campus bring a tremendous background of experience to this production and should make this the highlight of the current local theatre season.

To see PICNIC you only need to phone 643-5570 for reservations. The cost for student tickets (ID card in hand) is $1.25 and the production will take place Fef. 19, 20, 21 and Feb. 26, 27, & 28. The community theatre is located in the Huntingdon Art Center adjacent to the IGA store.

Matmen Still Trying for Win

On Feb. 14, 1970, the mat men from Juniata traveled to Carlisle for a match. Once again there were four freshmen distributed throughout the starting line-up. They were: Jim McCartney, Ed Constable, Jeff Rudy, and Jim Hutchison. The young grapplers are learning the collegiate style and method, as was proved by Jim McCartney, who wrestled a smooth match to pull a decisive victory. To cover the team's inexperience are such wrestlers as: Jeff Elwell, who is defending a (6-3-0) record, Jeff Massingham (5-2-1), Dan Greening (5-2-0), and Pete Schuyler (8-1-0). These men combined are the wrestling representatives from our school. Even though the grapplers have gone down in defeat, they still retain the desire to work and earn. Their team pride has been unmatched by any opposing team this year. The results of the individual bouts are as follows:

118: Jeff Massingham (J) dec.
Bob Neuworth (5-1)
126: Jim McCartney (J) dec.
Herb Snyder (9-0)
134: Craig Williams (D) pinned
Ed Constable (1:02 1st. period)
142: Jim Taylor (D) dec.
Jeff Rudy (6-1)
150: Gary DePersia (D) pinned
Jim Hutchison (4:19 2nd. period)
158: Bob Crobak (D) pinned
Jeff Elwell (5:25 3rd. period)
167: Dan Greening (J) dec.
Craig Kneeland (16-0)
177: Glenn Boye (D) pinned
Warren Scott (1:22 1st. period)
191: Rich Horner (D) dec.
Tom Mears (8-4)
HWT: Pete Schuyler (J) pinned
Rich Slagle (4:52 2nd. period)

FINAL SCORE:
DICKINSON—26
JUNIATA—14

On Wednesday night, Feb. 11, 1970, the JC mat men traveled to Loretta, Pennsylvania for a contest that was outstanding. Even though the team lost, they were extremely aggressive, but because of some unfortunate breaks they went down in defeat.

Beginning with the 118 lb. bout, and Terry Buckwalter's merited spirit the team forged onward. Even though erry lost to Pennsylvania state runner-up Allen Andrews, his display of desire and ambition began the incentive, which never faded until after Pete Schuyler decked his heavyweight opponent.

The Indian mat men have been faced with many injuries; but because of a well balanced squad, the team continues to display the desire imperative for victory. In a pep talk with the team, Coach Berrier said, "One of these times the breaks are going to fall our way. When, I can't say." The season isn't over yet, and there is still time for the team to receive victory for their labors. The match results were as follows:

118: Allen Andrews (SF) pinned
Terry Buckwalter (5:57 3rd period)
126: Ron Dosh (SF) dec.
Jim McCartney (8-5)
134: Gary Parozzola (SF) dec.
Ed Constable (26-3)
142: Jim McGarrity (SF) pinned
Mike McCartney (6:47 3rd. period)
150: Jim Harvey (SF) pinned
Jim Hutchison (7:08 3rd. period)
158: Jeff Elwell (J) dec.
Dave Erby (8-3)
167: Dan Greening (J) dec.
Ken Zakraysek (5-0)
177: Warren Scott (J) pinned
Mike Davis (:29 1st. period)
191: Jim Torsell (SF) dec.
Tom Mears (8-0)
HWT: Pete Schuyler pinned
Bob Madden (4:16 2nd. period)

FINAL SCORE:
ST. FRANCIS—24
JUNIATA—16

Task Force Mulling Results In Proposals, Co-ordination

by David Beahm

Over the Christmas vacation the Task Force spent several afternoons reviewing the collected information from Discussion Day, private brainstorming, faculty questionnaire, studies of other collegiate programs, and many other sources. From this deliberation has come a set of preliminary suggestions for curriculum changes. As of now, the proposals are simply that—proposals.

Presently the Task Force is involved with work at three levels:

(1) Brainstorming the "fantastically difficult" question of what the purpose of Juniata College really is and what it will be in the future.

(2) Coordinating the committees set up to examine the proposals already made.

(3) Continue to explore new ideas and opportunities. This includes the possibility of closer work with Alumni Council whose president, Russ Hill, has expressed interest in establishing a pilot project Intership Program to provide access and assistance to those students interested in a more practical application of their courses.

Briefly, the proposals now under study include a two tract program with a freshman year common to both tracts. During the freshman year all students would take a course similar to the "Nature of Man" course now offered. In addition, the year would be divided into three 10-week courses (Humanities, Social Sciences and Natural Sciences) with an emphasis on problem solving, not the typical definition learning of present "intro" courses. The technicalities and lifelessness of many low-level courses is seen as a major reason for scholastic disenchantment during the freshman year.

By broadening the freshman courses it is hoped that the second year student would then be able to choose one of two tracts optioned to him. Tract I offers a program of independent study set up by the student with his advisor. Degree requirements might include such things as passing a series of comprehensive exams within a certain time period.

Tract II is also built on the student's own design but with more emphasis on courses as a foundation instead of strictly independent study. Degree reqquirements could include passing a minimum number of courses in good standing. No major, collateral, or distribution requirements would be imposed.

Tract II would include a number of standard courses into which the student could simply fit in. This might be necessary for those wishing to go into professions requiring more standardized background. The options for some variation to accomodate individual interests, however, would still remain open. This Tract could be put on a pass/fail basis or contain the P F option, raising the standard level for passing.

These and many other proposals are now under consideration by the Task Force, Faculty Committees, and soon ad hoc sub-committees. These committees are being questioned with respect to every phase of Juniata tradition and Juniata future. Briefly, the existing committees and questions being considered are as follows:

(1) Admissions Committee examining present admissions criterion could a non-four year program be initiated for accelerated or decelerated instruction; how would new curriculum changes affect present enrollment and transfer students.

(2) Curriculum Committee considering present calendar problems; better use of summer time; can student-evaluation occur without being used as a motivational factor; should off-campus experience be required?

(3) Educational Resources Committee deals with how space is being used on campus, including libraries, computer centers, labs, Swigart, and others.

(4) Faculty Council focuses on hiring processes, sabbaticals, degree work, promotions, tenure, and evaluations of faculty members. (5) Registration and Standing Committee consider how curriculum changes would affect transfer students, grading policies, and the writing conference program.

(6) Student Activities Council examine student living arrangements, social events, prohibitions, who determines rules governing private lives of student, counseling facilities, and student-faculty contact.

In addition, sub-committees dealing with campus communications, continuation of discussion day, inter-institutional cooperation, financial feasibility of proposals, and creative teaching innovations. It is hoped that from these committees concrete programs may come and eventual change may result.

Beau Craft Sterling

Charms, pierced and pierced-look earings

Colonial Gift Shop

IN VIEW OF THE VIETNAM WAR

and with respect to INDIVIDUAL CONSCIENCE, the following PROPOSAL dealing with MILITARY SERVICE is submitted for public consideration:

SOLDIER'S CONTRACT

An individual within U.S. Military Service will be required to sign a contract of agreement with the U.S. Government, if he elects to render U.S. Military Service on Foreign soil. If he elects not to sign a contract — offered to him by the U.S. Government — for Military Service on Foreign soil, then he cannot be called to duty on Foreign soil, unless Congress declares War.

If you desire to see this proposal passed into law by Congress, send this ad with your name and address to:

RICHARD ABLARD, Box 004
JUNIATA COLLEGE

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

_____

PRINT

THE JUNIATIAN

Vol. XLVI, No. 14 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | February 27, 1970

Pollution Forces "Decade Of Ecology" — Even Here!

by David Beahm

Ed. note: The source material for the following article was gathered from many varied companies and persons, mostly from an interview with James Valentine, State Fish Warden, and correspondence with Terry Fabian, Water Pollution Control Specialist, West Virginia Paper and Pulp Company, Strickler's Dairy, and Fiberglas.

As pollution has rocketed to the top of the nation's priorities and the 1970's has been declared the "Decade of Ecology", it has become increasingly obvious that if the problem will be solved in time for our children to enjoythe pleasures of life there must be a widespread movement in the grassroots to stop pollution at all lepels. Accordingly, it seems in keeping that we examine the pollution problem here in Huntingdon particularly the pollution of the Juniata River.

Conventionally there are three major sources of chronic water pollution: industrial sources, mining wastes and sewage. Although Huntingdon has little renown as a great industrial center and therefore is not in the severe stages of metropolitan areas, pollution by industries has created few problems.

Strickler's Dairy claims, "All solid waste from our plant is picked up and disposed of by Kann Bros., collectors. We have some small amount of liquid waste, in the form of skim milk, which goes through the Huntingdon sewage disposal plant."

Fiberglas writes, " . . . Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corporation deposits its waste materials through the borough sewage system. Therefore, our company is not guilty of polluting any streams in and around the Huntingdon area. In addition, we have not received any complaints locally concerning any air pollution that would originate at this plant.'

West Virginia Paper and Pulp Company (Blair County), after an elaborate description of processing procedures, states, "We at Westvaco are concerned with all three areas of pollution. As a corporation, we spent 34 million dollars on pollution in the past few years. Each of our mills is currently spending from 5%, to 10%, of the gross capital input on air and water pollution abatement programs.

"Here at Tyrone, we have a complete program for waste management. Our liquid wastes receive primary treatment here at the mill and are then pumped to the Borough Sewage Treatment Plant for secondary treatment.

"A new treatment plant is now in the planning stages. This Plant will provide better treatment for the present waste load as well as increased sapacity for treating wastes on a regional basis (eventually to include all of northern Blair County.)

"In the air pollution field, we have also developed a program which will result in compliance with all State regulations in the not too distant future."

Elco, known as a possible pollutor in previous years, did not reply to my letter of inquiry.

The Mapleton Sand and Glass Company, after extensive filtering processes, does release a fine-grained sand resulting in water cloudiness but little serious consequence.

Mine drainage still causes some problems although new stripping rights haven't been granted for some time. The upper reaches of Great Trough Creek are the worst, but the situation still isn't as bad as in some stripping areas. Some progress has been made in this area by installation of small stream treatment plants in these areas. Until this becomes more economical, however, the measures will remain inefficient.

Mr. Fabian states, "The main pollution problem in Huntingdon County occurs from domestic sewage. The only municipalities which have operating waste treatment facilities are Huntingdon Borough

Cont'd on page 5

Support Needed . . .

JWSF Lists Week's Activities

A sit-down meal with faculty waiters, a slave auction, and a bake sale and auction are some of the activities in store for Juniatians next week, March 2–8, as the Juniata World Service Fund holds its annual spring fund-raising drive. Students may remember last fall's JWSF — Project Concern campaign, which included "cups for concern" placed in tht dining hall and a bake sale and auction. In this case, all of the money collected — close to $200 — was contributed to Project Concern, an "independent, non-profit organization providing medical care, medical education, and supplementary self-help programs to the peoples of the world."

Next week's campaign, however, will focus upon raising money for Juniatas foreign student, Jee Soo Kim, a junior math major from Korea. In order to continue supporting him for next year's two semesters, $500 must be raised. In addition, there is the possibility that JWSF may support another incoming foreign student next year. All this requires money, which can only come from the unified support of the Juniata students.

variety of activities will be going on from March 2–8. There will be a special sit-down dinner Tuesday, March 3, at which time members of the faculty will serve as waiters. Dinner will be served in two shifts: at 5 p.m. and 6 p.m. Cups will be placed on each table in which students are asked to place their"tips" ast tokens of appreciation to the faculty waiters serving them. (The faculty will donate these tips to JWSF). The faculty member receiving the highest total tip will receive an appropriate award for his services.

A slave auction will be held Wednesday, Mar. 4, at 9 p.m. in the Ballroom. At this time, Juniata males may buy a female slave, be she freshman, sophomore, junior, or senior. She will then be at his sole command all Saturday afternoon, Mar. 7, when all boys' dorms will have open house. So if any male wants his bed made, his hair cut, a paper typed, or his back scratched, here is his perfect opportunity.

The tables will be turned Sunday afternoon, Mar. 8 —"Revenge Day" — when the males will become slaves and the females their masters. A girl may buy a slave tag for only 50 cents during the week and choose whom she wishes to enslave by giving him the tag.

On Thursday, Mar. 5, at 5:30 p.m., JWSF's traditional Bake Sale and Auction will be held in the main lobby. Baked goods, and meals, card games, and cars offered by the faculty will be auctioned off to the highest bidder.

In addition to the above activities, a campus-wide solicitation will be conducted by representatives of Juniata World Service Fund throughout the week. Anything a student feels he can afford to contribute or pledge will be greatly appreciated.

Remember, JWSF — Project Concern is the only campus service agency. The money collected during JWSF Week will help sponsor a fellow student's room and board, and, hopefully, an incoming student's education at Juniata next year. In order for JWSF Week to be a total success, however, EVERY-ONE'S support is needed!

WJC Extends Audience Through Cable Television

"You are listening to WJC, 620 AM and 108 FM, here in Huntingdon." Such is the phrase you now hear when you are listening to Juniata College's WJC radio. What does it all mean? Just that WJC has now become the first carrier current college radio station to broadcast over cable television and radio. Broadcasting on the Huntingdon TV Cable started on Thursday, Feb. 12, but it was months prior to this that the actual work began.

Terry Wickham, station manager a few years back, started the ball rolling by trying to increase WJC's broadcast area. The ball was kept rolling by Larry (Oz) Osborne and FCC permission to broadcast on a TV cable was finally received. The next problem was selection and installation of an FM signal generator. After much delay the unit was finally received and broadcasting began under the management of Stephen Suplicki, new Station Manager.

The addition of FM is not only change to WJC. New board members have been chosen for the coming year. New members are Stephen Suplicki, Station Manager; Charles Funk, Business Manager; Glenn Billingsley, Program Director; Kenneth Lindroth, Advertising Manager; Joyce McQueen, Music Director; Barry Carbaugh, News Director; Chuck Knouse, Chief Engineer; Marilyn Koczanowski, Traffic Manager; and Judy Rosen, Secretary. The new members officially take office on April 15, with the exception of a few offices which have been recently vacated by past board members.

"The time is now 8:31, stay tuned for news at 9:00 here on WJC, 620 AM and 108 FM in Huntingdon." When you listen to WJC, remember it's the student's radio station, run for the students by a competent, close-knit board of students. Regardless of popular opinion, Juniata College is a college for students, and WJC is one group which maintains this philosophy.

Classes Crank Out Original Musicals For Annual Contest

Each class of Juniata College is uniting to create an original musical for all Class Niyht. The traditional competition for the cup will take place in Oller Auditorium on March 14.

The freshmen, with a script written by Carol Olmstead and committee and produced by Linda "Stretch" Markey, promise a musical melodrama full of sex(?) but no violence. The freshmen are not quite as unified as the other classes and there is a plea for help.

Linda Eickhoff, producer for the sophomores, says it's the best attempt for unification of the class yet. The script, written by a group of interested sophomores, is a take-off on Snow White. However, Prince Charming didn't quite make it and the magical transformation has an unexpected ending.

Co-operation is fantastic in the junior class which has Judy Turner as the producer. Their twenty-two minute original is an adaptation of an ancient legend which lends itself to various types of music and an interesting script. It is said that there is no moral in this musical — it's all moral! The subtitle is "It's Been a Hard Day's Night."

Last year's champs, the seniors, with a dance scene in the dark and a stage full of "animals" are confident of recapturing the trophy —especially as lifeless forms take over the plot.

Interested Juniata students are urged to participate in the tryouts on campus for the Penn State Intercollegiate Reading Festival and Eastern Poetry Reading Contest. Penn State will play host to readers from Eastern colleges, including those from Juniata, April 30 through May 2.

On campus, tryouts are scheduled for Wednesday evening, March 4, in Shoemaker Galleries from 8:15 til 9 p.m. Hopefuls should be prepared to read a short (not more than three minute) selection, preferably sonnet length. Material for the festival at Penn State is to be taken from British and Irish poetry of before 1920. The poem used for the tryouts does not necessarily have to be the same work as will be read at Penn State.

Chamber Music in Ellis Hall . . .

Music Dept. Announces Concert Series

The first of three chamber music recitals featuring Juniata College faculty members and guest artists will be presented Sunday, March 1 at 8:15 p.m. in the ballroom of Ellis Hall.

The program, and two others planned for April 19 and May 3, will be open to public audiences with no charge for admission.

Guest artist for the March 1 program will be John Riley, first cellist of the Hartford (Conn.) Symphony and a teacher at the Martt School of Music. Mr. Riley is a native of Altoona and has appeared as a guest soloist with the Altoona Symphony playing his own composition for cello and orchestra.

A graduate of the Eastman School of Music, Mr. Riley furthered his composition studies in Europe under the noted Swiss-French composer Arthur Honneger. His first string quartet won first prize in the Tamiment Competition in the early 1960's.

Dr. Robert F.King, director of the chamber series, will join pianist Mary Ruth Linton in a Telemann concerto, and Mrs. King will join them in a Brahms trio to close the March 1 program. Other pieces in the program include a violin-cello duet by Haydn and a serenade for violin, viola and cello by the contemporary composer Dohnanyi.

The second Juniata Chamber Orchestra program, set for April 19, will feature New York flutist Eleanor Lawrence. She will appear in works for small ensembles with flute and with the Orchestra in a Telemann suite for flute and strings.

The May 3 recital will bring to the Juniata College stage pianist Robert Mumper. The young American keyboard artist will join Dr. King, violinist, and Miss Ann Honsaker, flutist, in a performance of J. S. Bach's "Brandenburg Concerto No. 5." In addition, Mumper will perform with a string ensemble in the Mozart Piano quartet in G Minor and will join Mrs. Linton in the performance of the "Mother Goose Suite" by Ravel.

The series of recitals will be presented at Juniata College under the joint sponsorship of the Department of Music and the College Center Fine Arts Committee.

From the National and World Scene

Camille fact-finding team

Six months after hurricane hit Mississippi, thousands of men, women, and children continued to suffer hardships as a result of the disaster.

According to a preliminary report issued by a fact-finding team that recently toured the Gulf Coast area, 200,000 people in ten counties continued to suffer from the loss of housing and possessions, from the shortage of food or of facilities for preparing and storing food, from the loss of jobs and income, and from a serious lack of knowledge about the maze of private and public agencies that are charged with helping families and individuals.

Since local, state, and federal aid to the hurricane victims is now controlled by Governor Williams' ten-member, all-white Emergency Council of bankers, businessmen, and lawyers—only three of whom are from the Gulf coast—the plight of minority groups in the disaster area has been expecially desperate.

According to the report, "about 64,000 families experienced some kind of loss. This involves at least 200,000 people. Over half of the people in that area were in some way significantly affected."

Throughout the ten-county area, the team found "bureaucratic insensitivity" to the needs of disaster victims and a clear emphasis on industrial reconstruction rather than meeting the critical human needs of individuals. They also found that blacks and poor whites had been consistently excluded from the process of distributing local, state, and federal aid and from all the major processes of planning and development.

The team was struck by an "excessive emphasis on the physical aspects of recovery." The nature of the problem was summed up in a statement by the director of the Office of Emergency Preparedness for Gulf Coast Operations when he said 'Things are our business, not people!"

According to the fact-finding report, "The important activities associated with planning and development, including the distribution of the resources from the local, state, and federal governments is largely in the hands of one segment of the community: "This Council is totally white, male, and all of its members are either big businessmen, bankers, or lawyers. Only three are actually from the Gulf Coast. They have ignored and continue to ignore the will of large segments of the communities involved.

Medical supplies to Hanoi

A second shipment of open-heart surgery supplies was delivered in January to the North Vietnamese health ministry by a representative of the American Friends Service Committee.

On January 8, Louis Schneider, associate executive secretary of the American Friends Service Committee, presented the Viet-Duc hospital with the surgical supplies including heart valves, oxygenators and catheters.

In October, another American Friends Service Committee representative, Dr. Joseph Elder, professor of sociology at the University of Wisconsin, was in Hanoi to deliver the first shipment of such supplies.

The two shipments are valued at $25,000. The equipment was requested for civilian use in medical training schools. The instruments were purchased by Service Committee staff in Hong Kong.

View from a Flagpole

In these times of dissention and unrest it is encouraging to notice that the students of Juniata College have taken pains to keep themselves out of the mainstream of revolution. Realizing that there is a prescription of roles according to generational groups, the students here have cleverly avoid interest and action in the problems of the world outside. These dilemmas have been foregone in an effort to involve the students in the issues truly important to their academic life: student dress, obscenity, and general internal decay.

There is a valid and growing concern with the issue on campus of student attire. It is reassuring to note that students take such close assessment of each other and show such concern for the appearance of their fellow academians. This quality is particularly gratifying considering the fact that so many of the individual students have so little time to devote to an interest in their fashionability and stylishness. Where their personal limitations inhibit them, the unlimited constructive criticism of their peers can aid their personal evaluations. So much of a college atmosphere can be derived from the mere appearance of the inhabitants. And the look here at Juniata is undoubtedly collegiate.

But what a detraction from this scholastic aura is obscenity. This problem, recently brought to light by an anxious student, should be one of personal pride. Why should the students give visitors to our institution a bad impression by profaning everything one encounters? Let the school speak for itself.

There are definitely problems of internal decay within our student sub-culture. But with skill and effort these enigmas can be hidden from the administration and parents, and Juniata can appear unified, secure, progressive and productive. Let the city universities naively tackle the world predicaments. We are here preparing to solve such quandries only when we are forced into them and out of here. In expending our energies in deciphering the more immediate situations of our environment we are maintaining a public image whose demise is mourned by many who recall the idealistic college community of the '40's and '50's.

Crouch Initiates Contract System For Grading

by Linda Eickoff

In an effort to move education from its abstract, verbal and bookish nature to an education that recognizes experience, Dr. Howard Crouch has adopted the contract method in his classes this semester.

The contract method allows the student to determine his grade, by fulfillment of a set of predetermined requirements. The student fills out his contract, listing what requirements he intends to meet, and how he intends to accomplish this. The contract is then returned to Dr. Crouch who approves it or disapproves it, according to its clarity. One copy is then returned to the student and the other remains in Dr. Crouch's file.

The student may not upgrade his contract, but until the day before the final examination, may downgrade the contract. The theory behind this is that, if the student has not carried on the upgraded work throughout the semester, he does not deserve the higher grade.

To me, the system of grading (since it is mandatory to receive a grade) seems much fairer than the old random grading method. In Dr. Crouch's grading system, the teacher's bias is eliminated by allowing the student to freely speak his views without fear of "losing points" or gaining the teacher's disfavor. I find that I even work harder at these courses because I can pursue them in my own way at my own speed and the satisfaction I receive is not how I can regurgitate what I have learned, but how to apply my learning in a worthwhile experience.

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College

Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED NOV. 6, 1924

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891

ADELE ABOUTOK, managing editor
BARBARA CLAAR, associate editor
JANET MASON, copy & proof editor
TOM DIEHL, sports editor
RICK SMITH & WILL SCARLET, circulation
WILLIAM DAVID, photography editor
JOEL SCHANTZ, business manager
RICHARD ABLARD, advertising manager
SUE BERMEL, layout editor
VALERIE DERRICKSON, art & coordinator
CYNTHIA CARLSON, news & feature editor

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Alice Herncane, Paul Keely, Donna Reppelt, Dave Beahm, Donna Knupp, Steve Wesley, Chuck Bates, John Evrard, Joan Eisenhart, Peggy Haines, Gene Galbraith, Linda Eickoff, Dan Harriger

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000

Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVI, No. 14

February 27, 1970

Letters to the Editor

Ti-Grace

To the editor:

I suppose it is about time for someone to take on Juniata's version of the radical liberal, i.e. one who is going to do good for others whether others want it or not. In fact, our poor, innocent freshman women were so incensed at being asked to express an opinion that not one of them showed up at a special meeting at which any of their questions were to be answered. If they, the alleged victims, are uninterested, why should Miss Daniels feel called upon to make a plea in their behalf?

Miss Daniels seems to feel that she has some special prerogative in mounting emotional attacks on what is and is not done around here, when what is done is done by others—without her personal approval. I propose that we let her off the emotional hook, skip the irrelevant rhetoric, and attempt to deal with whatever issues she thinks she has dug up. There are apparently two: (1) the nature of the experiment; (2) the content of the experiment. I shall deal with them consecutively.

Let's first dispense with the notion that she feels that anyone who acts independently of her own will is attacking her personally. I don't think that she really feels that I ought to ask her if I may have potato soup for dinner. Let us also grant the point that provocation is provocation (by definition). We needn't be instructed on that score. But it is patently false that the petition in question in her letter (Juniatian, February 13, 1970) was designed as a hoax. It was designed to test certain hypotheses, the testing of which would have been impossible were he hypotheses made known beforehand. The quarrel, if there is one, cannot be with the mechanics of the experiment, but must be over whether or not the experiment should be run. It seems clear that it hurt no one, much less Colloquy. How under any circumstances can controversy be detrimental to the cause of controversy? And if it is relevance in the classroom you want, why scream as soon as you get it? Either Miss Daniels identifies too closely with the purposes of Colloquy, or she has a specific point of view she wishes to promote. Perhaps the former is true because the latter is true. In that case it would appear that it is we who are being used as a sounding board for Miss Daniels' benefit, and that Colloquy is for her and not for thosewho participate in it in the interest of the free exchange of thought. Anyway, why can't a petition be an experiment and a petition at the same time?

Let us also be clear that Miss Atkinson need not have signed her contract with the "no-men" stipulation. After all, it was she who put it there. She is not operating under a hardship in talking only to women. It is part of her program. But by any acceptable moral standard, intolerance in the name of tolerance is self-destructive and unjustifiable. That being the case, she should not be invited to Colloquy: she is destroying that in the name of which Colloquy is being set up, namely the free exchange of thought under fair and equal conditions. It is strange, at least, not to permit that for which one purportedly stands. You were, you know, free in deciding whether to invite her. In that case I should think that you would insist that she come under your terms or not at all. If you don't do that, then we can only conclude that a certain point of view is in fact being promoted; this holds independently of whether you have invited representatives of the other side. As against both sides, however, I should think that in terms of human decency there are no sides. If ideas and practices are any good, they are good no matter to whom they are presented or on whom they are promulgated. The fact remains: repression can never be used as a justification for further repression. (Parenthetically, it might be pointed out that I care little one way or the other whether Miss Atkinson chooses to speak to a females—only audience. I feel that I have less to be defensive about than she does, since it is she who comes armed with the club. What is important is the theoretical issue for it can be generalized to other areas beyond the justand the unjust aspects of the feminist cause.)

And I should like to call to your attention, Miss Daniels, if you're not doing anything in particular, the fact that the shortest way to mistreating others is taking oneself too seriously. So much for mysticism.

Donald T. Hartman

Mini Power

To the editor: Feb. 17, 1970

He, she or it really told it like it may be; after all for whose benefit are the parades and trends of fashion each season? Certainly some of the American, British and Parisian fashions are 100% useless to wear. Rudi Gernreich created the topless bathing suit, one, because he likes women's bumpy chests compared to his flat one and, two, he likes women with sunburned breasts. Mary Quant, "inventor" of the miniskirt, had not been to areas where the temperatures do drop below 60°F and the wind blows. Everytime the temperature drops below sixty and the wind blows I think "chapped knees and cold thighs" (yes, Queen Victoria, thighs are again part of the dialect). Also it's even become embarrassingly dangerous to drop something for fear of bending down to pick it up or reach for it; some seemingly chivalrous boy might pick it up but what a view on the way back up. Talk about distraction — no wonder chivalry is leaving us!

Way back when someone remarked that knees are the ugliest part of the body, he didn't foresee that there were so many knock-kneed and knobby-kneed girls and women until the advent of the miniskirt. If that's considered attractive(?) count me out. No one has commented that the models for these miniskirts are slender and un-knock-kneed (knobby knees I leave out — everyone's knees are knobby to some extent). They also do not perform feasible actions in the clothes except walking — strutting back and forth which I always thought the male peacock was to do. Are women still supposed to stand-strut around and look good to attract he male? It seems this is a bit of hypocrisy in a societythatprides itself for "liberating the woman from her traditional place (in the home)."

To say that women are blind addicts of fashion is too one sided—what of the men's dress lately? Guys pride themselves to besnazzy dressers, indeed, they may even be more fadsish than girls — Nehru jackets and turtle-knecks. But does the length of their pants go up any or their shirt collars dip lower — No, supposedly they have nothing to reveal except hair. Desmond Morris places all the blame for fashion on the women trying to catch a man. How many famous designers are men: de Laurent, Gernreich, Dior, Cardin, Beene, Valentino, Courreges and Esterel. (After all it must be realized that the inventor of the bra must have been a man who didn't like the way women's muscles were doing their job.) The two well-known female designers present a contrast, from the well-tailored practical "look" of Chanel to the teeny-boppered miniskirt of Mary Quant.

Today's American society is geared to YOUTH POWER. Many a harried housewife tries to look young by wearing short, mod skirts bot how many of those under 25 sneer and say "dig the bag in the miniskirt". She's only fooling herself. Physical youth is gone; all that may remain is a desire to be with it. Are physical appearances what make one young and, to get mushy, attractive, pleasant-to-be-around or is it mental outlook?

If what's up a girl's skirt is all guys think of then they should be coming to the saturation point in a few months (years? I hope not my kneses have been chapped for two now). To put it bluntly: contemplation of one's ass or anyone else's should be restrained to the bathroom or bedroom and not the public.

Heard any great fairy tales lately? Remember "Alice In Wonderland?" Take a trip with Alice, WJC and the JC profs., this Sunday night at 10 p.m.

Dear whoever you were I agree!

Tired of taking up hems

Misinformed

To the editor:

In reply to Miss Daniel's letter to the editor, I find that this Miss Daniels has been misinformed, has read the facts wronly, or just plain refuses to see the facts.

First of all the Social Psychology class drew up a petition to study the social factors in petition signing—with or without knowledge on the part of the subject about what one is signing. The petition formed by the committee was not "misinformed, incomplete, loaded, and 'psychologically' destructive" in any way except to narrow minded people. This committee was aware that Miss Atkinson was legally bound to a contract not permitting her to lecture in front of men unless paid. The committee purposely worded the petition ambiguously to draw any questions concerning the "boycott," a "feminist," "Colloquy Weekend," even "discrimination."

Then there are the results of our experiment, Miss Daniels. To support our hypothesis that social factors are involved in petition signing, we used two types of petitions, blank sheets and ficticiously signed sheets, to find if more people would sign the blank sheet or the "signed" sheet. Out of the 120 people contacted in the women's dorms, seventy women did sign those petitions whereas fifty women refused. The issue, admittedly controversial, was not intended to "hoax" the subjects into signing. They put their names on the petition because they wanted to. No one forced them or tricked them to sign their names. And it has harmed neither them nor the Colloquy.

Further, to straighten out any misgivings or any questions of our experiment, a set time for Wed., Feb. 11 at 6:30 was established for which the whole Social Psychology class was to attend to answer questions concerning this experiment. But, Miss Daniels, no one came to question our class. No one.

Debbie Ross

People Power

Dear People,

We would like to express our oppreciation to the Juniata students and faculty, and the people of Huntingdon, for their attendance and other support of Colloquy. We thought you might be pleased to know that many of the guests and visitors that had attended other Colloquies commented that this was the best they had seen — not because of the organization, but because of the students. You were the friendiest and most enthusiastic bunch hey had encountered. Colloquy seemed to work for their benefit also.

1970 Colloquy Committee

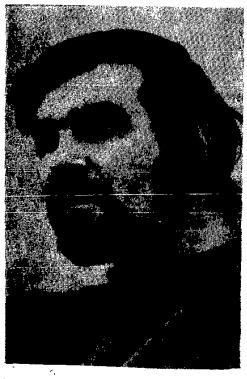
Ride wanted to Downington or Philadelphia area for Spring Break—March 20. Can not leave 'til noon. RPS—Box 732.

COLLOQUY: MEDICINE USUALLY TASTES BAD

by joan eisenhart

It would seem as though the patrons had made an untimely disappearance from their hallowed walls, but perhaps the move was more diplomatic than we had imagined. For the first time in its history however, Ellis Hall gave precedence to its informal bubbling of The Student Center amid laughter, music, discussion, noises and life. Whether Calvert and Charles had abandoned Colloquy for their "white suburbia" or merely thought it better not to have to watch such constant use of the Ethan Allen, they were missed. But they did leave behind a hint to what turns them on. The program proceeded regardless of their absence; the effects of the event are relative to each individual. I myself, reflect on the past week's occurences with such mixed emotions that I find it impossible to explain to those preoccupied during Colloquy exactly what they missed.

Oppression, the key word in all discussions, was aimed largely at the students. Early in the week-end, it was concluded by one speaker that Juniata is a racist college. The first of many generalizations, and perhaps the hardest to accept, the validity of this identity was obvious



Terry Hartman: "Do-goodism is an alternative for dealing with yourself."

Dr. Al Myers: "This is a racist college."

Dr. Clifford Adams: "Frustration and conflict will grow with the population."

Col. James Hafer: "The Liberal dream is responsible for the nightmare of our world."

to many by Sunday night. The racism referred, not only to the realization of oppression of Blacks by Whites, but also of women by men, students by administration, the poor by the rich, and Jews by Christians. Argument could also be made to indicate oppression in instances of the reverse order. Where was the student concern for justice when Rev. Drury claimed that the 'Jews can not do as much in the ghettos as the Christians because they don't believe in Jesus Christ?'

The fact that such an unjust generalization festered, unnoticed by so many, leads me to wonder just how much of what was said during Colloquy had, or will have an impact on the students. The speakers were not brought here to flatter the students; that was obvious to any who listened. Their purpose was to incite emotions, whether of defensive outrage or newly-conscious guilt. The views they expressed were their personal ideals and convictions and we are compelled to accept them as we do an individual's taste in music or food. But we are only compelled to do so when the person speaks openly, truthfully and persistently. A speaker who contradicts himself and denies having said that which his whole audience claims to have heard is a hypocrite, regardless of what values he attempts to show. There were unfortunately, instances of such hypocrisy; a fact that was disappointing to those students who had asked for the opinions and advice of these people and had given them their attention and respect, if not their support.

These particular situation were however, exceptions rather than general occurrences. There were other aspects though, with which various students felt let down or annoyed. Many felt that the panelists on the whole were evasive, nonconstructive, and unfair to their audience. Of course, the speakers were not expected to have a formalized plan of reconstruction for the society they condemned, but I would hope that they could understand what they were asking of their generalized audience — to reject a system that has been personally, if only materialistically, rewarding to the majority. It is not an easy thing to place the socio-economic achievement of another over the advancement of oneself. It must be done; we have a collective responsibility toward correcting those wrongs for which we have a collective guilt. And as a student who has not yet had any societal control, I accept that. But I am a bit disillusioned to notice that some of the speakers kept their fingers constantly pointing toward the audience and did not employ the pronoun "we," but "you." Can they, who have had some form of governmental and societal power, justly make generalized accusations and individual excuses simultaneously?

This again was not usually the case: but contradictions and inconsistencies are more obvious to those being oppressed by them. Well students, how do you like being both oppressed and oppressor? Have you felt it before or will you feel it ever again? Was it really significant that the Dean of Students was called to action because one person tried to utilize food in its primary purpose by cutting and distributing the decorative pineapples? Or do you consider this to be indiscriminate destruction because that particular fruit was not necessary for your personal subsistence? How far can you project yourselves into the problems of others? I don't know either; but I know I must try.

We are being watched and it is now our decision whether we are going to crawl embarrassedly back into our holes or stumble humbly but responsibly out into the world that needs us even as they put us down. Are we going to wake up and get up, or turn over and go back to sleep? I've been sleeping for 21 years and I'm not tired anymore.

Ed Pitts: "People are into acid because you can't get grass."

John Sollenberger: "The Mafia is fighting to keep drugs illegal and the prices high."

David Steele: "Alcohol has been legalized because of it's extensive use for a long time."

Ti-Grace Atkinson: "Women will not be free until all oppressed classes are freed."

The Huntingdon Community Theater's production of Picnic will be presented on Thursday, Friday and Saturday Feb. 26 through 28. Students tickets are $1.25. Non-students are $2.50. Curtain time is 8:30 p.m.

Pollution Forces "Decade Of Ecology" — Even Here!

Cont'd from page 1

and Mount Union Borough. Both facilities give the waste primary treatment. . . Most of the smaller boroughs in the county are in need of domestic waste treatment facilities. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania is presently engaged in a program which will upgrade the present water quality standards. The program is entitled 'Public Hearings for Intrastate Streams." The next hearing will concern the upper Juniata River above the confluence of the Juniata River and the Raystown Branch. This hearing will set standards for all waste discharges in the above-mentioned basin area.

"Another source of pollution occurs during periods of high surface runoff. The major pollutants from this source would be silt, and agricultural runoff, including animal waste and fertilizers."

Other pollution in Huntingdon is acute pollution (not seasonal or chronic) caused by occassional oil line breaks, pesticides, or personal negligence. The Fish Commission may prosecute for $100 to $1000 for discharging anything into streams which might have a deleterious effect on the fish.

The solutions to Huntingdon's pollution problems, line others all across the nation, are not easily found because of many complexities—biologically, socially, economically and politically. The Fish Commission, often blamed for polluted streams, is doing all it can, but has only one vote among seven on the Sanitary Water Board. This means that many other factors will come to bear on the decisions made concerning stream cleanliness.

One of the problems is that industries may still be operating on old permits, obtained when standards were rather lax. Forcing industries to upgrade filtering and disposal processes may force the companies simply to pull out and migrate to locations or states with easier laws—a situation in which whole towns may possibly be destroyed.

Towns as affluent as Huntingdon are able to afford sewage treatment plants. However, smaller towns, like Alexandria, can't really afford plants. If the state or federal government pays the enormous expenses, taxes will rise. If industries pay for the plants, prices will rise accordingly. Thus, in the end the general public will probably pay the majority of the bill, anyway.

The problem has grown to such an extent that solutions are extremely complex. These are further complicated by political problems and the provincialism developed through the years. The Susquehanna River Basin Project is an attempt to coordinate the counties to deal with pollution problems collectively. The boundary difficulties are bad for rivers, but are even greater for such problems as air pollution in which no one willingly claims responsibility and everyone refuses to help seek a solution.

Pollution is truly everyone's problem. The solutions will be complicated and expensive, but they must be found quickly and action initiated. There is new hope in the fact that people are beginning to discuss the problems. Perhaps our generation may be able to finally give up the fight to conquer nature and be content to find better ways to live with it, before it is too late to reconsider.

Indians Take 50-50 Record to MAC'S

by Gene Galbraith

The Juniata Indians finished their regular season by beating Dickinson College 86-76. Earlier in the week they dropped a tough 88-76 decision to Philadelphia Textile. The Indians will take a 14-7 record (8-4 in MAC) into this weekend's MAC playoffs at Scranton.

Juniata fought hard against Textile, but they could not overtake the nationally-ranked club. It was Textile's 19th victory in a row to give them a 20-2 season record. The Indians made 30 of 52 shots for 58 percent, while Textile managed only 44 percent. They out-rebounded the Indians, though, by a 40-31 margin. Lee Wentz led Juniata's attack with 19 points, and Tom Rinaldi added 18 markers. Jim McCarthy and John Smith contributed 12 points each. Pierantozzi and McGilvery led Textiles' scoring with 19 points apiece, while Poole and Schively scored 17 and 18 points, respectively.

The Indians closed out the regular season on a good note, as they moved out to a 36-30 halftime lead at Dickinson. Juniata had another hot night with 30 of 56 shots from the field for 54 percent. The Red Devils out-rebound the Indians, however, by 45-31 margin. John Smith led the Juniata scorers with 20 points while Lee Wentz and Bruce Bader notched 18 and 14 points, respectively. Bonner paced the Red Devils with 18 points.

TEXTILE	FG	F-FT	Tot
Poole	6	5-6	17
Pierantozzi	7	5-9	19
McGilvery	8	3-6	19
O'Rourke	3	5-6	11
Shively	8	2-5	18
Lynam	0	0-0	0
Hamm	2	0-1	4
Totals	34	20-33	88
JUNIATA	FG	F-FT	Tot
Bader	3	0-0	6
Harvey	1	1-4	3
Smith	4	4-6	12
Wentz	6	7-9	19
McCarthy	5	2-2	12
Rinaldi	9	0-0	18
Straley	1	0-0	2
Barnhart	1	2-2	4
Totals	30	16-23	76

Score By Halves:

PHILA. TEXT.	46	42 — 88
JUNIATA	35	41 — 76

JUNIATA	FG	F-FT	Tot
Bader	4	6-13	14
Harvey	3	4-6	10
Smith	7	6-9	20
Wentz	7	4-7	18
McCarthy	3	5-9	11
Rinaldi	3	1-2	7
Barnhart	3	0-3	6
Totals	30	26-49	86
DICKINSON	FG	F-FT	Tot
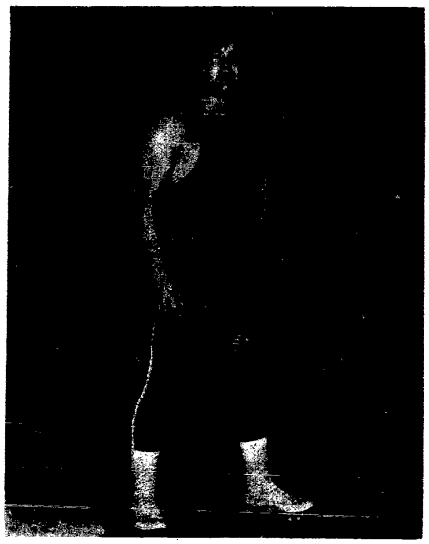
Shapero	2	1-1	5
Boyer	6	1-5	13
Pearson	1	1-1	3
Whitman	7	0-1	14
Bonner	3	12-15	18
McClanahan	3	1-1	7
Brunt	1	0-0	2
Rahauser	1	0-0	2
Schreiber	0	0-0	0
Total	28	20-29	76

Score By Halves:

JUNIATA	36	50 — 86
DICKINSON	30	46 — 76



Wrestlers Lose to E-town

Berrier Plans for '71

The JC matmen once again came out on the short end of the stick. The attack was led by Jeff Massingham, who in an outstanding effort went down indefeat to E-town's Steve Flumen in a (9-8) decision. In the 177 lb. class E-town's Gary Wirtmeyer was unable to finish the second period of the match giving Warren Scott a default. Referee Fred Barefoot said, "They wrestled better tonight than the last time I was here." This is evidence that the team is progressing into what possibly could be another powerhouse for Coach Bill Berrier next season.

The individual bouts went as follows:

118: Steve Flumen(E) dec.
Jeff Massingham (9-8)
126: Scott Evans(E) dec.
Jim McCartney (10-4
134: J. Ebersole(E) dec.
Ed Constable (10-3)
142: James Maack(E) pinned
Mike McCartney (6:15 3rd. period)
150: Bob Stock(E) pinned
Jim Hutchison (4:24 2nd. period)
158: Jeff Elwell(J) dec.
Scott Black (13-6)
167: Dan Greening(J) drew
Mike Helm
177: Warren Scott(J) won by default against Gary Wirtmeyer
190: Tom Fields(E) pinned
Tom Mears (1:35 1st. period)
Hwt: Pete Schuyler pinned
Don Narber (3:05 2nd. period)
Preliminaries:
Gary Mergner(E) dec.
Doug Marschka (12-4)

IM Teams Reach Half Mark

As the 1969-70 Intramural basketball program reached the half-way mark last week, there appeared close races in two of the four leagues to be decided in the second half.

In A league, the Zongo Vipers, captained by Ken Roolstool, had a 3-0 won-loss record but were followed closely by Doug Harmon's Sore "D's", last years A league winners. The Wynners under Freshman Tom Wynn, hold a good lead in B league with a 5-0 record and in C league, the Jeromes with Bob Dautrich, captain, post a 6-0 record, the best of all leagues. In D league another close race is shaping up between the MTMF, the Nethangers, and the Cougars. Scott Gustafson's MTMF's are on top now with a 4-0 record but are followed by the two Freshmen teams tied at 3-1 each.

At the end of the season, the top two teams in each league will compete in a best of three series for the championship of each league.

Wedding Bells, Employment . . .

Alumni Eye Catches Class of '69

Juniata's Class of 1969 is under the scrutiny of the Juniatian "alumni eye" this week; and, as was pointed out in the introductory article of last issue, credit for the information quoted herein rightfully goes to Mrs. Nan Hunt '56, associate editor of the Juniata College Bulletin (Fall Issue 1969).

The big (and seemingly most immediate) thing for a good many JC graduates appears to be marriage, so those of you amorous undergrads who aren't hitched yet at least know what's in store within the next few years. '69ers Alan Herbster and Mary Ellen Franck were married in Landisville last August 16. They are residing in Harrisburg; Mary Ellen teaches sixth grade in the Central Dauphin School District, and Alan is a real estate employee of the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board.

Two more members of the class—Edith Garrison and Robert Guinter — were united in marriage late last summer in Caldwell. The couple is now living in Rochester, N.Y., while Bob continues his studies for his doctorate in medicine at the University of Rochester. Edith is teaching second grade in the Greece Central School District in Rochester.

William H. Smith Jr. and Jill Wineland of Roaring Spring were married June 28 by the Rev. Leland Keemer '38. Bill is employed by the General Adjustment Bureau of Niagara Falls, N.Y., and the couple resides in nearby Grand Island, Buffalo.

Another wedding was that of Donna Kent and Clifford Berg. Cliff is a district executive with the Boy Scouts of America, Keystone Area Coucnil.

And to wrap the matrimonial news we'll mention the marriage of Sharon Cheeseman to Jim Murray ('71) last May 31. Many Juniatians participated in the wedding ceremony which took place at St. John's Episcopal Church here in Huntingdon. The Murrays are living at 210 Fifth Ave. while Jim continues his studies here at the College.

Other activities of last year's graduates involve a bit more diversity. For instance, Kathy Wiggins was sworn in as an officer candidate in Philadelphia last spring and reported for duty in the U.S. Navy Reserves. Her base is Newport, Rhode Island.

Mrs. Elaine Gilmore is located in Santurce, Puerto Rico, with her husband and was expecting to be teaching English at Rairez Commercial High School in San Juan.

Army Reserve Officers' Training Corps Cadet Randy Knepp attended ROTC basic summer camp from June 13 to July 24 at Ft. Benning, Georgia.

Many of you remember Pam Haskell as being Juniata's Homecoming and May Day Queen last year; now she's an airline stewardess. Pam graduated from Pan American's International Stewardess College in Miami, where she was named valedictorian of her class. She is now Miami based and is serving aboard Jet Clipper flights to the resort islands of the Bahamas and the Caribbean, to all of Latin America, and across the Atlantic to Lisbon, Barcelona, the French Riviera and Rome.

Summa cum laude graduate Don Martin and his classmate Ann Sollenberger trained for eight weeks last summer at New Windsor, Maryland, for Brethren Volunteer Service. Both are of Brethren backgrounds, and Don, who holds CO status, is therefore engaged in alternative service through BVS. Last fall's JC Bulletin includes an article describing their summer training. Don has reportedly been assigned to the Fahrney-Keedy Home in Boonsboro, Md., while Ann is located at the Washington, D.C., City Church of the Brethren.

James Muir has been named director of the Huntingdon Youth Corps Program for low-income youth in Huntingdon, Bedford and Fulton Counties. His offices are in the Huntingdon Community Center, where all the Tri-County Community Action Agency officers are located for the immediate area.

Next week our attention will be focused upon the activities of some of the members of the Class of 1968.

Summer School Has Balance In Courses and In Staff

Juniata's 1970 Summer Sessions program promises to have the biggest and best selection of courses ever. The two sessions, each five weeks in length, will run from June 15 — July 17, and from July 20 — Aug. 21. During these two five-week periods, it is expected that a total of approximately 250 people — including Juniata students, townspeople, and high school pupils interested in specific topics — will take advantage of this program.

This year, "balance" is the key word in the sessions. First, the Administration is striving toward balance among Divisions. All three Divisions will be represented, and there will be elementary and advanced courses, and basic courses, such as "Great Epochs" and "The Nature of Man" as well as Special Topics. Just a few of the Special Topics included will be "John Donne: A Study of the Renaissance Man and Poetry;" an advanced seminar in Physiological Psychology; "Gems and Gemology;" "Microtechnique;" and "Vertebrate Natural History." In addition, special summer courses will include "Existence and Inquiry: An Introduction to Philosophy;" "Humanistic Psychology and Human Development;" and "Play Production."

Balance in staff is also being stressed for summer, 1970. Nearly half of Juniata's full-time staff will be teaching in the Summer Sessions, of which half of these professors hold their Ph.D's. Mr. Joseph Yenerall, a former Juniata sociology instructor, and Mr. B. C. Taylor, Juniata's Director of Public Information, will also be part of the teaching staff.

In short, Juniata is offering a summer schedule which is no longer remedial in nature, but which emphasizes courses for the enrichment and acceleration of the student. Tuition and room and board costs have been reduced in order to encourage such interested students: room and board will be $125 for the five-week period, and tuition will be $36 per credit hour.

Besides its varied academic program, Juniata's Summer Sessions plans a wide range of sonial entertainment, with Will Brandau acting as coordinator. For all further information, see Dr. Earl Kaylor, Director of Summer Sessions, and the Summer Sessions catalog, which will be available in the next few weeks. Pre-registration for J.C. students will be April 13-17.

All students who wish to apply for financial aid for the coming academic year (1970-71) should plan to pick up the application forms in the Financial Aid Office, beginning March 1. All present recipients must reapply if they wish to be considered next year. New applications will be accepted from students not presently receiving financial assistance. The deadline for returning the completed applications is April 15, so it is advisable to pick up the forms early in March.

MARK'S CORNER NEWS
4th & Alleghaney St.
Open 24 hours
Magazines
Greeting Cards
Timex
Pocket Books
Patent Medicines
643-9932
10,000 ITEMS

Jewelry Dept.
RINGS PINS EARRINGS PEARLS CHAIN BELTS WATCHES BODY JEWELRY
HSETS

Good Eating
Fast Service
Enjoy our delicious Food — Our Friendly atmosphere
Visit us Today
Kelly's Korner
1340 Penna. Ave
643-4900

Milk & Ice Cream
Plant Phone — 643-2770
Enjoy a Sunday, Milk Shake or Ice Cream Cone
at STRICKLER'S
The Strickler Shop
14th St. & Mifflin

Beau Craft Sterling
Charms, pierced and pierced-look earings
Colonial Gift Shop

THE JUNIATIAN

Vol. XLVI, No. 15 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | March 6, 1970

Social Irony Comes to JC Personified in Dick Gregory

by joan eisenhart

The Will Judy Lecturer for this year, comedian Dick Gregory will speak at Juniata on the 9th and 10th of this month. It is presumed that his topic will be an appeal for a solution of the "number one problem in this country: moral pollution." His opinions and criticisms reach many areas including war and peace, violence and non-violence, college students and their parents and administrators, and the past, present and future of his race. His humor hinges on the irony of social and moral conditions, innocently pointing to existing hypocricies. ("On the Declaration of Independence: If they would have proof-read it someone would have noticed that they forgot to put "for white only" on the document.") This man— his friends call him Greg— is a funny man but you'd better pay serious attention to what he's saying.

Having developed his humor as a survival technique during his skinny childhood in St. Louis, Dick Gregory tells it like it is in a way that makes people laughingly admit, 'You know, that makes sense.' ("The ghetto child doesn't believe in Santa Claus because he knows darn well that no white man will come in his neighborhood after dark.") He's easy to read, when he speaks or writes, although he provokes the aesthetic in man rather than the 'popular' sensual appeal. You'd never find a panel of critics writing a parody of his style, unless they would call it Naked Came the Boy with No Clothes.

Dick Gregory's style is all his own but the problems of which he speaks are ours, all of ours. (Don't worry about banning the bomb. . . ban killing, and people will make lawn planters out of the bombs.") He's worked hard to get things in life (Read his autobiography, nigger.) and he's working even harder now to get things for others. Abandoning a lucritive career in show business, a career that he realized kept him isolated from the problems of others in his race, he has devoted himself completely to involvement in the civil rights' movement. He paid for his concern in the brutal atmosphere of a Birmingham jail; he paid for it again when he visited his pregnant wife in a jail in Selma. Dick Gregory wasn't the only one who marched, landed in jail and was beaten because he professed his beliefs. Of course, there were others dedicated to the same cause long before he got into it; but the fact remains that he did get into it. For his own comfort and well-being and that of his wife and children, he could have continued in night club acts with token involvement in his spare time; but he chose to try for the comfort of the conscience rather than that of the body. But he doesn't want our sympathy and admiration nearly as much as he does our emulation.

We can sit back and clap, or sit back and cheer next Monday and Tuesday; but as long as we sit back, we're going to miss the message he's trying to involve in his humor. Don't come smiling, prepared to laugh unless you leave thinking, prepared to cry.

Penn State Dancers Present Kaleidscope '70

Ranging in subject matter from the Amish of Pennsylvania to the streets of New York City, "Kaleidoscope '70" will be staged March 5, 6, 7 at The Pennsylvania State University.

Presented as the second annual dance program of the Department of Theatre Arts at Penn State, the performances will be held in the Playhouse Theatre starting at 8 p.m.

Twenty young men and women, culled from auditions last fall, have been rehearsing almost every night for two months to perfect their program of original dances. The eclectic content of the show is carefully balanced for audience appeal.

Choreographed mainly by Helen Hungerford and Robert Reifsneider of the Theatre Arts Department, with one number guest-choreographed by Patricia Heigel of the Women's Physical Education Department, the dances range from ballet themes to the most avant-garde use of oil drums for stage props and syncopated rhythmic percussion instruments.

Cont'd on page 3

38 years of service . . .

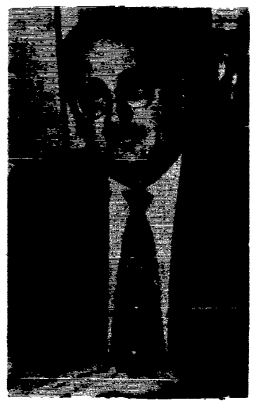
Rockwell to Retire as Dean

by David Beahm

Dr. Donald M. Rockwell, dean of academic affairs at Juniata College since 1967 and a member of the faculty of the College since 1932, has announced his plans to resign from the deanship at the end of the current academic year.

The resignation will become effective Sept. 1, 1970. Dr. Rockwell will continue as a member of the Juniata faculty until his retirement becomes due in 1972. Efforts by the College to seek a replacement for his position will be instituted immediately according to Dr. Stauffer.

Dr. Stauffer noted that a committee composed of two faculty members, two students and a member of the administration would serve in an advisory capacity in the search for a replacement for Dean Rockwell. "Everyone here is open-minded about whether to seek someone from the present faculty or another institution," he said, and added that suggestions from interested faculty and students would be welcome.



Dr. Donald M. Rockwell

Dr. Rockwell, 63, a professor of chemistry, was named acting dean of academic affairs in October, 1966, when Dr. Morley J. Mays left the College to assume the presidency of Elizabethtown College. Rockwell had been appointed chairman of the division of natural sciences in 1965 after having served as head of Juniata's Department of Chemistry for 15 years. He had held the Jacob H. and Rachel Brumbaugh Chair in Chemistry since 1958, and for five years directed the National Science Foundation Summer Institute for five high school chemistry teachers at Juniata.

In addition, while a member of the Juniata faculty he served as a chemistry consultant to the research division of the Prismo Safety Corp. of Huntingdon from 1944 to 1960.

A colleague of and successor to Dr. Norman J. Brumbaugh, who in the 1920's and early 30's piloted the development of Juniata's programs in the sciences to a position of national prominence, Dr. Rockwell provided the necessary continuity of leadership in the program —especially in chemistry—that helped the College retain that prominence.

It was a credit to the years or service both these men had given Juniata College that the Brumbaugh Science Center was built in 1966.

Dr. Rockwell received his Bachelor of Science degree from the University of Vermont in 1927 and his Ph.D. from Yale in 1931. He served as a Calco-Post-Doctoral Fellow at Yale in 1931-32 and spent a year of sabbatical leave (1962-63) in further study at the California Institute of Technology. In 1967 was honored with a distinguished service award by the University of Vermont.

He is married to the former Katharine Haring, whom he met while a student at Yale. She also holds a Ph.D. degree in chemistry, and has served Juniata College for several years as a science librarian Their son Kenneth, one of four children, is now chairman of the Biology Department at Juniata College.

To a few students on campus the name Dr. Donald M. Rockwell is simply the name at the upper left-hand corner of the countless memos deposited in their mailbox. Perhaps the resignation of Dean Rockwell will be the greatest loss to these few, for they have never had, and now may never have, the privilege of knowing him personally. Most of Juniata College students, faculty, administration, and alumnae will always have the benefits of a school largely shaped by his ideas and molded by his character.

On Monday afternoon President Stauffer told the faculty, "The 38 years Dr. Rockwell has given Juniata College have been extremely effective, and his highly intelligent and dedicated work in behalf of his students have earned him the respect and gratitude of thousands of Juniata men and women. What he has done for the entire Juniata community is never to be measured, but we all know that Juniata is a far better institution because he has given so generously of his talents, and of his life itself, to all of us who have been associated with him.

"Above all, the greatness of your teaching is well impressed upon me, as it is upon all who have had the good fortune of entering your classroom or who have shared with you a problem at the laboratory bench."

In the earlier years of modern Juniata College, Dr. Rockwell continued the leadership in shaping Juniata's science program begun by Dr. Norman Brumbaugh in the 1920's. As faculty member for 32 years, he served as a chemistry professor, head of the chemistry department for 15 years, and chairman of the division of the natural sciences (1965-1966).

His development of the sciences at Juniata finally resulted in the $2.75 million complex still rivaling most of the finest small Eastern college facilities. The chemistry wing was named the Donald M. Rockwell hall in his honor.

More importantly, Juniata's high reputation for its science program was largely a result of his work. The National Research Council of the National Academy of Sciences in a 1955 edition cited Juniata as one of the top percentage institutions for undergraduates continuing their education through the Ph.D. Much of this credit was attributed to Dr. Rockwell.

His leadership at Juniata, however, was far broader than simply the natural sciences. In his present position as Dean of Academic Affairs, he served well the entire college since 1966.

In addition to his academic achievements, Dr. Rockwell was deeply involved in community work in Huntingdon. He served in the Boy Scout program in many capacities and received several awards including the Silver Beaver Award (highest adult scoutleader award), for his work. He also served on the local board of the Salvation Army, as a president of the Rotary Club, as treasurer for the Huntingdon Music Club, as a member of the Huntingdon Business and Industry, Inc., and as an active member and deacon of the United Church of Christ.

Personable, interested, involved— it is these attributes that shall make Dean Rockwell sorely missed when he steps down "in the interests of future health and well-being." He will remain at Juniata for two more years as a chemistry professor until his retirement at age 65.

Writing of his future plans, Dr. Rockwell states, "It is difficult to contemplate severing connections with the institution where more than half my life has been spent."

The World and National Scene

In Clayton County, Georgia, 2,140 families are below the poverty level. Only 306 receive food commodities. In a county in Pennsylvania, an estimated 5,000 children should be getting free lunches in school. Three hundred and twenty actually receive them, even though Pennsylvania returned two million dollars in unused school lunch funds to the federal government last year.

These are some of the findings turned up by CRASH (the Call to Research and Act to Stop Hunger).

Designed and operated by young people, Crash set out to (1) investigate federal food programs as they actually operate, (2) inform the public of the nature of these programs, (3) stimulate local groups to take action to improve the food programs in their communities and (4) bring the findings of the project to the attention of administrators most directly involved in the operation of federal food programs.

From June to September, more than two hundred young people, most of them high school and college students, carried on their investigation in fifteen states and in thirty-five counties.

Armed with a description of federal food programs, a survey questionnaire, and a guide to possible action, they interviewed welfare officials, social workers, hundreds of participants in food programs, doctors, OEO workers, citizen groups, nutritionists and caseworkers.

CRASH concentrated on three federal food programs—the commodity program, in which actual food commodities are distributed to certified recipients; the food stamp program, in which coupons are purchased that can be redeemed for food at regular grocery stores; and the school lunch programs, in which federal and matching state funds are made available to participating public schools in order to furnish free lunches to the children who need them.

In most of the counties where they worked, CRASH was able to confirm that only a tiny minority of those eligible for public assistance actually receive commodities or food stamps. Hundreds of thousands of poor people do not benefit from these programs.

A major reason for the failure of the programs is that the poor do not know of their existence. According to the CRASH report, only a minority of counties send official announcements to those families already on public assistance. Most officials interviewed felt that it was not their business to publicize the food programs at all.

Underlying the lack of publicity is a genuine disbelief on the part of county officials that anyone needs aid. Another reason for the lack of publicity, according to the CRASH report, is the persistent assumption among county officials that food programs are a privilege, not a right or a legal obligation.

Seemingly reasonable regulations erect another obstacle between the poor and the food programs designed for them. The head of a household, for example, must sign up for food commodities. If the father is away, following crops or available jobs, the family cannot apply.

A family must possess cooking facilities to be certified for food programs, a requirement that obviously eliminates migrant workers and many of the applicants who most need help.

People can be certified for the programs and pick up their commodities only during working hours and only at a few scattered locations. Hence the ideal applicant must be unemployed and yet own a truck. "He must also know more about the federal laws and administrative regulations governing the food programs than the county officials who operate them; but he must not seem knowledgeable enough to arouse suspicion that he is trying to take advantage."

Beeghly Library Revises Hours

The Beeghly Library instituted new hours Feb. 19, increasing the time students may use the library by six hours weekly.

The new hours add one hour during the dinner hours each day, except Saturday, when hours will remain the same, as a further aid to the students. The new hours are as follows:

Monday through Thursday
8 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.,
6:30 p.m. to 12 m.
Friday
8 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.,
6:30 p.m. to 11 p.m.
Saturday
8 a.m. to 5 p.m.
Sunday*
2 p.m. to 5:30 p.m.,
6:30 p.m. to 12 m.

* The Sunday hours have not been definitely determined. These hours are dependent upon the dining hall hours which have changed twice in the last month.

The new hours apply only to Beeghly Library. Mr. Robert Sabin states that the hours in the Science Library will remain the same as they now stand but should be changed in the near future.

Choir Needs Voices For May Program

A limited number of singing opportunities for persons who wish to participate in the May 30 Commencement musical program at Juniata College were announced this week by Professor Bruce A. Hirsch, chairman of the College's Department of Music.

The Commencement program will feature German composer Carl Orff's "Carmina Burana," a rhythmic arrangement of a series of 13th Century poems presented in 20th Century language.

Professor Hirsch has announced that a choir of 110 to 115 men's and women's voices is needed, and welcomes volunteers from the community and the College to participate. Ten rehearsals will be held, all on Tuesday evenings from 7:30 to 9:30, March 10 through May 26 in Oller Auditorium. Persons desiring to audition or wishing further information may call Mr. Hirsch at the College, 643-4310, ext. 43, or at home in the evenings, 643-3278.

The Commencement concert will take place May 30 at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Auditorium. The mixed choir will be accompanied by the Philadelphia Percussion Ensemble.

Editorial . . .

Seeing Versus Believing

Juniata is a college and we are students. Juniata professes to be a college, we profess to be students and we both profess to be undergoing some educational experience. Appearance vs. reality? Juniata is an institution which American society defines as a place of learning or education. Again appearance vs. reality? Is education the appearance of having learned? Look at it this way—students all over the world are questioning their educational systems. They are asking, "Is this the best way to learn or is this the best way to mass produce good citizens?"
For example:

A typical Juniatian gets up in the morning, goes to class and sits there getting bored until the bell rings, when he leaves notes-in-hand. This process goes on day after day, week after week, with no function of the mental apparatus labeled "thinking and learning machine."

Why is this not the exception rather than the rule? What is it in the American student and the American school system which causes uninspired students and uninspired classes? What is it at Juniata that perpetuates the cycle? We questioned during Discussion Day and Colloquy, but did we come up with any answers? Have we learned how to think?

Will the Water Get Us ??

by Dick Gregory

Important as the talk and action about a shift in national priortes are, there is another shift looming in the possible future which would make these former concerns somewhat irrelevant. I'm talking about a massive shift in the earth's surface which would result in the immediate elimination of the problems of such blighted urban areas as New York City and Boston. Mayor Lindsay's "Money for the Cities" campaign would then be used for underwater exploration.

During a recent brief stay in Nassau, I read an article in the Bahamas Handbook which reminded me once again of the predictions of Edgar Cayce, the photographer - Sunday School teacher-mystic-prophet whose recorded hypnotic trances have recently enjoyed a renewed popularity.

Cayce spoke often during his predictive trances of the legendary lost continent of Atlantis which, the story goes, was swallowed up into the sea a few thousand years B. C. Cayce located the continent of Atlantis "near Bimini and in the Gulf Stream in this vicinity." He further indicated that portions of this sunken land was even now visible below the surface of the deep in the Bahamas and promised that the Atlantean land, "that sank, will rise and is rising again."

Using language that echoed of the thunderous authority of a Billy Sunday, Cayce predicted that the earth will be broken up in the western portion of America; new land will appear off the east coast; portions of the east coast of New York, or New York City itself, as well as the southern portions of Carolina and Georgia, will in the main disappear.

Those who seek truth in all possible areas of human thought might be curious as to how scentific evidence stacks up against the predictions of Edgar Cayce. First of all, land disappearing into the sea is not an unknown phenomenon. In 1916, Falcon Island, east of Australia, completely disappeared into the sea. Seven years later it popped up above the water for a time and then disappeared again in 1949.

In 1960, an earthquake flattened the Moroccan town of Agadir. Nine miles offshore, the sea floor jumped up 3,300 feet in one giant leap. That same year was designated International Geophysical Year by scientists of 69 nations. Life Magazine reported their special report, which said in part: "The gashes in the sea floor, the submarine ranges scarring the earth's skin, the erupting volcanoes — these deformities are symptoms of a seething earth. . deep inside rock stirs." The scientists concluded that such "restless activity" was definitely speeding up.

One portion of the Life copy sounded more like a recording of Edgar Cayce: "Well-known places, apparently rooted with comfortable firmness, now seem to face uncertain futures. California, for example, may be gradually splitting away from the rest of the continental U.S. as part of a great shifting of the Pacific floor. The Hawaiian Islands, surrounded by a deep moat, seem to be slowly sinking into the ocean. Scientists observed Hawaii in the throes of massive palpitations, moving up and down four inches a day under the moon's gravitational pull. New land appears to be rising in the Red Sea, in the Caribbean, and in the Gulf of California."

A number of underwater explorers have reported something strange off Bimini. Last year Dimitri Rebikoff and Dr. Richard Evans, of the Rebikoff Institute of Underwater Technology, and Dr. Manson Valentine, former curator of the Miami Science Museum, applied to the Bahamas Government for permission to explore an underwater structure not far off Bimini which they felt was the ruins of an ancient temple. Dr. Valentine observed: "There are many other structures on the Bahamas banks that could only have been made by man very long ago when all this was exposed ground."

A geologist named Hess, completing a Naval survey in 1933, concluded that a great submergence in excess of 14,000 feet had taken place in the Bahamas. In 1964, two French Naval officers, Capt. Georges Houot and Le. Gerard de Froberville, descended to record the depths off the northern coast of Puerto Rico in the bathyscaph Archimedes and found a strange stairway hewn from the continental shelf, leading to the ocean floor.

James T. Lee, a cartographer with the U.S. Geological Survey, estimates that "a rise of 250 feet in the ocean level would inundate about 276,300 square miles of twenty-two Atlantic and Gulf coastal states. Large portions of cities would be under water, including Boston, Massachusetts, and New York City."

Biblical prophecy speaks of catalysmic activity in the year 2,000. Most people think that gives us a period of grace for a few decades. But our custom is to number years after the death of Christ, not his birth. So add the 33 years of his life, and the period of Mary's pregnancy, and you will find we have been living in the period of calamity for some time now.

Plato spoke of the lost continent of Atlantis in his dialogues. He said that the people of Atlantis were gentle folk, obedient to the divine nature, for many years. Then something happened to these gentle folk. Plato says they "became unseemly." They became warlike, and in a single day and night of rain, all the warlike men sank into the earth and Atlantis disappeared into the sea. Sounds like judgement, doesn't it?

If so, it is a judgment which should give America some bothersome second thoughts about her current patterns of behavior. Take the ecology issue, for example. I don't know whether or not Edgar Cayce heard the roar of jet engines echoing in his dreams, but it is a known fact, though infrequently mentioned, that the exhaust fumes from jet planes have a way of collecting in clouds in the air, finally settling at the North Pole causing a definite rise in the sea level.

A few more years of that continued overflow and who can say that portions of warlike America will not also join their Atlantean predecessors in the murky deep?

Letters to the Editor

Challenge

To the editor:

I am writing in reference to an article which appeared in the February 27, 1970 JUNIATIAN. The article was entitled "COLLOQUY: MEDICINE USUALLY TASTES BAD" by joan eisenhart (sic).

The entire article is a communicative tragedy, however, the portion with which I will deal in this writing is quoted below:

"For the first time in its history however, (sic) Ellis Hall gave precedence to its informal bubbling of The Student Center amid laughter, music, discussion, noises and life. Whether Calvert and Charles had abandoned Colloquy for their 'white suburbia' or merely thought it better not to have to watch such constant use of the Ethan Allen, they were missed. But they did leave behind a hint to what turns them on. The program proceeded regardless of their absence;. . ."

As a reader of this article I assume that the flippant reference to Calvert and Charles is in fact to Charles Calvert Ellis,LL.D., President of Juniata College 1930-1943, died June 27, 1950 and Calvert N. Ellis, Ph.D.. D.D., L.H.D., LL.D., President of Juniata College 1943-1968, President Emeritus 1968- .

If in her freedom of expression the author of this article finds such irresponsible and disrespectful remarks to be affinite to her writing style, then that is an affliction with which she must live. However, I must rise and call for a published retraction and apology for the irrelevant, ridiculous, and irresponsible reference to these distinguished educators. This I do in the full realization of the ramifications of such a retraction. Or to play upon the article title, "there is a dose of medicine that will no doubt taste bad."

In her quest for some clever journalism my young friend has done the very thing which I must assume she would so strongly oppose. She has USED the dignity of two men, one living and one dead, both of whom devoted their lives to Juniata College. This I resent.

I challenge the author of this article to do her duty.

Thomas W. Woodrow '58

Reply

To the editor:

Unable to come 'in through the bathroom window' I choose to enter The Student Center through the main portals. Having grown accustomed to this practice throughout the year, I had also become addicted to a greeting by the auspicious portraits of the two 'distinguished educators' Charles Calvert Ellis, LL.D., President of Juniata College 1930-1943, died June 27, 1950 and Calvert N. Ellis, Ph.D. etc., President of Juniata College 1943-1968, President Emeritus 1968 —. Finding myself daily in such revered presence had allowed me, I thought, some familiarity with these paintings on the walls. It is to these symbols that I refer with 'freedom of expression' and not to the men they represent. Someone, at some time, had removed these amicable tokens from my view. Their absence seemed obvious and relevant to me during Colloquy; at a time when so many who were unfamiliar with our school and its heritage were here to find out what we were all about. I have read of 'honest Abe' in the history books. Perhaps I am more closely related to him than those influential in the building of my school, but I had never felt so before.

Now what was that about the rest of the 'communicative tragedy?

joan eisenhart '72

Student Rights

To the editor:

Students, take heed! Do you realize we, the students, have no control in choosing who teaches us? The matter as it stands now concerns the attempt of certain administration and faculty members to give Associate Professor of Sociology Dr. Helen E. B. Meahl a terminal contract effective June, 1971. This was done to avoid granting Dr Meahl tenure under the guidelines of the American Association of University Professors. Tenure, which basically gives the professor the security of knowing he cannot be fired without his approval, is automatically granted to any faculty member with seven years service at the particular college.

When certain students first heard of this action and tried to seek the whole story behind the terminal contract proposal, they were left with the impression they had no business in the affair. The reasons given them were ambiguous and vague ("for the long range development of the sociology department").

While the Dr. Meahl case is certainly very important, the deeper implications of the matter are more relevant to he student.

Students should not have the right to hire and fire faculty as they please; but, on the other hand, neither should students be totally excluded from the process. This is not to say that students can accurately evaluate the faculty; but, then, who can?

Just where do the students stand in situations such as this? This campus is supposed to be enhanced with a delegation of authority among the faculty, the administration and the student body. But, at present power seems to be delegated only between the faculty and administration, allowing the student only token power.

The ultimate act in the rejection of student opinion was an action taken by Faculty Council concerning the Dr. Meahl controversy. It is to be noted that the Council is charged with final authority to uphold or reject the terminal contract for Dr. Meahl. The sham of student representation is shown by the fact that when Faculty Council met to discuss this matter, the two elected student representatives were not even allowed to sit in on the discussion, let alone vote. The argument given to Student Government officials when asked why this action was taken was that when students were first put on Faculty Council, these students wanted no part of such matters. Times have changed. Faculty Council members, ask your student representatives if they wish to participate in such discussions as the Dr. Meahl discussion.

Dr. Meahl is not fighting for her job for monetary reasons, she is battling for her principles. She is struggling for all young professors who have not achieved tenure at this college, and who would like to feel a bit more secure about their employment, without having to please department chairmen by teaching the way they want them to teach or acting the way the chairmen want them to act. This does not refer to all department chairmen, by any means.

We too, are fighting for our principles. We know there are students who want more than token power here at Juniata, and now is the time to express that desire.

Larry Hull
Jack Reitnauer

Dr. Meahl

To the editor:

For those of you who have not been informed of the proposal for the submission of a terminal contract to Dr. Helen Meahl, it is time for all students to become aware. Very few people know the qualifications Dr. Meahl holds, but many have benefited from her classes and academic and personal counseling. If we may be allowed to quote from a letter written to President Stauffer from Barry L. Kotler, the consequences may be evident. "If personal differences and petty jealousies are permitted to subordinate intellectual curiosity and academic freedom, then the essence of higher education and liberal arts learning will have been successfully destroyed, and there would be little justification for Juniata's continued existence." A partial list of Dr. Meahl's credentials should follow and are available if the Juniatian will publish them.

Concerned Students
Vicki Carman
Victor Roberts
Bob Marcus
Jack Reitnauer

The Beginning and the End

Two great hands reached out through space
To form a dwelling for the human race:
These same two hands, from dirt and mud
Made the creatures of flesh and blood;
And into these creatures, from one great heart,
Love was placed to make the start;
Now that man flourished the Earth,
Evil and hate was given it's birth.
From fist and club to tank and shell,
From the spirit of man to the doors of Hell.
From the universe, two eyes could see.
The evil of man at last ran free,
And two great hands reached out through space,
To destroy the dwelling of the human race.

by Bill Miller

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College
Huntingdon, Pa.

ASSOCIATED COLLEGIATE PRESS — I.P. COLLEGIATE PRESS

FOUNDED NOV. 6, 1924

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891

ADELE ABOUTOK, managing editor — WILLIAM DAVID, photography editor
BARBARA CLAAR, associate editor — JOEL SCHANTZ, business manager
CYNTHIA CARLSON, news & feature editor — RICHARD ABLARD, advertising manager
JANET MASON, copy & proof editor — SUE BERMEL, layout editor
TOM DIEHL, sports editor — VALERIE DERRICKSON, art & coordinator
RICH SMITH & WILL SCARLETT, circulation

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Alice Herncane, Paul Keely, Donna Reppolt, Dave Boehm, Donna Knupp, Steve Wesley, Chuck Bates, John Evrard, Joan Eisenhart, Peggy Haines, Gene Galbraith, Dan Harriger, Barb Rich, Judy Craft, Bill Miller, Bill Whitehead, Chuck Krouse, John Aldeghi.

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000 — Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVI, No. 15 — March 6, 1970

Reading

Reading Hour
Shoemaker Galleries
Wednesday, March 11, 8:15 p.m.

"At least, my dear" by Edna St. Vincent Millay—Donna Lane
"Old Friend" by Paul Simon — Elizabeth Wagner
"Troop Train" by Karl Shapiro — John Loose
"Dover Beach" by Mathew Arnold — Jean Brindle
"The Importance of Being Earnest (II, ii) by Oscar Wilde — Carol Fink & Sarah Reader

For Sale— one eunuch unicorn as latch key for a night (All Class Night), call 643-9886.

Here Yesterday— Gone Today

The "honeymoon" is over. God has either simply left the hallowed kitchens of Juniata College's Ellis Hall or has at least removed his guiding hand from the kettles of goodies served each day. Just think back; remember when you had only one choice of what you wanted for dinner, or any other meal? If you were lucky you could choose from two desserts. Now, think of what the meals were like after semester break. Two or more choices of a main course for every meal, three choices of a side dish, and who knows how many different kinds of desserts. But best of all, it tasted good. Yes, things had changed, but not for long. Now you still have two choices of a main course, but who wants to eat either? The piece of parsley on top doesn't hide the fact that the quality of the food has once again slipped into the old rut. Of course there are still four choices of desserts, but why are three of them the same every day? After all, when you can stick your fork into the pudding and it stands, it's time to serve fresh desserts.

Speaking of desserts, where have the grapes gone? Oh yes, the grape boycott has reached the students, or more correctly, a few of the students of Juniata College. But what about the rest of the students, the ones who don't agree with boycotting grapes? Are they to be denied grapes simply because a few students held a vote and decided that the dining hall should stop serving grapes? If the students of the college wish to stop purchasing and consuming grapes, fine; but until a vote is taken let's not make a decision for them.

Isn't it wonderful how the food service provides us with entertainment while standing in line? The Freshmen get to play "Beat The Clock" as they wait for the lines, oops, excuse me, LINE to open so that they might be able to make it to Epochs after eating. The line is supposed to open at 11:15 on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday and serve Freshmen first so that they can get to class. But that which is supposed to happen and that which does happen are two different things. However, the Freshmen are not the only ones that get to play games. Everybody plays "See How Many Times You Pick Out Silverware Until You Get Clean Utensils." Gee, isn't it fun to find dirty forks, spoons, and knives, not to mention dirty, greasy trays? If this is the type of service that is shown to us, then I don't want to see what the cooking utensils look like.

What exactly is the food service's policy? Where do the employees stand? What are the rights and privileges of the students working for the food service? Why do some students have to slave over the "pig" and others simply push chairs into place while both receive the same wage? And while we're on wages, why do the new cooks start at much higher wages than the people who have worked there for five, six, seven or more years? If anyone believes that Juniata College is not a racist college, then there must not be such a thing as a racist college. We have one Negro worker who among other things, makes nearly all the desserts. He's been here about five years, but makes only slightly more than the student wage. Is this equality?

This article should not cause anyone to lose his or her job, as has already happened to a couple of students who voiced their opinions on the inner workings of the dining hall. This article is only intended to bring to light a few points mentioned in student discussions around campus. Any information used in the writing of this article was gathered by means other than personal interviews or personal inquiries. No answers have been offered as not all the facts are known, but one recommendation can be made and that is that both the students and the food service should work closer with the Student Government's Dining Hall Committee. This committee is the only direct link between the students and the Dining Hall's administration and should be used as such. Perhaps with its help good food and fine service will again become a Juniata tradition.

Physics Dept. To Host Visiting Swarthmore Prof

Professor Mark A. Heald of the Department of Physics at Swarthmore College, Swarthmore, Pennsylvania will serve as a visiting lecturer at Juniata College, Monday and Tuesday, March 9 and 10.

He will visit under the auspices of the American Association of Physics Teachers and the American Institute of Physics as part of a broad nationwide program to stimulate interest in physics. The program is now in its thirteenth year and is supported by the National Science Foundation.

Lectures, informal discussion, assistance to faculty members concerning curriculum and research problems in physics, and talks with students will feature Professor Heald's visit. Professor Wilfred G. Norris, Chairman of the Department of Physics is in charge of arrangements for Professor Heald's visit.

Mark A. Heald was born in Princeton, New Jersey; received a B.A. degree in physics from Oberlin College in 1950; and a Ph.D. in experimental physics (microwave spectroscopy and paramagnetic resonance) from Yale University in 1954.

He has had many physics articles ject Matterhorn, Princeton University, 1954-1959: an assistant professor of physics at Swarthmore College from 1959-1964; and an associate professor there from 1964 to the present time. He was appointed department chairman in 1968.

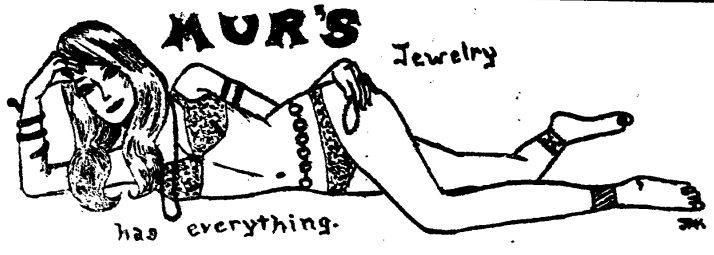
Dr. Heald was a member of the U.S. Delegation to the Second Geneva "Atoms for Peace" Conference, Sept. 1968 and was a member of the Swarthmore "Commission on Educational Policy," 1966-67.

He was had may physics articles published in scientific professional journals, and is co-author with Charles Wharton of a research monograph "Plasma Diagnostics with Microwaves" (Wiley, 1965) and with William Elmore of an undergraduate textbook "Physics of Waves" (McGraw-Hill, 1969).

He has been on research leaves as NSF Science Faculty Fellow at Culham Laboratory, UKAEA, England, 1963-64, and is currently at Plasma Physics Laboratory, Princeton University, 1969-70.

Ride wanted to Downington or Philadelphia area for Spring Break—March 20. Can not leave 'til noon. RPS—Box 732.

BUCK'S LAUNDRY and Dry Cleaners 643-2252



SG Proposes to Change Formation Of Cabinet, Discusses Campus Role

by Donna Knapp

The Student Government has formulated two amendments to change the organization of its cabinet. These amendments were presented to the student body at hall meetings in every dorm Monday, March 2. Voting was done in this way to make sure of getting two-thirds of the student body to participate which is necessary to make the election valid.

The proposed social activities amendment would bring about better coordination of events in the College Center Board. It states, "The responsibilities of the chair of Social Activities as listed in Article V, Section G, shall no longer be under Student Government jurisdiction, but will instead be under the jurisdiction of the College Center Governing Board."

The second amendment involves a change in the structure of the Special Events chair and the elimination of the chair of Classes and Clubs. This is because many of the duties of the chair of Classes and Clubs have been taken over by other structures or have become extinct. The remaining few can be more effectively channeled through other offices. In addition, the area of Special Events has become too broad for one person to handle effectively and efficiently. The addition of a Vice-Chairman and a definite set committee will hopefully alleviate some of the burden and allow a just division of the responsibilities. The special responsibility of one of the junior members of the committee will assure the freshmen of the help and guidance they may need, especially at the beginning of the school year with Homecoming floats.

The amendment reads as follows:

A. The Cabinet shall consist of the chairman of Athletics, a chairman and Vice-Chairman of Special Events, and the Chairman of Communications.

B. The Chairman and vice-chairman of Special Events Shall:
   1. Appoint with the aid of the legislature a basic committee of six people (two from each of the upper classes) to aid in fulfilling the chair's responsibilities.
   2. Coordinate the student involvement during special weekends.
   3. Designate one of the two appointed junior members of the committee as being responsible for working closely in conjunction with the Administration in the program of Freshman Orientation.

At the most recent SG meeting, Mike Long reported on the work of the Task Force. This group has published a memo, available at the Task Force shelf in the Beegley Library, which explains the proposed changes for Juniata.

Kay McCarthy reviewed the work of the Curriculum Committee in the past year. Most of the business it handles involves granting independent studies for students, reviewing comp failures, approving course deletions and additions to the overall curriculum. She noted that this committee is trying to put ideas together in conjuncion with the changes proposed by the Task Force.

SG discussed the possibility of having a representative on the Educational Resources Committee, which deals mainly with campus library problems. Definite action will have to be taken before SG members and representatives to faculty committees are elected, which is scheduled for the week after Easter vacation. It was announced that any student interested in running for these positions should contact either Sally Palmer or Eric Woodworth. Election of SG officers, chairmen of SG committees and class officers is scheduled for the week before Easter vacation.

The role of SG and its association with other groups on campus, especially the College Center Board was discussed. Bob Krouse noted that the power of SG is in many different directions, with most of this power now designated to committees instead of the legislature itself. It was pointed out that as the role of the Center Board increases, the role of SG diminishes. In order to relate SG to the campus, it is hoped that the time between the election of the new legislators and Move-Up Day can be used to aquaint the new SG with the problems it will be facing.

Wil Brandau, from the College Center Board, presented the problem of getting participation for class sponsored activities. The events of the year, such as the luau, formal dances, Casino Night, Christmas decorations, and big name entertainment were mentioned in conjunction with the problem.

PSU Dancers to Present Program - Kaleidoscope '70

Cont'd from page 1

Musical backgrounds include Bach, Ives, Stravinsky, Satie and many other classic composers. Of greatest interest, however, in this category is the original music composed for "Unsleeping City" by Lewis Spratlan of the Music Department.

The dance is based on two poems by Federico Garcia Lorca, narrated by Robert Reifsneider, and has been cited by previewers as one of great originality of concept and intensity of performance. Opposed to the stark and sometimes brutal aspects of "City" is the lyrical beauty of "Bird-in-Hand," set to music by Copeland, the story of an Amish girl who longs to leave the stern discipline of her parents' tradition and join the gaiety of her modern friends.

In "Habitat," initially dubbed "Garbage" by the dancers, Patricia Heigel has evolved a highly amusing theatre piece for ten dancers who emerge, disappear, and surround several large oil drums which seem to be their home, —their habitat.

"Dancers' Dilemma" gives a dance-studio-view of the creative efforts involved as a group of dancers attempt to choreograph a dance on stage. Some of their inner thoughts are expressed verbally as they struggle with their dilemma.

Only five dancers from the previous "Kaleidoscope '69" were available for participation this year. These include Kandi Bednarz, David Kagan, Jaye Miller, Kathy McCann and John Kauffman. All the other dancers are newly trained to produce this program of twelve numbers: John Prettyman, Claudia Leaman, George Wiktor, Alan Mianulli, Penny Yoh, Bill Angstadt, Richard Cook, Joyce Flowers, Claudia White, Linda DeLissovoy, Jeanne Rose, Zoe Kohlhepp, Dan Sledzik, Linda Hodder, Karen Shallo.

Costumes by A. n. Kohout and Deirdre McGuire, and the sets by Robert Teitelbaum, all intensify and reflect the rich variety of the program which this year has been extended to three performance nights due to the popular appeal of Kaleidoscope '69.

Task Force

Examine the task force proposal for a NEW JUNIATA with CURRICULUM COMMITTEE
Sunday, March 8
ADMISSIONS COMMITTEE
Wednesday, March 11
STUDENT ACTIVITIES COUNCIL
Thursday, March 12
ELLIS BALLROOM - 7:30 p.m.

SUN, FUN & LEARNING

Write Ithaca College for Summer Session Pictorial Revue

LOSE YOURSELF IN EDUCATION AND RECREATION OPPORTUNITIES

Liberal Arts Program
Humanities
Natural Science
Social Science
Communications Arts

Physical Education Program
Health
Recreation
Athletics

Performing Arts Program
Fine Arts
Film
Music
Radio-TV
Theatre

PROGRAM FOR ALL

DIRECTOR SUMMER SESSIONS
ITACA COLLEGE
ITHACA, N.Y. 14850

Dr. Meahl Gives Qualifications for Professorship

Helen E. Buchanan Meahl
Academic training
In addition to those taken for credit
Seminar on Social Theories of Talcott Parsons
(Dr. Samuel Blizzard, Penn State now at Princeton)
Seminar on the Concept of Society
(Robert Beeler, Penn State Dept. of Rural Sociology)
Seminar on the Concept of Identification on Human Development
Seminar on Alienation in Our Society, U.T.
Graduate Faculty, Graduate Council
Institutional Research Committee, Univ. of Tenn.
Chairman of Groves Conf. April 1964, Theme: Poverty in Our Society
European Tour served as the Educational Dir. for the tour seven weeks.

Experiences in Professional and Personal Growth
Conference: Changing Values of College Students
(One of 25 Penn State professors selected to attend this conference. Jacobs was present and gave a presentation. This was followed by a day and half of discussions.)
Conference: Love and Conflict
Gibson Winter was present and gave the major presentation which was followed by a series of discussions.
Conference: Spiritual Problems in Contemporary Literature Stanley R. Hooper
Arranged a weekend conference for engaged couples. Dr. Aaron Rutledge from Merril-Palmer, Detroit shared in the responsibility for this conference.
Tri-Hi-Y Conference Sunbury
Tri-Hi Y Conference Hollidaysburg
Arkansas State Legislature 1945 and 1946.
Authored the first law which required a three-day wait following the application for a marriage license, called the Buchanan Marriage Law.
Served as a Clerk for the 1941-1942 and 1943-1944 sessions of the legislature.

Unpublished manuscripts
The Theories of Adam Ferguson
The Theories of Talcott Parson
Theories of Social Movements
Communication and Interpersonal Communication Value Orientations in American Society

TALK

Annual NCFR, Research and the Classroom Teacher
NCFR (Denver Meeting)
Dr. Wm. Smith and I had been asked to make a study of the structure of the organization. We gave the report of our analysis at this meeting. I also served on the prograhn as a respondent.
Madison College - Harrisonburg, Va. Fall 1965
Keynote speaker — Communication and the American Family.
Grover Conference, April 1965, Panel member. The One Parent Family in Our Society.
Taught at Penn State Spring Term 1965.
North Carolina —
Southwestern Conference FR-
Main speaker The Teenager, Family and Society (TV presentation)
National Future Homemakers - Communications, Presentation published.
TV Programs - Radio Programs - American Association of University Women since 1950.
1964 The Teenager in American Society
Talk for State College Branch
1966 Arranging and chairing panel on Family Planning.
(Four Juniata came over for the meeting).
Summer 1958 Research Project for General Electric on Communication and the Marketing of Appliances.
Huntingdon —
Speaker for Church Service, Stone Church.
Work at the Crawford Apartments.
Work at Mt. Union.
Campus Talks
Brought to Campus
Mr. Wallace Fulton
Dr. Jesse Bernard
Dr. Ned Gaylin
Mr. Alan Cleeton
Mr. Ralph Blair
Mrs. Cheerful Kidd
ACLU Rep.
Students on Field Trips
Taping talks for students
i.e. Dr Robin Williams
Dr. Lee Rainwater
Students to A.A.U.W and other meetings in State College.
Contacts to secure jobs for students or get them in grad. school
Robyn Johns
Grant Lee
Tom Robinson
James Thompson
Jeff Bixby
Library help.
Open on Problems
Panel — Penn State "Homosexuality and our Society" (over 600 attending)
Merrill Palmer —
Conference The Family Infant Development
N.C.F.R. San Francisco — Discussion leader (Meeting the Ind. Needs in Our Society)
Taught on an N.Y.A. program (part-time) for 19 months, March 1941 — Sept., 1942. This program required classroom teaching and home visitation.
In 1946 following the death of my 28 month-old son I became Educational Director for a Baptist Church. Following the High School graduation of the older step-daughter I resigned and took a position as Associate Editor of the weekly publication, The Arkansas Baptist, Little Rock, Arkansas.
In 1948 the University of Arkansas established a graduate center in Little Rock and I began taking work for a Maser's in Sociology. My work there included one course which provided the opportunity to visit the mental hospital and work with patients each Saturday for 10 weeks.

The Juniatian regrets that restricted space allows only this partial listing of Dr. Meahl's credentials.

Class of 1968 Catches Alumni Eye

by Paul Keely

It will be mostly this year's juniors and seniors who will be at all familiar with many of the names in the alumni column this week, for they were around campus when the Class of '68 held the senior position. Once again, the information below comes from Mrs. Hunt's report in last fall's JC Bulletin.

Last August James Beckerich and Ann Westerh were married and took up residence in Norristown. Jim attends Temple University Graduate School and teaches mathematics at Plymouth-Whitemarsh High School, while Ann was planning to begin teaching elementary school in the area.

John Cook married Carol Morrison last August in Ebensburg and is continuing his studies in optometry at Ohio State University.

As assistant editor of "Data Product News," Jo Isenberg is located in New York City doing magazine work which services industry, science, government and commerce.

Thomas Bowser is working for Goodwill Industries in Baltimore, Maryland. Tom had completed one semester at the University of Missouri at Rolla before his draft board inspired the change.

Prue Engle is on the staff of the Brethren Action Movement as a Peace Education Field Worker and is located in North Manchester, Indiana.

After graduation from Officer Training School at Lockland Air Force Base in Texas, Joseph Rizzotti Jr. was commissioned a second lieutenant in the U.S. Air Force and was assigned to Reese A.F.B. (Texas) for pilot training.

John Clough and Nancy Furrer ('69) were married in December of 1968 and are residing in Lebanon (Pa.).

R. Thomas Forr Jr. is located at Ft. Sill, Oklahoma, where he is taking an OCS course at the Artillery and Missle Center.

Sherman (Tom) Berkley and Sandra Harrison ('69) were married last June in Chatham, N.J. Tom is continuing his studies at the University of Pittsburgh School of Dental Medicine, while Sandy is teaching French at Ellis School in Pittsburgh.

After completing her studies for her master of education degree in physics education at the University of Delaware, Janet Seiner accepted a position to teach freshman and sophomore physics at Anne Arundel Community College in Arnold, Maryland. Janet was hoping to publish her own work on the radiation defects in the alkali halide crystals, having done her research under Dr. R. B. Murray. While at the University, she was a teaching assistant for a physical science course taught by the physics department and was also an organizer of the University's chapter of the Society of Physics Students.

The wedding of Molly Sickles Bushnell and Frederick Gieg Jr. took place in Hollidaysburg last summer. The couple lives in Mount Lebanon while Fred continues his law studies at Duquesne University in Pittsburgh. Molly is teaching first grade in the Washington School, Chartiers Valley School District, in Pittsburgh.

Nancy Anne Rodgers and Joseph Peters were pronounced man and wife last September in the Eisenhower Chapel in State College. Joe is studying clinical psychology at Penn State.

Barbara Ann Hay married James Davis last summer and is teaching in the Juniata Valley School System, where her husband is also teaching. The Davises are now living at Peaceful Terrain Farms,

SG Lists Available Offices and Responsibilities

Election time will soon be upon us again. Petitions will be available March 11 for any students interested in running for any of the Student Government offices and chairs, and for those interested in class offices. The election for these positions will be held March 17. March 18, petitions will be available for any students interested in running for the Student Government Legislature. This election, including the positions of student representatives on the faculty committees, will be held the week following Spring Vacation. Any students interested in positions on the faculty committees should contact a member of the Legislature by March 17.

As a point of general interest, each of the available positions will be listed here with a brief description of the duties involved.

Student Government

1. President:
   a. be a presiding officer of the Legislature and shall vote only to break a tie.
   b. be the agent of the Legislature to the Administrative Cabinet, Dormitory Governments, and the Executive Staff.
   c. coordinate the activities of the Administrative Cabinet and the Executive Staff.
   d. create and administer these appointments and committees for the enactment and fulfillment of any action prescribed by the Student Government.
   e. serve on the Student Activities Council.
   f. appoint with the approval of the Legislature three members of the Legislature to serve on the Student Activities Council.
   g. screen and recommend to the Legislature possible candidates for positions in the Executive Staff.
   h. hire within his working budget those people necessary to execute his administration.
2. Vice-President
   a. fulfill the duties of the President in his absence.
   b. be a regular voting member of the Legislature, except when presiding.
   c. coordinate all student elections and directly supervise the Student Government elections.
   d. prepare and execute plans for, and preside at, the annual Leadership Conference,
3. Chairman of Women's House: According to the Constitution of the Women's Student Government of Juniata College, duties of the chairman are:
   1. to call and preside over all meetings of Women's House.
   2. with the approval of the House, to appoint and establish special committees and to act as an ex-officio member of all committees.
   3. to serve as chairman of the nominating committee.
   4. to coordinate all activities of Women's House.
   5. to serve as chairman of the Executive Council of Women's House.
   6. to represent women students on the Student Government and whenever necessary.

   All these duties seem formal and disciplined, but Women's House has much to offer for the chairman. Next semester when the new residence halls are open, there will be opportunities to initiate new ideas for women students and to reorganize the structure so that it may function to serve many new activities.
4. Chairman of Men's House
   a. must be a resident student.
   b. conducts regular meetings on a bi-weekly basis and additional ones, when necessary.
   c. serves as a direct connection between the Dean of Student Affairs and the general male student body.
   d. automatic member of the Men's Judicial Council, which handles minor disciplinary problems.
   e. coordinate activities within the men's dormitories.
5. Chairman of Athletics
   a. forms a committee to work with him in implementing the Athletics program.
   b. works with Mr. Gary Sheppard, the faculty representative to intramurals, in planning and coordinating all intramural sports and tournaments and the annual Interclass Track Meet.
6. Special Events Chairman
   a. responsible for big weekends, such as Homecoming, May Day, and Parents' Day.
   b. responsible for Fall and Spring Mountain Day.
   c. must plan themes, activities, and schedules for big weekends.

   This position entails much advance planning to assure successful events. A record is kept each year to aid the incoming chairman in planning the events.
7. Chairman of Communications
   a. heads a committee composed of the editors of the Juniatian, Alfarata, and Kvasir, and the station manager of WJC, the faculty advisors for these organizations, and the Dean of Students.
   b. responsible for the budgeting of the organizations and for the yearly publications of the "Pathfinder" and the "Freshman Directory".
   c. responsible for coping with problems that may arise in these organizations during the year.
8. Legislature
   a. composed of four (4) representatives from each class.
   b. be the primary policy making and evaluation body of the Student Government.
   c. create those legislative committees for the investigation and action into areas of student concern.
   d. basic legislature duties (budgetary, hiring, representative)

In order to qualify as a candidate for an executive position. a student must have achieved Sophomore or Junior standing at time of nomination. Any candidate for a Student Government position must have a cumulative average of at least 2.0.

If you would like more information about any of these positions, feel free to consult the present officeholders:

President—Eric Woodworth
Vice-President—Sally Palmer
Chairman of Women's House — Vicki Carman
Chairman of Men's House — Terry Turnbaugh
Chairman of Athletics Rich Paulhamus
Chairman of Special Events — Kathie Barnett
Chairman of Communications — John Aldeghi

Class Offices

Each class will elect a President, a Vice-President, a Secretary, and a Treasurer of the class. These offices will work together to coordinate all class activities during the year (i.e. Homecoming Float, All Class Night). Any candidate for class office must be in good academic standing.

Faculty Committees

Two student representatives will be elected to each of the following faculty committees:

1. Faculty Council — This body develops and coordinates general policy having to do with the academic program of the college. Associated with it are several educational committees, each having responsibility in one immediate segment of the total program. In order to achieve the objectives of balance and coordination, the chairman of each associated committee is invited to attend the meetings of the Faculty Council, except when it is in executive session. The membership includes the Dean of Academic Affairs, the Chairmen of the divisions, one faculty member of the rank of Professor or Associate Professor from each of the three divisions elected by the faculty as a whole, and two students.
2. Admissions Committee — Functions of this committee include determining quotas for each new class, recommending standards of admission, determining patterns of recruitment procedure, and acting on marginal applications. Membership includes the Director of Admissions, the Vice-President for Development, three members elected by the faculty, one from each division, and two students.
3. Registration and Standing Committee — the functions include reviewing and recommending standards of satisfactory performance, reviewing the records of students having academic difficulties, and considering and acting on applications for readmission of students dismissed for academic reasons, among other duties. The membership includes the Registrar, the Dean of Student Affairs, three members elected by the faculty, one from each division, and two students.
4. Curriculum Committee — This committee reviews and recommends requirements for graduation, acts on student requests for tutorials, honors courses, special programs of study, etc., acts on departmental proposals for addition and deletion of courses and programs, studies curriculum development in higher education, and reviews results of comprehensive exams. The membership includes the Dean of Academic Affairs, two department chairmen from each division, and two student members.
5. Cultural Events Committee — The functions include developing policies on cultural events of various kinds and assisting in the arrangement of programs, and working with the coordinator in preparing a budget request and allocating funds. The membership includes a faculty coordinator appointed by the President, three members elected from the faculty, one from each division, and two students.
6. President's Advisory Committee — This group serves in an advisory capacity to the President, dealing with a range of matters from academics and curriculum to the college's financial and building programs. Membership includes the Dean of Academic Affairs, the Dean of Student Affairs, the Chairman of the College Center Board of Governors, the Student Government President, three members elected by and from the faculty, one from each division, and three students.
7. Educational Resources Committee — the function include developing policy on the use of educational resources as are represented in the library, the audio-visual repository, and the computer, recommending procedures for the better use of existing educational resources of all kinds, and approving the budget requests in these areas before presentation to the administration. Membership includes the Director of Libraries(the Co-ordinator of Audio-Visual Materials, the Director of Computer, three members elected by and from the faculty, one from each division, and two student members.

Any student interested in any of these positions on faculty committees should make his interest known to a Student Government Legislator by March 17, so that his name can be placed on the ballot. If more information is desired about a particular committee, feel free to contact any of the present members:

Faculty Council — Bob Marcus, Howie Grove
Admissions Committee — Cindy Gouliones, Rob Wood
Registration and Standing — Lynn Wright, Lee Denlinger Curriculum Committee — Dan Hoover, Kay McCarthy
Cultural Events Committee — Carol Fink, Greg Adams
President's Advisory Committee — Roger Long, JoAnn Williams, Steve Woodworth

Your support and interest is needed if the Student Government is going to be effective on this campus. If you want to have a say in determining the way things are done around here, this is your chance to make your voice heard, through one of these offices or committees.

THE WAR IS OVER

NIGERIA HAS WON

- BUT -

BIAFRA

IS STILL LOSING —

5,000 LIVES PER DAY

YOUR MONEY IS NEEDED

Please Send Contributions To:

STUDENTS FOR BIAFRAN RELIEF
P.O. Box 516
University of Notre Dame
Notre Dame, Ind. 46556

Lose to Indiana . . .

Berrier Boys Crush Crusaders

The JC grapplers picked up a big win over the Susquehanna Crusaders on Wednesday, Feb. 25, 1970, at Memorial Gym. The lower weights behind Jeff Massingham aggressively sought victory; but because of a few unfortunate breaks, each lost by only a few points. Freshman Jim McCartney did an excellent job against Susquehanna's Bill Bechtel. Bechtel defeated Jim by only one point. Jim needed a mere five seconds time advantage to receive a draw. Then, at the 150 lb. class Jim Hutchison decisioned Spencer Pope (6-2) to ignite the fuse that never dwindled until Pete Schuyler decked Joe Kline in 1:26 of the first period. Once victory started coming our way, there was turning. The matmen approached each match only to return victoriously. At last the diligent practice and determination paid dividends to the JC wrestlers. The individual scores were:

118: Rich Bechtel (S) dec.
Jeff Massingham (9-3)
126: Bill Bechtel (S) dec.
Jim McCartney (2-1)
134: Mike Ramage (S) dec.
Ed Constable (8-3)
142: Doug Grosch (S) dec.
Mike McCartney (5-3)
150: Jim Hutchison (J) dec.
Spencer Pope (6-2)
158: Jeff Elwell (J) dec.
Brad Miller (8-2)
167: Dan Greening (J) pinned
Tom McGeoy (4:42 2nd. period)
177: Warren Scott (J) dec.
Ed Horn (5-2)
190: Tom Mears (J) pinned
Don McClain (3:47 2nd. period)
HWT: Pete Schuyler (J) pinned
Joe Kline
Preliminaries:
Al Wasserboch (S) pinned
Terry Buckwalter
(3:35 2nd. period)
Rich Frank (S) dec.
Pat Fleagle (2-0)
Fred Topper (S) dec.
Doug Marschka (5-4)
FINAL SCORE:
JUNIATA: 24
SUSQUEHANNA: 12

The Indians dropped another match on Saturday, Feb. 28, 1970, in Memorial Gymnasium. This time the matmen were up against Indiana University of Pennsylvania. The score was close 21-18. If Juniata's Jim Hutchison and Tom Mears could have lasted all eight minutes the team would have been victorious, but obviously the breaks didn't fall our way. The team was disappointed because they didn't win the match for seniors: Mike McCartney, Jeff Elwell, Warren Scott, and Pete Shuyler; however, it isn't too late for the team to do a good job at M.A.C.'s this week-end, March 6 and 7. The results of the individual bouts were as follows:

118: Jeff Massingham (J) dec.
Joe Cinimo (6-2)
126: David Lea (I) dec.
Jim McCartney (10-3)
134: Ed Constable (J) drew with David Morasky (11-11)
142: Murray Neeper (I) dec.
Mine McCartney (10-0)
150: Kevin McGorry (I) pinned
Jim Hutchison (6:14 3rd period)
158: Todd Stephenson (I) dec.
Jeff Elwell (6-4)
167: Dan Greening (J) dec.
Ken Kline (4-3)
177: Warren Scott (J) pinned
Bob Binford (1:50 1st period)
190: Tom Rogish (I) pinned
Tom Mears (4:53 2nd period)
HWT: Pete Schuyler (J) pinned
Jim Allen (2:36 2nd. period)
Preliminaries:
Dow Fisher was decisioned (6-2)
FINAL SCORE:
JUNIATA 18
INDIANA UNIV. OF PA. 21

This Week at the Kalos-Clifton:
March 4- 7: Alice's Restaurant
March 8-10: Medium Cool

"On a clear day you can see forever."

RHINOCEROUS
See It Here
March 5, 6, or 7

Theatre-of-the-absurd playwright Eugene Ionesco's "Rhinoceros" will be the Spring stage production at Juniata College, with performances planned for March 5, 6 and 7. Clayton E. Briggs, associate professor of speech and theatre, will direct the production.

Written in 1959 and described by The New York Times as "an allegory for our times," "Rhinoceros" depicts the struggle of the individual to maintain his identity and integrity in a world where all others have succumbed to the "beauty" of brute force, natural energy, and mindlessness.

According to director Briggs, the Juniata production promises a metamorphosis: "an alchemic transformation of one of the play's characters from an 'us' into a 'them.'" Thus the plot is to be well served, as Ionesco has intended to portray the tragedy of man's capitulating himself to animal instincts and cravings. As the comic underlies, then supercedes, the tragic aspects of "Rhinoceros," Ionesco confuses the ridiculous and the sublime in order to rid the playgoer of their confusion in his own mind.

Juniata students featured in leading roles include Blake Freeman as the hero Bereuger, Sally Diehm as Daisy, and Jeff Naugle as Jean.

The production will be staged in Juniata College's Oller Auditorium the evenings of March 5, 6 and 7. Curtain time is 8:15 p.m.

Lost

Between Beeghly Library and Mifflin St. A small brown clutch-type purse with driver's license, credit cards, etc. Belonging to Donna Lane. Please take to Lost and Found at Ellis, where I will pick it up.

It wasn't too long ago that Bill Leith's future was still a big question mark.

Today he's a man with the answers.

Bill Leith started as one of our management trainees shortly after graduating from Lake Forest.

Two years later he was an administrative assistant, handling new business for our Equity Management service.

Just last June he became our youngest Asaistant Investment Officer.

His job is a big one.

Our customers are likely to ask many searching questions before entrusting their money to us.

Bill has the answers.
Responsibility?
A small fortune's worth.
But then we have lots of responsibility to hand out.
If you'd like to know more about the opportunities at Marine Midland, please add your name to our schedule in the placement office.
We'd like to see you on. FEBRUARY 16, 1970

MARINE MIDLAND GRACE
TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK
Marine Midland Building, 140 Broadway, New York, N.Y. 10015

We seem to be the only bank in town that thinks $7,000 of your money is worth investing.

That's about all you need to open an Equity Management Account. (Ask anywhere else and you're likely to find they're not very interested in anything under $25,000. In fact, don't be surprised if they think of $75,000 as a modest starter.)

What's more, once you've come up with the first $7,000, you can add as little as about $2,300. On the first day of any month.

This is not a mutual fund—your money is invested in about 20 stocks which are actually carried in your name. This means that if, for any reason, you decide to withdraw, you can take your stock in kind or you can elect to take cash instead.

Our Equity Management Service is a very unusual idea, so there are probably several questions you would like to ask before you entrust us with your money. We have a man who'll be pleased to answer them all—Bill Leith. Call 943-6192. Or write him at our Trust Department, 250 Park Avenue, New York, New York 10017.

MARINE MIDLAND GRACE
TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK

THE JUNIATIAN

Vol. XLVI, No. 16 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | March 13, 1970

Dick Gregory:

All Doves Ain't White

by joan eisenhart

Boy, it sure was nice that that famous black comedian came all the way here to entertain us. And man, was he ever funny! There aren't too many people that ever get a standing ovation in this place, but he deserved it. I never laughed so hard in my life. I wasn't even bored. He's good looking too; did you dig the suit? But I sure wish he'd talk better; I'm not sure I always understood what he was saying. He seemed to be contradicting himself but maybe that was just a barrier caused by a lack of clarity.'

No baby, it wasn't language that was creating the barrier,—it was guilt. There's no other way to say it anymore. "Ain't no more tricks." So if you don't dig what he's saying it's 'cause you don't want to. He was with you all the way; but he wasn't here just to pat you on the back and tell you about the problems the "old fools" made as if they weren't going to concern you or me. Dick Grgory was trying to tell us what we are going to face — "I say to you youngsters today, you have a big job."—if we are going to face our responsibilities.

Before we can work to destroy this "white racist system" for which we are responsible, we must recognize the hypocrisies that help build it—"Twenty-four hours a day this system lies to you and when you catch it they call it a generation gap." How many had realized the bias with which advertising has been operating and the effects of this prejudiced operation? "You can't find nothing blacker than a tornado 'till it gets ready to clean up a white lady's kitchen; then it's a white tornado." If an instance such as this seems unimportant and ridiculous to involve in the issue of social responsibility, you have failed to perceive the implications that derive from it. After all, if Dick Gregory who is as far from being a Mexican grape-picker as we are, feels convinced that there is a humanitarian duty to boycott grapes, how do we have the right to laugh at such a request? Are we so insecure in our own identification that we cannot project ourselves into the lives of others? Doesn't it seem strange to you that, "We've got nerve enough to teach the Indian that Columbus discovered America"?

Does it seem strange to you—any of it? He talked about "Dean Rusk's kid", Carlswell and Bobby Seale but not all in the same breath. The idea was that money buys power and privilege, and power and priviledge can be, and are used to infringe on the rights of others. It doesn't really matter what Gregory, or you, or anybody else thinks of the physical appearance of David Eisenhower. That's not the point. If you felt that it was important then you probably were so busy picking at the small points that you missed the main ideas.

But then, picking at small points, according to Dick Gregory, has been an unfortunate habit in our educational system. It needs to be changed. We might know it; the faculty should know it. But there are those of both groups who are unwilling to spend time and energy to enact this change. Many feel that the old system has worked well for them—sure, slavery worked well for the white southern farmers too. It's all a test to see how selfish we really are. It's frustrating to run a constant battle with the power structure of a school, the administration and trustees, 'cause "You don't have a thing to say when the right people pick up the phone and make the right phone calls." But who should be the "right people" in a college; don't we pay for something around here? "The people who control schools know nothing about education." There is power built on something other than money and prestige—Black Power. Organization and determination built this force and they can work for the students too. How much of yourself are you willing to give for others (ye Christians)?

Organization and determination won freedom for the patriots of the Revolution. But "Today the patriots seem always to be on the side of the oppressor." It's another one of those "bad checks" that Dick Gregory was talking about, like the Viet Nam fight for democracy. "Anything good you don't have to force on people; they will steal it." What kind of democracy is it that forces a black man to admit that, "I can be treated better dead by my enemy than alive by my own country."?

Dick Gregory touched on everything: bigotry, education, war, government, non-violance, the FDA, the CIA and LSD. It's a shame so many students weren't there to hear him. Sure, Oller Hall was packed like I never saw it before. But those people weren't all students. There were an awful lot of black people helping to pack that place; many more than the six black students in our school. I can only hope that the Juniata students that were there did hear the funny man—I mean really hear him. From the reception he got, his audience seemed ready to listen. And from the ovation at the finish, it appeared that they had. But some of the laughter seemed rather nervous to me. Didn't you like what he said about white girls? He doesn't lie. And if you think he exaggerates, maybe you just don't know.

Dick Gregory

All students interested in becoming hall counselors for next year are to make written application to Dean Maxwell, Dean Lee, or Bill Berrier by March 20. Applications should include qualifications and interests for the position.

Join Now . . .

'Fast for Peace' to Begin

For the next seven weeks, a quiet demonstration, "Fast for Peace," will continue along Pennsylvania Avenue in front of the White House in Washington. The longest (and quietest) anti-war demonstration is jointly sponsored by Clergy and Laymen Concerned About Vietnam and The Fellowship for Reconciliation. Both organizations favor peace in Vietnam.

The demonstration—in which the participants fast during their appearance on Pennsylvania Avenue —began Ash Wednesday, Feb. 11, and continues through Passover, April 27. Some of the leaders of the demonstration reportedly have pledged to fast until they must be brought to the White House in wheel chairs.

Problems of naily scheduling at the demonstration have been minimal. Groups and individuals have volunteered from all over the country, and numbers of demonstrators have been balanced from day to day. Students, faculty, or anyone else interested in participating in this "Fast for Peace" may contact the national headquarters of Clergy and Laymen Concerned for Peace (in New York City), or the African Methodist Episcopal Church on M Street in Washington.

A numbr of Juniata students are planning to take part in the "Fast for Peace." If you are intersted in participating in the march or if you can provide transportation to Washington, please contact Dan Rosenberger, Box 1606 or Tussey 231.

World and National

Appalacian Advance, a journal devoted to "report on and stimulate discussion about" problems and programs in the "Appalacia" area, discusses in its most recent issue the role that technology and cooperation can have in offering quality education and cultural enrichment to the most remote areas of Appalacia.

One successful example is the Educational Cooperative, DILENOWISCO, a project involving five rather beleaguered and culturally deprived districts in southwestern Virginia. Using money from a federal grant and adding local funds, the coop was able to provide services and facilities to children that a single district could not possibly afford. The students, many from poor families, remain in their local schools, but the local curricula are supplemented by instruction via telecture, Electrowriter, television, radio, computer and mobile facilities (some of them medical) equipped to offer various services. Instead of transporting children over hazardous mountain roads to a central location, services and facilities are brought to the children.

The cooperative program has allowed the districts to institute supplementary services to the local classroom teacher; part time consultants in art, music (often where a total absence of such offerings existed before); highly specialized personnel such as speech correctionists and psychologists; enrichment programs for creative, talented and intellectually gifted pupils; special training courses for teachers and administrators.

Social scientists looking into the future detect in the coming decade a major shift in popular notions of what education is and fhere it takes place, the U.S. Office of Education reports.

Their forecast emrges from a new study, "The Learning Force," issued by the Educational Policy Research Center at Syracuse, N.Y., one of two centers supported by the Office of Education's National Center for Educational Research and Development that investigate future alteratives for education.

"We have compiled data which indicate that by 1976 more than 82 million adult Americans are expected to take part in educational programs outside the traditional school system," says Stanley Moses, director of the study.

He contrasts that figure with an estimated 67 million students expected to be involved by 1976 in traditional schooling from preprimary grades through graduate school. "What we seem to see, then, is more Americans getting learning experiences outside rathes than inside the school's walls," Moses says.

He also notes that the 82-million-plus figure is almost double the approximately 44 million adults in "outside segulas school" programs in 1965 and nearly foor times the 1950 figore of about 22 million.

According to Moses, the figures suggest a phenomenal growth in adult learning activities in a variety of situations not usually considered as "education." He refers to learning programs conducted by business, governments, unions, the military servlies, correspondence schools, anti-poverty program, community organization, and instructional telvision.

The growing importance of this sector of the learning force, Moses believes, will have a major impact on the notion that "education is what goes on in the traditional school system, a preparation for life ending with adulthood.

One possibility is an "educational system constructed around the principle of learning as a life-long purpose, with alternative routes and many entrances and exits depending on the changing needs and interests of participants."

Specifically, he sees a "learning society" emerging in the post-industrial era that will look to education for a wide range of purposes, from basic learning skills and job training to mid-career or changing-career training and suitable leisure time or retirement activities.

JWSF Ends Successful Week

Juniata World Service Fund Week has come and gone, but has resulted in the raising of over $265 for its foreign student program. The most successful of its activities throughout the week was the faculty waiter sit-down dinner on Tuesday, March 3, when 20 faculty members solicitously served the students and collected over $150 in tips. The "JWSF Waiter of the Year Trophy" went to Mr. Harold B. Brumbaugh for having collected the most tips.

The bake sale and auction, held Thursday night, March 5, brought in approximately $60 more. The baked goods sold relatively well, but what is not understandable is that a majority of students felt that $4-$5 was too much to spend for a dinnr for four at the home of a faculty member.

In this respect, student support was not what it could have been. Furthermore, only 40 slave tags for Slave Day and Revenge Day were sold. Slave tags became necessary when only three girls signed up as being willing to be auctioned off as slaves in support of the foreign student fund.

While $265 was raised, with a little more student support, the goal of $500 might have been raised, thus enabling another foreign student to come to Juniata for next year's two terms. However, JWSF wishes to thank sincerely all students and faculty members who did help to support the foreign student fund and make it possible for JWSF to continue aiding financially its present foreign student.

A Memorandum to Daniel Patrick Moynihan

Guest editorial: A Reaction

Monday night the students and faculty, and several hundred assorted people were treated to an exercise of sophomoric expounding. Insults, warped statistics and night club jokes served as the core of Dick Gregory's commentary. He revealed the obvious.

The painful part of standing in the rear of Oller Hall was to see and hear the people present applaud and laugh. Mr. Gregory telling them of their stupidity, their ignorance, their lack of concern, and they laughed.

Dear God! How can anyone be told that he is a fool and laugh?!

The fact that Mr. Gregory was necessary to enlighten the students of Juniata, as well as of many other institutions of "HIGHER LEARNING," is a tragic accentuation of the failing of education. That his remarks didn't insult or inflame enough to bring about any reaction other than laughter highlights the lack of concern, even for themselves, of those in attendance.

If those who listened to Dick Gregory Monday night return to Juniata's lethargic norm of Dynamic Apathy, HE WAS RIGHT, totally and unequivocally right! The time has come to take action, paper, envelopes and stamps are relatively inexpensive. Now, not tomorrow or the day after, is the time to exercise at least a small portion of your, our, power as a citizen. A mail bag of letters can be as effective as a phone call. A better tomorrow has to be worked for. It can be the way it ought to be, if and only if we are willing to work, to dirty our hands in the labor of making ourcountry, our world into what we want it to be. There is little doubt that Dick Gregory was absolutely right when he said, "There are no more tricks." The only solution now is honest work, bcause friends there are no tricks left. "There are no more tricks."

by Dick Gregory

Daniel Patrick Moynihan, counselor to the President with Cabinet-level rank, wrote a memorandum to his boss, dated January 16, 1970, concerning the "position of Negroes" at the end of the first year of the Nixon administration. The memo was evidently not solicited by Richard Nixon, but Moynihan said it occurred to him that the President might find it useful.

Moynihan observed that "the American Negro is making extraordinary progress." He cited the favorite areas. Education, for example. According to Moynihan's statistics, "Negro college enrollment rose 85 percent between 1964 and 1968, by which time there were 434,000 Negro college students." To emphasize how "extraordinary" such progress is, Moynihan reminded the President that the full-time university population of Great Britain is 200,000. The missing ingredient, of course, is a recognition that the population of the United States is more than four times that of Great Britain, as well as a comparison of the proportional number of institutions of higher learning.

Then there's the matter of employment and income. Says Moynihan, "A third (32 percent) of all families of Negro and other races earned 18,000 or more in 1968, compared, in constant dollars, with 15 percent in 1960." Even more encouraging, enthuses Moynihan, "black occupations improved dramatically. The number of professional and technical employees doubled in the period of 1960-68. This was two and a half times the increase for whites. In 1969, Negro and other races provided 10 percent of the otherthan-college teachers. This is roughly their proportion of the population (11 percent)."

Less "extraordinarily" Moynihan makes a few other admissions. For instance, the black unemployment rate is twice that of whites. But, Moynihan gleefully indicates, the rate is down for both groups. And then there is the bothersome statistic of an outrageous black teenage unemployment rate of 24.4 percent in 1969.

And if the President reads his memorandum carefully he will note that the "extraordinary progress" is definitely geographically limited. Moynihan admits that more than half of the black population lived in the South in 1969 and there the ratio of "Negro and other races" earning $8,000 or more was only 19 percent.

Conspicuously absent in the Moynihan memorandum was the housing issue; though the subject is alluded to in a section on "Fire." And it always irritates me that white folks' reports always fail to recognize the real areas we black folks have made progress in. The biggest break-through for black folks in the history of America occurred a couple of years ago in the state of Texas, and nobody ever mentions it. We got our first colored hurricane — Beulah. Anybody who can integrate that Big Breeze has made some progress. Of course, anyone who has ever seen a hurricane or a tornado knows that they are black. That is until one of them blows through the white lady's kitchen — then it becomes a "White Tornado."

The Moynihan memo admits that there are some problems still plaguing the decade of "extraordinary progress." One burning issue is that of "Fire" in black slum neighborhoods. In New York City, for example, the over-all fire alarm rate more than tripled between 1956 and 1969. Though population density contributes to the increase in ghetto fires, Moynihan finds it alarming that many are "more or less deliberately set." Which leads to another problem — social alienation. An alienation which Moynihan feels has become "quasi-politicized." Says Moynihan: "Hatred — revenge — against whites is now an acceptable excuse for doing what might have been done anyway." "This is bad news," Moynihan continues, "for any society."

Statistical manipulation is "bad news" for the ghetto, and certainly has a direct bearing on the increased fires of revenge. For example, Moynihan cites the increase in the rate of "illegitimate births" among both blacks and whites. The black rate rose to 29.4 and the white rate rose to 4.9 percent. That statistic is really "bad news" and strikes a sour note in the ghetto. Not that I question the accuracy of the percentage. But if black folks would ever get their hands on the white folks' abortion credit card one day, we would show America how to knock a rate down. Or if that outrageous percentage of young blacks were given the good paying jobs white boys have been holding for years, they would be able to finance some of the professional sexual outlets white folks have been patronizing for years and stop having so many babies at home.

The Moynihan memo suggests a strategy to the President. Borrowing a phrase from a report on Canada issued by the British Earl of Durham in 1839, Moynihan suggests that "the time may have come when the issue of race could benefit from a period of 'benign neglect.'" It is Moynihan's contention that the race issue is too visible, it's talked about too much, and extremists of both persuasions are allowed to stir up emotions.

The phrase "benign neglect" seems to be less a strategy than it is a description of the current administration's attitude concerning racial matters. Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary offers a definition of the phrase something like, "gentle disregard; a failure to do, care for, etc." In more concrete terms, "benign neglect" is appointing a Clement Haynesworth to a seat on the highest court in the land, then, in the face of resounding disapproval, reaching out and choosing a G. Harrold Carswell. It is graciously urging nonviolence upon black America, while at the same time ignoring the deplorable conditions of the nonviolent Indian. It is serving grapes on the dinner tables of the White House while Mexican-Americans are tred upon in the fields.

All of which leads to the medical definition of benign. It is that of a "mild character" as opposed to maliqnant. Daniel Patrick Moynihan may urge his President to look out upon the continuing social cancer in America and act as though it were nothing more than a benign tumor. It is a comforting diagnosis to many families in America, but always remember this: the patient will die.

Letters to the Editor

Plea to Reconsider

To the editor:

it is good to see that students are concerned over an apparent injustice to a College faculty member. However, after reflecting on the letters relating to Dr. Meahl in the March 6th Juniatian, I am concerned over a greater injustice toward some administrative members of the faculty.

The implication that a department head would act capriciously in staffing his department is vicious, and even a little stupid. Since his goal should be excellence in his department— and t his is a continuing effort, it is in his own interests to consistently seek the best qualified professors available.

Likewise unfair is the resentment because the administration won't publicize the reasons why a terminal contract was sought. Since personal damage could be caused in some situtations, the most ethical policy is simply to avoid extensive comment on these matters. Thus, by avoiding promiscuous discussion of personnel, a department head merely demonstrates that he is guided by professional integrity—not by "personal differences and petty jealousies."

The whole Dr. Meahl discussion reminds me of a seedy political campaign. Just how relevant are emotional phrases like "battling for her principles. . .struggling for all young professors," not to mention the unfortunate reference to a personal tragedy included in her qualifications for professorship?

More to the point: before taking sides, one should reflect on such questions as; What are the long range goals of the sociology department? What new courses should be added to the curriculum? Can our present faculty provide a desirable departmental balance? What alternatives would we choose if. we were responsible for establishing and maintaining the quality of this deppartment?

Unfortunately, most of the argument sidesteps these central questions and, instead, focuses on numerous personal charges which might better be ignored, since their sudden appearance at this time implies that they were manufactured only as ammunition for this current battle.

Respectfully,
Marjorie A. Scialabba

Letters Policy

Letters to the editor should be typed and double-spaced and should be submitted no later than 1:30 p.m. Monday. The editors reserve the right to print only non-libelous and responsible content and to edit all letters and commentaries submitted to the Juniatian. The staff also reserves the right to publish all full signatures unless the writer can supply very valid reasons for omitting his name.

Correction

To the editor:

In light of events occurring during the past three weeks, I feel, as a student, the need to voice myself unknown to an issue which I think is the most important presently.

First of all, I think if certain students and faculty members are going to speculate as to the whereabouts of a professor every hour of the day, the qualifications of a professor, and whether the professor is devoted enough to the students (in terms of entertaining them) that they should take a good look at themselves in terms of the above charbes. Being directly exposed to the issue, I realize that it is difficult to compete in our set roles whirh we have establishd over the years—ye professionales. You have all been enucated, having put long hard hours into doing what you thought was right for yourself, your families and society. Maybe sometimes you have contributed too much for the results and rewards you haven't gotten—that you deserved.

Lack of communication and understanding is something which characterizes all of our personalities in some way. As students "communicating" with professors I am sure there are just a few—if not many professors with whom we just can't seem to identify. There is some "clash"—be it professional or be it personal. I think all the students who have had Dr. Meahl in class and even those who have had some other contact with her will agree she is a professor who can communicate with you on any problem or issue and yet stand for what she believes.

All I ask as a student, supposedly able to have freedom of voice, is that you who made the accusations, look at what you hold against Dr. Meahl. As a professor, at Juniata, then I ask you to look at yourselves so knowledgeable, capable of porducing such unsubstantial criteria for judgment?

Name withheld by request

Hairy Athletes

To the editor:

It has come to my attention that some of the athletic policies of this school or the personalities enforcing them aren't what they should be and ohght to be altered.

The most ridiculous of these policies is the one regulating athletes' hair. The rule restricting these, if it exists, has been subject to strict enforcement lately by the chief hair watcher.

Restrictions of this kind are really absurd. In very few cases does hair, particularly beards and mustaches, actually affect playing ability. It doesn't seem to menace sportsmanship or jeopardize team spirit. In fact, it is completely irrelevant to anything connected with athletics.

Long hair happens to be the fashion today. Some people would be more embarrassed by a coach with a crew cut than students with long hair:crew cuts today truly make the person stand out as an individual, not as a team member. Many professional athletes wear beards and long hair as do many of our "model" professors.

The hair restrictions are a carry over from years ago in which the athlete was pictured as a muscular short-haired youth with a sweaty brow, chin set in determination, and eyes squinting from concentration. It seems to me that this outmoded image must be forgotten if the ridiculously unnecessary conflicts over hair can be solved. Whether the number one goal of a team is to win or is to produce individuals with character, hair style —short, long, or none at all—should not be a factor in determining team membership.

The other complaint is that the gym is closed on Saturday night and all day Sunday. It certainly can't cost too much more to keep it open an extra night. I asked the guard why it didn't remain open, and he said that it was just school policy to close everything up early Saturday. For those without cars, there is very little choice of activity during these times when not much studying is being done.

The changes necessary are not radical or difficult to make. If the policies need changing, can they be altered? If the personalities are the problem, is change impossible?

David Beahm

The Juniatian

ASSOCIATED COLLEGIATE PRESS ACP — COLLEGIATE DIGEST CD — I.P. FEATURES

Student Weekly at Juniata College

Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED NOV. 6, 1924

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891

ADELE ABOUTOK, managing editor
BARBARA CLAAR, associate editor
CYNTHIA CARLSON, news & feature editor
JANET MASON, copy & proof editor
TOM DIEHL, sports editor
RICH SMITH & WILL SCARLETT, circulation
WILLIAM DAVID, photography editor
JOEL SCHANTZ, business manager
RICHARD ABLARD, advertising manager
SUE BERMEL, layout editor
VALERIE DERRICKSON, art & coordinator

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Alice Horncane, Paul Keely, Donna Roppolt Steve Wesley, Chuck Bates, John Evrard, Joan Eisenhart, Peggy Haines, Dan Harriger, Barb Rice, Judy Craft, Chuck Knouse, John Aldeghi.

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000

Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVI, No. 16

March 13, 1970

THE FLAT EARTH SOCIETY is bigger than you think. Almost everyone belongs, because, as Euclid noted, a plane is infinite. Consider the advantages:

- Infinite air supply, capable of absorbing any amount of nitrogen and sulphur oxides, hydrocarbon residues, etc., with no ill effects.
- Rivers without end, sufficient to carry any amount of sewage and industrial waste to an infinite ocean, too large ever to be polluted.
- Unlimited forests and grasslands capable of enduring unlimited exploitation.
- An infinite frontier, always someplace new to go and leave behind noise, garbage,chemical and radioactive poisons, famine, war; an earth which can support an unlimited population.

The Flat Earth Society has much to offer, if you just accept its social illusions and reject the "optical illusion" above. It has strong institutional support: steel companies (offshore drilling, air and water pollution), aircraft companies (the SST, noise and air pollution), some organized religions (anti-birth control), automobile, lumber, real estate interests, etc., etc.

Conservationists are the spoil-sports. They see limits everywhere. They are: paranoid (distrust technological tampering with the environment), socialistic (reject the right of private owners, to plunder the earth), hippy (take to woods to escape "progress") and fanatic (wage militant fights against the destruction of the earth's ecology).

JOIN A ROUND EARTH SOCIETY

SUPPORT THE TEACH-IN

Throughout this spring, and especially on April 22, Round Earthers on hundreds of campuses will join in a NATIONAL ENVIRONMENTAL TEACH-IN to explore nature's law of limits. This can be a historic break-through in understanding all that is needed to have a whole and healthy earth.
The Sierra Club, a young, 77-year old Round Earth Society, hopes you will participate — that everyone on your campus will seize this opportunity to learn ways to protect the environment.
To help you, the Sierra Club has prepared an environmental activist's handbook — ECOTACTICS. It will arm you to take the initiative to combat Flat Earth thinking: to find out how to keep your life-support system intact. ECOTACTICS will soon be available at your local bookstore.

ENVIRONMENTAL ACTION IS SOMETHING YOU DO.

You can: Read ECOTACTICS. Help your campus conservation group (if there is one; if not form one) Make April 22 the launch date for an ecologically sound future. Contact environmental scientists and other concerned members of your faculty to develop informed and effective ecotactics. Find out what is planned for April 22 on neighboring campuses and offer to help them. Enlist their help.

Many Round Earth Societies have long been carrying on the fight against degradation of the environment. Alone they cannot shatter the illusions of Flat Earthlings. They need the energies of the New Generation which, with luck, will inherit the spaceship earth. So join and support one of the Round Earth groups. Or two of them. Or more.

Campus Representative
SIERRA CLUB, 1050 MILLS TOWER
San Francisco, Calif. 94104

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____ Zip _____

Please send
- ☐ Information on the Teach-In
- ☐ Information on the Sierra Club
- ☐ A list of Round Earth Societies

P.S. If you cannot find Ecotactics at your local bookstore, we will be glad to send you a copy.
- ☐ Please send me Ecotactics and bill me for the price ($1.25).

READING HOUR

Wednesday, March 18
Shoemaker Galleries 8:15 p.m.

Selections ..... A.A. Milne
Linda Markey

Birches ..... Robert Frost
Sandra Tompkins

Woodrow Wilson's Last Public Words
Anna Gary

The Dangling Conversation ..... Paul Simon
Janice Eyler

The Hollow Men ..... T. S. Eliot
Don Hockman

A Child's Christmas in Wales ..... Dylan Thomas
Susan Obus

Ligeia ..... Edgar Allen Poe
Helen Shoemaker

Selections ..... Lewis Carrol
John Tlush

Juniata will be represented at the Intercollegiate Reading Festival at Penn State May 2 by Jean Brindle, Steve Crowley, and Donna Lane. These students were selected during tryouts conducted March 4.

Juniata Grads Score Again

Last week they cut us a bit short, but this week we're back again anyway with th final installment in this series of Juniatian alumni news, a look at the activities of some members of the Class of 1967. As usual, the credit goes to Mrs. Nan Hunt of the JC Bulletin staff.

Among the names which the Class of '70 may perhaps remember from their freshman year is that of Leroy Mell Jr., an outstanding judo performer while he was here at JC. Leroy married Margaret Louise Bailey of Romney, West Virginia, last July 12. Both had been studying for their master's degrees at West Virginia University before Leroy was stationed with the U.S. Army at Fort Benning, Georgia.

After graduating from flight school in Miami in June 1968, Fred Prostko flew commercially for the Safari Flying Club as a charter pilot. He was subsequently located at an Army Medical Research Center in Landstuhl, Germany, following his induction as a biological research specialist in the service. Fred is planning to begin medical school when he leaves the service this year.

Robert McDowell now holds the title of placement officer for the University of Maryland. He and wife Ruth (Bartleson) '68 moved to Columbia, Md.

Mprnice McCormick married Michael Ravitch in Westminister, Md., in December 1968. Having received her master of science degree in public health from the University of North Carolina, Myrnice began working in New York City; she and her husband live in the Bronx.

Steve Warner and Ann Fisher were married in December 1968 also, and they live in Roselle Park, New Jersey. Steve is working for Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. in a special MBA program, after having received his MBA from Rutgers University in January 1969.

Susan Coe is now Mrs. M. H. Hutt and is residing in Meredith, New Hampshire.

Another Rutgers enthusiast is Peter Schaefer, who received his master's degree in physiology there in June 1969, and is now working for his Ph.D. in the same field. He and wife Nancy (Janusz) live in Piscataway, New Jersey.

Andrew James Hickes was one of a class of 21 to be awarded a bachelor of architecture degree on the Campus Mall of Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh last June. He spent two summers studying and working with architects in Germany and also did research for his senior thesis there during two months of his senior year. Andy has accepted a position with Paul Kossman, a Pittsburgh architect.

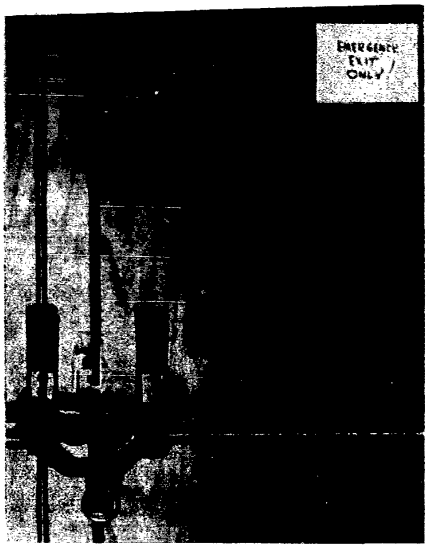
Linda Lou Miller became the bride of Siedfried Erich Boettjer in the Litiitz Moravian Church last summer. Her husband has attended Penn State and U. of Penn and is a German teacher at Marple-Square. After receiving her master's degree from Temple University, Linda was employed as a Spanish teacher at Great Valley High School in Malvern.

In and around Baltimore County Susan Fridy has kept busy as a fourth grade teacher, a part-time cocktail waitress, a student at Johns Hopkins, a hostess at a Baltimore restaurant, and a secretary for the W. B. Doner advertising agency. She was planning a move to the University of Maryland to be a graduate assistant in the department of speech and to acquire two master's degrees by February 1971. (She lives in Adelphia, Md.) . . . That one's hard to believe.

Ben Van Horn Jr. received his master of education degree in elementary ed. at Shippensburg last summer.

Daria Houseman and husband Daniel Wilshire '66 are located in Altoona. Last summer Dan picked up a master of education degree in mathematics from Indiana University of Pennsylvania.

Airman First Class William Roddey, an air operations specialist, is on duty at Woodbridge RAF Station, England. He was assigned to a unit of the U.S. Air Forces in Europe, having previously served at Andrews AFB, Md.



This is Juniata. . .

NYU Plans Cultural Studies in Erie

Professor Donald E. J. MacNamara, of John Jay College of Criminal Justice, has been appointed Resident Director for the City University of New York Summer Session in Dublin and Galway City, Ireland.

The six week summer program, during which students will earn six academic credits, will emphasize Irish literature, drama and cultural history — particularly the more contemporary Behan, Friel and Beckett. Students will live with Irish families, participate actively in theatrical productions and radio-television workshops, and travel extensively throughout thie island, visiting points of historical, cultural and scenic interest.

Professor Mac Namara, a specialist in police and correctional administration at John Jay College, has been selected in recognition of his long-time participation in Irish cultural activities and his close relationships with colleagues at Irish Universities, according to Dean Robert A. Picken, director of the Center for International Education, and Martin Murphy, assistant director for the City University of New York Program of Study Abroad.

Professor MacNamara has lectured extensively on the works of James Joyce, Brian Merriman, and Irish folk-writers and is an authority on Irish revolutionary movements. He is presently engaged in an extensive study of social pathology among the 'people of the road' (Irish tinkers or gypsies) and is preparing a volumn on Irish Society, a sociological analysis which will include discussions of the Irish 'wake', late marriage, emigration, and the problem of alcohol. A past president of the American Society of Criminology, his professional writings include books on sex behavior, the administration of criminal justice in Puerto Rico, and municipal police problems.

American students, in good standing at any accredited college or university, are eligible for the Dublin Summer Session. Applications and requests for information may be addressed to either Professor MacNamara, John Jay College of Criminal Justice, 315 Park Avenue South, NYC 10010 or Dean Picken, CUNY Program of Study Abroad, Queens College, Flushing, New York, 11367.

Dix Testifiers Won't Testify

(LNS news service)

According to a report published in The Fifth Estate, the U.S. army is out to put four young GIs away for 50 years for their part in last June's stockade rebellion at Fort Dix.

But in the first days of the court martial proceedings, the Army has been able to get only two young GIs—both of whom admit having been threatened with charges of their own if they refused to help the prosecution—to testify against Jeffrey Russell, first of the four accused to come to trial.

The Army's other 2 eyewitnesses, Pvt. Alan Farrell and Airman John Lisk, brought shocked and angry flushes to the faces of the Army's two ambitious young prosecutors when they refused to testify against Russell.

"I forgot what answer they told me to say," said Farrell in answer to questions about Russell's actions before the rebellion. He explained that the Army had offered him immunity if he testified against Russell.

Airman Lisk pleaded article 31 (the army's version of the 5th Amendment) when asked about his knowledge of Russell's part in the rebellion.

The Fort Dix stockade rebellion —which involved 150 angry GIs and led to a march of 10,000 protesters right on the fort itself, has embarrassed and angered the Army. The judges who will decide the verdict are almost all high officers personally picked by the Ft. Dix commanding officer, General Collins. They are the very people responsible for maintaining the Army's control over its men. The army's strategy seems to have been to make an example of four of the most articulate GIs in order to abort similar riots at other camps.

A Quiet Demonstration

by Dan Rosenburger

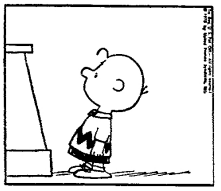
The American people must be brought to an awareness of the terror of the war in Vietnam. As concerned citizens we must constantly remind the U.S. government of the destruction they are inflicting on mankind. Groups of people from all walks of life from all across the nation plan to show their concern by actively participating in the "Fast for Peace" demonstration in front of the White House in Washington, D.C. Participants are urged to take part for at least one day from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. during the week of March 20.

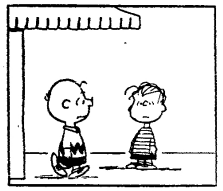
Those arriving for the demonstration should first go to the Washington City Church of the Brethren (337 North Carolina Ave., S.E., at 4th St.) which is one of the headquarters and lodging places for demonstrators. Participants planning to stay in one of the designated lodging places should bring sleeping bags, blankets or other equipment necessary for sleeping on the floor.

Unicorn

Dear Laura:

Your unicorn has been repaired. Please pick it up at your convenience. Tennessee Williams





Colloquy; a Segment

by chuck knouse

(one cat, eniment sexologist, says
two children per couple or we asfixiate. . .
Mr. Pinkett
(undercover rabbit) points a gen
-ocide at us and says ghetto blacks'd be wiped out if two per observed.
another panelist, despairing type,
leaves me
stark
by saying how all talk of reforms is worthless cuz in fifteen years the U.S.'l be a dictatorship anyway.)
so I say wow
and drop my jaw
when Clayton Foul says
we need
Industrial Military Complex to protect our freedom an' I think groovy,
I see myself as real free rotting in the army
and licking my sergeant's boots.

April 22—Day of Awareness

by Laura Hershberger

The United States is seriously threatened by the garbage of the world's richest economy. The once sweet air is befouled with carbon monoxide, hydrocarbons, sulfur dioxide, ash, asbestos particles, lead compounds, and numerous other irritating and poisonous substances. What we Americans are breathing right now is closer to filth than to air. We also see the garbage in the streams, taste the necessary purifying agents in the tap water, and swim with debris in our lakes. Oil is clogging the ocean shore line, detergent enzymes are nitrifying water reservoirs. The sparkling clear streams seen in numerous beer commercials on TV are fast disappearing.

The problem, then, that people face in the United States is a problem essentially caused by their abundance. Pollution exists because our technology has been developed so efficiently that it deals "successfully" with our population. It is for this reason that each American child is fifty times more of a burden on the environment than each Indian child. In 70 years of life the average American uses 26 million gallons of water, 21 thousand gallons of gasoline, 10 thousand pounds of meat, 28 thousand pounds of milk and cream. In producing these vast amounts to fulfill the wants of the people, industry and agriculture have neglected the needs of our environment.

The slight of our environment is receiving nationwide attention and on April 22 a national teach-in will be held to inform the country about the nature and significance of the environment picture in its broadest sense. All aspects of the environment will be examined. Not only will soil, water, and air conditions be analyzed, but cities with their noise, air pollution, disagreeable and unsanitary living conditions, inadequate recreational space, and inadequate transportation will be discussed in countless college campuses and high school assemblies.

Although Huntingdon can not be called a city, it contributes its share of noxious garbage and filth, uncomfortable living conditions, and inadequate transportation, to the national dilemma. And Huntingdon does include Juniata College whether we like to admit it or not. As a part of Huntingdon it is therefore our concern that such conditions exist here. On April 22—Earth Day—our concern will be put into action. Since classes will not be cancelled on that Wednesday it is hoped that all students will be captive mentally as well as as physically to the speakers' views. Films and slides will be shown in the ballroom of Ellis Hall for most of the day. Panel discussions concerning the state of the environment are planned for Wednesday. It is also hoped that professors will allow student speakers to invade their classrooms in the expectation of receiving really relevant information concerning our world. There will be other activities scheduled throughout the day—all in the hopes that out of this teach-in, a day of national yet individual learning and awareness, people will begin to get really scared. So scared that they will be moved to action and so help to eliminate some of our environmental garbage.

Where does one start? There are many control measures that may be voluntarily enforced on the individual level. Think twice before you toss that beer can out the car window. Write letters to your congressman concerning housing bills, recreation development, food and drug laws. After April 22 no one can dare plead ignorance—the facts will be available. Make sure your your home has proper sewage treatment. Refuse to buy detergent products such as Axion that promote water pollution.

The big step the really concerned citizen should take is to stop merely acting as an individual and move into a uniting effort with other citizens to present the case to lawmakers. Every environmental cause must be well publicized so that legislators know and understand the facts and feelings of the people. Proposals should call for positive action like new laws to prevent exploitation of our natural resources rather than fining companies after the damage is done. For our damage as it increases in severity and amount is fast becoming irreparable. Out of this teach-in should come the development of a national club whose concern is pollution. We need positive action. April 22 is merely the beginning of the movement. For it to be a success all citizens must be motivated to action that will directly impede the degradation of our enviroment. Too many of us have taken our natural resources for granted. In ten years, if there has been no atomic war and I'm still alive, I'd like to be able to see the sun and the stars. Would you?

Cleanliness Can Kill Phosphates Pollute

Our world dies a little every time you wash out a batch of underwear in the bathroom sink with one of the high phosphate detergents. These phosphates are the chief cause of our present water pollution problem, according to a recently completed five-year study of pollution in Lake Erie and Ontario by the International Joint Commission, the U.S.—Canadian water regulating agency. The phosphates speed up the growth of algae. The algae in turn rob the water of oxygen which fish and plants need to stay alive.

Only national awareness and immediate action by every concerned citizen can stem the tide of pollution until such time as detergent formulas are changed and improved sewage systems constructed.

Individual efforts must be directed to switching back to the old methods of laundering. . .using soap flakes or powders in combination with water-softening washing soda. According to laundry product testing by United States environmental engineers, soap products and washing soda each contain less than one percent phosphates, and when the two are used together they produce a good wash.

The major hang-up is locating the soap and soda. Although both are staples on supermarket laundry supply shelves, they're so vastly outnumbered by the high-phosphate products that it takes some searching and reading of package ingredients to find them. To further add to the confusion, those who have grown up in the detergent generation do not realize that a detergent is not a soap. So check labbels and buy only products that won't pollute our waters.

THE JUNIATIAN

Vol, XLVI, No. 17 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | April 10, 1970

Spanish, Italian Reformation . . .

Nieto Publishes Book on Valdes

Dr. Jose C. Nieto, assistant professor and chairman of the Department of Religion at Juniata College, is the author of "Juan de Valdes and the Origins of the Spanish and Italian Reformation," just published by Editions Droz in Geneva, Switzerland.

The 400-page illustrated volume is the first major English-language work on Valdes and the first in any language to utilize unpublished records of the Spanish Inquisition as background on the 16th Century writer. Dr. Nieto explores the cultural and religious background of that period to clarify the causes that kindled the Spanish Reformation independently of the Lutheran movement. He offers a new interpretation that challenges earlier analyses of the Reformation.

Valdes, a Spanish humanist and intellectual, started the Reformation both in Spain and Italy. He had published his first theological work in 1529, but was forced to leave Spain in fear of the Inquisition. He went to Italy and remained there for the rest of his life. Valdes held views similar in character to those that led to the Protestant Reformation, but never identified himself with that movement although he was charged with heresy by the Roman Catholic Church.

Valdes was also the first scholar to show interest in the philological and linguistic origins of the Spanish (Castilian) language. His major work on the subject, "Dialogue on the Language," was published in 1556.

Dr. Nieto, who has been a member of the Juniata College faculty since 1967, performed most of the research on his book while a graduate student at Princeton Theological Seminary. He describes his work as "an attempt to explore the foundations of the Reformation movement in Spain and Italy on both a popular and an intellectual level, and to shed new light on the theological and historical problems involved."

Born in El Ferrol, Spain, Dr. Nieto served in the Spanish Navy from 1949 to 1951. He attended the Colegio Rapariz and Institute de Esenanza Media in El Ferrol, and earned the equivalent of a bachelor's degree from the University of Santiago de Compostela in 1949. He came to the U.S. in 1951 and became a naturalized American citizen in 1968.

His studies in theology began at the United Evangelical Seminary in Madrid. He later studied at the Presbyterian College in Belfast, Ireland. Dr. Nieto received his Th.M. degree in 1962 and his doctorate in theology in 1967, both magna cum laude, from Princeton Theological Seminary.

The author is at present performing research for another major work, "John of the Cross and Spanish Mysticism." He will conduct much of his research in libraries in France and Spain this summer, while visiting his homeland.

He is scheduled to read a paper on "The Mystic as a Submissive Rebel" on April 25 at the University of Iowa during the 108th Consecutive Meeting of the American Society of Church History. The theme, "Religion, Rebellion and Revolution," will deal with reform and rebellion in the Continental Reformation. Another of Dr. Nieto's papers "Parapsychology and Christ: A Study into John of the Cross' Mystical Phenomena," will be read at the forthcoming American Academy of Religion meeting in New York.

The final revision of Dr. Nieto's newly published work was financed by a grant from the Lindback Foundation. His original manuscript has been placed in the L. A. Beeghly Library at Juniata College. The work on Valdes will soon be available at bookstores around the world.

Air Pollution Anyone?

Take a deep deadly breath.

Earth Day . . .

What's Going On and When

What's Happening:
Earth Day—April 22; Juniata College's Teach-In on the Environment.

Wednesday Morning:
Members from a speakers' bureau consisting of students having a knowledge of pollution will be available to speak to classes upon the teachers' requests.

Wednesday Afternoon:
1-5 p.m. Ellis Hall Ballroom. Slides and movies dealing with pollution and the environment will be shown. Come when you want, stay as long as you want. Photographs, taken by Huntingdon area students, of pollution in and around Huntingdon will be on display.

Wednesday Evening:
7:30 Ellis Hall Ballroom. Talks and panel discussion on pollution.

Clayton Montgomery, Penelec representative, president of the Saxton Nuclear Experimental Corp., will give a talk entitled "The Values of Nuclear Power."

Robert E. Steger, Penelec representative, superintendent for the Pennsylvania Electric Co.'s System Production Department at Johnstown, will speak on "Penelec and the Environment."

Paul W. Stewart, Penelec representative, superintendent of local Penelec generating stations— Warrior Ridge Dam and Raystown Dam and coalfired plants at Williamsburg and Saxton— will also be present to answes questions.

Composing the panel on pollution will be:

Tesry Fabian, water pollution control expert from Lewistown.

Dan Rupp, member of the U.S. Soil Conservation Service.

Dr. Robert Fisher, JC professor of Ecology.

Dr. Ronald Cherry, JC professor of

Continued on page 4

The World and National Scene

College students live as migrants

Fourteen college students spent last summer in migrant camps near Independence, Oregon at the request of the state's Valley Migrant League (VML), to learn first hand the life of fruit and vegetable pickers. The groups of students, in four separate camps, represented the VML in trying to develop good relations between the League, the farmers and the migrants and to let the migrants know about League services.

The volunteers lived as the migrants, in barren, dusty camps; got the same headaches and backaches from picking strawberries and beans, and received the same wages.

Most of the volunteers were deeply affected by the summer's experience. Sharing the plight of a minority people had been an education.

The students could never be real migrants; they could always quit. They were painfully aware that while they could sympathize with the workers, they could never fully experience their plight.

Shortage of phytoplankton

A shortage of a tiny single-celled marine plant called phytoplankton led to the extinction of one-fifth of all animals on earth, including some of the dinosaurs, in the late Paleozoic and early Mesozoic eras. We may be heading for another shortage of phytoplankton, says Dr. Helen Tappan Loeblich, a UCLA geologist.

Editorial . . .

Jail or Student Center

The phone rings and an ominous voice announces a bomb threat; a student rushes to the desk and announces a fire; or another emergency comes up that calls for Ellis Hall to be evacuated. The alarm is sounded and the students head down the nearest fire escape.

Someday such an emergency may happen, and woe to those students who choose the wrong exits: those that are chained across the crash bars. Granted, placing chains on exits decreases the already slight possibility of Ellis Hall being ransacked, but is it worth a student's life? Why not give the students a fighting chance and put the chains around their legs? At least they'd realize their impediment before it was too late.

Contrary to popular belief, Ellis Hall is not a Student Center, but a College Center. It's not here to accomodate the students, but for the students to accomodate it. For instance, the rooms set aside for the Juniatian and the Alfarata are in a cubicle by themselves. But at 8 p.m. the cubicle is locked and the only exit is by means of a window. This may make good security, but it doesn't make good common sense.

Jail or Student Center? Well, the answer is — neither. The way the building is kept under lock and key so that the students may not make use of it seems to depict a jail. But somehow the students do gain entrance, and it is then considered a Student Center. Let's open those doors and allow the students in. Let's return Ellis Hall to the students.

Tricky Dick or Dick the Trick?

by Dick Gregory

After a little more than a year in office, Richard M. Nixon's frequently used nickname, "Tricky Dick," has taken on a new meaning. It becomes more and more obvious each day that Nixon was not so much perpetrator as heir apparent of the trick. Nothing else could explain the elevation to the highest office in the land of a man whose major qualification was persistence: either the guts or the gall to lose a national election, then a local election, and come back again to try — and win — on the national level.

Of course a lot happened in America between the time of Nixon's national defeat and his subsequent victory. The Black Attitude changed for one thing, an Attitude shared by blacks and radical young whites. By the time the 1968 national election rolled around, it was no longer safe for the white majority to be open bigots or racists. Those who shared the new Black Attitude just might have a rather violent reaction to such an expression.

So the white majority conceived the trick. They decided to hide their biogotry under a new name — the less offensive and more ambiguous sounding name "conservative." The natural candidate to embody the conservative image was Richard Nixon. And each time I see Nixon on TV, I get the impression that he still doesn't believe he's the President.

It seemed like a good trick and, of course, it produced a victory. But one element of the trick escaped the attention of the white majority. Conservatism is expensive. It doesn't cost anything to be a bigot. It takes some money to be a conservative. The average white person in America doesn't have enough money to survive a conservative, right wing Administration. And the expensive results of the conservative trick are placing a burden upon the same white folks who created and supported it. Richard Nixon will be a one-term President, and black folks will have nothing to do with it. The same white folks who voted Nixon into office will end up voting him out of office.

When the nation becomes worried about a "tight money" situation, who do you think is doing the worrying? Black folks have always lived with a tight money situation! Black folks have always been poor and are used to tightening their belts. So when the economy is disrupted, when the general alarm is sounded that "things are bad in America," it is a white folks' worry. Traditionally there is nobody who is not doing bad in America but white folks.

Pan American Airlines announced recently the layoff of some 200 pilots. How many of those pilots do you think were black? When Chrysler laid off 40,000 white collar workers not long ago, white folks began to sense the terrible insecurity black assembly line workers have always known and lived with. Boeing Aircraft, with a work force of 101,000, has laid off 30,000 and are planning a further layoff of 10,000. And the voices of protest and disenchantment that are heard the loudest are the executive white (collar and otherwise) workers.

It is the same with government cutbacks in construction contracts. The Nixon administration cut back on highway construction. Again employment layoffs resulting from that cutback will affect more white folks than black folks. Have you ever seen a blackcat on a highway job doing anything but standing by the white line waving one of those red flags?

Since I travel hundreds of miles each day, I hear people on airplanes complaining about tight money, about high interest rates, and how hard it is to get bank loans. If two men are sitting on an airplane complaining about not being able to get a $300,000 loan, do you suppose either one of them is black? If inability to get a bank loan is an indication of a new tight money situation, black folks couldn't possibly appreciate the fact that things have changed. We've never been able to get loans, even to pay twice as much for those houses in all-white neighborhoods.

The Nixon administration vetoed the educational bill. When money is shut off from aiding schools, who does that primarily affect? Black folks have always had a hard time getting a decent education, and a harder time being admitted to institutions of higher education. A veto of educational assistance is a kick in the teeth of white folks, and represents new problems only for them. It may mean that black students planning to enter college will have a hard time, but that is not a new situation for black folks.

So being a conservative is expensive, and more and more white folks are beginning to realize it. Conservatism may be a sweeter sounding word than bigotry, just as white backlash sounds better than racism. Conservatism and white backlash seem to go hand in hand. But the way things are shaping up economically in this country under the Nixon administration, the white backlash may soon be cracking elsewhere than on the backs of black folks.

Letters to the Editor

First Amendment

To the editor:

There was — a little more than a decade ago — what thoughtful adults lamented as the "silent generation". This referred especially to the young people who hesitated to discuss or dissent and for whom the name McCarthy meant an inquisitorial power that tended to chill free expression. Although Senator Joseph McCarthy is gone, his spirit unfortunately lingrs on. There remains one institution particularly that has kept alive this threat to the First Amendment.

I refer to the House Committee on Un-American Activities. In its more than 25 years of being accuser, judge and jury, it has held 175 hearings with more than 3000 witnesses called before it, and has spread its chilling effect in dozens of American cities.

You may not have heard too much about this Committee in the last five years. This might well be because, at long last, a persistent legal challenge was begun against them, and this challenge has made important gains in the courts and won support from thousands of scientists and other concerned citizens. Dr. Jeremiah Stamler — a noted heart researcher — asked the courts, in effect, to bring the Un-American Committee itself to trial, to answer his charges that they violate the Constitution. During the 5 years since he filed his suit, not only has the Un-American Committee reduced its public hearings drastically, but they have also felt constrained to change their name, in hopes — perhaps — of thereby changing their image.

While this Committee is less visible than before, it remains ready and able — with little encouragement — to continue its deplorable past practices.

We have been helping to support Dr. Stamler's legal effort in behalf of the First Amendment. This Amendment, guarding freedom of speech for us all, is deeply important to you young people. You can help in its defense by lending some aid to Dr. Stamler's fight.

It seems that each generation must continue to work for the preservation of human rights. In this effort of Dr. Stamllr, we have the opportunity to do it together. I look worward to your cooperation.

Paul Dudley White M.D., Chrm.
Jeremiah Stamler, M.D. Legal Aid Fund

> "The end of the human race will be that it will eventually die of civilization."
>
> Ralph Waldo Emerson

Gregory Again

The presence of Dick Gregory on Juniata's campus served to extend, at least for me, the Ghost of Colloquy. Mr. Gregory said many things but never failed to emphasize "Do you understand the issue?" when he finished his rhetoric.

That guest editorial in March 13's Juniatian struck a powerful chord against such a technique. People, including myself, laughed at the trivia, but there was so much trivia that I think quite a few people DID miss Mr. Gregory's main points in spite of his questioning, nor did anyone speak up to say he didn't get the issue. (If I've generalized here, my apologies to those who did see the stones at the bottom of the mud puddle.) Could an explanation for this failure lie in what Joan Eisenhart mentions lightly as our educational training? This implies a deliberately unintentionally(?) aimed method of teaching-indoctrinating us with small facts and numbers while we lose sight of the important basic concepts. I think so, especially in the sciences — sorry Division III.

Mr. Gregory deftly picked apart the hypocrisies of our "white racist institutions" and flagrantly MISQUOTED the Declaration of Independence as a legitimate source for eradicating(?) or reforming(?) them to make an emotional point. The actual statement in the Declaration is this: ". . . that whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these Ends, (viz. that all Men are created equal and the inalienable Rights of Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness, not economic prosperity, folks), it is the Right of the People to alter or abolish it. I shall continue the quote: "and the institute New Government, having its Foundations on such Principles. . ." Mr. Gregory distinctly said "destroy" not "alter or abolish" which in the dictionary are quite different in meaning. Also, Mr. Gregory did not explicitly say whether he wants reform or destruction. If he wants destruction, what's the replacement going to be?

In this respect, the Gost of Colloquy haunted the talk. A lot of facts were thrown around, exaggerated and misconstrued but no concrete or abstract answers came out of it all. If we are "the most committed youth yet." what are we committed to, tearing down the old system? If so, what are we to replace it with? No country is ready for anarchy. I have yet to hear someone say what the new system would be once the old is dissolved. When someone comes up with a feasible solution maybe then I'll step out of my "Dynamic Apathy" and so will a lot of other people.

To Mr. Gregory and others: "there are no more tricks, baby" so stop trying to fool us because you don't have any answers either.

Name Withheld by Request

Humanistic Psych

To the editor:

I would like to use your column call the student body's attention to a special course being offered during the latter part of the Summer Session. I am referring to the course listed as Educ. 202 in the new summer bulletin.

You can read the course description in the new bulletin so I won't repeat it here but I do want to emphasize the place such a course should have in our curriculum. As the title states the course will deal with the humanistic, or what has come to be known as third force, psychological approach to understanding man's behavior. This is an approach that appears to be missing in our current psychology program here at Juniata: one that every student should have an opportunity to study and explore.

The humanistic approach attempts to explain man's behavior from a subjective, individualistic position as compared to the objective, mechanistic point of view emphasized in the current curriculum. In face of today's problem and youth's concern I feel such an approach is quite relevant. The humanistic psychologist views man positively and in terms of infinite possibilities rather than as a victim of his unconscious drive or as a puppet of his environment. They see man as central to determining his own destiny. Again, quite relevant in today's world.

The course is offered through the Education Department for the Psychology Department did not see fit to include it in its list of courses for majors. Perhaps through your request it can be accepted as a collateral in your program. I hope that a number of you will join with me in experimenting with this approach. I am willing to structure the course in any way the persons enrolled wish. It can be in form of a seminar, independent study, experimentation or a combination of all three.

If there are any questions please feel free to come and see me.

Howard Crouch
Dept. of Education

Biafran Relief

To the editor:

Thank you sincerely for placing our advertisement in your publication of March, 1970 and the subsequent forwarding of it to us.

Would you please attempt to form a chapter of SBR (Students For Biafran Relief) on your campus or get someone to start one. We now have about 125 chapters and would be very appreciative if you were to join this league in their battle against starvation.

The chapter would have the responsibility of collecting funds on the Juniata College campus and in the surrounding community of Huntingdon.

Please help us help others to help themselves. Your expedient response to this inquiry is entreated.

Program Coordinator
Joseph M. Daly

Students Stage Allen Comedy

First Time in Huntingdon!

"Don't Drink the Water," a hilarious comedy by Woody Allen, popular comedian who has a pet flea on a leash, is currently being staged by Juniata's special topics course of Theatre and Performing Arts. Mike Godfrey, Kathy Barnett, Adele Taylor and Judy Rosen, are the patient, hard working producers, directors and all those other theatrical termers of this project. Their diligent cast has been rehearsing every night to help make this production one of Juniata's finest. Get your tickets early for the May 1 or 2 showing of "Don't Drink the Water."

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College
Huntingdon, Pa.

ASSOCIATED COLLEGIATE PRESS — ACP — COLLEGIATE PRESS SERVICE — I.P.

FOUNDED NOV. 6, 1924

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891

ADELE ABOUTOK, managing editor
BARBARA CLAAR, associate editor
CYNTHIA CARLSON, news & feature editor
JANET MASON, copy & proof editor
TOM DIEHL, sports editor
RICH SMITH & WILL SCARLETT, circulation

WILLIAM DAVID, photography editor
JOEL SCHANTZ, business manager
RICHARD ABLARD, advertising manager
SUE BERNEL, layout editor
VALERIE DERRICKSON, art & coordinator

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Alice Herncane, Paul Keely, Donna Roppelt, Steve Wesley, Chuck Bates, John Evrard, Joan Eisenhart, Dan Harriger, Judy Craft, John Aldeghi, Dan Deal, Laura Hershberger.

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000 — Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol, XLVI, No. 17 — April 10, 1970

APRIL 22.
EARTH DAY.

A disease has infected our country.
it has brought smog to Yosemite, dumped garbage in the Hudson,
sprayed, DDT in our food,
and left our cities in decay.
Its carrier is man.

The weak are already dying. Trees by the Pacific. Fish in our streams and lakes. Birds and crops and sheep. And people.

On April 22 we start to reclaim the environment we have wrecked.

April 22 is the Environmental Teach-In, a day of environmental action.

Hundreds of communities and campuses across the country are already committed.
It is a phenomenon that grows as you read this.

Earth Day is a commitment to make life better, not just bigger and faster; To provide real rather than rhetorical solutions.

It is a day to re-examine the ethic of individual progress at mankind's expense.

It is a day to challenge the corporate and governmental leaders who promise change, but who short change the necessary programs.

It is a day for looking beyond tomorrow. April 22 seeks a future worth living.

April 22 seeks a future.

We are working seven days a week to help communities plan for April 22. We have come from Stanford, Harvard, Bucknell, Iowa, Missouri, New Mexico, Michigan and other campuses.

We are a non-profit, tax exempt, educational organization. Our job is to help groups and individuals to organize environmental programs to educate their communities.

Earth Day is being planned and organized at the local level. In each community people are deciding for themselves the issues upon which to focus, and the activities which are most appropriate.

We can help, but the initiative must come from each community. We have heard from hundreds of campuses and local communities in all fifty states. Dozens of conservation groups have offered to help. So have the scores of new-breed environmental organizations that are springing up every day.

National Staff: Denis Hayes, Coordinator; Linda Billings, Stephen Cotton, Andrew Garling, Bryce Hamilton, Sam Love, Barbara Reid, Arturo Sandoval, Philip Taubman.

A national day of environmental education was first proposed by Senator Gaylord Nelson. Later he and Congressman Paul McCloskey suggested April 22. The coordination has been passed on to us, and the idea now has a momentum of its own.

All this takes money. Money to pay our rent, our phones, our mailings, brochures, staff, advertisements.

No list of famous names accompanies this ad to support our plea, though many offered without our asking.

Big names don't save the environment. People do.

Help make April 22 burgeon.

For you. For us. For our children.

The Environmental Teach-In, Inc.
Room 200
Washington, D.C. 20036

I enclose $10, $20, $50,_____dollars
(tax deductible)

How can I help my community?

Name _____

Address _____

Racketeers Tour Southern College Courts in March

The Juniata College tennis team embarked on its second annual preseason tour of the upper South on March 21, according to Dr. Ernest H. Post, Jr. who coaches the team.

In lieu of taking a week's spring vacation, the 19 Juniata netmen planned matches against Lynchburg and Emery and Henry Colleges in Virginia, Belmont Abbey and Pfeiffer Colleges in North Carolina, and East Tennessee State University.

The 1970 Juniata tennis season opened April 11 at Indiana Matches at Susquehanna and Dickinson follow April 13 and 15, respectively. Juniata's first home encounter will be April 18 against Elizabethtown College.

Other matches scheduled are as follows: April 23, Delaware Valley (home); April 25, Western Maryland (away); April 29, Lycoming (home); April 30, Gettysburg (home); May 4, Bucknell (away); May 6, Albright (away); May 8-9, Middle Atlantic Conference tournament at Muhlenberg. All but the Indiana match will be MAC competition.

Track Men Lose Opener To Tough Lock Haven State

Juniata College met Lock Haven State at Lock Haven on April 6, for the first meet of Juniata's track season. Bad weather and poor timing of vacations left the Indians of Juniata unprepared as they bowed 109.5 to 45.5 on the cold, gusty day. Juniata however, had four first place winners and numerous seconds and thirds. The first place winners were: Dave Sparks, 100 yard dash; Craig Nishyama, javelin: John Loose, triple jump; and Joe Coradetti, long jump. The track coaches Chick Bunton and assistant Gary Sheppard were fairly pleased with the team's performance and are looking forward to a good season.

Deal Evaluates Washington Seminster

Dan Deal participated in the Washington Semester Program at American University, Washington, D.C., last semester. Dan was selected to represent Juniata in the nationwide program. In addition to the six-credit seminar program, Dan had a three-credit research paper and two other courses at the University. Much of Mr. Deal's time was also spent in the volunteer service of Senator Richard S. Schweiker of Pennsylvania.

The seminars consisted of various governmental people meeting with the students and discussing varied topics. According to the Juniata student, one of the most rewarding seminars was with Mrs. Shirley Chisholm, Congresswoman from Bedford-Stuyvesant. She stated that, "Tradition is not the answer to many situations and problems that arise today," but she added that working within the strucure of government is the answer for meaningful and successful change. Mrs. Chishom concluded by saying, "If the purpose of government is to behave yourself and get elected, then I don't want it. Life is only meaningful with challenges and commitments."

Another impressive seminar, according to Dan, was the discussion of the role of a Supreme Court Justice, with Associate Justice William O. Douglas. Justice Douglas explained that there is a search for consensus, and that is the basic reason for one Justice writing the view of the majority or minority. The Justice clarified his statement by remarking that "my own salvation is that I won't lean on anyone else"—he makes his own decisions and adheres to them.

The remaining fifty seminars included such diverse people as Robert Pierpont, CBS News White House Correspondent, Senator Harold Hughes of Iowa, Herb Klein, White House Director of Communications, and NASA Director Thomas Paine. As the Juniata junior explained, "The chief advantage of the seminar program was that a viable knowledge was gained through direct contact with the principal political forces which affect our society."

In addition to the seminar program itself, Dan remarked, "One of the most interesting and rewarding experiences of last semester was working for Senator Richard Schweiker. My duties were quite varied, and I rarely knew exactly what I would be doing after arriving on Capital Hill. One Friday afternoon, in particular, seems to dominate my memory. It was during the height of the Haynesworth confirmation controversy. After arriving at the New Senate Office Building, I learned that the members of the Senator's staff were to be called into the inner office. Senator Schweiker was announcing his opposition to the confirmation of Dr. Haynesworth, and reporters were there from the Washington Post, N.Y. Times, Los Angeles Times and other papers. It was an impressive sight. At a later time, I would be reflecting upon Senator Schweiker's ability to be personable and patient as he reclined in a rocking chair and responded to my numerous questions. That afternoon, though, one could perceive only the vitality and excitement of a politician in the arena of American political life."

Also, Dan revealed that another vital part of last semester's learning experience was his participation in both the October and November Moratoriums. As he explains, "A tremendous feeling of togetherness and purposefulness was engendered which is difficult to describe—it was sort of a mass catharsis."

Regarding his caliber at the University, Dan explained that the subject material and caliber of the professors was quite similar to Juniata, with the main difference in the students. "The environment seemed less artificial and put-on perhaps because the students were not so homogeneous or localized in their span of attention. It was an interesting change from the prevalent attitude of unquestioning self-righteousness which seems to characterized some segments of Juniata's population.

In summarizing the semester, Dan concluded, "It was a synthesis of urban, national, and international life and a learning experience characterized by direct experience and confrontation with the major forces shaping our society." The Washington Semester Program and other similar programs should be encouraged at Juniata, according to Dan, because the experiences and learning situations become indelibly etched upon the minds of the participants and supplement the traditional education one receives.

Brethren Question Selective Service

The Church of the Brethren, one of the country's historic peace churches, has indicated it will take a serious look at its ties with the Selective Service System. As an approved civilian work agency since 1951, the denomination has accepted approximately 100 conscientious objectors a year in alternative service work in the United States and overseas.

Eight war resisters approached the denomination's General Board requesting it to receive their draft cards and forward them to the Justice Department. "We can no longer accept the legality of the Selective Service System over the morality of our consciences," the eight men who requested that their draft cards be returned to the U.S. Justice Department, declared in a prepared statement. They said hey could and would have sent the draft materials to Washington on heir own; what they sought in he overturn to the General Board was "the active and heartfelt support of our church."

One of the resisters, Ervin Huston of Nampa, Idaho, a student at Bethany Theological Seminary, Oak Brook, Ill., previously had been in alternative service in Vietnam. He chided the church for not having made the stand of noncooperation better known some years ago, commenting, "I first heard of draft resistance in a USO in Vietnam."

Mr. Huston, 25, and four others in the group, Jerry R. Eller, 20, of Wichita, Kan., a student at Manchester College in Indiana; John F. Kramer, 18, of Elgin, Ill.; Gary E. Wilson, 19, of La Verne, Calif., a former Elgin resident working with the American Friends Service committee in Chicago; and John P. Zinn, 21, of Huston, Texas, formerly in alternative service in Chicago, turned over draft registration cards. Three others, David B. Eller, 25, of Long Beach, Calif., a student at Bethany Seminary; Alan G. Jennings, 24, also of Long Beach, an alternative service worker in a community program in Chicago; and Edward L. Poling, 22, of Carlisle, Pa., a Bethany Seminary student, submitted related Selective Service materials.

The presence of the young men, like the concern they carried, signals the serious questioning of Selective Service and war which many church youth and others are engaging in, said the Rev Wilbur E. Mullen, the denomination's draft counselor. Dr. Dale W. Brown, a professor at Bethany Theological Seminary, reminded the General Board that more than the support of the conscience of radical young people was at stake. "The question," said Dr. Brown, "is whether we of the church are willing to become more radical, to lay our bodies on the line in a witness for peace."

Some of the General Board members stated that they did not agree personally with the course of action of the eight, they felt the stand was consistent with the Anabaptist-Brethren heritage which puts the dictates of God and of conscience above the dictates of the state. The Rev. Paul H. Fike of Weyers Cave, Va., commented, "I know of folks who will trim their giving to the church more closely because of our stand. I see our action sending us deeper but not broader. Yet if I were not to support these men I would need to add a paragraph of confession to my prayers."

Among those opposed to the acceptance of the draft materials, part of the feeling was that more extended reflection was needed to arrive at a decision. Stated one board member who voted against the action, Robert M. Keim, an attorney from Somerset, Pa., "We as a church are an imperfect people who I think sometimes expect a perfect government."

At the time the eight young men appeared, the General Board was considering a proposal calling for the denominational assembly in June to revise the church's policy statement on war, moving away from recommending the alternative service position to men facing the draft to giving equal status to alternative service and noncooperation. The proposal as passed by the Board in effect would give greater place to individual conscience, including to persons who choose military service as well as to those who take the alternative service or resistance stands.

CIEE Makes Announcement International Employment

American college and university students will be able to work in Great Britain, Ireland, Australia or New Zealand during the summer of 1970 as participants in a new International Student Employment service (ISE). The announcement was made today by the sponsor, the Council on International Educational Exchange, a non-profit organization headquartered in New York City.

This program, arranged with the approval of the governments of the participating countries, enables students of all economic backgrounds to experience life in another country first-hand—by living, working and traveling among its people.

Through ISE, qualified students obtain working papers and are given assistance in finding their own jobs in the host country. Most of the jobs that the students find are unskilled—often in stores, hotels, resorts or offices—and the wages are generally enough to cover living expenses and some travel as well.

Upon arrival in the host country, students attend an orientation and consultation session at the offices of the co-sponsoring organization in that country. At this session the students are provided with general information about the country and specific information about employment opportunities. During the students' stay, the staff of the co-sponsoring organization is available to help with any problems or questions.

The $25 fee for the International Student Employment service includes the orientation sessions, overnight accommodation on arrival in the host country, and administrative expenses. Information about ISE is available on request from the Council on International Educational Exchange, Department ISE, 777 United Nations Plaza, New York, New York 10017.

College to Serve as Focus for Fast

The Vietnam Moratorium Committee has announced endorsements of a Peace Fast on April 13-15 which will be largely focused on college and university campuses. The endorsements include more than 212 student body presidents and campus newspaper editors along with prominent Americans, such as Julia Bond, Ramsey Clark, Jane Fonda, Rabbi Abraham J. Heschel, Senator Harold Hughes, Mayor John Lindsay, and Senator Eugene McCarthy.

David Hawk, a co-coordinator of the Vietnam Moratorium Committee, explained the purpose of the Fast: "We will fast for peace during April 13-15 for two reasons. The first is to demonstrate our moral opposition to the continuing expanding war. The second reason is directly related to the April 15th Tax Payer Rallies. Because the government spends $201 million a day on war and the weapons of war, we are asking people not to eat for three days and to send the money saved while not eating to aid the victims of the war. Proceeds from the Peace Fast Fund will go to the American Friends Service Committee Vietnam Relief Program, The National Welfare Rights Organization, and the United Farm Workers of America. The Fast represents our commitment to improve the quality of our common life and to alleviate human suffering." Mr. Hawk indicated that the Fast will focus on campuses and among groups of religious people. He explained that many students were making arrangements with university food services to turn over money saved by not eating to the Moratorium for distribution to the Vietnam relief agency and poverty groups. He also mentioned that fasting students in some places intended to come to dining halls at meal times to dramatize the Fast.

Iron Butterfly Lands April—23

Joined by Hydraulic Peach

The Iron Butterfly, one of the most recent contemporary music groups to achieve nationwide fame in a short time, will appear in concert at the Farm Show Arena, Harrisburg, Thursday, April 23, at 8 p.m. sponsored by Hershey Sports Arena.

What is the Iron Butterfly sound? Perhaps the best way to describe it is to examine the group's name: Iron, symbolic of something "heavy," as in sound; Butterfly, light, appealing and versatile, an object that can be used freely in the imagination.

The unique and original sound of Iron Butterfly is made possible by all four members, Doug Ingle, Ron Bushy, Lee Dorman, and Erik Keith Brann. Each contributes ideas and arrangements to every song song that is recorded. Doug Ingle, the leader, put it: "We didn't copy anyone, nor were we influenced by anyone. We had an idea about a sound and how it should be expressed."

Supporting the Iron Butterfly will be the Hydraulic Peach, a group that has enjoyed considerable success in the Central Pennsylvania area.

What's Going On..

Continued from page 1

Economics.

April 25: Huntingdon Clean-up Day—sponsored by the high school Earth Day Committee; you can aid in doing something constructive about local pollution. Details will be announced later.

These details are tentative and are subject to change. Revisions will be announced later.

Wanted, responsible party to take over low monthly payments on a spinet piano. Can be seen locally. Write Credit Manager P.O. Box 35, Cortland, Ohio.

Mark's Corner News
4th & Allegheny St.
OPEN 24 HOURS
Huntingdon Knives
Winchester Ammo
Hand Warmers
Gloves & Thermos
plus 10,000 Items
643-9932

"The Last" JUNIATIAN

Vol. XLVI, No. 18 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | April 17, 1970

Authoritarian Rule of Athletes' Life

"Before you leave, you will be close shaven. That means no moustaches, no beards. Your hair will be cut, off the shirt collar and not below the eyes. All sideburns will be no longer than the bottom of the ear."

Sounds like the orders of a Drill Sargeant to new recruits, but instead it's the word given to the athletes of Juniata College before they compete in their first game. Where do these regulations come from, or more properly who do these regulations come frrom? Are they necessary? Do they hinder an athlete's performance? Do other colleges interfere with their athletes grooming habits? These are some of the questions to be discussed in this and following series of articles in next few issues.

First I would like to make it known that the ideas and criticisms expressed in this article are purely my own, ones of a student and athlete of Juniata College. Any questions, comments, or rebuttals are to be addressed to Dan Harriger, Box 721.

The idea for such an article came about after a recent faculty meeting. One professor asked who established the dress (grooming) regulations for the athletes. He was allegedly told by the administration that, to their knowledge, no regulations existed, or, if they did they were athlete-chosen. This bit of information is contrary to what I've been told as an athlete. The football team was told that the coaches had received notice from the administration that all athletes were to be close shaven; oh yes, and coaches too. The baseball teams, the track squad, and the other athletic teams were all informed of similiar regulations. To dispute the existence of these regulations is nonsense. They exist and were formed by some person or persons other than athletes. So, to the administration, I repeat, "Where do these regulations originate?"

I have been taught here at Juniata that the mind should not simply accept but question everything it is told. Now I question "Are those regs necessary?" Do they hinder an athletes performance or in any way detract from his abilities? Granted, beards and football helmet chin straps do not make a good combination for comfort, and neither do beards and wrestlers' backs. But, why do these athletes have to be bare-faced in the off-season. For a school that supposedly doesn't give athletic scholarships it surely imposes a lot of restrictions upon their volunteer players. Perhaps some grooming codes should be followed during season for safety or courtesy sake, but why the off-season?

How do the athletes feel about the dress regulations? How does the faculty and administration feel about dress codes? And what do other colleges do about their athletes? These questions are yet to be answered. The next issue of the Juniatian will contain the viewpoints and feelings of these people. Military authoritarian rule may not be to the liking of college students.

Do You Care?

by joan eisenhart

Oh come now! there must be something more to your life than what's playing at the Kalos Clifton. Start thinking about all the unsolved and unanswered problems that the students hear of around here. Do you really know why Jack Williamson was fired from the food service, or what happened in the case with Dr. Meahl. If you can't bring yourself to care about these things what about the rules and regulations, Admission and Curriculum policies concerning which our knowledge is as limited as our power? What ever happened to the Student majority vote against comps? Was the John Birch Society really allowed to hold a meeting in Oller Hall? How can any religion based on love for all humanity condone war and racism? It happens everywhere, even at Juniata, and we are a part of all of it. When you graduate, and get married, and have kids, and live in the suburbs, and pay taxes, remember that 70% of the money goes for defense. At least defense is what they called it when the United States went into Vietnam.

You could even make an issue out of May Day if you wanted to. Why maintain an obsolete and meaningless tradition? If we must celebrate spring, why not something more in keeping with the times, like a rock festival on Oller lawn?

And if you disagree with all this, defend yourself in writing. Anything not profane or subject to liable will be printed. Be clever!

JC Needs Students

We recently had the (mixed) pleasure of being present at a Toterap between one of our more prominent (powerful?) administrators and a student recently elected to the Student Government. The dialogue was long, slow, quiet in the mold of two taciturn New England senior citizens; the topic, of course, was Juniata, though you'd never have known that if you came in late. In the 45 minutes we were present, they spoke of this institution as though there was not one student or faculty member here.

Juniata is an institution, and as such it has all the pseudo-political business problems of any corporation. But an institution must have a function if it is to exist. Juniata is an educational institution. Two things essential to such an institution are students and professors.

So, the next time a building is planned, be it dorm or play-pen, or a policy made, be it official or a hidden fact of Juniata life, or an appointment made, honor conferred, contract let lapse, we would like to suggest to the power-structure here hat it might be in keeping with the reasons behind the institution if they looked up from their blueprints, budgets, and petty political games and realized that "students are living, breathing individuals with needs that must be met. Lose them, and you've lost the institution.

Walk! It's Good For You

by Sue Bermel

If the students of Juniata are supposedly apprehensive of involvement it's only because the student leaders are even more so. Monday night I arrived at a meeting of our Earth Day Committee full of ideas and, for once, much enthusiasm. Information, posters and buttons abounded along with much useless talk; should we dye the sheet to hang buttons on? Did anyone need a ride down to WHUN for our interview there? All of this, and then they had the guts to sit and talk about pollution as they puffed away on their cigarettes. Like usual there was talk about organization and very little talk about action. Organization is already there, a plan for action is not. Information on all areas of the subject now abound, posters use up unnecessary paper that will not be recycled and, therefore, will only become useless pollution, buttons sit there and look cool and involved.

What can each student do directly? Our Spring Carnival is not on Earth Day, but driving to the Fair Grounds is still pollution. "No one wants to walk that far!" Heavens, is three miles so far that walking just one way with a lot of other kids would kill everyone? Walk people, it's good for you and your environment.

Could we collect trash on campus? Never! Kids have lots of beer cans, could we collect those to recycle them? Collecting them is fine, but why not just throw them away in the garbage? Use returnable soda bottles, and recycle cans, it's easy.

The list of simple unpollutents is almost endless, but would our "involved" student leaders accept or adopt any? Would they think and act on their own for a good cause? Unfortunately for the entire Earth, the answer is NO!

Give us Barrabas!

Since last Sunday was such a nice day, and I was awake early in a strange part of the country, I took myself down to the local Christian Church to see what I could learn. It doesn't really matter what denomination it was. After all, aren't they all based on the same emination of the life of Christ — you remember him; he preached love, equality, and pacifism? This turned out to be the strangest experience though, not because of what I heard (The sermon sounded strangely like a financial report.), but because of what I saw. There, gathered in this one small church under theauspices of a Fundamentalist minister — I think his name is MacIntyre — was the most unusual and infamous collection of worshipers.

Before I had even entered the church, I caught a glimpse of the first of the many well-knowns as he was arriving for the service. Georgia's Lester Maddox alighted from a strange looking vehicle, obviously remodeled for his private use. It was an out-of-commission school bus.

As I went through the door I was astonished to see, to my extreme right, both President Nixon and his Vice-President, Spiro Agnew. I supposed that Mr. Agnew had had little previous experience with the type of service that was conducted because it seemed as though Mr. Nixon had to constantly tell him what to do. Even with this guidance, Agnew seemed to be doing everything wrong. He even opened his mouth at the wrong time and was caught praying outloud while the others were silent. It didn't matter much though, because his prayer was supercilious and effete. It was rather commical.

During the second hymn, a young child began to cry because he was very uncomfortable in that church; it was very warm and the air was stuffy and stilted. I then noticed that a man got up from his pew and went over to say something to the child's mother. She took her handkerchief and tied it around the boy's mouth, and secured him to his seat with a scarf she has been wearing around her neak. The man returned to his seat, smiling with satisfaction. His name, I believe, is Julius Hoffman.

I was beginning to think that nothing more could happen while I was there, when I suddenly noticed strange reactions from a young man in a military uniform. During a special prayer for the dead he seemed to look around nervously and silently. First Lieutenant William Calley, Jr. blushed terribly when the prayer reached a point that echoed Christ's "See how these Christians love one another."

My attention was then diverted by a late-comer to the service. The church must have been more crowded than I imagined because this man just wandered up and down the aisles, unable to find a seat. Mr. Nixon even got up to try to help this man, whose name is Carswell. He too was unsuccessful in seating his friend and returned to his own seat angry and dejected. Nixon seemed to think that he and his friends deserved greater respect and cooperation from the others there.

By now my patience had greatly dwindled with all these distractions. I could remember that Rev. MacIntyre had read the gospel and that it had been something about Christ's silent resignation to the inhumanity of his torturers and his plea of love for forgiveness for them. But now it seemed as though the minister had gone off on another tangent. He was saying something about a 'victory by any means' when my mind wandered onto other subjects. I began to think about a friend of mine who had been seriously wounded by a policeman because he was taking part in a non-violent demonstration during the Chicago Democratic Convention in 1968. These ideas disturbed me so much that I felt that I had to leave immediately. As I got up to go, Chicago's Mayor Daley — I don't know how I could have missed seeing him before — turned and growled, "Where are you going? The service isn't over yet." I answered that I was sorry but that I thought I had come to the wrong place; that I must have read a different translation of the bible because it seemed that in both Christianity and Judaism, love and peace had come to mean victory and napalm. NO one seemed to hear me because they were all muttering something about "Love it or leave it." As I left, I couldn't help wondering if Jesus had ever taken a bribe.

Bad Check — Return to Sender

by Dick Gregory

When I look out upon one of the many college audiences I speak to in the course of a year, I find myself feeling sorry for the young white students I see in front of me. I feel sorry for them because I know that many of their parents are writing "checks" for them today which are going to bounce ten or twenty years from now.

What keeps that observation from being funny, and what makes it doubly sad, is that I know black folks have been writing checks for their kids over the years which black parents knew were bad checks. Black parents accomodated to the white system in America, accepted the injustices and indignities, under the guise that they wanted nothing for themselves, only the hope that things would be better for their children. But that was a cop-out. If "Uncle Tomming" was worth anything, black folks would own this country by now.

But the black attitude has changed. Black folks, young and old, are not writing any more bad checks. The checks they are now writing may never be fully honored in this country, but if they are not, it will not be because the checks themselves are no good.

White folks on the other hand are continuing to write checks for their kids which they should know in advance are no good. The school situation in the South is a good example. White folks in a state like Mississippi are resisting the United States Supreme Court decisions on school desegregation, keeping heir children out of the public school system, and setting up makeshift, inadequate, private schools. This is happening in a state where everyone, black and white, should be made to go to school 24 hours a day.

Little white kids all over the South have nothing to say about the current actions of their parents. But in the long run only the kids will suffer. When the white kids graduate from those inadequate, phony schools, there will not be a respectable college or university, in the country which will find the kids qualified to meet the entrance requirements for higher education. The parents will be none the worse off. They will be in the same jobs, with the same economic status they have always had. But the kids will suffer because of a foolish, short-sighted, bigoted action of their parents. In short, the kids will be the victims of the bad checks their parents are writing right now.

Perhaps the symbolic significance of the "bad check" analogy is beginning to really sink in with white youth in America and that could be a partial explanation why the Bank of America was chosen as a focal point of resentment recently in California. It is certainly true that more and more youth, black and white and Puerto Rican, are recognizing that they are the victims of bad checks of past generations and are banding together to change the system. The Rainbow Coalition is a good example, which brings together in working alliance the Black Panthers, the Young Lords (Puerto Rican) and the Patriot Party (young whites working wih poor whites.)

Such coalitions are bound to change the controlling system in America. It is like a man who has two mean and vicious dogs in his backyard to protect his property. The two dogs are trained for viciousness and attack. Consequently the two dogs are always fighting with each other. The dogs would attack the man also if they could ever get their teeth into him.

In fact, the only way the man can get close enough to feed his dogs is to do it while the dogs are busy fighting each other. The dogs are so absorbed in their own fighting that they don't even notice the man's activity. As long as the dogs are fighting each other, are hating each other, the man is safe in his own backyard. Both he and his property are safe.

Then one day the situation changes, but the man is not aware of it. He sees the dogs out in the backyard fighting, so he goes to get their plate of food. When one of the dogs catches a glimpse of the man coming to feed them, the dog stops fighting long enough to say to the other dog: "Look, this ain't getting us anywhere. We're still chained in the man's backyard. We're dependent upon him for our food, we have to protect his property, and he's our master. I'll tell you what let's do. Let's just pretend we're fighting, and when he gets close enough with that plate of food, let's jump on him and get our freedom. After we've got our freedom, we may decide to go back fighting each other again for real. But just this one time, let's get together and trick his man."

The system in America has always kept the poor white man in a trick because it has given him black folks to hate, to feel superior to. But that trick doesn't work anymore. The poor white man sees black folks rising while his own condition remains the same. He is beginning to understand that poor whites, blacks, Puerto Ricans, Chicanos and Indians share a common problem of oppression. Fighting and hating has not changed that condition. So those in chains are coming to realize that if they get together just once, they can get this man who's responsible for continued oppression.

Mission—TOP SECRET

by Dan Harriger

It has rather recently been brought to my attention that Juniata College is a stockpile of highly classified, top secret information; or so it seems. The administration carries on transactions without informing any students involved. And don't ask about their business because all you'll receive for an answer is the traditional Juniata "run around". If faculty or administrative committees cannot get straight answers, why should we, only as students, get answers to actions which affect our lives? If you don't believe what I've stated, just try to find out why the academic standards seem to be decreasing as scholarships and grants-in-aid to athletes seem to be increasing. Why should one department receive money for recruiting, oops, excuse me, acquiring new freshmen each year? What's so top secret about where the college spends its money that a budget for the college cannot be published? Why, a student can't even get an itemized statement for his tuition, room and board. Is this a Top Secret Installation or a college? Is there a law which states "No college student (or faculty member) shall receive notice as to what the administration does or why. Should he inquire, he will be dismissed as a militant and his question ignored."? If questioning administrative actions which may seriously affect a student's life is militancy or illegal, then let all students be law-breaking revolutionists.

This Is Your Paper

by Adele Aboutok

"Are we going to have a paper this week?" Every week the same question, and always the same answer, "Of course; we're a weekly paper aren't we?"

Every week the same story: We don't have enough printable articles to fill the paper, so we print the unprintable. We are supposed to be the voice of Juniata students, yet we cannot get students to write, or express their views or be interested in any way in their lives. A few students have mentioned that they would like to make their opinions known, yet not one shows up at the weekly newspaper meetings, opinions in hand.

This week we are asking you, the students of Juniata College, Does it matter if there is a Juniatian each week or not? Would anybody miss it? What kind of communications media do Juniata students want?

If you have an opinion, let it be known. Extricate yourself from the traditional dynamic apathy of typical Juniata students and become untraditional with he new Juniatian. We need you to write your opinion, to search out the religiously guarded secrets of Juniata's inner workings. Our sports department is inoperative. We need refreshing new insights into Juniata sports. You are the news, you are the life and truth of Juniata College. How can we express your views if you lie huddled in your dank and dreary corner protected by a black cloak of apathetic nullity, and voidness of mind? Help us to help you! !

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College

Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED NOV. 6, 1924

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891

co-editors
ADELE ABOUTOK,
DAN HARRIGER,
CYNTHIA CARLSON, news & feature editor
JANET MASON, copy & proof editor
RICH SMITH & WILL SCARLETT, circulation

WILLIAM DAVID, photography editor
JOEL SCHANTZ, business manager
RICHARD ABLARD, advertising manager
SUE BERMEL, layout editor
VALERIE DERRICKSON, art & coordinator

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Alice Herncane, Donna Roppolt, Steve Wesley, Chuck Bates, John Evrard, Joan Eisenhart, Dan Harriger, Judy Craft

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000

Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVI, No. 18

April 17, 1970

Earth Day . . .

Extinction of Man?

Schedule — Juniata College Teach-In on the Environment

Tuesday, April 21 —

8 p.m., Alumni Hall

Terry Fabian, Water Pollution Control expert, will speak on "What is pollution?, What causes it?, How does it effect the environment?

Wednesday, April 22 —

Morning: Teachers and professors are being asked to carry the day's theme of the fight against pollution into their classes. Members from a speakers bureau, consisting of students having a knowledge of pollution, will be available to speak to classes upon request.

Afternoon: Ballroom 1 to 3 p.m. Slides and movies dealing with the environment and its pollution will be shown. Come when you want and stay as long as you want. Also photographs of pollution in the Huntingdon area will be on display.

Alumni, 3:30 to 5 p.m. — A talk, illustrated with slides, dealing with the growing importance of energy in man's life, starting with the cavemen and continuing to modern man, will be presented by two representatives from Penelec, Robert E. Steger and Clayton Montgomery. Mr. Steger is superintendent for the Pennsylvania Electric Company's System Production Department at Johnstown. Mr. Montgomery is president of the Saxton Nuclear Experimental Corporation.

Ballroom, 7:30 p.m. — Panel discussion on pollution.

Panel Members:

Bob Burress — JC Student moderator

Dr. Ronald Cherry — JC Professor of Economics

Terry Fabian — Water Pollution Control Expert

Dr. Robert Fisher — JC Professor of Ecology

Mr. Montgomery — Penelec Representative

Dan Rapp — Member of U.S. Soil Conservation Agency

Mr. Steger — Penelec Representative

Mr. Paul Stewart, Superintendent of four local Penelec generating stations, will be in the audience to answer questions on local pollution.

Saturday, April 25 —

Clean-Up Day, sponsered by Huntingdon High School Earth Day Committee, to gather up litter and clean up Huntingdon.

Did You Hear That . . .

Good communication seems to have always been a major problem here at Juniata College, but it seems to be even more present and more of a problem this year. Our most reliable source of information has unfortunately become rumor and hearsay. Comments can often be overheard in our long lines that "The college is supposed to be planning to . . ." or "He really was fired" or "Did you know that there was a dance last weekend?" or "I heard that Dr. ____ is leaving the college next year".

Why are we not better informed? We need better publicity for cultural and social events and when they are cancelled (last Saturday's dance) or changed (Tuesday's choir concert which was moved to Thursday). Are we not entitled to know what is going on?

We also need to know about the college's general and financial problems. Yes, we do have student representatives on faculty committees. Why do they never issue general reports to the general student body which elected them?

Because communication can and must be improved at Juniata, we of the newspaper staff feel that we must end his era of reporting and we are making plans for the future which include a new name and format and the willingness to print any non-slanderous material which is submitted from you the students. What are your interests and views? What would YOU like to see in YOUR paper? Do you feel that there is, indeed, any need for a paper?

Just as the front page states, this is The Last Juniatian. The next few weeks and years will bring changes because as your ideas change, as Juniata changes, so should the paper change.

Concerned Students . . .

by Janet Mason

Monday night, April 13, 1970, Apollo 13 with three American astronauts aboard developed serious problems. Losing vital oxygen, water, and electricity, due to an unexplained explosion, preparations were made to return to earth as soon as possible. Upon entering the earth's atmosphere, the lunar module (their source of oxygen) must be discarded. There will be—it is hoped—enough oxygen for the three men to return safely.

Did you know about this? DO YOU CARE? ?

I heard two types of reactions Tuesday. The majority of people on campus did not know of the existence of an emergency. The reactions ranged from shock to mild surprise to indifference; and then a request: "Please pass the salt."

I saw grins of glee and laughter from several. "Didn't I tell you it was jinxed from the start?!" "Did you see Marooned? I wonder which guy they'll get rid of." "What do they do now—push the self-destruct button?"

I heard of first-graders who laughed at the death of John F. Kennedy. They were excused because they failed to understand. Is this YOUR excuse? ?

When this reaches print, the emergency of Apollo 13 will be over. Be the result joyful or tragic, the fact is that it MATTERS. There are many news stories that matter. But they'll continue to pass you by until you LISTEN and CARE about something besides eating and sleeping and grades and "me." I believe the disease is called "apathy."

To The Professors:

As a senior, having had writtens and approaching orals, I say How Dare You. How dare you take your failures and punish us for them. How dare you perpetrate this cruel joke of letting us believe that for four years our work has at least been satisfactory and then telling us, some of us that in fact it has not. How dare some of you use comps as an "axe over students heads", making students squirm as you yourself perhaps once squirmed, enriching your egos and reassuring you of your power.

I wrote this several nights before I returned for my comps. I continue to believe this but I would like to add this: To the students: How Dare You submit to comps. I guess that's easy for me to say now that I'm safely through comps. I guess that makes me a hypocrite. I continue to believe that they cannot fiunk a whole class and if the class of 1971 doesn't want to go through comps then the time to do something is NOW.

The Juniatian

RENAISSANCE

Vol. XLVI, No. 19 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | April 24, 1970

Seniors Receive Awards

Kay Lynn McCarthy, of York, and William D. Phillips, of Camp Hill, both seniors at Juniata College, have been named recipients of National Science Foundation graduate fellowships.

McCarthy, a chemistry major, plans to study pharmacology at the University of Illinois College of Medicine after graduation this Spring. She intends to pursue a career in drug research upon completion of her graduate studies.

Phillips, a physics major, was also honored several weeks ago when it was announced that he had been named a Woodrow Fellowship designate.

He has applied for graduate studies in physics at Princeton, M.I.T., Caltech, Stanford and Harvard, and so far has reseived letters of acceptance from three of these.

McCarthy and Phillips are both high honor students at Juniata, and both have served as laboratory assistants in their respective departments at the College. Both have received the C. C. Ellis Memorial Scholarship as a result of their extraordinary academic achievements and good citizenship at college. The National Science Foundation fellowships are the first of this type ever to have been awarded to Juniata students.

William D. Phillips of Camp Hill, a senior at Juniata College, has recently presented a scholarly paper at a meeting of college physicists at Lycoming College.

Phillips accompanied Juniata professor Wilfred G. Norris, chairman of the College's Department of Physics, to the annual meeting of the Central Pennsylvania Section of the American Association of Physics Teachers. His paper on "Electron Spin Resonance in Silver-II Complexes" represented some highly sophisticated research Phillips performed both as an undergraduate at Juniata College and as a research trainee at Argonne National Laboratory last semester.

Phillips was recently named both a designate for a Woodrow Wilson fellowship and the recipient of a National Science Foundation fellowship for graduate studies. Upon his graduation from Juniata College this spring he plans to continue his education in physics at Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Epochs Films

Epochs Films: Monday, 7:30 p.m.
April 27—The Bicycle Thief
May 4—The Seven Samurai (Kurosawa)
May 10—8½ (Fellini)

Troy & Taylor to Exhibit

An exhibition of the latest ceramics and water colors by Jack Troy and Barnard Taylor will open Sunday, May 3, at 2 p.m., in the Shoemaker Galleries and continue until Saturday, May 16.

The exhibit is the third annual spring showing of the most recent work by Juniata's professional artists and craftmen. Troy, is assistant professor of English and conducts courses in ceramics. Taylor, college editor and director of publications, is a graphic designer, painter and writer.

As a writer Troy has had numerous articles published in the Thoreau Society Bulletin and in "Ceramics Monthly" and "Organic Gardening" magazines. He is an exhibition critic for "Craft Horizons" magazine.

Currently Troy has an exhibit of ceramics at the Newark Gallery, Newark, Del., and is represented in the Associated Artists of Pittsburgh annual exhibit, Craftsmen '70 in Boston and the Central Pennsylvania Art Alliance's Second Annual Invitational Exhibit in State College.

Troy will spend next year on a leave of absence as Visiting Professor in Art at Kent University where he earned his M.A. He expects to concentrate on glass and to explore the possibilities of this challenging medium.

Last summer Troy received a scholarship in glassblowing at Haystack Mountain School of Crafts on Deer Isle, Maine.

An interest in water colors comes naturally to Barnard Taylor whose artistic career was encouraged by an uncle and a cousin, both of whom were professional artists and both of whom worked in water colors in the American tradition of Winslow Homer and Andrew Wyeth.

Taylor's most recent paintings in this medium are abstract and expressionistic with inspiration coming from nature and from common signs and symbols. Many of the paintings were prepared for the graduate program at Penn State where Taylor is working for his Master of Fine Arts degree.

Taylor has many interests including graphic design, the history of printing and book illustration, writing and painting. He does not feel any contradictions in this but believes that all of his interests serve to enrich his painting.

A native of Upland, Pa., Taylor studied at the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts in Philadelphia, the University of Pennsylvania, Monmouth Jr. College, Long Branch, N.J., and earned his B.A. from Lycoming College in Williamsport, Pa., before coming to Juniata in 1966.

Taylor has had many exhibitions at Bucknell University, Lycoming College, Mansfield State College and has exhibited in numerous regional and local exhibitions. He is represented in the permanent collections of Bucknell University, Lycoming College, Juniata College, Corning Community College and in many private collections.

Allenwood

Not 80 miles from the tree-graced, peaceful splendour of the Juniata campus is the largest Federal Penitentiary for political prisoners in America. Allenwood, situated 15 miles north of Lewisburg and 15 miles south of Williamsport, is set in an equally peaceful, splendor-filled, tree-lined part of Pa., but it's inmates, unlike Juniata's, are anything but tranquil. They are the sons of parents like ours, they are the church-goers of America, the real Christians we all pretend to be. They are our brothers who have chosen not to kill. Chosen not to support a war that is not only unconstitutional, but immoral by anyone's standards as well.

What's more, Allenwood is not just housing the "political prisoners" of America, it has apparently been in close contact with the U.S. Government—which has ordered the construction of large scale empty barracks for future dissenters (ranging from anti-war demonstrators, civil rights workers, and peace marchers (imagine!))—on every level of American policies—both at home and abroad. That is, the U.S. Government is anticipating a full-scale Repression and will need a place in which to shut people up. Allenwood is that place. Think about it. Then remember what this country was founded on—the principles—the how, the why. The construction of the barracks has since been completed. (For more detail see Life magazine, April, 1969.)

On Sunday, May 3rd, David Dellinger and David Hawk will be speaking at Allenwood Prison. Dellinger is one of the Chicago seven and the original organizer of the National New Mobilization for Peace. He was the key planner for the March on the Pentagon in '67. David Hawk is the Originator of Vietnam Moratoriums and a leading figure on the National Board of Resist.

We urge all those who care about the nature and direction of this country to support the brothers in Allenwood on May 3. That's a Sunday, so free time and car pools can be easily arranged starting right now.

Remeber: Nazi Germany may not be in Europe only. Or better still, 1984 may be less than just 14 years away. Think. Read. Do.

APPEASE the GODS

by joan eisenhart

There's a strange morality in a school with such a strict Christian heritage that prevents the sale of cigarettes on campus and at the same time partakes of the pagan rituals heralding the new spring. Because no matter how distorted and unlike these festivities May Day appears, it takes its origins from the celebrations of Bacchus and Aphrodite. But there's really no reason that we should do away with this tradition at Juniata if it truly is of interest to the students. What we must do is work to recapture the meaning behind such a celebration and further its resemblence to its ancestral origins. We should reinstate the many rituals and performances included in the primeval spring rites.

Juniata is skirting a primary factor of the ancient celebrations by holding the May Day ceremonies on a Saturday. During the Greek festivals of Saturnalia all schools and courtrooms were closed. Of course, this institution fulfills that obligation but the sacrifice is nonexistent and the significance somewhat hampered by this arrangement.

There also was maintained at the Saturnalia an equality among all classes. The slaves sat at the tables of their masters and were served their meals by those to whom they customarily catered. We see traces of this event in the May Day breakfast during which the female students and faculty are served by male student body. But why not interpret this tradition as closely as possible and arrange for the entire student body to be waited on by the administration — the 'massahs' of the institution?

The activities of the festivities involved all who attended, while those of our May Day concern only a select few. Perhaps this is a large contributing factor to the growing disinterest in this special college week-end. If we were to revive the old performances in dancing, singing, gambling, drinking and sports' contests we might be able to make an interest in the festival reach those who have become passive to the incident. After all, should we have to rely on fifth grade children to perform the traditional 'dance of the virgins' that used to employ Juniata freshmen?

Saturnalia was also a time during which cures were enacted for all kinds of diseases. No baths were permitted since they were thought to cause a swelling in the body. Narcotics, incense and mechanic devices were also employed to the great satisfaction and pleasure of the infirmed or mentally depressed. Why should our particular re-enactment of this spring fest not include every aspect of its ancestor?

In includjng the entire student body in this spring week-end we need not eliminate the May Queen and her male counterpart, Prince Charming. In accepting this dubious honor however, both recipients should realize the further responsibilities that these positions entail according to ancient rites. We cannot forget the once-prevelent fertility rites of the ceremonies in which a live virginal sacrifice was made to the gods along with a symbolic offering of human castration. Imagine the esteem with which the families and friends of the May Queen would hold her memory; and the pride accompanying Prince Charming's loss of virility.

The idea of the yearly theme of the week-end being derived from a musical comedy cleverly encorporates the ancient customs with the modern ideas. But we shouldn't use even ten-year-old subjects when we have more contemporary examples such as Hair or Oh Calcutta! Why should it be any worse to be undressed in actuality rather than by the eyes of those we pass? We might as well give them what they want rather than have to deal with a group of frustrated individuals.

May Day is one of the few chances we have to retain something honest and pleasurable from the ancients. The classics are usually too dry to interest reading by many. But we must enact this festival as it actually was in order to maintain its effectiveness. If the true idea should be passed beyond the college community it would result in great enjoyment by our entire civilization: because there were also no wars or battles conducted during the Saturnalia.

FEAT OF CLAY

by Jack Troy

Writing about making pottery is like giving a speech about how a tossed salad tastes. I wish I could give people a ball of earth (clay); then I could say, "This is what it's all about."

One afternoon in Dec., 1962, I was leaving the high school I taught in, and passed by the art department where a man was working over a potter's wheel. I watched him and thought, "That looks like fun." Since I like doing things that are fun, I asked him for some instruction, and a few days later I think we both had agreed that I had spent so much time in libraries in college that about all I could use my hands for was tying my shoes and necktie, and turning the pages of books. I couldn't get the clay to stay in the middle of the wheel, and it was frustrating that a one-pound ball of clay could make a 180-pound man look like such a dunce. I had terrorized my study halls so effectively that I could leave at any time without fearing an uprising, so I would take roll, and furtively practice getting the clay to behave. After a while it got to be fun and still is.

The clay I use comes from the gradual geological aging of different parts of the earth. Most people don't realize that when they pick one of my pots that they are holding a little bit of Missouri, Ohio, Tennessee, Georgia, Kentucky and Florida, right in their hand. Huntingdon County water held it all together, and then vaporized when it wasn't needed any more. Drink out of one of my cups, and you drink from your own country; your own planet.

When the pots are made and dried they are fired to about 1900 F. in a kiln made of special bricks, then they are cooled, glazed and fired again to 2300 F., when the glaze melts and becomes smooth. The kiln is fired with propane gas, and takes about eight hours to get hot enough, and about a day and a half to cool down. (The gas man says I use nearly as much gas as a potato chip factory.) It is impossible to predict just what effect the firing will have on the pieces, so every time I open a kiln I wonder what I will find. I always expect the best and worst simultaneously, and I'm usually surprised at what I find. Some pots may have split up the side for no apparent reason, and anything that isn't quite right to my eye ends up in a shard heap I'm building for future archaeologists in the woods behind my house. It's funny how I almost forget just what went into the kiln, so that when the pieces come out they seem completely new; strangely transformed by the fire. Rarely I find a piece I like very much. If I make 1,000 pots a year, two or three may really sing, but I've never made anything I'd want to keep forever. For me, objects aren't precious, although what goes into them might be.

I felt sorry last year when somebody said he wanted to buy "a Troy". I told him I needed all I had for tax deductions, but I'd sell him a pot. I twitch to think of being venerated, and since the first of the year I haven't signed any of my work. The best pots, historically, have been anonymous, and I like to think that my work can be appreciated quite apart from my identity as a person.

I've always hoped my work would serve some utilitarian purpose — functionally, aesthetically or both. If I had my choice I'd barter pots for groceries, mortage payments or fillings in my teeth. In any case, I try to keep my prices reasonable, and I'm probably one of the few people around from whom you can buy a little pot without getting busted.

Focus Films

Focus Films: Oller Hall, 7:30 p.m.
April 29—Seven short films:

1) The Great Train Robbery
2) The Cure—Charlie Chaplin
*3) Super Artist—Andy Warhol
4) Para 1000
5) Film
*6) The Goad (from Samuel Beckett)
7) What Who How

*—of special interest to students

What Do You Want? We Want Empathy

Whom Do You Love??

by joan eisenhart

Did you pray last Tuesday? You should have, you know. Because it was the law that all Americans would pray for the safe return of the astronauts. Never mind the first amendment to the Constitution; it was forgotten for an immediate answer to a national mistake. America was holding its breath, listening and watching for some good news, and trying to forget that they, the consumers, had supplied the thirty million dollars that stood close to suffocating the lives of three young men. It was all very gripping: the tension, the televised homes and families of the astronauts, the spirit of nationalism rising from crisis, the concern of the president and other government officials. And the end was very touching: the president's praise and promise of recognition for the men, the national sigh of relief, the dedication to correcting further mistakes in the space program, and the tears of the wives and families.

But the tears of the astronauts wives were of relief. What about the tears of remorse and grief that are shed by the thousands of women made widows by the war in Vietnam? Does the nation feel no guilt for sending their husbands to their deaths? Or don't we feel it unless we see it on television? Have we grown so emotionless that we see only the visible and feel only the tangible?

One crisis is over, but another continues. How much longer are we going to play the money game at the price of human lives?

by Dan Harriger

That's my question, "What do you want?" Perhaps I should put it in the way that Juniata students understand best, "What in the Hell do you want? Damn it!" It seems that profanity is the only language for communication around this campus, but that's not what I'm writing about. I simply want to know the desires of the students of this campus.

We've recently changed the basic format of the Juniatian because that's what we understood the students wanted. We received comments and criticisms asking for a more editorial and commentary-type paper. Last week we gave it to you. "The Last" Juniatian was two pages of editorials and feature articles striking out against the institutions (administration, faculty, apathy) of this college. We invited student and faculty opinion to add to the new style of the paper; and what do we get? NOTHING, the same old Juniata nothing.

What's the matter with the students of this college? On my two articles I heard more comment from faculty than students. I had three students talk with me about my articles on athletes grooming regulations, but none of them would allow me to print their comments for fear of not being permitted to play sports next year. I place no blame upon the coaches, in fact I doubt if any reprimands would have been made by the understanding coaches. I feel that the students are to blame. They aren't apathetic, but aren't really interested in making any changes. They sympathize rather than empathize.

Do the students really want a newspaper, or do they want a guideline for their lives? Do they actually care what happens to the paper or anything else that goes on around this college? Do they give a damn? Read the following article and then reevaluate your desires and concerns.

Ed. Note: The following editorial was taken from the final issue of Lycoming College's student newspaper, The Bell (2|28|70); editor Mary Ellen Livesay

When Should YOU Give A Damn?

M. E. L.

Whose Responsibility

Rumors have been circulating this week to the effect that this is the final issue of The Bell this semester. These rumors have a strong basis in fact. The editorial board views the surprise with which many members of the college community have responded to this news with amusement. If one considers our numerous and repeated requests for help from the student body, and the apathy with which these appeals have been met, our suspension of publication should hardly be cause for astonishment. Consider, if you will, the following:

"It was not without careful consideration that I arrived at the decision to tender my resignation as editor of The Bell. But, there comes a time when I must reevaluate the responsibilities which I have to myself, my friends, this staff, the students of this college . . ." (March 18, 1966)

"Typists needed for The Bell . ." (February 9, 1968)

"Reporters needed to fill this space. Apply at The Bell." (November 8, 1968)

". . . We need a far more extensive staff. We need a staff willing to spend only a few hours each week researching and writing a few stories and greatly reducing the time now spent by some ten or twelve motivated students . . . What we need now is help . . . from faculty and administrators in the form of constructive criticism . . . from students in the form of diligent work . . . We can publish . . . every week only with your help." (October 11, 1968)

"Applicants are needed in all areas including typing, layout, photography, advertising, and all types of reporting. Staff selection is based only on interest and no previous experience is necessary . . ." (March 1, 1968)

". . . it has become physically impossible for a handful (five) of people to copy and proofread, type, layout, edit, gather news, write feature stories, cover sports events, and take pictures to verify rumors. Therefore, unless the present staff is augmented by new members, there may not be a student newspaper in the very near future . . ." (Dec. 12, 1969).

The above announcements were either totally ignored, or, at best, succeeded in creating temporary interest which disappeared entirely as soon as it appeared that the crisis had spent itself. Consequently, the same people publish the paper every week. This means not only that the few who have expressed an interest in The Bell must spend many more hours working on it than should be necessary in a school of this size, regardless of any other obligations or commitments they may have, but also that the paper does not reflect as wide a range of ideas as is considered desirable.

The Bell staff is composed entirely of students who, like those who say that they "don't have time," attend classes, write term papers, study (when they occasionally get the chance), and who do have interests in things unrelated to The Bell.

We expect to hear complaints from a lot of people as a result of the fact that we plan to stop publishing. We really don't care. No one can with any justification assert that we have an obligation to the school. Our primary obligations are to ourselves, and we have every intention of meeting them. Give the present situation, it would seem that the only way in which we can accomplish this is to stop printing a newspaper. Suggestions concerning other methods will be appreciated, and when enough people decide that it is just as much their responsibility as it is anybody's else's to help with the publication of The Bell, we'll start working again.

O.K., now think it over, do you care; do you give a damn? Who's responsibility is it to have a paper for this college? I and my co-workers are willing to work and give you the kind of paper you want, but we must know what you want. If you can't take the time to write an article stating how you feel, just drop a note and ask "What happened to . . .?" or "Why not an article on . . .?" Our minds and paper is always open to comment. Yes, that's right at the moment it's our paper. We write it, construct it, and distribute it. Let's make it your paper. You write, and we'll print according to our published "Letter Policy". Give a Damn!

Community Living—Learn

by Greg Heuston

Last fall a group of students met with some members of the Task Force and other faculty members to discuss the possibility of initiating a community living-learning experiment. The intentions of this group were to lay the groundwork for beginning a community which would have students living together and working toward a common set of goals. These goals would include creating an environment which is highly conducive to interpersonel encounters hopefully to result in greater self-awareness and awareness of others. Also, the community would work toward a common educational goal such as studying higher education from different perspectives.

After the initial work done by this group of people, the Task Force selected a committee to follow up on the experimental idea. This committee feels that the community experiment could become a reality next year if there is adequate student interest and participation. The projected community would ideally consist of 10 to 12 students and a faculty family. If you are interested in participating in the community or learning more about it, contact Steve Sarfaty, 222-North, Box 1599. Also, all those who are interested should attend the community meetings every Tuesday night at 6:30 p.m. in the Academic Building, Room 216.

Letters Policy

Letters to the editor should be typed and double-spaced and should be submitted no later than 1:30 p.m. Monday. The editors reserve the right to print only non-libelous and responsible letters submitted to the Juniatian. All letters must be signed and the staff reserves the right to publish all full signatures unless the writer can supply valid reasons for omitting his name.

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College

Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED NOV. 6, 1924

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891

ADELE ABOUTOK, co-editors
DAN HARRIGER,
CYNTHIA CARLSON, news & feature editor
JANET MASON, copy & proof editor
RICH SMITH & WILL SCARLETT, circulation
WILLIAM DAVID, photography editor
JOEL SCHANTZ, business manager
RICHARD ABLARD, advertising manager
SUE BERMEL, layout editor
VALERIE DERRICKSON, art & coordinator

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Alice Horncane, Donna Roppolt, Steve Wesley, Chuck Bates, John Evrard, Joan Eisenhart, Dan Harriger, Judy Craft

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000

Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVI, No. 19

April 24, 1970

Editorial...

How are Things At Juniata?

Juniata College has just built a new student center. The parents and alumni like it—but do the students? Ask and the majority would answer no—they perferred old Totem Inn better and Ellis is nothing but a big cafeteria and kitchen. Juniata College has also just completed a new, supposedly co-ed, dormitory. What is student opinion of it? Eight compatible people are hard to find; It's a long walk from anywhere; The rooms are small; How can it be termed co-ed when there is a solid brick wall between the sexes?

Juniata College has just issued its fall academic schedule. What do students think—Why are some courses listed without professors? Why are so many professors leaving? How come the education department can offer 18 courses, and the biology department nine while the German department offers only two courses beyond competency and in Russian only one. Can we term Juniata a true liberal arts college when such a situation exists and when coaches are replaced faster than professors?

Does Juniata really need such an extensive athletic program or would scholarships do more good when given to students with high academic standing? Other small colleges have done away with athletic scholarships and neither the academic nor the athletic programs have suffered.

Why do the majority of Juniata students merely sit back and ignore their school's problems, which are in turn their own? Very few students take independent studies, participate in the U.N. or Washington semester programs or take advantage of the Junior Year Abroad Program: One can learn more while living in a foreign culture than during any two or even all of the years spent hereat Juniata. all of the years spent here at Juniata.

dents here to learn? If not should the College continue to support this "dead wood"?

We, the newspaper staff, the faculty, administration, alumni, parents and your fellow students want to hear your opinions on these subjects. Or don't you have any?

The Tables Are Turned

by Dick Gregory

It is at once odd and sad that both blacks and whites in America today are just beginning to realize the high price one must pay for the privilege of apathy and silence. History seems to have a way of turning the tables in its repetition, and those who choose to ignore the horrors of one historical era can almost expect to be the victims of the same horror the second time around.

In the black community today, one hears the repeated observation, "It looks like this country is fixin' to practice genocide." that observation merely illustrates that ignorance knows no color distinction. Just go up to the Indian reservation some day and ask my red brother how long this country has been known for its ability to not only practice but enforce genocide. America has always practiced genocide. She is now merely "fixin'" to expand her group. And the sad truth of the matter is that black folks sat by for years and watched this American system oppress and destroy the Indians without raising a voice of outraged protest. If black folks did not protest the system's genocide against the Indian, they can hardly be surprised when the same system becomes openly genocidal against blacks.

One must pay a high price for being silent. Silence is the friend of oppression, and when the silence is broken in the name of justice, the oppressor will always seek to restore it by repression and imprisonment. I imagine there were many good thinking Germans in Germany during the days of Hitler's rise to power, who stood silently by and watched the Nazis have a field day because they were afraid to open their mouths. But one day they looked up in the sky and saw the bombers open up on Berlin. It must have been a terrible realization that not one of those falling bombs was labeled, "For bad Germans only."

White folks in America are just beginning to fully realize the terrible price one must pay for silence. Twenty years ago, when the crime syndicate was restricting its dope pushing activity to black ghettos, black parents cried out to white America, "Please stop those syndicate hoodlums from pushing reefers and heroin to young black kids." But white America looked the other way. Little did white America realize that if it permitted the syndicate hoodlums to push dope to young black kids without fear of reprisal, it would only be a matter of time before the same hoodlums

Cont'd on page 3

Conviction of Apathy

by Steve Sarfaty

That's right we are guilty and our newspaper is one example of our neglect. It belongs to us and if it dies it will be our fault. Its present condition is because of a lack of both use and support by the students here. This paper is your tool to do with whatever you please. Let's get on the ball.

We must come to realize that we have the power to get just about whatever we want if and only if we can get together as a group. We will never get together if we don't talk to each other and the paper is a good place to do it. The time is coming when it may be too late to work together. We have our chance now and if we blow it the sentence will be most severe for us, our country and our children. It all starts right here.

Black is beautiful.
Red is beautiful.
White is beautiful.
Yellow is beautiful.

The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, New York, N.Y. 1970
An Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

For a free 18" x 24" poster of this advertisement, write:
The Equitable, Dept. C, G.P.O. Box 1179, New York, N.Y. 10001

Helping people build a better life
THE EQUITABLE

The Tables Are Turned-

would be pushing dope to young white kids.

Now it is white America's turn to live with the tragic results of an earlier silence. Newspaper editorials and magazine feature stories are finally recognizing the terrible problem of narcotics – now that young white kids are becoming addicted. Some of white America's most prominent families – in government, in the entertainment industry, in high society – have been touched by narcotics addiction. Yet it is odd to notice that narcotics addiction in the black community has decreased during the last decade according to statistics of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. A decrease has resulted in spite of the silence and apathy of the white community.

It is also ironic that dope addiction has traditionally been a problem only in the most impoverished black communities. Middle and upper middle income black families, those who benefited from higher education and good jobs, seldom had to worry about their kids being hooked on dope. Black kids who suffered most from addiction were the children of poverty stricken, uneducated black folks.

Now that it is white folks' turn to be plagued by the horrors of dope addiction, it is the children of upper income families who are getting hooked. Young white kids in Appalachia are not turning on and getting high. Odd, isn't it, that when it comes to dope addiction at least white folks' best seems to equal black folks' worst.

When the tables of history turn, those who have been silent cannot seem to comprehend the consequences of their silence. For years, white folks stood by in silent approval as buses were used to transport white kids and black kids in the interest of maintaining segregated schools. Now that busing is being used as a strategy promote school integration, white folks act like black folks invented buses.

President Nixon extols the virtues of the silent majority and, in his inaugural address, urged the nation to lower its voice. Vice President Agnew condemns loud voices of protest and Attorney General Mitchell tries to silence them. Daniel Patrick Moynihan urges a policy of 'benign neglect' and a shroud of silence over the race issue.

But if silence does prevail, one cannot help wondering who will prove to be history's ultimate victims.

The Huntingdon Music Club will sponsor an antique show and sale for the benefit of its scholarship fund on Friday and Saturday, May 8 and 9, at the Huntingdon Arts Center, second and Penn Streets.

Fifteen dealers will be displaying a wide variety of antiques and everything will be for sale. The articles will include glass, china, woodenware, brass, copper, coins, jewelry and bottles among many others.

Tickets will be available at the door. The admission charge is $1 and a ticket is good for both days of the show.

Hours for this event are 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. on Friday, May 8 and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturday, May 9.

IF EARTH DAY inspired you, if you're sick of seeing litter, or if you're just ambitious—come and help clean up. Meet at 10:30 a.m. on Ellis Hall steps to clean up Round Top, Muddy Run, or Sherwood Forest.

A Few Significant Words needed to fill this Space.
Apply–RENAISSANCE

Libertat Veritas —— and the Gymnasium too!!

by Nancy Shedd

A funny thing happened on the way to class the other afternoon. . . A bus was parked outside the gym ready to take the baseball team to a game somewhere, and for some reason I suddenly imagined myself bursting into an office in Founders and saying, "Call me a bus. My class and I would like to drive to New York this afternoon and see a play tonight."

Someone in the imaginary office patiently reminded me that buses and theatre tickets cost money and require advance reservations. "But of course." I nodded and went on to my class. But the bus lingered in the back of my mind, and in the days that followed it reappeared with some frequency and I saw it filled with "teams" of students bound for the theatre, for galleries and museums, for conferences on other campuses, and for weekend seminars in the country. I found myself actually believing that Moore Street was linked up with all the highways of the East and that buses could really get from here to all those wonderful places and back again. Could it be true?

"Just an irresponsible dream," the voice of fiscal responsibility reminded me. "You can't be serious."

But I am entirely serious bécause I think I've just discovered where the money is going to come from. Really it's so simple. The original bus — the one outside the gym — was the key to the whole thing.

Do all you people who prefer to spend your leisure in art or music or dancing, or even just staying up all night talking about those things, realize how many years we've all been subsidizing a small number of male students who prefer to spend their leisure playing varsity sports? Do you realize that Juniata students talented in painting or potting or piano have to pay for instruction, but that talented athletes get coaching and equipment free — not even a breakage fee? Athletes are recruited, given special food, supported by bands and cheerleaders, awarded letters and prizes, honored at dinners — and, of course, transpored all over to meet their laboriously arranged year-round schedules.

Well, fair is fair. If Juniata will match every playing field, gymnasium facility, uniform, piece of equipment, coach, trainer, scheduling effort and bus with an equivalent number of studios, presses, wheels, potters, painters, dancers, musicians, and the like, you ought to be willing to call it even, even after all these years.

It's too expensive, they say. Then cancel the athletic program. The guys in the gym know enough about fair play and good sportsmanship to realize the other guys (and girls) deserve a turn.

I don't mean to pick on the athletic department; they are hired to do a job and, so far as I am aware, they do it well. But I am angry with the whole system of higher education which so unquestioningly buys the larger society's notion that athletics deserve such a disproportionate amount of money and attention.

If the function of higher education is to challenge students to seek what is "higher," then how does Juniata justify its willingness to give students what they have already been taught to want — sports — and its refusal to pay much more than lip service to the value of the creative arts? Most students simply do not come to college predisposed to care about, nor even capable of understanding what arts and humanities teachers try to talk to them about. They've rarely expressed themselves in words or music or dance; and when thee have, it was peripheral, extracurricular, not central to the act of feeling and knowing oneself and one's humanity.

How did Juniata ever come to believe that it could require everyone to spend a year in a lab science, in phys ed, and in a foreign language, whether they were good at it or not, but that it could not ask those same students to spend a year with a handful of clay or a guitar or a pad of paper and a pen? Instead of the experience of art, students learn about art as a cultural phenomenon in Great Epochs and discover the Nature of Man in his rational discourse, ignoring the messages of the spirit which he sends by way of his creative endeavors. Both might better follow the experience of art.

If Juniata truly believed that in art man objectifies what is within him, and if it believed that the inner man is what really matters, and that unless he learns to exercise what lies within him, unless he learns how to free his spirit, that spirit will die — if Juniata truly believed that, it would not hesitate for a day to provide its students with opportunities to dance and sing and pot and paint, and to linger, both on campus and off, in the company of others who do these things well.

Think of it! A gymnasium for the spirit. Highways and buses to every site of beauty in the East. And a side trip to the smoking slag heaps of Wilkes Barre for proof that air pollution affects not only the lungs, but impoverishes the mind and blights the spirit by obscuring the beauty of the hills to which dwellers in that city can no longer lift up their eyes.

Maybe clouded minds produce clouded lungs, and vice versa. Maybe the Heart Association should investigate whether hardening of the heart produces more pain and death in America today than hardening of the arteries. Maybe Juniata should symbolize its long overdue concern for the spirit by liberating the athletic department — buildings, budget, and buses — to the Department of the Creative Arts as an experiment for, say, the next ten years.

On April 24, Dr. and Mrs. Calvert N. Ellis will show slides and talk about their recent world tour, which included stops in Hawaii, Japan, Taiwan, Hong Kong, Thailand, India, Nairobi, Ethiopia, Greece and Spain. This program will take place at 8 p.m. in the ballroom of Ellis Hall.

JC Acquires New Football Coach from Western Mich. U.

Juniata College athletic director and head football coach Walt Nadzak has announced the appointment of Jack Rabine, offensive line coach at Western Michigan University, to a post on the Juniata coaching staff, effective in Aug., 1970.

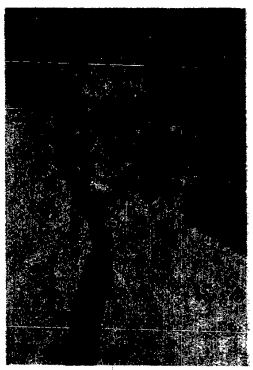
Rabine is murrently completing graduate work at Western Michigan toward an M.A. degree in physical education.

Rabine will replace Gary Sheppard, who has served on the Indian stac one year. Sheppard recently announced his plans to resign at the end of the current academic year.

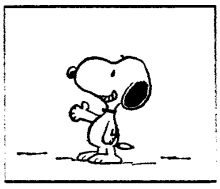
A graduate of Taylor University, Rabine worked as a coach and teacher in the Hudsonville (Mich.) public school system for ten years. He served as head coach of a program consisting of three teams and six coaches, and compiled a varsity coaching record of 37 wins against 20 losses and three ties. In 1966 his high school team achieved its first undefeated season and won its first undisputed league championship.

While at Western Michigan, Rabine has been coaching the freshman offensive line, working in the computer scouting program, supervising the scout team for varsity practice and teaching in the physical education program. He has also served as a substitute in some of the University's professional program classes.

His responsibilities at Juniata College will include coaching the offensive line, coordinating the scouting system by which opponents are evaluated, directing intramural athletics and assisting head track coach Charles G. Bunton.



● Jack Rabine ●



Pollution Is Political Money Tells the Story

At Bunker Hill they said, Don't fire until you see the whites of their eyes." On Earth Day we had better make sure we don't fire at a decoy but only at a real target. I am afraid that many people are missing the point of Earth Day. Why, because it seems to many people to be a non-political issue. Perhaps that explains the ease with which so many people are jumping on the band wagon and wearing their pollution buttons. How is it possible for pollution to be a non-political problem? Don't politicians pass laws governing pollution control? Don't politicians allot money to fight pollution? Look where our money goes now; into the defense budget where its use in industry and war is polluting the entire world. Check these figures and tell me how we can justifiably not fight to end the war, not further aid to education, health, and poverty programs and at the same time complain about our environment.

In 1968, the United States Government spent $103 billion to pay for present and past wars and to be prepared in case of future wars. This was 66% of the entire federal budget of $156 billion. One hundred and three billion dollars exceeds the gross national product of all but six nations.

Of this $103,198, 100,000, $29 billion is spent on the Vietnam war, to continue a conflict whose brutality, immorality and illegality have sickened most Americans and the vast majority of the people of the world. Already, this war has brought death to more than 42,000 Americans and more than two million Vietnamese. It is a spur to the arms race and continually threatens world peace.

Almost $20 billion will be invested this fiscal year in making more frightful our nuclear missile and bomber arsenal, weapons already so destructive that the can deliver ten tons of explosive power for every person on the globe.

$330 million will be spent on chemical and biological weapons that are polluting the environment and endangering the people in the United States and other countries without even being used; simply by being improperly stored.

$7.5 billion will go toward research on new yet more fearful weapons.

$1.2 billion has been authorized for the Anti Ballistic Missile (ABM) system in 1968.

$500 million to $1 billion is the estimated budget of the CIA.

Vast sums will be paid to the corporations and research institutes that design and build the weapons. In fiscal year 1968, the following companies, a handful of the biggest among thousands engaged in war production and research, enjoyed these military contracts;

General Dynamics $2.2 billion
Lockheed Aircraft $1.8 billion
General Electric $1.4 billion
United Aircraft $1.3 billion
McDonnell-Douglas $1.1 billion
AT&T $777 million

The following amounts were spent in fiscal 1968 for projects that seem to have little to do with primary human needs;

For moon and other space exploration $3.4 billion.

For farm subsidies to wealthy landowners $3.1 billion.

In comparison to the enormous expenditures for acts and insturments of military violence, luxury space programs and subsidies to the wealthy, and at a time when city governments are crying for more funds, the United States Government spent these sums on inproving the health, education and general welfare of people within this country:

Slum rebuilding $1.9 billion.
Other poverty programs $7.2 billion.
Health program $1.8 billion.
Educational programs and subsidies $3.7 billion.

Direct, nonmilitary foreign aid to underdeveloped countries totaled about $1.6 billion.

The U.S. appropriation to the United Nations was $109 million, about the cost of one Polaris submarine.

In fiscal 1968, the total of all nonmilitary expenditures was approximately 34% of the millitary expenses.

Throughout the United States, young people by the hundreds of thousands are rebelling in disgust and anger against this squandering of resources on war, and neglect of the day-to-day practical needs of the people. They are not alone in seeing only massive social disruption and probably nuclear war as eventual consequences. They are risking their freedom, careers and often their lives to protest and resist what they see to be wrong.

I don't advocate that we should abandon the campaign to clean up our world, we should strengthen it. This is merely a plea for people to keep their eyes and ears open. Let us keep a clear picture of who and what we are fighting. How is it possible to be against pollution and not to take a stand against the war, both are political issues. It seems if one wishes not to be a hypocrite than there should be some strong correlations between the stands on war, poverty, pollution and racism. What is needed is a complete structural change in this country. We cannot honestly challenge one evil without challenging them all. We must define what these problems are and then most importantly we must come together and defeat them.

America, America

To the tune of "America the Beautiful"
Oh cancerous for smoggy skies,
For pesticided grain —
Itradiated mountains rise
Above an asphalt plain.

America, America, thy birds have fled from thee;
Thy fish lie dead by poisoned streams,
From sea to fetid sea.
Oh plundered of their guardian woods,
Where silver brooklets flowed,
Their gullies clogged with cast-off goods,
Thy barren hills erode.

America, America, no sunshine comes to thee,
But bakes thy barren topsoil dry,
No wind but blows it free.

Relentless as thy bankers' greed,
That for each westward tie,
A gandy dancer's corpse decreed,
Beside the tracks must lie.

America, 9merica, thy sins prepare thy doom:
Monoxide cloud shall by thy shroud;
Thy cities be thy tomb.

by Louis Crowley

The Juniatian

RENAISSANCE

Vol. XLVI, No. 20 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | May 1, 1970

The Task Force Is Dead

by Bob Burruss

Mon., April 27, STUDENT RUMOR NEWS SERVICE. Nine badly decomposed bodies were discovered last week in a small locked room on the third floor of Brumbaugh Science Center. Coroner's data is incomplete, showing only that the nine were the seven faculty and two students formerly known as the TASK FORCE. Identification was made by the scarlet letters, T. F., embroidered on their clothes. --Cause of death is uncertain. It is suspected that the victims, while visiting the third floor of the Science Center, were mistaken for docile white rabbits and given air ambolisms by an eager Animal Physiology class. Since this tragic mistake went unnoticed it is assumed the deaths were painless. Why the bodies were not disposed of in the "pig" has not yet been determined. --The unfortunate committee's creator, President John N. Stauffer, has not yet been reached for comment. The few faculty informed prior to this report have merely shrugged their shoulders and sighed in relief.

The bodies were accidentally discovered by an anonymous ecology student studying the correlation between air pollution within the Science Center and academic pollution. The student (who wishes to remain anonymous to protect his objectivity) reports that Chi-square statistics indeed prove a strong correlation between foulness of the air and foulness of professorial attitudes. It was during an intensive search for the source of this academic putrescence that he discovered the TRUTH about the TASK FORCE.

The truth is (I'm being serious now, no more hypothetical news report) the Task Force is dead. No, the bodies won't be found. The people aren't dead, but the purpose, the proposals and the possibilities for change certainly seem to be. The Student Rumor News Service is no joke either. When was the last time you heard a rumor about the Task Force? The last I overheard was, "Damn, more junk mail from some dumb committee!" as the garbage can lid slammed shut on the curriculum proposal.

The faculty and administration may smirk and say, "Of course there are no rumors, it's more student apathy." Nonsense, that's too easy a scapegoat. I firmly believe the faculty has, ipso facto, delivered the death blow.

If the faculty reaction was merely a studied ignorance of the Task Force's few proposals, the committee probably could have maintained a superficial viability. However, the reaction, what little I've heard, is extremely deadly. It ranges from insidious obstructionism to blatant egotistical opposition. Those are the only words that describe comments like, "I cannot agree to outright curriculum change. Juniata has done one thing well in the past and I hope continues to do it well in the future, and that is preprofessional training. I must work to preserve that aspect of this institution." Or, "How can I seriously consider the proposal to restructure Division III. They didn't bother to ask me about it."

I can't believe that those are merely the cranky comments of a few sentimental or bitter professors. The lesson of the comprehensives controversy is too obvious. The crass ignoring of the Student Government referendum, the petty politics of a few powerful faculty, and junior faculty tenure in the hands of a few department chairmen forced the seniors to take (and five fail) a revised exam that many faculty admit is less meaningful than the previous year's. If a "majority" of the faculty can manipulate a small part of our educational system so mindlessly, what will happen if the Task Force calls for a major curriculum revision? The reality of the situation dictates its death.

Although the comprehensives controversy is the most glaring symptom of the overall putrifying, professorial attitudes on this campus, I think it is enlightening to mention a few other symptons I face daily. For example, the petty intra-departmental feuding and personal vendettas apparent earlier in the Sociology Department have become more popular, most recently affecting the Geology Department; or, the blatant fiscal irresponsibility of the Biology Department which enjoys crying, "understaffed, understaffed," but wastes thousands of dollars on an atomic absorption spectrometer which is a poor (at present inoperative) duplicate of an $8,000 operative instrument available in another department (the AAUP Salary Survey for 1968-1969 lists Juniata's average salary for full-time faculty as $9,467), or finally, the pomposity of the Nature of Man Staff who try, much like Julius Hoffman, to judge (and penalize) a person for his lifestyle (morals, ethics, politics, etc.) without being subject to that same judgement hemselves.

This is the kind of institutional, academic assininity we students face every day. It has killed our educational creativity and bred the dispair that causes apathy. President Stauffer was right when he said, during Spring Convocation in January, that the attitudes and policies of this institution must be a reflection of the attitudes and policies of those who make up the institution. Decaying attitudes and actions produce a decaying institution. The Task Force died of internal putrifaction.

That's how it is. My original reason for writing an article in this newspaper was to announce two general student and faculty meetings to discuss the Task Force curriculum proposal. This may seem strange since I have little hope for the Task Force's present effectiveness. However, existential dispair breeds hope through action. READ, RAP, and PRAY over the proposal (you have it or have access to it.)

Cont'd on page 3

The Vikings are coming—down the Raystown Branch of the Juniata River. These stalwart fellows are actually Juniata students who participated in and won last Saturday's Raft Regatta. There are (from left to right): Vic Rini, Eric Woodworth, helmsman Fred Becker, Doug Harman and Don Hockman.

What's Happening

Friday, May 1:
Eastern Poetry Reading Festival at PSU
Rock Concert,
8 p.m. Football Field
Fireworks,
10 p.m. Football Field
Movie, "Carousel,"
12 a.m. Alumni
Saturday, May 2:
Baseball, 1 p.m.
Track, 1 p.m.
Outdoor Steak Fry, 1:30 p.m.
May Day Dance, 10 p.m.,
Oller Hall
Sunday, May 3:
Joint Art Show,
Shoemaker Galleries, 2 p.m. continuing through May 16,
Ceramics by Jack Troy,
Watercolors by Barnard Taylor,
Etchings by Bruce Schaboken, prof. of Art at PSU.

Student Play,
"Don't Drink the Water",
Oller Hall, 2:30 p.m.

Concert, 8:15 p.m. Oller Hall
Guest Artist, Robert Humper, pianist. Accompanied by Dr. Robert King, Mrs. Mary Ruth Linton, Ann Honsacker and Juniata College Chamber Orchestra
Thursday, May 7:
Ellis Hall Ballroom
Student Chamber Music
Sunday, May 10:
Oller Hall:
Elizabeth Lau, senior recital
Thursday, May 14:
Oller Hall Ballroom 8:15 p.m.
Student Chamber Music Concert
Sunday, May 17:
Oller Hall, 8:15 p.m.
Guest Artist Eleanor Lawrence, flutist
Accompanied by Mrs. Mary Ruth Linton, Dr. Robert King, Mary King, Juniata College Chamber Orchestra.
Saturday, May 30:
Commencement Concert

Earth Day Has Come & Gone

photo by David

by Dave Beahm

Earth Day has come and gone. . . So what?

Over-population has pushed the world to the brink of a massive famine. . . So what?

Pollution has poisoned the air, destroyed the rivers and ravaged the earth. . . So what?

Within 50 years we may all be dead. . . So what?

The Tuesday before Earth Day I attended a lecture by Terry Fabian on water pollution in our immediate locale. Rather lengthy but informative, the lecture did an excellent job of presenting many of the problems of water control in laymen's language.

I was dismayed by the fact that the maximum penalty for industrial water pollution in Pennsylvania is $5000, disgusted to find that funds available to fight state-wide pollution have been reduced during the past two years and shocked to learn that the Juniata River compared to other rivers is a "clean" one.

Wednesday morning, as part of the ecology drafted-apostle squad sent out to surrounding schools for enrichment and enlightenment (perhaps even conversion), I co-taught a couple of junior high classes. My reaction, similar to that of many other returning students, was that the teaching was very enjoyable, but there was much doubt that anything tangible had been accomplished. The most common question by the junior highers seemed to be, "What can we do now to stop pollution?" And the answer. . .?

At noon we were treated to a meal Chinese style to see how "⅔ of the world eats." The deterioration in food quality, quantity and diversity over the past few weeks has been so complete that some students probably didn't notice any novelty in the "starvation" effect. I left the dining hall quite full (there's always peanutbutter-and-jelly sandwiches) if not quite satisfied—a rather ineffective gesture at best.

Wednesday evening a panel of polluters and all-round problem "experts" asked and answered questions about the thousands of known problems of pollution and the thousands more now emerging in an attempt to halt it. Once again we were swamped by the amazingly large number of things we should never use or do; after all "everything affects everything else." As usual, I left the meeting feeling very concerned and ready to take action.

What was I concerned about? Where did I want to lend my support?

As I thought back over the day, all I could remember was the hodgepodge of pollutions I had heard about, the problems occurring when people desire eight children, the strength of industries in Washington and around the nation to get what they want. The fact was that after a whole day of discussion I was no closer to helping to solve a single major problem of pollution than I had been before. I knew many more problems, but was not a step closer to one solution.

I am told not to worry. We are only in the first stage of the anti-pollution campaign—the education phase. My fear, however, is that we cannot educate first and ask for volunteers second. Showing people their desparate situation without giving hem at least a token chance to respond is the surest road to apathy a movement can take.

I'm not speaking of starting anti-litter campaigns. Susie Spotless has been around for years: as a partial measure it is commendable, but as an effective anti-pollution tactic, it leaves a little to be desired. I don't mean another report by the League of Women Voters on local pollution: this, too, is a fine idea as a starter, but investigations take time and people don't stay excited forever.

I believe Dr. Cherry asked the most pertinent question of the panel when he asked for an order of priorities: since we obviously can't solve everything at once, what do we do first and when can we start? The question seemed to slip by unnoticed.

Simply to tell a population that it is in trouble or evn to enumerate these troubles is not enough. Someone, somewhere must come up with a set of priorities which can involve in immediate action those who are now extremely concerned.

Cont'd on page 4

Letters to the Editor

An Open Letter

April 30, 1970

Mr. William Brandeau
Director of College Center
Juniata College
Dear Mr. Brandeau,

Recently while I was on duty you came into your office to do some work on some social event and mentioned to me, that you thought the snack bar lounge was a mess, and to start enforcing all of the house rules immediately. I told a few students to put on their shoes, others to either pick up some textbooks from the floor, or I would remove them to the coatroom. Before I did this fourteen people using the lounge area. Five minutes after ther were three people using this area. I inquired of you that if, for the first time this year by anyone, the house rules were supposed to be enforced to the letter, would they be enforced as such throughout the rest of the year. You answered in the affirmative. This, besides being an absurd statement, is a direct contradiction to a statemen you made at a Center Board meeting, during which the house rules were being formulated. At this meeting you expressed the desire to have the rules flexable enough that each night manager could be "responsible for Ellis Hall" in a manner which suited him best.

In another coversation you mentioned that you have been disappointed with the night managers, especially in the past few weeks, and that you have given serious consideration to replacing the night managers next year with a permanant night time employee from the town. First, you have never consistently told the night managers what you want, so that whatever one does the chances of being wrong are still great. When you refered to the last few weeks, I assume that you were refering, in part, to the breaking of the glass on the pinball machines. Before the first one was broken you said not to worry because they do not belong to us. The second one was broken on a night when I was on duty. I had checked in the pinball room at 10:50 a nd had gone downstairs to post the next day's activities (a duty of the night manager). I came back up at 11:20 and found the glass broken. Obviously a permanent employee could could not have done anything to prevent this. The third point is that in a time when school costs are rising you are going to reduce the number of jobs available to students by hiring someone else from the town.

When I was first hired I was enthusiatic to try to make Ellis Hall a student center despite having an absurd building and impractical furniture. Since then you have been fluctuating between a philosophy of using the building, having fun and admitting the subsequent breakage and restricting the use of the building, having less fun but with nothing getting broken (if you don't use a building it will last much longer). An example of this was the first time Ellis Hall was used for the students this year, during Colloquy. About three o'clock Sunday morning we were cleaning from High House and you told me to wake up a student who was sleeping on a coach in the lounge and have him sleep on the floor right next to the couch because it was against the rules to sleep on the furniture.

To match your indecision as to how to run the student center there have been two types of night managers. There are those who want strict enforcement of the rules and those, like I, who prefer to evaluate a sttuation and act accordingly. This has led to a rather constant expectation of a letter telling me not to report to work.

I find it no longer possible to work under these constantly changing circucstances and though I need the income the job has brought me, I hereby submit my resignation effective as of May 1, 1970.

Respectfully,
James H. Plitt

"An Athlete's Remarke"

To the Editor:

I'm writing this article in response to four years of unnecessary criticism and verbal abuse of the Juniata athletes and their "misbehavior"(?). No doubt such abuse occurred in pears preceeding, but I have only been a student at Juniata for four years, so it is these years on which I'm commenting.

I want to make it clear that I'm not "crying in my beer". I can withstand valid criticism as well as anyone, but criticism which is based on other people's shortcomings and hang-ups, I will not tolerate.

This is the nature of the majority of unjust critisim of Juniata athletes by our "fellow" students. Notice I said majority not all berause sure some athletes mis-behave. But does this give a student the right to label a whole team as "naughty"? Don't non-athletes misbehave, too? Yes, they do, but nothing is ever heard or mentioned about their behavior. However, when an athlete mis-behaves, look out! They put him up on the cross and that doesn't mean he is unfairly punished by the administration. They, are the hypocritical students who make their worthless, ignorant comments about the individual and, in turn, the whole team is labeled. When a student asks another student what (one) athlete mis-behaves, the answer is always one of those football, basketball, or baseball players, never the individual identified by name. How unfair can the students be to the rest of the dedicated players who are out on that hot field, sweating their butts off trying to win for Juniata or make other people proud of Juniata? It's a shame and rather sad that unjust criticism prevails over the athletes' intentions.

A Juniata athlete is in a unique position on our campus. He is practically loved on contest days, everyone seems to be his friend, how about off the field, after the game, though? All the chummy relations are gone and he is pictured as a lug, stupid, obnoxious bully (which on the field is excused). Well, if you really believe Juniata athletes are like this, go to a "real Jock" school where they are purple and fur-lined to observe athletes' behavior. Our critics would blow their minds because either they wouldn't know what to talk about first or their speech would fall on dead ears.

Students unjustly criticise the athletes because they are jealous. Athletes are in the "limelight", crowds of people come to watch them perform. As a result, those who do not have this opportunity, criticise. Students are envious of the boy who can participate in a college sport requiring both mental and physical ability. Besides needing some mental ability to play, a certain amount of mental ability is needed to maintain Juniata's academic standards. An athlete has to be and is, a student first, because the days of the "dumb" athlete is college are gone. Athletes have an added burden to achieve academically with many hours a week being passed in practice and games. Others may utilize this time to study.

I realize other groups are pnjustly ciriticized on campus, but criticism directed toward the athletes has long met without any opposition. I regret that I didn't write this article before to at least show that athletes are studenss who can respond to abuse. Sometimes, I wonder how much criticism there would be if our athletic teams were small college champions. (disregarding those students who don't "dig" athletics.)) Be hip-look at the athlete as an individual student and know the case before you remark, for there are many better by-products to be gotten from athletics than cheap criticism.

Harry Gicking
Co-captain 1969
Football Team

An Athlete's Reply

To the editor:

In this reply to the article written by Nancy Shedd, I would like to elaborate on the supposed truths concerning activities of the Athletic Department. I think first of all that Mrs. Shedd should realize that only in college can one be given the opportunity to participate in team sports. The participation in team sports includes traveling by bus and car to other institutions which could never be payed for by some athletic organization with the exception of professional sports. The school then provides an opportunity for an experience (sports participation) which could never be possible to the large majority of people.

To take a trip to see a ylay in New Yor, or the recently displayed Van Gogh Exhibit in Philadelphia doesn't require the special services of institutional arrangement. I agree it would be ince to have a bus to take everyone to seethese affairs but realistically "you don't get something for nothing." If you think varsity sports participation entails no work, then, my dear, you are more naive than I can imagine. The amount of work put into preparation for the events that the bus and car rips involves, I'm sure makes each individual's fare riding on the bus something very exorbitant.

I now willelaborate on some of the supposed facts.

A) It seems you are falling into a common category when you remark on atheletes and "all their special benefits." Sure atheletes are recruited because they have special abilities outside of the classroom, but they also have to meet the academic requirements before they may enter Juniata. Those who have recognized talents in the fine arts of which you speak are recruited just the same to schools like Moore College of Art, Antioch College, and Philadelphia College, and Philadelphia College of Art and are given full scholarships not grants-in-aid.

B) Mrs. Shedd said, "Do you realize that Juniata students talented in painting or potting or piano have to pay for instruction, but that atheletes get coaching and equipment free—not even a breakage fee?"

I reply: anyone interested can enroll in courses in ceramics, music, and art here at Juniata. Credits are given for successful completion of the requirements of these courses. The instructors are paid a salary just as any other instructor in any division. Courses in phys. ed. are offered here at Juniata of which no credit is given. The instructors (who for the most part coach intercollegiate sports) are paid a similar salary. A large percentage of our tuition pays for salaries of faculty, staff, and administration, therefore we pay for all instruction whether in art or physical education. We pay the coach's salary whether athelete or non-athelete, whether one decides to take advantage of the extra-instruction (in this case, the coaching of specific sports). It's not the school's or atheletic department's fault. Everyone can go out for a sport! If one takes courses in the fine arts or goes out for sports, it has nothing to do with paying for art instruction or getting "free" coaching. The connotation of the word free is not clear, I have responded to it as it seems you have operationally defined it.

The previous areas of discussion A and B I felt needed touching up. I myself feel that the greatest good in life comes from a "sound mind in a sound body." We are given only one body and we are doing our creator injustice if we don't use it to its fullest capabilities.

Tom Berger
Co-Captain Track Team '70
Executive Officer J-Club

That Frigid Building

To the editor:

Ellis Hall is a topic about which I have a definite opinion, despite your doubts.

There is really very little that my opinion can do to change Ellis Hall—that frigid building which apueals so to alumni—but since you have asked, I will give my humble opinions.

Ellis Hall does have a large kitchen and a beautiful back window.

Now for a few suggestions of changes to be made. I have no violent objection to music being piped into all the rooms, but I do take offense at being drowned out by blaring music in the middle of a conversation. I also cannot see the need for a juke box in Super Tote, when there is obviously no need for more noise and confusion. (It's not very enjoyable to listen to two different songs playing at the same time.)

A second area which could be improved upon is the game room. My suggestion is to rid the game room of those abominable machines and replace them with the furniture that occupied the room previously. I actually would rather spend a relaxing evening playing cards and talking with friends than inserting coins in machines that "beep" and have pseudo-accidents in a dark room where conversation is the exception rather than the rule.

The warm, friendly atmosphere that presided in Totem Inn is lacking in Super Tote by the nature of its design. Boothes that enclose a few people and separate them from many other hardly permit a friendly atmosphere. The lack of a pleasing atmosphere is the essence of my dislike for the building. When I enter the building I have the feeling that it (with the possible exception of the snack bar lounge) was totally emerged in some cleanser which sterilized it from the air conditioning equipment on the roof (oops! that used to be on the roof) to the white wall of the post office lounge.

Finally, I would like to see Ellis Hall turned into a real college center rather than the post-high school play area it is now.

Susan Griest

Constructive Criticism

Dear Mr. Harriger,

I am intrigued that you are so concerned with the desires of the students at Juniata College; but, tell me — what are you going to do wih this earth-shattering revelation (should you ever accomplish this Herculean feat) with which you would like to have us believe you are so genuinely involved? All right. You finally know the desires of every student on this campus. So what? Can you really be so naive as to believe that merely by knowing what the students want we can improve his college? I certainly hope not. And even if you can do something to improve Juniata College with this trifle of information, are you going to lead this crusade?

You stated in your article that, in response to student "comments and criticisms asking for a more editorial and commentary-type paper," the last Juniatian was "two pages of editorials and feature articles striking out against the institutions. . .of this college." I would like to point out that editorials may also be constructive; and, perhaps to your surprise, they may even be written in praise of something.

You also complained of the lack of response to articles you had written concerning athletes' grooming standards. May I suggest that perhaps if you had devoted your time to something of just a teeny bit more significance you might have received better response. Don't take me wrong! I'm all for an Athletic Bill of Rights. I'm merely suggesting that you spend your time writing articles of a more academic nature.

You also made the brilliant statement that students "aren't apathetic, but aren't really interested in making any changes." Isn't that a bit of a contradiction? What is apathy if not lack of interest?

In a last effort attempt to shame us into action, you present an either-or proposition: "Do the students really want a newspaper, or do they want a guideline for their lives." I would suggest to you, Mr. Harriger, that if I decide not to have a newspaper, I will continue to guide my own life, thank you.

Do you really care about what the students of Juniata College want? Or are you confusing the word empathy with the word sympathy (an attribute you have already given to your fellow studdents)? Are you sincere in your request for student response to articles in the Juniatian (excuse me, Rennaissance), or are you merely bidding for something to fill up the pages of this paper, which has found itself in a perilous state of confusion these past two semesters?

Respectfully submitted,
Roger D. Maki

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College
Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED NOV. 6, 1924

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891

ADELE ABOUTOK, co-editors
DAN HARRIGER,
CYNTHIA CARLSON, news & feature editor
JANET MASON, copy & proof editor
RICH SMITH & WILL SCARLETT, circulation
WILLIAM DAVID, photography editor
JOEL SCHANTZ, business manager
RICHARD ABLARD, advertising manager
SUE BERMEL, layout editor
VALERIE DERRICKSON, art & coordinator

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Alice Herncane, Donna Roppelt, Steve Wesley, Chuck Bates, John Evrard, Joan Eisenhart, Judy Craft, Dave Kichula

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000

Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVI, No. 20

May 1, 1970

Art Is A Craft . . .

Reality Rather than Visibility

by Barnard C. Taylor

Art is a craft and one of the most interesting aspects of art is the relation of the artist to materials; paint, paper, brushes, clay, stone, metal, etc. Involved in this relationship is his mechanical ability, his control over his hands and fingers as well as his conceptual range.

As long as I can remember I have been attracted to water colors and in particular to what happens when the ransparent color soaks into a piece of fine hand made paper as the brush moves quickly over the surface. Artists have similar reactions to paint, clay, copper and other materials.

The history of water color is almost exclusively recorded in England and the United States although French and German artists used the medium as well, but never simply for its own sake. When I visited the Victoria and Albert Museum in London a few years ago, I was delighted to find a survey exhibition of English water color painting. It ranged all the way from Rowlandson, Blake, Cotman and Constable to Francis Bacon and other moderns.

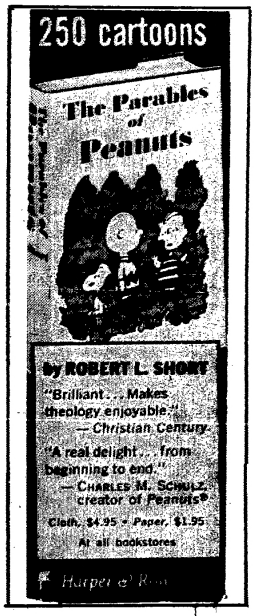
Water color has been equally popular with American artists. Our style, however, is characterized by more bravura and technical facility than is the case with the typical English painting. The leading exponents of this American style are John Singer Sargent, Winslow Homer and Andrew Wyeth. An equally impressive body of work in water color includes that of Charles Demuth, John Marin and Charles Burchfield.

I was fortunate enough to be born into a family with two successful magazine illustrators, both of whom had great facility with water colors. As a boy I was awed by their ability to capture a scene with a minimum of strokes and color. I have been attracted to the medium ever since and in the past few years have finally come to feel that it is "my own."

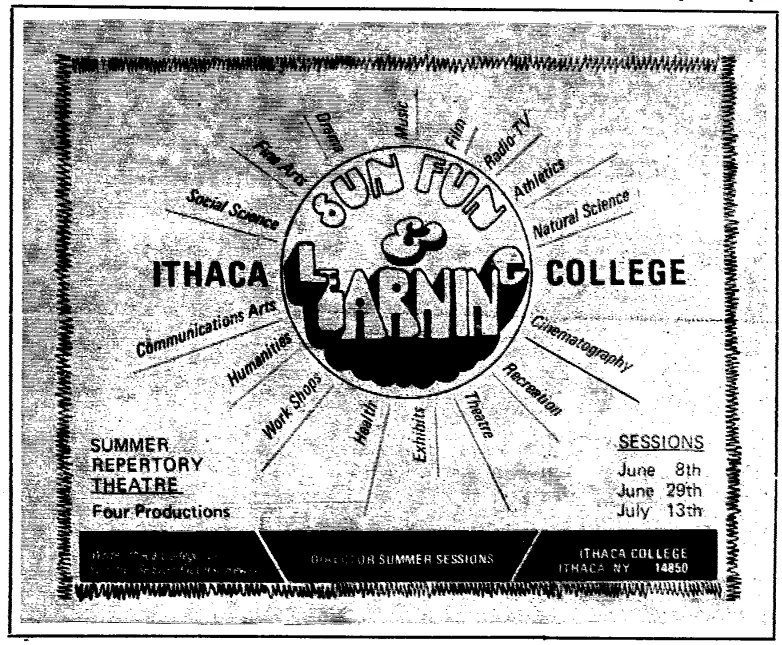
The water colors in this exhibition, like the one two years ago, are far removed from the naturalistic style of Winslow Homer. They attempt, instead, to exploit the medium and o make a very personal st.ement about reality as I experience it. As Paul Klee wrote: "We are concerned with reality rather than with the merely visible."

The immediacy of water color appeals to me. A visual symbol emerges from my memory and experiences under the action of the brush with a directness hard to match in other materials. Painted during the past two years, I hope that these water colors will have something to say to each interested viewer.

Ed. Noe: Visit the Taylor-Troy joint art show in Shoemaker Gallery beginning Sunday, May 3.



Applications are now being accepted from married students for the position of residence hall coordinator for 1970-71 academic year. Please come to complete an application form from Dean Maxwell's Office in Brumbaugh Launge.



—Oh Blivion— Bringin' It All Back Home

by Marta Daniels

(For Sally, Chris, Carletta, Steve, Earl, Barb and Ralph)

. . . . .and so. . . . .tryin' to get it all together, up the mountain 8 went—blues greens yellows—the river below bending bent on twisting eternities to time while the wind wept and the sky fell—on8 freaks—8 on a volks flying forsythia and. . . flags. . .of America, moody blues, and my country tis of thee if you want it—come and get it—get it the song said—up the mountain bringin' it all back home in blues and greens and yellows—and at the top, one well-used saw mill: machines and all-ready-made hiss-tory hacked and letched from lumber and the living: abandoned. quiet. leaving the 8 a 200 ft. high-pile of discarded dust to dig—to be dug deeper than dylan or dope or the height of hell below the oh blivion. And the 8 looked down from their 200 ft. high-pile of dust—down through the marathon of sun and moon and mystery, north pole and pain and said—FINALLY: A PERSPECTIVE! And oh they cheered and cheered and cheered for at least one-hundred-and-nine-ty-seven years when suddenly someone cried Look Everybody! The maggots are ruling the streets—with pot-glazed eyes they stare at the glistening sidewalks silent as cinder blocks and cement cemetries oh blivious of the sunshine. Forsooth, spake the 8, why are you not out on the beach with the sand or the grass with the trees or the mountain with the moon? But from Oh Blivion there was no answer. And looking down the 8 saw no beach, no grass, no mountains . . . . . PO-LLUTION someone coughed. Maggots, they said, trying once more, how cum you gotta clutter up the sidewalk like that—go to a movie or something—take up bowling they said. But from Oh Blivion, there was no answer. And looking down from the 200 ft. high pile, the 8 saw the maggots shuffle softly into a manhole—the buildings falling in gentle harmony crushing $25 worth of fresh cherries, not to mention the deaf but kindly dwarf who sold pornographic pencils from the phonebooth on the corner. And someone on the 200 ft. high-pile said its the POP-YOU-LAY-SHUN CON-TROLL! Just watch the maggots now with one accord as they stick their collective fingers into their collective noses and ponder the meaning of the world. Meaning, did you say meaning?—Well then, the problem must be with ED-YOU-KA-SHUN. No! No! cried another among the 8, it's certain they have ears and can listen and having heard would surely not exist as they do. So the problem is CO-MUNE-I-KA-SHUN. The Medium's the Mess—that's it! I disagree said another from the 200 ft. high-pile; it's not that they don't have ears, but for the guns and grenades over there in that little asian country they can't hear anything—and the smoke's so thick from our bombs they can't see anything either. No one can. So it's war and—no, it's population!—no, it's pollution!—no, education! — no, communication! NO! NO! NO! and so. . . .we've been sittin' here on top of a 200 ft. high-pile of discarded dust tryin' to get it together, lookin' down, down through the marathon of sun and moon and mystery, north pole and pain bringin' it all back home, bringin' it and if you want it—christ—come and get it.

The United States Is Not The World, Study Abroad

by J. Gauvin, Chairman, French Department

I wonder if all students realize the potential value of the BCA program as a part of the total Juniata experience?

There is a desire for change among the students and among the faculty. Students are crying for courses which are more "relevant and meaningful." The College, realizing that many methods of approach to the old established disciplines are outmoded, is trying to revamp the structure so that the various disciplines are more integrated.

Part of the students malaise is a desire to "get out into the world," to be in contact with oher kinds of people. There is an increasing awareness hat the United States is not the world. Connected with this is a complete disenchantment among youth with our past foreign policy which has been based on provincial attitudes and self-interest. A new breed of people in government is much needed.

Increasingly, United States businesses are expanding abroad and readily admit that they consider the foreign market to develop into one even greater than the domestic one. Personnel with a second language and a broad base of understanding of cultures other than ours will be needed to man the far-flung branches.

Our students abroad go to institutes connected with the foreign universities. The studies are at two levels, and the students are tested upon arrival and placed at the appropriate level. In the past, most students have placed at the middle level, with only the most advanced students at the upper level. It is important that everyone realize the great advantage to the student, and ultimately to Juniata's reputation, that he be ready to do work at he upper level. Ironically, his is especially true for non-language majors, for students in the upper level are permitted and encouraged to take courses at the Faculte: What this means is that he then would be able to take courses in his own major—psychology, geology, history, and so on. An additional advantage is that he will be with native students in the regular foreign university system (although he would be evaluated separately), rather than at the Institute with other students. Thus such a student could accumulate some credits in his major even though he is not on campus.

I fear that the prospect of arranging the programs of a student who elicits a desire to spend a year abroad "boggles the mind" of faculty who counsel and they may take the line of least resistance and say that it just cannot be done without a session of summer school, an extra semester on campus, and so on. By providing you, the students with the requirements for acceptance into the jrogram, I am hopeful that you will be able to see more clearly how you could work out a year abroad for one of your majors.

In the past it has been required that students have completed the language requirement and possibly have taken the conversation course. However, these students normally do not place above the middle course, which dooms them to a year of grammar and low-level literature courses. It is desirable to place in the upper level. In order to do this he must take some intermediate courses during his sophomore year. Of course, these courses would count for distribution or for a very interesting collateral.

Since the intermediate courses taken on campus must be taken during the sophomore year, it follows that a student must have complete the prerequisite, the second-year course, before entering his sophomore year.

Ed. Note: If you would like more information concerning Juniata's junior year abroad program, see Dr. Miriam Schlegel, the BCA coordinator, at her office, Room 306 in the Academic Building.

Antique Show

Don't forget to attend the antique show and sale sponsored by the Huntingdon Music Club on May 8 & 9 at the Huntingdon Arts Center. Show hours are 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. on Friday, May 8 and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturday, May 9. Admission is $1 and tickets may be purchased at the door. Coffee and sandwiches will be available at the show.

Task Force Death

Cont'd from page 1

RESURRECT THE DEAD TASK FORCE. ACT. Come to the FACULTY CLUB, THURSDAY, MAY 7, 7:30 P.M. BRING SOME LIFE. The faculty and Task Force members who take curriculum reform seriously will be there. Hear and criticize the SUB-COMMITTEE REPORTS. THURSDAY, MAY 14, ALUMNI HALL, 7:30 P.M. COME TOGETHER — RESURRECT THE DEAD — AFFECT JUNIATA'S FUTURE — YOUR FUTURE — DO IT!!

AUTHOR'S NOTE: Though most of my comments mave dealt with Division III, I'm well aware that the situation is equally bad in the other Divisions. Those faculty who may feel personally incensed I have purposely avoided names, they aren't necessary) may reply to me personally. Box 61) However, I'd prefer they be addressed to this newspaper.

In Concert — Pentangle

May 5, 8:30 p.m.

Memorial Gym

Special Sports Commentary . . .

Theory in Athletics

by Dave Kichula

In an age of critical appraisal of even the soundest of America's institutions, athletics has been assailed from all sides: for its crude non-intellectualism, its crass glory and its irrelevance to today's problems. It is hoped that these accusations have not been based in ignorance or thoughtlessness. Before we can question a situation, we must investigate certain crucial aspects, we must know what is involved, or we will be forced to back up our charges with nothing but soggy toilet paper.

What is athletics? We can answer with examples. The high school middle linebacker fighting to stop the onslaught of the opposition, his body weary and aching but unrelenting in the ominous dusky shadow of the goal posts. Or the gutty miler burning the track, lungs on fire, to beat a Marty Liquori or a Keith Colburn. Or the graceful pole-vaulter coordinating uncountable muscles in majestic brilliance to clear 16 feet. It is more than physical effort, for strength must be summoned from deep inside to go on when your body cries for rest. This strength has long been with man: the Indian survived on his raw physical assets: the white man was confronted with a frontier, and his innate desire demanded that he strive to conquer.

There came, however, new times. The wilderness was gone and the fight for survival subsided in the face of civilization. But the need for physical stimulation remained, and the conflict of man vs. nature fell to the ultimate challange, man vs. man. No doubt this was the catalyst behind the original football game between Princeton and Rutgers back in 1869. Physical challange; not war or hate but rather a struggle for personal pride. One might wonder at the justice of immortalizing this day. These heroic figures may simply have been lazy slobs like the rest of us who just didn't feel like studying on that particular day. The point is that the game was played to satisfy a personal need, to stimulate the pride that is such an inherent component of this egocentric organism called man.

And now we have progressed 100 years, and somehow certain foreign materials have been added to the originally pure element, especially at our institutions of higher learning. Colleges recruit athletes much like General Motors recruits engineers, with the athlete many times negotiating the better deal. Athletics has long been recognized as a source of almost unlimited financial profit, and the coaches, the alumni (those proverbial fascist alumni) and the custodians all do their part to insure its continuing prosperity. The situation on this level has assumed all the characteristics of business. It shall be referred to as physical enterprise, distinct from pure athletics.

The small college scene demands our attention, for it is here that hope lies. For unknown reasons these schools have attempted to emulate the physical enterprises, recruiting and scholarshipping just like the big boys. The practice is normally defended by citing the infinite values of competition, physical exercise and challenge. We see, however, that the argument is in defense of pure athletics, whose value is obvious. There must be other factors responsible for the adulterated position of athletics on this level. Doubtless the dollar and the possibility of prominence play a part. Whatever the reason, athletics will not return to its virgin state until the real purpose for the activity is rediscovered.

And that purpose bears reiteration— the need for personal physical challange. It is my personal pride against yours. Team loyalty is artificial, for the only loyalty is to oneself. I shall strive for a team victory because my personal pride demands success, not because the walls of dear old Rah-Rah U. will collapse if I don't. I meet this conflict to satisfy a personal desire for victory. I, and only I, am responsible for my conduct, appearance, and performance, for I am out to meet a challange. Realization of these facts will return athletics to its most pure humanness. It is time the individuality of a man at his moment of greatest challange is appreciated, and encouraged instead of stifled. If this individuality cannot be accompuished at an institution of 1200 students, then where can it?

A Public Announcement

Attention Housewives and Bachelors: Do not use the latest Proctor and Gamble new micro ensign action cleaning agent: ALLENWOOD. Help stop pollution: the prison cells, which go into the product on the assembly line are reputed to unlock extra tough stains and clean out extra heavy dirt, but his is false advertising and subject to national scrutiny — in addition to the fact that hese cells do not decompose. What the cells contain — a natural resource called human beings are not dispensable,, cannot be thrown away and tend toimpotence if not released in the wash immediately. ALLLENWOOD is using up a very important natural resource, and the Committee on National Emergencies and Household Words will conduct a Clean-Up Campaign this Sunday, May 3, in Lewisburg, sight of Allenwood, to try and stop this Pollution- Population Control Syndrome. The Committee, headed by Abie Hoffman, Dave Dellinger and Dave Hawk will lead 12,000 people from New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore-Washington, in Sunday morning services.

You may join the gathering. A caravan of cars and trucks to ALLENWOOD will be leaving from in front of Ellis Hall 9 a.m. Sunday morning. If you would like to join the caravan in your car or need a ride, please contact Marta Daniels (643-5631 by Saturday. Professor's help needed. Anyone having American flags to lend for the afternoon, please see Marta on that too.

RIGHT ON!

IF YOU WANT A TEACHING POSITION!

CONSULT

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEACHERS AGENCY

merged with The Central Teachers Agency

(a personalized educational employment agency)

Established 1880

205 N. Seventh Street — Phone 433-4133

Allentown, Pa. 18102 — (A.C.215)

Vacancies are listed with us throughout the year.

Vaciencies are solicited-Middle Atlantic States.

Some jobs do not require certification.

Our experienced staff is geared to help you.

On Communication...

The Price Of Silence

by Steve Sarfaty

"A private study group said today that colleges and universities should develop better lines of communication among students, faculty members, administrators and trustees to ease campus unrest.

This was a basic theme of a report issued by the Special Committee on Campus Tension, which was established last fall by the American Council on Education."

New York Times April 26, 1970

Perhaps Juniata ought to take this very seriously. This problem has been brought up in several previous articles. Who knows what the budget breakdown is for room and board? Who knows who made the rule governing atheletes hair length? Who knows the people that are running this campus?

How often do the administrators, professors and trustees come to Super-Tote to talk and listen to us? Sometimes a few profs are there; but these are always the same ones. It was strange that the trustee on the Colloquy panel concerning the future of Juniata never said anything. I would be suprised if he even understood anything. Why is it that students, administrators, professors and trustees don't use this paper more to make this school more like a community. Can anybody tell us the truth about the rumor that said that Division I has been audited and may lose its accreditation if it doesn't shape up. Apparently Juniata has failed miserably to keep the channels of communication open and operating, the mighty rumor reigns supreme.

People complain that chaos is wrong but anarchy and chaos govern the scattered and unconnected bits of communication on this campus. Perhaps the administration and trustees should have permanent columns in this paper. This is our school and I presume that all involved have the right to participate in its life and know what happens to it. Maybe faculty meeting minutes ought to be published. Maybe students ought to start writing articles for this paper. Maybe we should even pay a nickle or a dime for it so it can stay alive.

Playing tricks with or just neglecting communication is a serious business. We want to know what's happening on this campus. Real unrest has yet to disturb the hollowed halls on this hill. However, if the Committee on Campus Unrest was correct Juniata should learn to communicate. If it doesn't come around this institution may have some rough days to come or it may just stagnate. Either way the price for silence is a heavy one; I hope we don't have to pay it!

Critique of Easy Rider . . .

or

We Haven't Blown It Yet

by Marta Daniels

There comes a moment in the life of many an American youth when he becomes suddenly aware that all the old values, the values he has been brought up on and their manifestations have suddenly gone dead; it is the loss of illusion, the feeling of having been taken. During and after the break there is an awareness that the system is all of a piece. Each detail, no matter how minor, a TV show, a professor's line, a remembered scene, sustains and reinforces the whole. This disintegration is nihilism. It is still a continuation of the system by other means: the despair of a form of life is still an affirmation of that life IF it is not transcended. The nihilism that passes through the disintegration of some values— where social dissolution becomes psychological disintegration — leads to suicide. Amphetamines and junk are the methods of suicide, aside from all those every year who put a bullet in their heads. Here also reenters a belief in a nature of man: mistaking the endurance of a condition for its permanence.

Perhaps, of all the films I have seen, Easy Rider has done the most for promoting the feeling of "permanence." And the permanence it expresses is an ultimate condition of existence (values and life styles) which defy change, or even the need for change. The film in living color, reinforced this generation's nihilism, and in so doing, may prove to be the most destructively polarizing flim in dead black and white America. Can anyone of us ever again pass a green truck on a deserted country road in the deep South, without thinking of a loaded shot gun blowing us to oblivion? Or better still, can we pass that truck without derision, cynacism or cyanide in our hearts? ?

Anyone beginning to recognize the poverty of his daily life, will find the following among the alternatives presented to him by the spectacle Easy Rider in its attempt to divert his attention from what actually could change that quality. According to the film:

1) Drug Dealing as the accumulation of money they didn't know what to do with in the first place. The quiet use of drugs to blow your mind into another world permits the uninterrupted acceptance of THINGS AS THEY ARE. And with their money — we saw quite clearly that exchange value had replaced use value as the use they put things to fell prey to hoarding and jelousy.
2) The "Life" of Free Movement (travel) as if from hotspot to hotspot which, in its attempts to find life, only revealed the growing repetitiveness, widespread boredom, and underlying despair and violence of human existence reduced to consciousness of survival.
3) Communal Living which, without a common living reference point, a common project, could never go beyond an agglomeration of bored lives, each finding it impossible to break out of the poverty of his imagination (Yea— "stewing in one's own juice.")
4) Sexual Love came off as either infantile, naive sexual play ("Love down on the farm"), or the more infantile working out of sophisticated sexual fantasies ("Love with the sexual specialist." — but reaked of imitation, ending with the exhausted boredom of everyone involved.

The whole hippie experience reveals and creates various illusions: the awareness of the dissolution of society is the reconstruction of another society; the disintegration of "bourgeois morality" is experienced as sexual liberation (and I mean the freedom to sleep with your neighbor is first of all the freedom of the "anti-bourgeois" who imitates the bourgeois.); and finally, the search through drugs for the euphoria of bored minds is invested with liberatory potential — and nothing more. What seems to have been rejected and destroyed in this flic, is recreated in the piecemeal reconstruction of the world of their fathers, as "culture:" happenings, pop-op art, psychedelic colors and the films of Warhol . . . . . Just think for a minute.

Easy Rider exposed the putrifaction of this century where these "exits-from-boredom" lead our tragic-comic stereo-type here-fool to his logical conclusion. The movie might as well have ended with its beginning. As it sands, it achieved the noteworthy distinction of "revealing" the obvious. There is no life to passive rejection of our world. What the film is careful to leave obscure of course, is the futility of its passive admiration, AND thus the necessity for its active rejection.

If what keeps destroying the quality of our lives is not destroyed and is allowed to linger — because we opt-out, cop-out, or freak-out, it will only solidify its dominance. Then and only then, will we have but ourselves to blame.

Isolation, brought on by social impotence breeds boredom and despair — a sickness that needs distraction to forget itself and remain passive to its obvious repression. The spectacle of Current Events, TV, Movies, Evernew Commodities, Exciting Job Opportunities, and yes, Even Radical Protest provide this distraction, because it takes us away from the real places of change — which start with ourselves first, and always first.

I am very tempted to draw an analogy between the illusions that George and Capt. America lived with and those with which some at Juniata live. Year after year after year, But it is only Some so the analogy will remain general. George and Capt. America opted out, most of us have remained within. In some sense we are perhaps less honest. But the nature of our illusions are the same; there is little difference in either intensity or spirit, between us and easy riders. Just how much is "survival" at Juniata — as opposed to "living." Certainly George and Capt. America were not "living." Think how we need and seek "exits-from-boredom" — just as they did. And when we believe we've found the exits, they are never quite big enough — or long enough — or real enough. And so we take up bowling and do dope and go to movies — guaranteed (if you're stoned) to blow your mind. But listen. To those who allow the movie screen to mediate their pleasure, the act of going to see Easy Rider and the movie itself represent to some a preview, to others a confirmation of a life without intensity, without real passion. Surely we grow weary of this show and evermore impatient to realize that which is not in vain, or outside the realm of possibility.

Did you say we "blew it," Capt. America? ? Not yet we haven't. Not yet.

Earth Day—

Cont'd from page 1

Otherwise the impetus that the movement presently carries will lose all its power; people shall be mentally staggered by the weight of pollution problems and shall feel the puniness of themselves against the "inevitable," the hopelessness of one against the masses of would-be polluters.

And when this happens, all there will be left to say to the cries for help and warnings of imminent destruction is "so what?"

RENAISSANCE

Vol. XLVII, No. 1 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | September 28, 1970

Thoughts on Hijackings

Dr. Kihl attended the 8th World Congress of IPSA (International Political Science Association) at Munich, Germany, August 30-September 5, 1970. His research monograph entitled "Conflict Issues and ICAO: Three Cases" is scheduled to be published shortly in Monograph Series in World Affairs by the Graduate School of International Affairs of the University of Denver, Denver, Colorado. He was moved to write the following article after the full implications of the event became known.

Recently we witnessed the unfolding of the suspense drama in the Middle East occasioned by the seizure and destruction of three international airliners by elements of the Palestinian Liberation Front. As we await further developmnts of the event, I could not help but reflect upon the elements of tragedy and paradox in the situation. On September 6, 1970 I flew from Frank furt to New York and the carrier in which I was a passenger was only one hour behind the departure of that fateful TWA plane taken to the Jordanian desert. As we were going through the custom's clearance, I noticed that the international arrival building of JFK airport was a bit crowded with people anxious to meet passengers. But it was not until that evening as I happened to pick up the New York Times that I became aware of the narrow miss I had that day. My immediate reaction to the headline news was the thought that we surely live in a small world where our lives are closely interwoven and that no longer can we escape from the exposure to the crisis events of the world.

On further reflection of the episode of aerial hijacking, I am particularly impressed by at least the following three features of the event. (1) Somehow the innocent passengers are caught in the cross fire of political conflict in the Middle East and their safety in travel is gravely endangered; (2) the supreme irony of our time (as James Reston recently put it) is the impotence of power, such as that exercised by the U.S. and reat Britain, in dealing with the demands of the guerrilla type organization in another country; (3) the instability and precariousness of the system of international relations is a reality as is especially the weakness of the structure of world civil aviation. Each of these elements may now be elaborated with respect to their characteristics and implications.

For some years the international travel by air has been recognized, at least in the western world, as an acceptable means of transportation. The latest report by the U.N. sources estimated that in 1970 approximately 300 million people would travel by air, approximately 40% of them in international routes. One consequence of the aerial hijacking is that the public confidence in air transportation will sag, at least temporarily, and that the freedom of travel is endangered. There's always an element of risk and adventure involved in air travel as the question of air safety is raised unconsciously in the minds of the travelling public. The excellent safety record of the scheduled airline operations throughout the world is to the credit of the competency of the airline pilots, traffic controllers, scheduled airlines and manufacturers who build safer planes. The fact that the passengers in international flight are detained as hostages by the Arab commandos, however, raises the serious question of air safety which is politically affected. The fact of the matter is that the pattern of peaceful travel, commerce and trade between nations is likely to be disrupted by the intense level of political conflict in the Middle East. The prospect seems gloomy in that unless and until the broader political question of the world crisis is settled, no peace in air travel can be assured in the days to come.

We have been told for a long time that the business of diplomacy is the domain and responsibility of sovereign states. Thus, the private groups within a nation are subordinated to the political authority and sovereign power of the state and the interest of these private groups vis-a-vis foreign governments can be mediated only through the state organs. not since the maritime piracy early in the 19th century, to which Thomas Jefferson is said to have responded by sending the Navy to Tripoli, has the private group such as the insurgents within a nation so effectively exerted its pressure, intimidating and coercing the sovereign states. The great aviation powers like the U.S. and Great Britain are powerless before the threat and demands by the guerrilla group which hold the passengers of several nations as hostages. The limit in the exercise of power, in spite of the possession of an awsome and abundant physical force by the U.S., is a supreme irony of our age.

As the result of destroying the airliners of three western countries the Ralestinian commando group has not only inflicted material damage, in the sum of $40-50 millio wnhich includes the destruction of the Boing 747 jumbo plane in Cairo, but also challenged the effectiveness of the power of the great nations. Allegedly the guerrilla group took this measure so as to dramatize their grievances to the world, especially the opposition to the pending ceasefire talk between Israel and the Arab countries. It is interesting to notice that diplomacy and negotiation between states can be sabotaged by the determined and fanatic minority group. In this respect one could draw a parallel between the kidnapping of diplomats in recent years and aerial hijacking and hostage holding in the Middle East. It is possible that the guerrilla group also enhanced their status and prestige among the Palestinians in Jordan and the occupied territory of Israel. The subesequent action by the Jordanian army under King Hussein's direction injects an element of uncertainty as to the fate of the hostages, but the episode may end up enhancing the cause and popularity of the dissident guerrilla group in the Arab world.

Finally, an anarchic element of the world society has been revealed by the episode of the aerial hijacking in the Middle East. There is a danger that the states are not capable of handling the problem of managing and controlling the conflict effectively, especially in the domain of international relations. As the safety and regularity of international travel by air is particularly endangered, the nations at the diplomatic forum are at a loss and powerless as to how to curb the increasing trend of aerial hijacking. In the absence of a world authority which carries a stick to enforce the decisions, the individual states will rmain masters of their own destiny and no effective international collective measures are likely to come about. Furthermore. it seems that we are entering into a new era of revolutionary ferment and political turmoil in world history. Possibly, there is a resemblance between civil dosobedience and internal turmoil domestically in various countries including the U.S. and the intense level of political conflict throughout the world including the aerial hijacking-kidnapping of diplomats syndrome externally. In such an emotionally explosive and heightened environment, the challenge of our time lies in mobilizing the talent and inventing measures to deal with these and other elements of instability.

As regards the possible solutions and alternatives to the present turmoil, it is hard to say which measures will work out the best. Underlying the seizure of commercial airlines is a deep-rooted source of conflict which is politically motivated. Perhaps the three types of conflict which one observer (Anatole Rapoport) specified as "flights", "games" and "debates" may serve as a framework of further reflection and as a basis for a continuous search for a rational solution. Aerial hijacking as a form of pol tical conflict, as shown by the episode of the Middle East crisis, can best be characterized in terms of both " ights" and ' games." Given the desirable goal of saving the world from needless bloodshed and holocaust, our task

Cont'd on page 3

National Guard at Juniata?

Juniata crumbles at its foundation.

Juniata's Not Alone!

Juniata is not the only college attempting to de-structure their curriculum. The following article was received from the Intercollegiate Press and since the Task Force proposal has been recently released we thought it our duty to print the information in the interest of Juniata students.

West De Pere, Wis.—(I.P.)—Curricular changes, designed to give the St.Norbert College student much greater freedom in selecting courses and his major, will take e fect here this fall.

Each student will have the option of personalizing his major either within a division (humanities and fine arts, natural sciences, and social science) or by combining courses from all divisions.

Most students, however, are expected to select their major along conventional disciplinary lines, although they do have the option of choosing a board interdisciplinary major such as social science, or even o f being a "nonmajor" and receive their degree in general studies.

Grades will consist of A, B and C only, with these grades retaining their traditional meaning. Students whose work is judged to be poor (D) or failing (F) will receive no grade on their transcript.

The system of 120 credits for graduation will be abolished in favor of 32 courses, or four each semester. Eight of these must be selected from divisions outside the student's major division.

A student will have the opportunity to "test out" of most courses. Passing the test, given whenever he thinks he can handle it, he will receive recognition for the course and go on to independent study. I he fails it, he will simply continue in the course.

New divisional and interdivisional majors will be developed by the faculty to reflect contemporary issues and student concerns.

Students who are involved in off-campus work-study projects will receive course recognition for them.

Two days will be set aside each semester for a campus-wide examination of a contemporary issue, patterned after the college's highly successful Vietnam Moratorium Day approach last October.

On that occasion, all sides and shades of opinion were given an opportunity to be heard in whatever method they choose. Great care was taken not to overload the program in any direction.

The faculty rejected only one of the proposals submitted by Dr. Robert E. Christian, the institution's first lay president.

Dr. Christian had told the faculty in his challenge to them that "the survey courses have not outlived their usefulness, they simply have not proved their use ulness." The faculty felt, however that such courses have a legitimate place in higher education.

King Announces Special Project Ensembles Begin

Juniata College will again offer opportunities to all interested students to participate in various small musical groups under the supervision of Dr. Robert F. King, associate professor of music.

The new program, initiated only two years ago, has rapidly gained acceptance as means of attaining personal mode of self-expression in an intimate atmosphere. Involvement in small groups avoids both the pressures of solo playing and the more impersonal, anonymous character of large-group activity.

In the past, student groups have consisted of such combinations as strings, strings and winds, brasses, piano and strings, piano four-hands, and voice and strings. All interested students should see Dr. King, Room 203, Swigart Hall, or leave a copy of a schedule of free hours, with name, campus address, instrument and type combination preferred.

The College will also offer lessons on a private basis in clarinet and flute, and possibly in brasses as well, if there is sufficient interest. Please see Dr. King for further information.

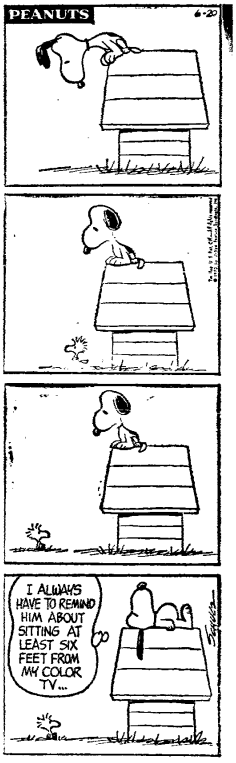
Letters to the Editor

Comps

To the editor:

Change is useless unless one understands what he changes, why and what the resultant reactions may be. The discarding of comprehensive examinations has not yet passed the why stage. Among the students, the seniors especially display the noble motive of disposing of a supposedly archaic educational testing technique. In reality many of them have purely egocentric mitives; getting out of their own comp. Can the faculty entrust credible sincerity to a two-faced and often superficial student argument? On the other hand, can the students believe a divided faculty which seems to have motives equally as deceptive as the senior-driven students? Or can the students believe in the intellect of a few faculty members exhibiting childish behavior over the matter? Is it even possible for the students to believe that the faculty drive to maintain comprehensives is not backed by a half-hearted desire to find security in the status-quo; to cop out on change, to cop out on trying to improve the system?

Blakeman S. Smith '70



Boycott Christmas

Dear friends,

We see as hypocrisy the extravagant celebration of Christmas when there is no peace on earth. So our group feels it is time for a Christmas boycott. We are not going to buy presents this year, nor are we going to receive them. We will do without decorations, and may be fasting on Christmas day instead of feasting.

Instead of spending, we will work for peace on earth by giving our moeny to help make amends for the suffering we have caused — such as by financially adopting a Vietnamese child, and by giving our time to stop the war. We are calling for people to put peace back in Christmas — what better way to observe the birth of Christ than to bring an end to the war this year?

We are counting on college groups to do most of the local work. Here are some possible approaches for organizing the boycott:

1. Contact local clergy — many should be receptive to taking commercialism out of Christmas and putting peace back in.
2. Organize picket lines at department stores and shopping centers.
3. Do guerilla theater on the sidewalk in front of large stores. Dramatize the horrors of war or the contradictions in the thinking of the military.
4. Leaflet at high schools, train stations, churches and shopping centers.
5. Urge fellow students not to go home for vacation unless their parents agree o participate in the boycott.

We would welcome any criticisms and suggestions readers miht have of this proposal

Westport Citizens for Peace
P.O. Box 207
Saugatuck Station
Westport, Conn. 06880

Problems and Change

To the editor:

It is generally evident hat the establishment has serious inherent problems. Juniata appears to be no exception. Almost everyone at JC is aware of many of these: comps, money, student unrest, drugs, student dropout rate, professor black-balling, divisional feuds, deficien social scene, inadejuate facilities to deal with personal problems (counselling), liberal artism, sizitis (controlled? growth) and a horde of others.

If one reduces tha above symptoms to their elemental constituents, two prime problms appear: money and the a titude towards education. The problem of money appears to be extremely complicated and often very subtle. Thus, someone at JC who thoroughly understands the financial picture should make a clear, comprehensive and simple explanation available to all. Obviously an idea of where what money is coming from, where it is going and why the College books are closed should be included. (Even without any knowledge of finances one can see tha the students' contribution to the budget is minimal ($360,000 per annum).

In regard to the a titude towards education, Juniata, like almost every other institution, has a lot of changing to do. Among many other things, the Task Force findings should be given thorough consideration instead of being brushed aside. In addition there should be a shift of emphasis from cu -throat competition to cooperation, from facts to aptitude development, from despotic professor to educational associate and from mass production education to individual tailoring. However, the right of outspoken professors to teach in their own way and voice heir own view without fear of reprisal or stigma must be achieved.

The above does not sound like ideal nonsense, since todays temperament seems to demand improvemnt of the institution. Unless it changes, and changes faster than presently, Juniata may sacrifice its place in the educational world. Such sacrifice migh cause a prolonged decrease in incoming monies. The vicious cycle towards extinction would have begun. If Juniata can not continue to offer a high quality education, it will not matter how many new fancy buildings or student centers are plastered across the campus. The school would loose out to he competition and die.

The achievement of all types of change, including attitudes towards education, is not the job of just the trustees, the Board, the College President, professors or students alone. I must be the conglomerate of all these groups, plus the townspeople, working together, not against one another. It can not be achieved at one Colloquy, one Task Force Day nor one day of panic analysis concerning near tragedy. It must be worked at every day, by everyone. One way of tackling this situation miht be small daily discussion sessions, for everyone, on all problems and he means of changing. Undoubtedly better methods for change can be found, but they must be sought with the greatest possible vigor. Nevertheless, all should be aware that change is useuess unless all understand what is to be changed, why and what he resultant reactions may be. This in itself is a worthwhile education.

The choice is yours — change or face the possibility of institutional decline and eventual extinction. There are . . NO MORE TRICKS".

Blakeman S. Smith —.
the SNAIL '70
Department of Zoology
University of Reading.
Reading, England

McNeal, All ECAC

Mike McNeal, a freshman halfback from Lewistown, ran 53 yards for a touchdown the first time he carried the ball in a college game last Saturday, aiding the Juniata College Indians in their 28-6 opening-game win over Delaware Valley College.

In recognition of his stellar performance, McNeal was named to the Eastern College Athletic Conference (E.C.A.C.) Division III weekly football Star Squad.

Three other Juniata players were accorded Honorable Mention in the E.C.A.C. announcement. They were sophomore halfback Joe Coradetti, of Biglerville (Adams Co.), who scored on a 43-yard run, junior defensive end Ray Grabiak of Mt. Pleasant, who blocked two De-la ware Valley punts to set up Juniata scoring plays, and sophomore quarterback Don Mastrorocco of Greensburg, who connected on five of nine pass attempts for a total of 58 yards.

McNeal's touchdown occurred with 4:15 remaining in the first quarter, while junior fullback Fran Fleischauer scored twice to complement Coradetti's long TD run in the second quarter, giving the Indians a 28-0 lead at halftime.

Delaware Valley prevented a shutout in the third quarter when freshman flanker French Strother stroiled five yards into the Juniata end zone to cap an 11-play, 60-yard drive. he Aggies were unable to penetrate the Indian defense either on the ground or in the air for most of the game, netting only 53 yards rushing and hitting on only 10 of 44 pass attempts for 139 yards.

Nine Juniata backs combined to give the winners 203 net yards rushing.

Starting quarterback Dennis Karli suffered a torn ligament in his left knee early in the game. Having undergone surgery, he will be unable to play for the remainder of the season. Friends may visit him in Room 210 J. C. Blair Memorial Hospital.

The Indians will host another this Saturday afternoon at— Middle Atlantic Conference foe this Saturday afternoon at College Field when the Lions of Albright College invade Huntingdon. Last year Albright lost their home opener to Juniata, 20-7, so they will be seeking revenge on the Indians this weekend. Last Saturday the Lions won their season opener, 7-0, over Lycoming College.

Summer Lament

The following sonnet was written by a student at Juniata College. He feels that the poem reflects "the common lament of all who presently love life." It is dedicated to "those who are sad enough to seek the truth and strong enough to row beside it."

To summer sun I sadly bid adieu
And as the days grow short my heart is sad.
Sweet memories of warm times I once knew
While living life its fullest as a lad.
I often dream of lying 'neath the tree
That sheltered me as time raced swiftly by
And taught me natures mild complacency,
Baptizing me beneath an open sky.
O, I would trade for those years once again
A ransom that sure yould befit a Czar.
For life was ne'er as sweet as it was then
And I so free to dream of realms afar.
As autumn now abbreviates my days
I feel the warmth of distant summer rays.

Scott Leedy

A President Resigns

Eds. Note: The following letter was asked to be printed in The Reniassance by Student Government. The Student overnment realized that one of its duties is to inform the students of the changes in Student Government.

Students and members of the Juniata Collge Student overnment, I am taking this opportunity to formally resign from the Presidency of the Student Government. At this time I wish to express my full and undivided confidence in the ability of Doug Laird to carry on the work already beun. I regret not being able to fulfill my term in office, nevertheless, one must leave when one must.

The personal reasons that I am withdrawing from the job are indeed personal. But to stop any rumors, let it be known that I was "not forced out by anyone, especially by the institution's "administration who deserve admiration; there are others who should be criticize. Be that as it may.

The Student Government is a body whose purpose is to serve, it exists or no other reason. One must stand up or one's rights and opose that which is unfair or unjust. This I have attempted to do — now each of ou must do the same.

Again, I wish to express my admiration and confidence in the new President. Doug isa man who will lead you well, and you are a government that is the best that I have been associated with in three years. Do the job to the best of your mutual abilities and the work will be done well.

Yours,

Jerry T. Eisenhour
September 9, 1970

LITTLE MAN ON CAMPUS

"WORTHAL, I'M AFRAID YOU MISUNDERSTOOD THE 'OUTSIDE' ASSIGNMENT."

=The Renaissance=

Student Weekly at Juniata College

Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED APRIL 24, 1970

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891 and "The Juniatian," established November 1924

DAN HARRIGER, Editor
JANET MASON, copy & proof editor
WILL SCARLETT, circulation
WILLIAM DAVID, photography editor
RICHARD ABLARD, advertising manager
JUDI CRAFT, layout editor
VALERIE DERRICKSON, art & coordinator

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Donna Roppelt, Joan Ehsenhart, Dave Kichula, William Whitehead, Nancy Oliver, Pat Manners

The RENAISSANCE, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000

Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVII, No. 1

September 28, 1970

New Men in Athletics

by William Whitehead

Juniata College is privileged to have in its athletic department two new instructors and coaches, veterans of over thirty years experience. The first is Mr. Jack Swinderman, the basketball and cross country coach. He is now starting his twentieth season of coaching. The other is Mr. Jack Rabine, the Juniata offense coach in football and assistant track coach. He has come to us with twelve years coaching experience.

Swinderman came to Juniata from East Palestine, Ohio where he served as an instructor and coach. A native of Dover, Ohio, he received his B.A. from Muskingham College and served for some years with Dennison University in a capacity similar to that which he holds at Juniata.

Noteworthy to the college is the fact that Swinderman finds, in his first month, that the college community is to his liking. He is very impressed by the co-operation and enthusiasm of the students and faculty. He appreciates the fact that the students are attempting to improve the college socially and academically.

A believer of the philosophy of "a sound mind and a sound body," Swinderman finds that the quality of athlete has improved enormously from the past. There are no more of these stupid clods for which college athletes were once infamous, and still are. The presentday athlete is well-educated. With new sports, there is no reason why the sportsman cannot be above average in academics.

Rabine is formerly a line coach and instructor from Western Michigan University. He has his B.A. from Taylor College in Indiana and M.S. from Western Michigan.

Like Swinderman, Rabine is also impressed by Juniata. Having been accustomed to the anonynity of the large university, he finds the students friendly. He thinks the students are great people.

With the new, sophisticated sports,, Rabine feels that, while it is virtually impossible for the all-round athlete, the experience that young men receive is equal, if not better than previously. As far as sports are concerned, team sports and individual sports are of equal importance but they each require a difference sort of person. If he can do both, all the better.

Of interest to our football fans, Rabine says that our football team is very young. There are no seniors and a large proliferation of freshmen and sophomores. As result the team is flighty and inexperienced but they are dedicated and enthusiastic. They should make a fine team. After last Saturday's victory over Delaware Valley, let's cheer our team on to further victories.

Wastelands Revisited

Ours are the wastelands of history,
The graves of hopes first and last.
Kingdoms and empires are here,
The pyramids, the lost civilizations,
Including the bones of our own.
I had thought to see some design
In the pattern of life, a goal for man.
Yet the ages have brought me here
To wonder in the ruins of worlds,
The splendors now spent and lost.
Surely these are the wastelands,
The deserts interminable and forever,
Dead suns and forgotten destinies.
Then one said to me, as of old:
"Son of man, can these bones live?"
And I said: "Never, no never my Lord!
For these bones are utterly dry,
And these are the final wasted flats
Shelving down to the bitter depths
Where the dead of the deadest lie."
Then the Bright One made answer:
"This is the place where life began,
And in due time will begin again.
The waste place lies fallow
For an age, as though nothing mattered.
Every wasteland is a place of waiting
For the fullness of another time
When the swollen and fecund universe
Will burst as a bud to flower,
As a nest overcrowded with young,
As a womb disgorging new destiny!
Speak no more of the wastelands,
Or of hopes blasted and final.
The desert shall bloom as the rose,
Fallow ground yield an hundredfold.
New kingdoms and empires shall arise,
The towers of nobler civilizations,
And all more glorious than before!"

by Harry A. Brandt

Thoughts on Hijackings

Cont'd from page 1

seems to lie in turning "fights" and "games" into "debates." This is where the relevance of inter-national forum comes into play.

Debate at the international level, through the intergovernmental forum of ICAO (International Civil Aviation Organization) and the international organization of air carriers called IATA (International Air Transport Association), is a safer and saner approach to the problem solving. It is appropriate when the U.S. threatened to take a unilateral action unless a multilateral organization like IATA, a lucrative rate-xing machinery of the international air carriers, can act effectively and speedily on the issue of aerial hijacking. One measure under consideration is to deny the service to the countries which fail to punish andextradite the hijackers. Although I am fully sympathetic with this approach of multilateral diplomacy, we must be realistic enough to recognize that a measure to sanction through the machinery of international forum is too slow and tedious a process and that the U.S. may be forced into adopting an unilateral course of action. The suggested measures to combat the aerial hijacking include: armed guard on board the airliners, search for concealed weapons before the passengers are let on board the plane, rewarding those who report the suspected hijackers, etc. None of these measures will guuarantee a fullproof remedy and eliminate the source of the problem. In the final analysis, only a change in the political climate, i.e., the solution of the Arab-Israeli conflict and others, can assure a permanent and lasting solution to the question of aerial hijacking.

Staff Openings available on "Renaissance"

Apply Publication Offices, basement of Ellis Hall, 7 to 9 p.m. Mon. - Tues.

COLLEGE STUDENT'S POETRY ANTHOLOGY

The NATIONAL POETRY PRESS

announces

The closing date for the submission of manuscripts by College Students is

NOVEMBER 5

ANY STUDENT attending either junior or senior college is eligible to submit his verse. There is no limitation as to form or theme. Shorter works are ureferred by the Board of Judges, because of space limitations.

Each poem must be TYPED or PRINTED on a separate sheet, and must bear the NAME and HOME ADDRESS of the student, and the COLLEGE ADDRESS as. well.

MAUNSCRIPTS should be sent to the OFFICE OF THE PRESS

NATIONAL POETRY PRESS

3210 Selby Avenue Los Angeles, Calif. 90034

Broadway Tickets Half-Price

College students may buy tickets to most Broadway shows at half-price, through a special program of the League of New York Theatres.

Upon the presentation of a student I.D. card at theatre boxoffices, student purchasers may buy a maximum of two tickets at precisely half the regular price. This program, which has been in effect since last July and which has been encouragingly received, does not apply to every performance of every Broadway show, however. The student discount tickets are made available by and at the discretion of each show, depending on ticket demand through the regular channels. Shows that are cur-

Cont'd on page 4

Send a letter to North Vietnam.

Right now hundreds of Americans are being held captive in North Vietnam.

A few prisoners have made it back. They talk about bamboo cages. Vicious beatings. Malnutrition. Humiliation.

But the North Vietnamese will tell us nothing. And it's this silence that makes our appeal more urgent.

For the families at home, there is no word on who's alive. Who's dead. Or even who's being held. There is nothing. Except the anguish of not knowing.

Maybe you can change this. By writing to the one man who can change it: The President of North Vietnam.

Ask him to release the names of prisoners, allow them to write to their families, and let the Red Cross inspect the prisons to insure proper medical treatment and living conditions.

Remind him that he is bound by the 1949 Geneva Convention which his country signed. And by the Istanbul resolution.

North Vietnamese leaders do care about American public opinion. And if they think they can gain something by bowing to it, they will.

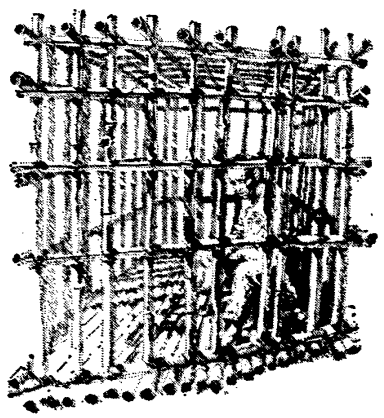
But one letter won't do it. Or a thousand. Maybe it will take millions. So we've got to write now. All of us. And often.

Write a letter tonight. And send it to: Office of the President, Democratic Republic of Vietnam, Hanoi, North Vietnam.

It'll cost you a quarter. But it might save a life.

THE AMERICAN RED CROSS

Maybe they'll open it.



Conference Optimistic About the Future

The 1970 Leadership Conference was held at Blue Diamond Camp the second weekend in September. Invitations were sent to various student groups (Student Gobernment, WJC, The Renaissance, Men's House, etc.) and other interested students. From this conference came the following resolutions. Some seem quite vague, others specific; some serious, others humorous. The list, nonetheless, has been adopted by the Student Government. The Renaissance feels it is the students' right to know what changes may be coming and also how well the Student Government has done its job. The list, may be used as a check sheet —on whether we have the old Student Government or a new "active" Student Government. Ed.

I. Communications
1. We resolve that the Student Government publish the minutes of their meetings and furthermore publish them in an explicit and understandable manner
2. We resolve that the Student Government publish a listing of all members of the government, i.e. Pres., V. Pres., Senate, committee chairmen, etc.
3. We resolve that the Task Force proposal, number 8 on page E-5, "We recommend that the entire wall space opposite the mail boxes in the basement of Ellis Hall be made into a comprehensive. imaginatively laid out, bulletin board. In addition, an imposing out-door bulletin board should be established near Ellis Hall, or on Founders lawn for the listing of main events.", be instituted at the earliest possible date.
4. WWe resolve that the student talk-back show, "Senate Forum", be continued as a vital method for students to express their opinion on Senate policy.
5. We that the Communications Committee increase its responsibility of campus communications to include the origination, organization and stimulation of new means of campus communication.
6. We resolve that the communication committee through the President aid Senators in their duties of personal contact and communication with the represented students.
7. We resolve that a special invitation be extended to both Men's and Women's houses (the most representative bodies on campus) to Student Government meetings.
8. We resolve that sample ballots be made available to the students prior to election day.
9. We resolve that the means of mass communication on campus be made available to campaigning students.
10. We resolve that the Freshmen student advisors and steering committee have the added responsibility of explaining any relevant action of Student Government.
11. We resolve that the Task Force proposal number 10 on page E-6. "We recommend that a campus map be designed and distributed, one which includes the locations of key administrative of&ces, centers of communication (WJC, Renaissance, etc.) and major meeting rooms in addition to the names of buildings. There should also be circulated a listing of which person or ofce is the source on campus of what kinds of information" also be instituted at the earliest possible date.
12. We resolve that academic credit be given to those heavily involved in the workings of the campus communication facilities (i.e. Renaissance, WJC, T.V. program).
13. We resolve that Student Government support the idea of a campus T.V. program and furthermore refer the program to the Communication Committee for the mechanical details.
14. We resolve that the non-pro&t publication The Owl fills a void in the campus life, adding to the academic institution and to the learning experience of the students, both the readers and the publishers. We further suggest that the Student Government support this publication in whatever way it deems necessary and possible.
15. We resolve that Student Government support the Task Force Proposal number 9 on page E-6, "We recommend that the weekly Crier be distributed no later than noon on Monday to all members of the campus community. Moreover, Topics should be published the last week of each month and be distributed to students as well as faculty and friends of the college. Its editorial range should be correspondingly expanded."

II. College center
1. We resolve that a house committee be established to handle events during special occasions, i.e. Homecoming teas, alumni receptions, Center Board specialty nights, preparations and clean-up after dances etc.
2. We resolve to redecorate the ballroom and snack-bar to produce a less sterile atmosphere. Changes such as placing hurricane lamps on the tables in the snack bar, putting in some sort of fireplace and paneling the snack bar area could be implemented. In the ballroom the ceiling could be lowered with some type of special effects and other special effects could be used during dances in an attempt to make the dances more usccessful.
3. We resolve to abolish the 43 cumbersome rules of the center and replace it with one general rule which reads "to be considerate of others and respectful of the building" plus one carry-over which prohibits smoking in the dining hall.
4. We resolve to establish office hours immediately. A one hour period each night after dinner will probably be established for this purpose.
5. We resolve to provide facilities for the operation of a student government used book store.
6. We resolve t oobtain a swimming pool with trading stamps. (6,000 books)
7. We resolve to build an ice-skating rink on the right side of Ellis Hall.

III. General
1. We resolve that Juniata institute a fact finding committee whose committment will be to investigate admission policy and previous admission records with regard to minority groups and underprivileged potential students.
2. We resolve that attempts should be made to make Juniata more attractive to minority group students. This includes letting presently enrolled black students meet with prospective black high school students both on campus and in the high school. Also Juniata should make an attempt to aid these students as much as possible in obtaining all sources of financial aid.
3. We resolve that Juniata should institute as soon as possible a program of Black Studies, using present faculty when qualified, but not excluding the possibility of using visiting professors or appointing black professors where necessary.
4. We resolve that some academic credit be given for choir and band, basing this resolution on these being an extension of the music instruction program.
5. We resolve that the Student Government undertake a student evaluation of departments, faculty, and courses, based on the fact that previously conducted student evaluations have been sporadic add lacking in strong uniform criterion. A steering committee selected by student government will organize immediately to undertake the task of establishing criterion for this evaluation.
6. We resolve that the possibility of extensiaon of the hours of the gym be investigated by the Student Government.

IV. Curriculum
1. We the members of the 1970 Leadership Conference propose that an in depth study of the Task Force proposals be made by the Student Government Senate to be presented in printed form to the Task Force, President Stauffer and the rest of the college community by November 1. We also recommend a display in Ellis Hall on Homecoming as a type of information center for alumni to introduce them to the Task Force proposals.

WE WANT YOU TO JOIN OUR CHURCH AS AN

ORDAINED MINISTER

AND HAVE THE RANK OF

DOCTOR OF DIVINITY

We are a non-structured faith, undenominational, with no traditional doctrine or dogma. Our fast-growing church is actively seeking new ministers who believe what we believe; All men are entitled to their own convictions; To seek truth in their own way, whatever it may be, no questions asked. As a minister of the church you may:

1. Strat your own church and apply for exemption from property and other taxes.
2. Perform marriages, baptisms, funerals and all other ministerial functions.
3. Enjoy reduced rates from some modes of transportation, some theatres, stores, hotels, etc.
4. Seek draft exemption as one of our working missionaries. We will tell you how.

Enclose a free will donation for the Minister's credentials and license. We laso issue Doctor of Divinity Degrees. We are State Chartered and your ordination is recognized in all 50 states and most foreign countries.

FREE LIFE CHURCH — BOX 4039, HOLLYWOOD, FLORIDA 33023

Broadway Tickets

Cont'd from page 3

rently doing capacity business, such as "Applause" and "Hair," are not in a position to offer the discount tickets.

ance. Shows that are ' previewing" prior to an official opening night, a common procedure in the Broadway theatre today, will also offer student discount tickets.

The reduced-price tickets are available both on an advance-sale basis and on the day of perform-

But the majority of Broadway productions, including such established hits as ' Promises Promises," "1776," "Child's Play," "Butterflies Are Free" and "Fiddler on the Roof," are offering the student discounts. Students who wish to take advantage of the program are advised to check the individual boxoffices in advance, to determine where the discounts are available.

Publication Policy

Many students feel that the college newspaper is a paper for the students rather than a paper of the students. It is the policy of this paper to print any and all contributions to the paper, made by the students. The only censoring will be done by the Editor-in Chief and then only that material which contains libelous statements or excessive vulgarity.

Editor

Old Juniata Has New Faces

Dr. Charles W. Schoenherr, dean of student affairs, has added two persons to his staff this year.

They are Miss Janet E. Cumming, associate dean of students, and Mr. Ronald L. Shunk, director of financial aid and placement. Both single, they arrived earlier responsibilities on campus.

Janet E. Cumming

Miss Cumming has been a residence hall graduate advisor at Michigan State University for the past two years. This summer she received her M.. degree from Michigan State. She came to Juniata replacing Miss Dolores J. Maxwell as chief counselor of women students.

A native of Nebraska, Miss Cumming received her B.A. degree in sociology from Gustavus Adolphus College (Minn.) in 1961. She served as a parish worker for Lutheran churches in Duluth, Minn. and Waterford, Mich. before entering Michigan State.

In 1966 she spent three weeks in Japan for pleasure and to explore the oriental culture. She enjoys traveling, writing and reading.

Miss Cumming resides on campus in the faculty club. She may be reached for emergencies during the evening at 643-1057.

Mr. Shunk is a native of Altoona and a graduate of The Pennsylvania State University. He received his M.Ed. degree from Penn State in 1967.

For the past year he has been director of financial aid at MacMurray College, Jacksonville, Ill. From 1967-69 he was assistant dean of students at New York's State University College at Fredonia. At Juniata, he replaces Mr. David C. Lee, who is now at Hagerstown Community College in Maryland.

Ronald L. Shunk

COLOR PRODCTIONS PRESENTS IN CONCERT

RARE EARTH

Ten Wheel Drive

with Genya Ravan

RHINOCEROS

AN OUT OF SIGHT NIGHT

Farm Show Arena Sept. 29 7:00 P.M.

$4.00 — $5.00 RESERVED

Send Self Addressed Stamped Envelope, Check or Money Order To:

Color, Box 336, Harrisburg, Pa. 17108

RENAISSANCE

Vol. XLVII, No. 2 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | October 12, 1970

Earth Survives! . . . For How Long?

by Jean Thompson

Earth Day, April 22, has come and gone. Though the polluted earth is still with us, no one knows for sure how much longer man will be able to live on it. Consequently, a small group of students met last Monday night, September 28, to discuss the state of our environment and to devise ways of saving it.

A letter writing campaign was urged by Cathy Hess and Alice Herncane, the organizing members of the as yet unnamed group. They suggested that such letter writing should be done on the back of paper that has already been used, so as to keep the amount of paper wasted to a minimum. It was recognized that a volume of personal letters to congressmen is needed, instead of petitions.

Alice Herncane brought to the group's attention a bill that is about to come before the Pennsylvania State Legislature. It proposes that the sale of non-returnable bottles in the state be made illegal. The effectiveness of the bill was debated as the bottles could be transported out of state. It was decided to support the bill regardless and encourage people to write their state senators in its support.

An effort will be made by members of the group to contact a glass processing plant that will accept supposedly "unreturnable" bottles for recycling. It is hoped that Huntingdon and the Juniata College campus could then deposit its glass bottles in a bin and have a glass plant collect the bottles periodically.

The idea of picking up litter on campus on a regular basis was debated at some length. Such activity would not get at the causes of the problem: people, but it would reduce the amount of litter allowed to accumulate. Though it was at first thought that people would become more conscious of their own littering and stop, the group concluded that they would instead litter more than usual if they knew someone else would pick it up. No course of action was decided upon.

The environment group will post the time of its next meeting on the bulletin board in the Post Office Lounge. All interested people are welcome. There are things that can be done.

JC Movie Night

J.C. movie night is back at good old Clifton. Like last year it will be every Tuesday evening at 7:00 P.M. for shorts, and the main feature at 7:30. Mr. Kalos has once again agreed to reduce the fees for all Juniata students, to $.75. And don't forget Wednesday, girls will still be admitted half-price.

Selected by a college committee consisting of Ralph Church, Will Brandau, Bruce Davis, and Jack Reitnaur, the following series of films have so far been devised for Juniata students:

Oct. 13—"Oh, What a Lovely War"
Oct. 27—Fellini's "Satyricon"
Nov. 10—"Shame" ("Skammen")
Dec. 8—"If . . ."
Dec. 15—"Felstaff"
Jan. 5—"Zabriskie Point"

The best of the bunch will probably be 'If . . .", a British suspense film about the uprising and revolt of students in an English Boarding School. The Administration is completely overthrown and the students take over all control. "Oh, What a Lovely War" is an anti-war movie starring John Lennon which employs extreme satire. "Falstaff" is connected with Shakespeare's "King Lear", Falstaff being the head conspiritor against the king. "Satyricon" was derived by Fellini from the Roman writer Petronius' book on Rome around 100 A.D. It is primarily a view of the sexual and all other types of wild and vulgar life at that time. The film is loaded with sex and obviously rated X. In a sense, it is an exposition of the other and real side of life in Rome relative to the artistic and pure perspective that Rome is usually associated with.

The Lion

by George Magruder

The lion when stalking his helpless prey,
Does he hesitate and cause a delay
Of the final kill when a single blow
Will end the suspense, lay his quarry low?
Does he just follow, only observe its tracks
With only restrained, intermittent attasks,
Permitting its continuous flow of life
While he the lion, lives in pain and strife
Until frustrated he finally cracks.
For now his quarry can return the fight.
And if the lion can only fight like this,
For fear of a once nonexistant risk,
Should he continue his tries and endeavors still
To catch what he's made an impossible kill,
Increasing his pains to an endless list
By obeying himself against his will?

More New Faces . . .

NEW ON CAMPUS

It was recently announced by Dr. Wilfrd G. Norris, that Miss Janet R. Lewis of Bryn Mawr, Pa. has joined the faculty of Juniata College as an instructor in Philosophy. Residing in Huntingdon at 1807 Penn St., Miss Lewis received her B.A. degree from Wilson College in 1964 and her M.A. degree in Philosophy from Bryn Mawr College in 1968. She was an instructor in Philosophy at Villanova University prior to her appointment to the faculty of Juniata.

Also new at Juniata is a publication called J.C. News. It was designed by Barnard C. Taylor, director of publications and college editor, with the assistance of Mrs. James D. Hunt, as associate editor, and Mrs. John B. Cook and Mrs. George N. Weaver, as editorial assistants.

With five issues planned for the 1970-71 college year, containing information about campus events, sports, alumni activities, and faculty appointments, J.C. News promises to be of interest to alumni and friends of the college.

Persons desiring to receive J.C. News, on a regular basis should write to the Publications Office, Juniata College, Huntingdon, Pa. 16652, including their name and return address.

Miss Janet R. Lewis

Comments From the Frosh

by C. Koval

Ah, that first week at Juniata College. The beginning of a serious period of learning that will shape every freshman's life. Yet, in this atmosphere of maturity and scholarship a little humor manages to creep in . . . .

At an assembly in A101 where the Registrar is discussing registration:

Registrar: . . .and if you come and pick up your schedules at 10:00 A.M. Tuesday, you should be set. Any questions?

Confused Freshman: You say that we just go pick up a card, but if there isn't one we pick up a blank card for another section.

How does one know which section?

Registrar: Pick up a master schedule, sit down, and figure it out.

Another C.F.: What if you can't fit any of the other sections in?

Registrar: go see your advisor.

Last C.F.: If we don't get our schedules until ten, how do we know where to go before that?

Registrar: It doesn't matter. . . .

At Great Epochs of World Cultures in A101:

Mr. Davis: Now we don't care how many times you cut this class. If you can get the material on your own, all right. But please remember to sit in you assigned seats because there's someone in the back taking role. . . .

At one of the dances, social hours, burgers and cokes' in Ellis.

Group of young gentlemen:
"It's so dark I can't see what she looks like."
"They all look pretty nice."
"Ask her to dance then."
"Nah; nah."
"How are you ever going to meet any that way?"
"Okay, then you ask her."
"Nah, nah."

Group of young ladies:
"They keep looking over this way."
"Do you think they'll ask us to dance?"
"Let's walk past."
"They looked at us."
"How do you know?"
"I was watching. Let's walk past again."

In the lunchline:
"My number's 0854."
"I have to see your card."
"But all you do is scratch off another thing on your pad."
"It's the rule; I have to see your card."
"Okay."

In the other lunchline:
"0936."
"Next."
"1058."
"Next."
"0034."
"Next. . . ."

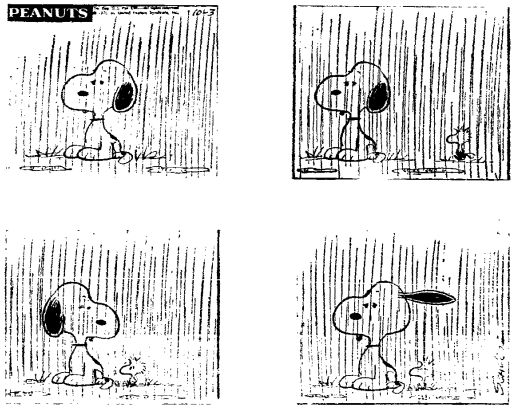
At a typical hall meeting.

Hall counselor: . . .and as you know there will be no freshmen hazing. It was decided last year that it doesn't do any good. So, if any upperclassmen start giving you any trouble, don't make any enemies, but you don't have to listen to them. Now, any questions? Well, then, this meeting is over. Wait! One thing. If the phone rings I want to see all you freshmen answering it."

At a Chemistry lab in C107:
"I need some soap to wash my test tubes."
"Go down and get some from Syl."
"Where does one find a test tube brush?"
"Go down and buy one from Syl."
'Are there any paper towels?"
"Go down and buy a towel from Syl."
"We have to use filter paper."
"Go down and buy five sheets from Syl."

May it be a happy and prosperous year for all. Even the Freshmen.

Explicit directions to confusion



Guest Editor Strikes . . .

by Barbara Duncan

Having attended three Saturday night dances, I hesitate to call them dances; however, an appropriate name has not come to mind. The dance supposedly starts at 9 p.m., but one can come at 10 or 11 p.m., and still not have missed much in the way of music or dancing. Most of the people arrive late, for various reasons, and spend the time talking to their friends.

The arrangement at these dances is consistent: the guys on one side, the girls on the other, separated by the doorway. Throughout the dance a few couples are formed out of this arrangement, but usually the only action takes place during the band break when the guys and girls change sides.

A question arises now as to why the guys who do come to the dance bother coming. Most of them spend the time standing around joking with their friends, and listening to the band. The girls are forced to stand and watch others dance, whether they want to or not. Upon occasion, a girl does get brave and asks a guy to dance, but this usually ends up as a big joke between the guy and his friends. The girl is constantly reminded of it by the strange looks which she receives whenever she sees either the guy or his friends.

Therefore, if these dances are to improve, the guys will have to have a bit more initiative. If not, I suggest that chairs be brought in so that the girls can at least sit down.

Concerning Juniata And Other Things . . .

Dear Juniata Friends:

Beginning with the next issue of Renaissance there will appear a weekly reflective feature concerning the thoughts and experiences of a student at Juniata College. I am that student and author of the article. My name is Kevin Bowers.

The idea behind these articles will not be criticism or local gossip. I would like to produce as clearly and as honestly as possible my own feelings and thoughts concerning my college experience. A topic may center around a specific event or just general reflection on a life-style I have tried to mold here, and perhaps my thoughts will strike a note of familiarity, fear, anger, joy, despair, sentimentality, desire, hope or any other emotional feeling in someone so that he or she can know that there is another living, breathing, feeling human being on campus. Someone who feels and thinks the same and is concerned—not just another student or faculty member.

I do not want to give the impression that I am elevating myself to some superbeing position or playing the Dear Abbey bit. I am not the best one to write this kind of feature. But I am concerned about Juniata, the students, Faculty, Administration and myself, and I want to rap about it.

Needless to say I am expressing a desire to communicate. I have a lot of thing to get off my chest about college in general and my Juniata life-style. However, to get any satisfaction out of my endeavor and to establish a true line of communication I must hear response. I only ask that we keep this from becoming a free-for-all and nothing but a steam-letting thing. For my part I will try to discuss ideas and problems that I feel affect others as well as myself.

I therefore hope to accomplish two things: (1) to stimulate constructive thought on things that bother or excite us and to communicate this; (2) to provide for all concerned students, Faculty and Administration the channels through which individuals can respond and cry out "I am, I exist" or anything you feel needs to be said.

I am taking this step because in reviewing my first two years at J.C., I am disappointed. I do not feel the close, friendly atmosphere I had hoped for. I also have some misgivings about Liberal Arts Education. I am not trying to attach blame here, only to objectively answer the question "What is happening?" I might add that there are countless other things that plague or excite the mind of any college junior . . . or senior, or frosh. or soph., or faculty and this is exactly the point. There are thousands of things we think and feel in our lives, and much is our own personal business that we may not wish to share. However, some of us feel our lives are so much more enriched by the sharing of these feelings that we are alone and miserable if we cannot communicate them.

It is so that we may share a part of ourselves that these articles are to be written.

Co-Ed Phys. Ed Fail-ed?

by Barb Kulenich

To make Juniata seem more liberal and modern, the school instituted a co-ed program of physical education classes last year. This is a prime example of the facades used by colleges to make their schools more appealing to prospective students, parents, and alumni.

This program was originated for various reasons. First, because of the similarities between the classes. Second, because most of the college courses are co-ed, and third, because it would provide a basis on which the two sexes could meet. The only way in which these ideas are being fulfilled is that the classes are co-ed.

It has been my experience to see the girls grouping together on one side of the gym and the guys on the other, or for the guys to slyly exclude the girls from such team sports as football.

If the two groups cannot participate as a whole, I see no purpose in having phys. ed. classes co-ed.

Juniata World Service Fund To Begin Meetings

What is JWSF? Funny, but a lot of upperclassmen don't even know what the letters mean. JWSF stands for Juniata World Service Fund. Still don't know anything about it? JWSF is the college's only service club. It's the one campus supported club through which concerned students can help the less fortunate in the world by such programs as Project Concern. Even more important, JWSF pays the room and board expenses for Jee Soo Kim here at Juniata.

For JWSF to continue its sponsorship of Jee Soo and its support of worldwide charities, it needs your help. Come to the meeting in the post office lounge next Tuesday, October 13 at 7 p.m. and learn more about it. Without you there will be no JWSF. Come. Get involved. We need you.

Letters to the Editor

How Do You Say It?

In a recent interview with Dr. Schlegel several questions which concerned me and many other students at Juniata College were answered pertaining to the matter of the requirement of competency in a foreign language.

When the student is beginning his college career and discovers the need to study a foreign language, what is his attitude toward taking this required course? Dr. Schlegel pointed out many opinions which students generally have.

Many students are only taking language because it is a required subject and is necessary for graduation. A foreign language is also required by almost all graduate schools, and in order to get a Ph.D., one must also have competency in a foreign language. However, as Dr. Schlegel points out, this defeats the purpose that a foreign language should have. The attitude of rebelling against something compulsory is normal, and therefore this attitude of indifference towards study of a foreign language is quite frequent. However, there are some students who enroll in language courses because they are interested in them, and not only because they are required.

The next question which came to mind concerned the question of what should make a student want to take a foreign language. There are many good, sound reasons which follow. One reason is to give an individual an avenue of communication with another individual whose customs, traditions, and heritage of his country are quite different. Another language gives an individual a broader education in a cultural or traditional sense, a greater concept of words, their meaning, and ideas which are developed from those words, and a better understanding of his own native language.

Is Competence Relevant?

By studying a foreign language one can see the heritage and the customs which have been handed down generation after generation. Without this information, we cannot judge other people's actions by mere literal translations. We tend to judge the values that foreigners hold and what is meant by them in terms of our own values. However, the study of a foreign language gives an individual insight into the way that the foreigners think and act. Through the language, one can get to know people better, and one is able to appreciate their problem in light of their particular viewpoint.

Then one can also say that it is not necessary for me to learn a foreign language, let the foreigners learn our language. This attitude is typically American and proves our egotism. Young people find it frustrating to constantly have to memorize vocabulary, exercise with pattern drills and repeat common phrases. I concur this humdrum outlook is very boring. Nevertheless, in order to think great thoughts in a foreign language, one must first be concerned with the small, simple ideas. For a student who has had two years of a foreign language in high school and then begin at the elementary level in college in the same language, the study of the language is boring, and uninteresting only if the student makes it so. "You only get out of a foreign language, what you put into it." The student in the elementary year initially finds the course no challenge, and thus begins to place it on the bottom of his list of priorities. By the time the semester is over, the student is neglecting the language almost entirely, and consequently does very poorly or fails. He can't understand why. The reason is because once he stops devoting his time to studying it, naturally his capacity for the language decreases. Without putting anything into the language, nothing is received in return and obviously no learning of any important value occurs. Only when the student is willing to study hard and not stop if met with failure, does he have the chance to appreciate the knowledge derived from a foreign language.

And How Do You Say It?

I, as a biology and German major, maintain that the study of a foreign language is essential to any student, or, for that matter any individual, no matter what discipline they enter. The world is shrinking in terms of size by way of faster transportation all the time. It is then of utmost importance to speak and understand at least one foreign language in order to communicate more rapidly with individuals from various backgrounds and cultures, not only for the purpose of bettering communications and comprehending other's ideas and circumstances from which these ideas originate, but also for the purpose of understanding your own language, ideas and heritage.

Dr. Schlegel feels the study of a foreign language is essential for a broadly educated individual, in understanding other peoples' heritage and culture and in understanding one's own language, moral and ethical values and culture. And I fully concur.

Comments invited.

John N. Mitchell '73

The Renaissance

Student Weekly at Juniata College

Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED APRIL 24, 1970

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891 and "The Juniatian," established November 1924

DAN HARRIGER, Editor
JANET MASON, copy & proof editor
WILL SCARLETT, Circulation
WILLIAM DAVID, photography editor
RICHARD ABLARD, advertising manager
JUDI CRAFT, layout editor
VALERIE DERRICKSON, art & coordinator
PAT MANNERS, secretary

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: William Whitehead, Christopher S. Hart, Martha Rinker, Carl Koval, Barbara Duncan, Barbara Kulenich, Jean Thompson, George Magruder, John Mitchell, Glenn Dean, Irene M. Dean, Jodi Schautz, Lou Ann Saylor, Jeff Putt, Mary Ann Repman

The RENAISSANCE, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000

Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVII, No. 2

October 12, 1970

RENAISSANCE

Vol. XLVII, No. 3 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | October 19, 1970

College Welcomes Alumni

Glenn C. Zug, director of alumni affairs for the college has announced the plans for J.C.'s 1970 Homecoming celebration.

Many alumni and other friends of the college will be coming to Huntingdon for a weekend of activities, football, entertainment and to look at their alma mater in the state of change.

Entertainment planned for the weekend includes the student parade at 6:30 p.m. Friday evening and a rock concert by an English group, "The Symbols", at 8:30. Other events scheduled are a Saturday morning golf tournament, homecoming dance, featuring "The Rhytmn System", and evening performances of "Hamlet" and "Much Ado About Nothing" by the National Shakespeare Company.

Saturday afternoon, the Juniata Indians will play host to the Warriors of Lycoming College at College Field. It will be the fourteenth game in a series led by Juniata, dating back to 1950.

During the halftime of the game, the 1970 Juniata College Homecoming Queen and her court will be introduced and trophies and prizes will be awarded winners of the parade boat competition.

Halftime entertainment will be provided by the nationally— acclaimed Sto-Rox High School Viking Marching Band of McKees Rock. The band of 80 musicians, 13 majorettes and 10 Vikette flag girls will perform a ten-minute half-time show related to the Homecoming theme, "Scenes from the Swinging Sixties."

The band is under the direction of Mr. Aldo DiIanni, whose son, Larry, is a member of the Juniata varsity football team.

The first of the 1970 Ellis Humanities Series of special programs will take place Saturday and Sunday evenings on the stage of Oller Hall. The National Shakespeare Company will present "Hamlet", Saturday evening, at 7:30, and "Much Ado About Nothing", Sunday, at 8:15.

A Sunday afternoon tour of the Raystown Dam federal recreation project is planned, departing by bus from Ellis Hall at 2 p.m.

Tickets are required for admission to the Friday evening rock concert, the Saturday dinner, the Homecoming dance and the Sunday Raystown tour.

We hope it will be an exciting and memorable weekend for all.

An Open Letter From the Civil Service

Many high school students will be going to college and upon graduation from college will seek employment in State, city and Federal governments as well as in private industry. We want people who are physically and mentally able to hold jobs no matter what sector they choose and to be the caliber of individual who would be an asset to any employer.

Fifteen years ago, I would not have written this kind of letter. I say this not only because this problem did not exist then, but also because the college generation of fifteen years ago did not appear to share to the same degree an immediate, personal concern for the welfare of his fellow man that today's college student feels. I am writing this open letter to you because I am very much concerned about the persistent growth of illicit drug traffic among our high school students and I am convinced that today's college student can be the key in putting an end to the lure of drug use.

College students have always been looked up to by their younger companions in high school. You set the pace in fashion, in music, and more importantly, in ideas for the entire teen-age community.

It is with this thought in mind that I urgently encourage you to carry the truth about the effects of drugs back to the high school students in your home communities and in the community where you now live. Yours is a voice that will be listened to. Your message about what you have seen and about what you know of the eroding effects of drugs can be the single most effective deterrent to drug experimentation among our high school students.

This is an effort you can undertake on your own initiative. All that is needed is your own desire to help protect our high school students from the damaging effects of drugs which you have seen or know about. I must say here that I am always heartend by the creative energy and determination which our American college students have shown in their efforts to make this country better for us all.

Continued on page 2

Opening

by Solomon J.

3:36 a.m.
the sound of smokeless night air and whispered conversations 'mongst the trees.

barely breathing silent open eared he watches a soul who knows not where to go
. . . . . or why
but yet must pass from day to night and on again to the too soon dawning day that follows
close on the heels
of that never-ending tomorrow.

with an everpresent sense of oneness and solitude
WITH. . . . . ?
and a knowledge that without he can never.

time will be there
but time is quick to pass away,
it must be seized,
squeezed,
choked,
and forced to obey his will.
time will be there
for time will eventually conquer all, but though the fight is hopeless
he must still try to make some tiny gain
before the close. . . . . .

Course Criticism

A Three-Ring Circus

When I was seven years old I went with my Mommy and my older brother to see the Greatest Show On Earth, and I went away with the belief that it surely was. For what could be more exciting than a clown with painted face and rubber nose, or an acrobat skillfully walking the tight rope or flying through the air from swing to swing, or a wild bear taught to dance in a frilly skirt, all carefully coordinated by the high-booted, jodhpurred, whip-snapping ringmaster in a brilliant blue coat?

I thought about the circus constantly. I daydreamed about it in school so much that my teacher finaliy had to have a private talk with me about it. When she discovered the subject of my dreams she was even more enraged. "How will you ever learn about life if your mind is always at the circus?" she asked in desperation. "You must learn to live in the real world, not a circus dream." But her words were to no avail, for though I started to pay more attention to her, it was only because I fancied hr an orangutan (which she vaguely resembled.) Indeed, I made an elaborate Big Top metaphor out of her entire class.
a ringmaster, a coordinator of all

Later on I decided I wanted to be the circus performers, a most complex job which obviously required a college education. I entered Juniata College determined to graduate with a liberal arts degree as I would need a broad background. Once my field of non-concentration had been dropped as a degree offering, I was ready to transfer when by a terrific scheduling problem engineered by the class ringmaster I was forced into taking Nature of Man.

I'll never forget that first day. It had been such a long time since I'd been to a real circus. The moment I heard the bearded ringmaster in the brilliant blue coat describe in precise logic the three-ring program of the semester the whistling melody of the calliope rose all around me. The dancing bear in frilly shirt and low-slung trousers performed in one ring winning my heart from the first. I admired the acrobat's skill in walking the tight rope between definitions and in flying through the unfathomable air from one argument to the next in the second ring. The clown in the third ring was the funniest I'd ever seen, capering about as though he'd learned nothing at his mother's knee of the "real" world, but believed in the circus reality as completely as I did. Indeed, I felt at home for the first time in my life (excluding my first seven years in the "real world), knowing that at last all my teachers believed in my circus world except one. But he didn't exist. He never uttered a word. One never finds a deaf mute in a circus.

Pep, Pride Spirit Band

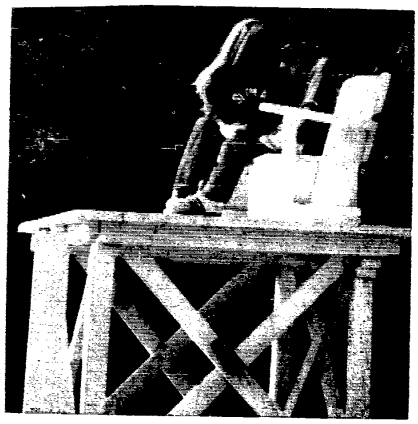
Juniata's Music Department is represented in many ways on campus. This includes organizations under faculty guidance to build up individuals skill, such as Concert Choir, or Choral Union, and an organization of the students to add that needed bit of spirit to the campus, the Pep Band.

Though small, the Pep Band is an active organization. Its twenty-five members enjoy a very informal schedule of practices and performances. Its concerts consist of all home football and basketball games and several of the away bouts of each sport. The outside activities involve appearances in several of the local parades, annually.

Membership in the organization is pending on one requirement alone — you must have school spirit and pride. It is of great advantage if you play an instrument, but not a necessity. So, if you meet this single requisite, we would be glad to have you.

Glimpses into the lives of JC Mountaineers

Tote That Barge !



To the victor, the spoils

Editorial

Still the Same Old Story

Once again it is that time of year eo rap about the glorious Juniata College Food Service. First allow me to apologize for the inconvenience the paper may have caused. The food service reacted to an article in the last paper by now requiring meal tickets in both lines. The meal tickets are to keep non-paying "freebies" from eating, so that the food service can offer better meals while keeping within their budget. Well. so much for theory, because the quality of the food really isn't better than before the use of these tickets.

Let's talk about the inclusive fee of the college, concerning the area of meal tickets. We're told that the inclusive fee is the cheapest way (for the students) to eat college meals. The economics of this, as explained to us, is that computed in the board of the inclusive fee is a certain percentage of meals which are not eaten by a student during a year. Fine. I understand the economics of this as applied to the average student. but what of the student who never eats breakfast? Is the computed percentage of meals not eaten at least one-third? And of the meals which students don't eat here, but instead take the unprepared food out to cook themselves on camping trips; why must they pay twenty percent more? I suppose making students pay for this unprepared food is a method of deterring students from finding out what properly prepared food tastes like.

Come on Food Service, cut us a break. The Food Service Committee of Student Government can only do so much and we as students know it. The real change must come from you. and right now almost any change would be forthe better.

Letters to the Editor

Weary Traveler

To the editor:

John N. Mitchell may be a biology and German major but a human relations major he is not. It may be ". . .of the utmost importance to speak and understand at least one foreign language. . ." to understand our culture, but ". . . communicate more rapidly with individuals from various backgrounds and cultures," etc.? Oh, yeah? How many students, who are not language majors, could carry on a normal conversation with a native of the foreign country whose language they are required to take? We all know the answer.

I had to take at least four semesters of a romance language to enter college. (I took six semesters of French and two of Latin.) Now I'm required to take four more. Oh come now!

After two and one-half months of hitch-hiking and knapsacking it in Europe, I would say John Mitchell has a poor argument. My three years of French did nothing but hinder my communications with French citizens (and I still can't read dirty French novels). I received more rides, more meals, and more satisfying experiences by just being an American student trying to learn the native's view and method of his culture. The only bits of my classroom culture I used were: "Bonjour, merci beaucoup and ou est la toilette" (nature waits for no French — American dictionary). You know all that French conversation you're suffering through every week? Well, a Frenchman wouldn't waste his time asking what day it is, he'll just come out and ask you for a date, or better yet, girls, pinch ya! Both are easy to understand in any language. (I learned more idiomatic phrases that way!)

I've never taken courses in German, Italian or Yugoslavian, and I had no severe problems in communicating or understanding life. German is not a requirement to admire the Alps, nor is French to tour the Louvre. Italian isn't needed to understand the love that built a cathedral in Venice, nor is Yugoslavian to see the pain and suffering on a beggar's face.

People and their emotions are universal. A required language can never relate human feelings, only a man's face can.

The Weary Traveler

A Cape Cod Night

The night is dark, oh so quiet and calm
That it hides the already existing harm
Which silently floats—a camouflaged force
Bringing about destruction and remorse.
But yes somehow the night has lost its charm:
No longer are the stars an endless source

Of sparkling brightness in a clear dark sky.
But dull and fuzzy as though about to die
They flicker feebly through the air so dense.
And the moon glowing like a cloudy lense
Seems to be straining, trying to defy
The night and penetrate the thick offense.

But the crickets still chirp; the air smells clear;
The rabbits still thrive living without fear
Of the encroaching death on the other side
Of one strip of water opon which ride
The agents of death man has broight so near Maybe it's not too late to thrn the tide.

by George Magruder

Notes from the Basement

by C. S. Hart

It seems that there is a general air of tension on the campus these days. Everything has a question mark after it. Nothing is certain. Trying to find anything out is like pulling hairs off a toad. Let us consider then what might be the causes behind this tension.

Could it be that the world situation has everybody uptight? There were after all three rather shocking airplane hijackings just before the start of the school year. The U.S. Middle East Peace Plan was accepted by the Arab nations and Israel but not by the Palestinian guerrillas. Their lack of acceptance stands as a serious roadblock in the way of any lasting peace for that troubled region. Nor has the Vietnam situation gotten any better in recent months. Certainly the present state of the world is such as to cause distress to anyone who bothers to think about it, but I tend to doubt whether that alone can wholly explain the atmosphere at Juniata this fall.

Could it be than that student unrest is on our minds? This is certainly a plausible explanation for the problem, since student unrest is most acutely relevant to us as a college community. Think of the problems involved if any sort of uprising were to break out at a small college like Juniata. With a closely knit environment such as ours the repurcussions would almost certainly affect everyone here. Yet it is this very smallness which seems to give Juniata some element of security from the stereotype rebellion of the large university. If there is student unrest at Juniata, we may hope that it can be handled without open rebellion or damage to life or property.

What then is the cause for our tension? Was it the recent heat wave we went through for the first three weeks of scholl? Much as I personally dislike hot weather I can't quite see it as a major force contributing to the general malaise. Could it be the increased pressure to abolish comps? Or is it the force of the present drive to implement the task force proposals? These may be contributors, but I rather doubt that any one of them carries the whole of the responsibility.

Indeed, it seems that the present air of tension must be attributed to a variety of factors combined together rather than to any one particular cause. It is, of course, impossible to tell now whether things will get better or worse. Only time will finally supply that answer. Perhaps, though, if we would all try to relax a little more, we might be able to work out our difficulties with a bit more ease.

WANTED

ADVERTISING SALESMAN

Commission

Good Fringe Benefits

Apply: Renaissance Offices

Office Hours Monday 7 - 11
Tuesday 7 - 10
Thursday 7 - 11

The Renaissance

Student Weekly at Juniata College
Huntingdon, Pa.

ASSOCIATED COLLEGIATE PRESS ACP — ASSOCIATED COLLEGIATE PRESS LP

FOUNDED APRIL 24, 1970

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891 and "The Juniatian," established November 1924

DAN HARRIGER, Editor
JANET MASON, copy & proof editor
WILL SCARLETT, circulation
WILLIAM DAVID, photography editor
RICHARD ABLARD, advertising manager
JUDI CRAFT, layout editor
VALERIE DERRICKSON, art & coordinator
PAT MANNERS, secretary

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: William Whitehead, Christopher S. Hart, Martha Rinker, Carl Koval, Barbara Duncan, Barbara Kulenich, Jean Thompson, George Magruder, John Mitchell, Glenn Dean, Irene M. Dean, Jodi Schautz, Lou Ann Saylor, Jeff Putt, Mary Ann Repman

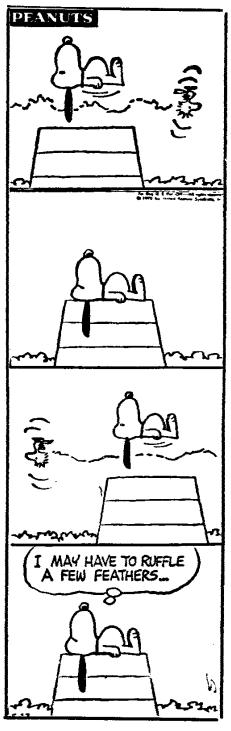
The RENAISSANCE, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000

Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVII, No. 3

October 19, 1970



Why World ?

Why won't you accept me for what I am?
Why must my self-expression be only on the subject you want to hear about?
I'm a practicing Christian, and I grieve for a friend.
So I write a prayer poem.
It's "literary quality" is good.
But because it wasn't written by or about a practicing draft-dodger, or a Black, it isn't relevant.
Even to people who also grieve.
"Maybe the Church will publish it."
But it wasn't written for them.
It was written for my friend who was a part of you, world.
What are you going to do about it?
Isn't it about timeyou started to listen to all your people?
We just might have something to say.

Ellen Minnick

Civil Service

Continued from page 1

I will not recount the effects of amphetamines, barbiturates, narcotics and other dangerous drugs. You know them as well as I do. Any additional facts you may want to have in adding to your own knowledge of the effects of drugs you can get from the several excellent pamphlets published by the Public Health Service and other public health organizations. If you should find that these pamphlets are not readily available locally, you may request them from the Public Information Branch of the National Institute of Mental Health, Chevy Chase, Maryland 20203.

So it is my earnest hope that you will go out of your way to talk with high school students about this. Talk to individuals and groups as opportunities arise. Seek out youth recreation associations and urge the director to get the facts to the young people.

This is one area where I know and you know that you will be listened to. It is an area where you as an individual can do so much to save our high school students from the bitter experiences which so often result from drug use. Please try this approach, and when you do, I would appreciate hearing from you.

Sincerely yours,

Nicholas J. Oganovic
Executive Director

RENAISSANCE

Vol. XLVII, No. 4 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | October 23, 1970

Recollections of the Decade

by Barb Kulenich

The Juniata College 1970 Homecoming Weekend began on Friday, October 16th, with the annual parade through Huntingdon. It consisted mainly of floats constructed by each class, the Homecoming Queen and Attendants, and the different Class Officers. The Springdale and Huntingdon Fire Companies were represented by some of their fire trucks and equipment.

The main theme for this year's float construction was "RECOLLECTIONS OF THE PAST DECADE." The Senior Class float was built around the different crises of the past ten years and the wish for peace. It consisted of a man kneeling in front of a dove draped in black. Bhind the figure were crosses bearing such inscriptions as "Kent State," "Chicago," and "Biafra."

The Junior float depicted the idea of a closer unity among people due to the moon-landing. The earth was connected to the moon by a small ramp and was surrounded by students representing the different nations. Their theme was "Bridge the Gap."

The Sophomore Class float was based on "Lend a Hand for Peace." At one end of the float was a globe supported by a hand of red, one of yellow, one of black, and one of white. This led up to a large Peace sign which was against a background of blue sky, purple mountains, and green grass.

The Freshman float's theme was "Disney Lives." In the center was a small replica of the castle at the Disneyland entrance. Surrounding it were many familiar Disney characters: Mickey and Minnie Mouse, Peter Pan and Tinker Bell, Goofy, Donald Duck, Jiminy Crickett, and Daniel Boone. The characters' heads were made of papier mache.

The Outing Club also had a part in the parade. Some of its members walked along carrying a genuine, "hand-painted" canoe.

The floats were made largely from Kleenex and tissue paper flowers, on bases of chicken wire and cardboard. It followed a route down along Washington Street, through town, and up Mifflin Street to the College. The turnout left much to be desired. With the exception of a few Freshmen girls and some of the town children, the parade was not viewed by many.

At half-time, during the Homecoming game, the floats were once again displayed, with the addition of the Scapel and Probe entry. It had not participated in the previous night's parade because it had not been finished in time. The float depicted the Heart Transplant, complete with pumping heart and patient surgery. During the second half of the game, the winners were announced: FIRST PRIZE—Sophomore Class, "Lend a Hand for Peace;" SECOND PRIZE—Freshman Class, "Disney Lives;" THIRD PRIZE — Junior Class, "Bridge the Gap;" and FOURTH PRIZE—Senior Class. The distributing of Club prizes is still uncided, though their distribution looks doubtful because of the lack of entries.

Miss Judith Turner . . .

Homecoming Queen 1970

Miss Judith Lynne Turner, of Nanticoke, was chosen by her fellow students as the 1970 Homecoming Queen at Juniata College.

Judy is a senior majoring in elementary education and Spanish. As Homecoming Queen, she reigned officially over student activities planned for the past weekend in conjunction with Juniata's annual alumni homecoming. More than 4,000 of the college's alumni, students and friends participated in activities which began Friday evening with a parade, alumni banquet and rock concert.

Famous Dr. Heads Chamber Operations

Are you up to it Chamber Buffs?

Certainly not new to the Juniata Campus is the Chamber Music Series. Last year's season was one of excitement for the novice as well as the trained musician. Well this year promises to be an even greater experience for the students of Juniata Campus.

The Chamber Series, co-ordinated by Dr. Robert King of the Music Department staff (who incidentally for those of you who are new on campus, was honored by being placed in Who's Who last year), is made available to the students and faculty of the College not only for their enjoyment, but also for their participation. This participation gives the interested ones an opportunity to share in an individual experience in the atmosphere of a small group of persons to the point that through the music each is able to communicate to each other and to the ultimate listener, a segment of his own personality and emotion evolving out of the impression that the music leaves upon him. It also gives the participant the opportunity for soloistic expression while being supported in his confidence by other who may also have butterflies at the thoughts of playing alone in front of someone. In this each participant gains the necessary confidence that is so needed to communicate in any way in this crazy-mixed-up world of ours. One need not be a professional to join with these groups. The only requirements are a sincere interest in sharing and in practicing, and of course the knowledge of how to play the instrument of your choice or if you like to sing the sharing of your golden-throated tones.

Presently there are several small groups in rehearsal. They are preparing for a Chamber Concert to be given later in the school year. Their various talents range from the stringed instruments (violin, viola, cello), to clarinet, piano, harpsichord, bute, and voice. Any and all persons who would be interested in sharing in the excitement of the sensitivity of music are invited to contact Dr. King at his office in Swigart Hall, on the second floor.

Not to overlook those of you who would be participants in the area of listening, there are presently scheduled several concerts for the school year. On the eighth of November, Marjorie Lawrence, flutist for the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York City, will

Cont'd to page 4

We Paid to Eat This ?

The quality of food at Juniata College may seem a trivial subject to comment on in this day and age with so many large problems confronting us. Nevertheless, it is one that is faced by most students every day and is the subject of much discussion.

Institutional food has rarely been something to rave about. Juniata College, as an institution, offers its students food that represents no acception to the common opinion, but rather reaffirms it. As a junior, when the present food is compared to that offered in 1968, things seemed to have improved. For example, there is now a choice at each meal between two main dishes, there is a wider variety of beverages available, and thre are always salads. Also, the physical set-up has improved with the use of Ellis Hall.

Yet most of the improvements just named were availible last year, while some of the improvements present last year have either disappeared or been modified for the worse. Though we continue to have a choice between main dishes, the same main dish appears too often during any given week. The preponderance in those meals of carbohydrates and tasteless vegetables continues. And though Ellis Hall has a beautiful big dining room, it gets pretty ridiculous when the whole room seems to be using one salt shaker. Some of the problem is undoubtedly student theft. Perhaps the answer is to have each group bring its own personal stolen salt shaker.

Though it may appear to some that the quality of food is continuing to improve, it appears to others that the pluses and minuses have cancelled each other out, leaving no net improvement. We who have been here several years need only listen to several freshmen comment on the subject to come to the conclusion that the quality of food still leaves something to be desired.

Recognition for Musicians !

What is the value of credit for choir? A much discussed question among both students and faculty, is causing consternation among the members of the Choir and those interested in a Liberal Arts Education. It would appear that unless the activity is a scientific endeavor or the "pet" desires of certain members of the division, there can be established no real reason for credit in an organization such as Choir, newspaper, or radio work.

The Choral organizations of the college campus are a vital part of both the publicity for the college and for the broadening of the Liberal Arts education of a Juniata student. Through the organization a student is able to share his musical abilities with others in the group, as well as with the college campus as a whole. He gains through the training given in Choir, an understanding of the various periods of music such as Baroque, Contemporary, Classical, Renaissance, and polyphonic and homophonic styles. Areas in which, unless he were majoring in music, he would perhaps never come in contact. In the organization he learns how to cope with certain problems of personality conflicts among fellow students, faculty-student relationship, and in performer-listener relationships. He is able to broaden his scope of the various periods of history by his involvement in the music and the reaction of the environment out of which it evolved, whereas, unless he were to take a course in say, Reformation History, where one learns the political forces which brought about the Council of Trent and the subsequent change in sacred music that could produce a musical giant like Palestrina, he may never be aware of the genius of so great a man.

Cont'd to page 4

Homecoming 1970

A Success ?

by B. H. Duncan

From my point of view it is difficult to discuss whether or not this year's Homecoming was a success as I have never been present at any other Homecoming activities at Juniata College. The student parade drew only a few spectators, from the college as well as from the community; and because of rain, the bonfire and the pep rally were cancelled. Things began to liven up in time for the "Symbols" concert which was a success if one enjoyed listening to a variety of old songs recorded by other groups.

The events on Saturday drew bigger crowds. The football game was observed by students, faculty, and alumni, some of whom remained out in the rain to watch and cheer for our team. The formal dinner left much to be desired: by the time some people were beginning their main course, other were starting their dessert. The food for which one had waited so long, was nothing more than one of Juniata's better meals. For those who like Shakespeare, the production of Hamlet by the National Shakespeare Company was an enjoyable event. The Semi-formal Dance represented the height of the weekends activities. This dance was the best so far this year consisting of many couples and only a few spectators. The music, also the best this year, was provided by "The Rhythm System", and added a great deal to the atmosphere of the dance.

On Sunday, the events drew to a close with a tour of the Raystown

Cont'd to page 4

Editorial . . .

Time Stops for No One

Juniata College has been in session for more than a month. The students are finally setting down into the routine of college life, that is except for certain offices and committees of Student Government. Granted, we as a newspaper have just settled down so that we can meet deadlines, but that is what happens when you retain only four members of your staff from the previous year. I believe a lot of credit should be given to Doug Laird for the job he has done since "stepping into the shoes" of the President. However, there are other members of the government which should receive no praise. The Special Events committee is far behind in their job. Homecoming weekend was "passable" and that was about all. Sure we had a parade, but credit for the organization of it should go to Jeff Bixby. Maybe Linda Markey set up the order of the floats, but the procession was finally organized Friday night by Bixby while Linda joy-rode in a dune - buggy. Also, what happened to the Pep Rally? It seems that the generally accepted excuse is that there wasn't enough time between the parade and the concert for the rally. Why wasn't there? Why couldn't the parade have been started earlier so that the floats could have been seen in daylight and then there would have been time for a show of school spirit. So you ask, but do we need a pep rally? Let me answer by asking do you want the to win? Regardless of what you may think, if the students are really behind the team it's a large step toward winning. Okay, those are past events and we can learn by them; so let's learn. What happened to Twirp week? Let's learn from the past and do something about one of the mose unusual weeks at J.C. Whether the guys want to admit it or not, they like Twirp week (though their reasons may vary). Let's learn, and schedule the week with events to make it worthwhile.

The other organ of Student Government that needs to be deemed "unpraiseworthy" is the Office of the Treasurer. The "books" from last year may have been a total mess, but if we must continue to operate in the dark the books this year will be worse. Is it economically sound for such organizations, such as WJC and the Renaissance, to operate without even knowledge of their budgets, let alone how much has been spent? We are limited this year (no overspending of the budget permitted), but can we do this without knowing how much we can spend? The time is fast approaching when our credit will no longer be good. We're being backed up against a wall while the Treasurer is complaining about his cut in salary.

A month is gone and where are we? The Student Government is pushing forward, but it can only travel as far and as fast as it's members and committees will go. Let's pick up our dragging feet and move with the current.

FOR SALE — SPINET PIANO

Wanted, responsible party to take over a spinet piano.

Easy terms available. Can be seen locally.

Write Credit Manager, P.O. Box 35, Cortland, Ohio 44410.

WE WANT YOU TO JOIN OUR CHURCH AS AN

ORDAINED MINISTER

AND HAVE THE RANK OF

DOCTOR of DIVINITY

We are a non-structured faith, undenonminational, with no traditional doctrine or dogma. Our fast-growing church is actively seeking new ministers who believe what we believe; All men are entitled to their own convictions; To seek truth in their own way, whatever it may be, no questions asked. As a minister of the church you may:

1. Start your own church and apply for exemption from property and other taxes.
2. Perform marriages, baptisms, funerals and all other ministerial functions.
3. Enjoy reduced rates from some modes of transportation, some theatres, stores, hotels, etc.
4. Seek draft exemption as one of our working missionaries. We will tell you how.

Enclose a free will donation for the Minister's credentials and license. We also issue Doctor of Divinity Degrees. We are State Chartered and your ordination is recognized in all 50 states and most foreign countries.

FREE LIFE CHURCH — BOX 7039, HOLLYWOOD, FLORIDA 33023

The Renaissance

Student Weekly at Juniata College

Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED APRIL 24, 1970

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891 and "The Juniatian," established November 1924

DAN HARRIGER, Editor
JANET MASON, copy & proof editor
WILL SCARLETT, circulation
WILLIAM DAVID, photography editor
MARTHA RINKER, news & feature editor
SUE BERMEL, layout editor
BILL GASPER, sports editor
PAT MANNERS, secretary

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Carl Koval, Barbara Duncan, Barbara Kulenich, Jean Thompson, Glenn Dean, Irene M. Dean, Jodi Schautz, Jeff Putt, Mary Ann Repman, Nancy Agnew, Dan Herzog, Kevin Bowers

The RENAISSANCE, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000

Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVII, No. 4

October 23, 1970

Concerning Juniata and Other Things . . .

by Kervin Bowers

"It's a shame that a race so broadly conceived should end with most lives so narrowly confined." Friends:

Juniata College is dead. No other word describes it better. Countless hours of discussion (or is it complaining?) have been spent in trying to determine why. What is the reason for this feeling? Why, when asked where we go to college, do we either spit out a "Juniata" with disgust or try to make a joke about it? Obviously no one has any good answers.

It's time, for those who are concerned, and we all should be, to go beyond the "nothing to do" complaint and examine our own personal orientation. This gripe indicates a feeling of lifelessness and being "out in the woods". Both of which are due to a feeling of not being involved in anything. Not being alive. True some of us are intensely involved with study and girl or boy friends here on campus, but many others do not have or like such an alignment with existence and find such things depressants rather than stimulants.

This is not a plague unique to J.C. and we should be able to come up with some reasons and solutions, rather than excuses. I submit that the Task Force report not only shows concern and insight, but it is encouraging and it would be worth every students' (and every one else's) time to read it—particulary the section on page B-4. And once again I remind you that the thoughts presented here are my own to begin a process of . . . . . communication that will hopefully see other points of view expressed.

What I've experienced over the years is that it has not been a need to adapt to the college situation, but a lack of such need. The "high schoolish" atmosphere here in the way we relate to each other, our education, and the world scene sticks out like a sore thumb.

Of classes and assignments students here, for the most part, accept them, do them with the same detachment most of us experienced in high school. Then we had no choice, we had to do the work like it or not, and Mom and Dad had a reminder nightly. True, some of it was interesting and may have sparked a desire for a college education or at least made the prospects for our next four years of education more appealing. College was where we could really get into things. And thus our disappointment! The situation is somewhat altered, but the detachment remains the same. Much (too much) of our work we still do because we must, now it is called "required," but now we get to pick our poison. Mom and Dad are no longer around to push us (or continue our "training") but we manage in light of the financial investment and we know how much good grades mean to them. And we pass this off as maturity.

The problem exists that the reasons we do anything at J.C. too often are not because we like it or find it meaningful (not that I have this kick for "doing" things, but it is important) ,but that we are not involved.

I realize that no one likes everything and that thre are a number of people who are excited and wrapped up in what they are doing here (personally I've met. . .very few, how many do you know?), but I'm willing to stick my neck out and bet that most students here do not have a feeling of being involved in their studies, or any "extracurricular activities", and remain basically confused as to who they are and what they are doing here. At least enough to raise serious questions about the educational and social situation at J.C. We are passive. We are not involved.

Perplexing is the fact that serious questions have been raised and there are people earnestly and actively seeking answers. Yet somehow, by some mysterious phenomena they remain obscure. A strange fog surrounds us. We hear a shout or see a light in the distance but we do not move near, fearful of tripping over something we cannot see. We are afraid to confront the questions that must stare us in the face for then we stand naked with our ideas. We are vulnerable.

Many would call this the curse of system education. We do not confront ourselves in the processes involved. We: study for the sake of study; pursue facts more than concepts; follow other people's ideas and thoughts, not our own; or work for the degree and the money, not knowledge. We do not meet our own minds on the way.

I suppose the questions I raise are fundamental, concerning my education and total college experience. They are not new. They were raised years ago in Frosh orientation, they were talked about Task Force Day last year, as they will be this year. They have been discussed over and ovr until we must be weary.

And they must be confronted again! Everyday in class, at the Library, or over coffee at Jerry's. We must open our minds to ourselves and our situation and become vulnerable. We must be able to think and feel. And then to act on our futures, not afraid to discover mistakes or too inert to correct. Once we have become aware of our own minds can we begin to communicate our ideas and open new worlds for exploration. Then we have an active and growing community of individuals with wisdom to share. Only now can we achieve an enviroment that allows each individual "optimum intellectual, social and personal development." Only now do we move from a static state to an active state. From dormancy to growth. From alienation to involvement.

"To create a new university is to take a new look at the universe. . . The way we look at the universe defines ourselves. Whenever we do anything about education, whether formally in separate buildings staffed by people called "teachers" or otherwise, we are forced up against the ultimate definitions, the ultimate human questions: What are we? What are we to do with our lives?. . .We do not always answer these questions with words. Or, if we use words, they often have little to do with the real answers. But the answers are there, acknowledged or not, in every administrative directive, every text book, every teacher's meeting, every classroom." George B. Leonard.

Perhaps the goal of a Liberal Arts education should be to aid everyone involved to discover his own answers to these basic questions.

A New Feature — Sports !

by Bill Gasper

Greetings, sports fans! This issue of the Renaissance marks the beginning of a new feature—sports. With my current meager staff of two at the sports' desk, the coverage will not be as comprehensive as a concerned (hopefully) college community might ask for. But, the approach will be slightly altered to make up for this deficiency. Whenever possible, we hope to dispense with the useless resurrection of statistics, unless they have a direct bearing on the subject. What is planned is more in the line of commentary and human interest. The Juniata athletic program will not be held up as a demi-god image to be worshipped. If something is good, we will be the first to say so; if something is bad, we will not be afraid to criticize.

Above all else, we want to discuss what you want. Thus, we want your ideas, questions, and comments. Just write to me—Bill Basper, Box 1262, and we will air your views on any aspect of JC's athletics. Be it intercollegiate or intramural, team or individual, we will be glad for your participation. Thank you.

Now, that the introductions and goals of this column have been explained, it is time for that great American past-time Monday morning quarterbacking. Saturday's encounter with Lycoming could easily be equated with Let's Make a Deal; the Indians played giveaway and always seemed to come out on the short end. Losing on Homecoming is trying enough and we do not want to rub salt into the wounds. The football Indians, in spite of their 1-3-1 record, could be 5-0 at this stage, with a few breaks. A young team needs time and we hope that they are given a chance to redeem themselves. Saturday at Upsala would be a good time to start. Or, in those infamous words of many an unsuccessful coach, "Wait 'til next year!"

This draws to an end the alibing for the football team. . . Three fumbles, a pass interception, and a blocked punt are not good signs. Lycoming was not superior to the Indians, the Indians gave them the game. Young teams make mistakes, we hope the lessons are well learned. Beat Upsala!

Around the Sports Circuit . . .

by Bill Gasper

Basketball practice started October 15. We greet the new coach, Mr. Swinderman, and wish him luck in the season ahead. . . . The tennis tournament is in full swing and the excitement generated is too great. . We tip our hats to both Mike McNeil and Sal Mercadante for making the weekly all-MAC teams. Also, we congratulate the many given honorable mention. . . .Baseball is being shifted to the fall sports scene in many colleges. Some play in both the fall and spring. . .Saturday marks the seventh meeting between Juniata and Upsale. Juniata leads the series, 4-2. . . . Grove City and Upsala leave the football schedule next year. Wilkes returns and one date remains open. . . .Anyone having the MAC standings could send them to the Renaissance. Juniata's conference record is 1-3. . .Lycoming had nine seniors in the listed starting line-up . . . . This weekend's grid picks: Juniata over Upsala (we are overdue), Ohio State over Illinois (yawn), Penn state over Army, UCLA over Standford, Dartmouth over Harvard, Texas over

Cont'd to page 3

Pop Concert To Be Presented Sunday At J.C.

Two Groups To Present Concert, Sell-out Crowd Needed For Success

This Sunday, October 25 at 8:00 in Memorial Gym Juniata will again attempt to present a rock concert. I say attempt because it's the students who will make it successful. If you want Big-Name Entertainment everyone must support these rock concerts.

Out of New York come the Dreams, a "creative conspiracy" which not only plays top-pops, but music composed by their own members. Mixing intensity and intimancy their music abounds on the imposed contrast. A band of eight professionals (attuned to by their numerous awards), they hope their contract with Columbia Records will allow them to reach new peaks.

Hailing from the Buckeye state, the Citations have been together some two and one-half years. Having performed at such colleges as West Virginia University, Michigan State, University of Michigan and the University of Pittsburgh, the Citations have been deemed the "Best Band in the Midwest." Even though the picture of the group shows eight performers, the nine members are all music majors at various Ohio colleges.

Johnson To Give Organ Recital

The 27th annual fall organ recital by Professor Donald S. Johnson will take place this Sunday afternoon, Oct. 25, at 3:30 in Oller Auditorium.

A member of the Juniata College faculty since 1944, Prof. Johnson will perform a three-part program of works by eight composers ranging in periods from baroque to modern.

Specific works will include "The Emperor's Fanfare", by Antonio Soler, "Largo", by Benedetto Marcello, J. S. Bach's "Fantasy and Fugue in G Minor", Mendelssohn's Fourth Sonata, a fantasy on "Leoni", by T. Tertius Noble, "Air, in B-flat Minor", by Gerre Hancock, "Carillon", by Eric DeLamarter, and "Heroic Piece", by Cesar Franck."

His many organ recitals have included prformances in St. Joseph, Mo., Dallas, ew York, and Geneva, N.Y., Allentown, Kutztown, Reading, Easton, Lewistown, Martinsburg, Mount Union and Altoona, Pa., as well as his annual series of recitals at Juniata College.

A graduate of New York University, where he received both his B.S. and A.M. degrees, Prof. Johnson has studied at Bush Conservatory in Chicago, the Juilliard School of Music, the Christiansen Choral School, Union Theological Seminary School of Sacred Music, and at the Church Music Institute at Alfred, N.Y. He has studied organ with T. Tertius Noble, Alexander McCurdy, Lilian Carpenter, and Hugh Giles.

Fine Arts

College Center Sponsors Wilson College Exhibit

An exhibition of paintings by the three members of the Wilson College Fine Arts Department will be open to the public commencing Saturday, October 17 in the Ballroom of Ellis Hall.

This exhibit is the first in the series sponsored by the Fine Arts Committee of the College Center and was arranged for by the committee chairman, Robert Marcus.

The artists are Miss Helen-Lee Jones, Mr. Walter Nichol and Mr. Emlyn Edwards, acting chairman of the department. All three are members of the Mid-State Artists and their work has been on view in the annual traveling exhibit of that organization.

Sports Circuit cont'd

Cont'd from page 2

SMU, Tennessee over Florida, Princeton over Penn, Old Miss. over Vanderbilt, Yale over Cornell, Arkansas over Wichita. Upset of the week—UCLA over Stanford; sure thing—Arkansas over Wichita; grudge match — Tennessee over Florida . . . . Southern Mississippi over Old Miss. last week was a shocker of all times. . . .Opinion corner—Texas could beat Ohio State and Notre Dame. . . .Edinboro is the number one small college team in the East. . . .Next week-end look for a discussion on the new brand of sports dropout (or cop-out). This includes Chip Oliver, Rick Sortun, Denny McLain, Alex Johnson, etc. Also, Bud Wilkinson's explanation of the Texas Wishbone-T, a review of the MAC race to date, and a preview of the WS-J game. Shalom!

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor:

Recently, in Great Epochs of World Culture, a simple device was presented as a means of evaluating practically anything. The device consisted of asking oneself two questions: "What is it?" and "What is it for?" Only after these two questions are answered fairly can an evaluation take place. This writer is going to attempt to look at Juniata's compulsory foreign language competency program along the above lines.

First, "What is it?" The name is in itself an answer. It is a program in which all students at Juniata must participate. It involves the basic understanding of one language other than English.

Second, "What is it for?" Although this writer was obviously not one of the originators of this program, he thinks that it is likely that the program was instituted to be sure that every graduate of Juniata would be nearly fluent in a foreign language and that this fluency would aid him later on in life regardless of his career choice.

Now, this writer can begin an evaluation, and after some thought come up with the conclusion that while the idea of the program was and is noble, it is doomed to failure and should either be greatly revised or abolished.

The most important reason for this conclusion parallels the saying: "You can lead a horse to water, but you can't make him drink." This writer is sure that by the time a great number of students are in college they have some into the "much else" category for many students is a required foreign language. The result is obvious. students just do what they have to when they have to in order to obtain competency and within one or two years forget practically all they have learned. Is this what Juniata has in mind in regard to this program?

No, is the probable answer, along with the assertion that a foreign language is necessary for many students in terms of graduate school and living abroad and that if they don't know what's good for them, then the college will force it down their screaming throats.

Well, this writer cannot agree with such ideas and believes that when a student finds a desire to learn a language he will do so with little trouble and until then Juniata College is wasting his time and causing him unnecessary trouble.

Name withheld at writer's request

Letter to the editor:

I recently attended the presentation by Mr. Gerald Kirk, sponsored by the Huntingdon County Support Your Local Police Committee. Mr. Kirk spoke largely from his own experiences as a former F.B.I. undercover agent. Documenting those parts of his presentation which were not the result of his own personal encounters, he discussed at length the varied ways in which Communist influences are exerted through subversive organizations.

Mr. Kirk, realizing that his remarks were met on some sides with sarcastic skepticism, offered them, nonetheless, as "food for thought". It was in this spirit that I received his comments. They are not easily accepted of course, but neither can they be lightly laughed off. The earnestness with which they were presented deems his remarks worthy of further consideration.

I left the meeting with some new insights and with the desire to find answers to some new questions. I feel, therefore, that my evening was well spent and I appreciate the efforts of the Support Your Local Police Committee in providing this experience.

Sincerely,
Carol Morningstar

Color Productions Presents

In Concrt

BLOOD, SWEAT AND TEARS

Saturday, December 5th

8:00 P.M.

Farm Show Arena, Hbg., Pa.

$5.00 Advance Ticket Purchase

$6.00 Door Ticket Price

Send self addressed stamped envelope to:

Color Productions, Inc.

Box 336, Hbg., Pa. 17108

French" Tells It Like It Is"

Un Arbe

by Daniel Herzog

Il y a unarbre
qui se dresse
avec les paquerettes qui l'entourent.

L'arbre courbe
ses branches avec les feuilles vers l'herbe silencieuse.

Il est heureux,
pendant que le vent siffle a travers ses feuilles, parce qu'il sait que la Mere Nature
le surveille.

Peer Grading System - Do Professors Really Know ?

One of the most frequently heard sayings on the Juniata Campus goes something like, "I didn't pay $3,000 to come here and. . ." The sentence is, of course, completed with whatever the particular speaker didn't come to Juniata to do. The food in the dining hall, seemingly unnecessary classes, and the cost of things in the bookstore are all subjects which are now used effectively in the above cliche! One topic though, that isn't complained about with the use of said cliche is that of the practice of "students grading students" and possibly this topic is more important than any of those mentioned.

First, let us clarify what is meant by "students grading students." In some of the science courses, students, who are often only sophomores, are laboratory assistants and are responsible for giving the people in their labs a certain portion of their grades, often as much as twenty percent or more. There exists on campus a group of "readers" who mark themes written by other students on a preliminary basis and then pass them on to the courses' instructors for approval. In the computor room students who run programs can affect other students' grades by not marking down the exact number of times each program is run.

You, the reader, may now be asking, "What is all this leading to?" A blunt answer is, "Grades are probably the most important part of your college records. These records will determine, in many cases, the job or graduate school offers a student receives after college. Now, are you paying $3,000 a year to have othr students, that are only a year or two your senior meddle with your future by helping to determine your college grades?" It might be both hoped and supposed that many students are not, for some of the following reasons.

Laboratory assistants, while being invaluable in the respect of taking a great load off the professors, are by and large not education majors and hence have had little or no training in grading. They are obviously not even qualified enough in the subject of their lab to teach and grade elementary school children much less fellow college students.

"Readers," although they also help the instructors and do not get a final say, are also not qualified "anythings," and as some professors say they only read the "A's" and "F's", do get to grade many students.

It is common knowledge to computers students that if the programmer is "in a good mood" or "likes you" he will not turn in the full number of times one runs his program which will keep the students grade from going down. Again, it is not being argued that these people do not fulfill their purposes, rather that they should have no chance to take part in grading.

Admittedly, all the facts relating to "students" grading students" have no been presented here. What this article is attempting to do is alert students to this practice and possibly even stir the Student Government into action.

With the consideration of the Task Force report the major issue on campus at the moment, this subject may seem unimportant. Remember, though, that the Task Force will not abolish grades and that when the old report card comes home in January this subject could seem very important indeed.

Famous Dr.

Cont'd from page 1

present a concert of Baroque, Classical, and Romantic selections with members of the faculty.

A highlight of the season will be the presence of world renowned harpsichordist. Temple Painter. Mr. ainter will be on the college campus to present a lecture recital, recital, and a program in conjunction with the Juniata College Choral Union in December.

On the thirty-first of January, there will be a Student Chamber Recital, with those students of the college who are diligently preparing at this moment.

In February, the famous classical guitarist, Peter Seegal, will be on campus to present a concert with the Altoona Symphony String Quartet.

And last, but not least as more preparations are made as interest grows, in April there will be a concert with Juniata College Faculty members as the stars.

All these concerts are scheduled for the sanctuary of our Stone Church of the Brethran. As the time for the concerts nears, be watching the RENAISSANCE for interesting tidbits about the programs and the performers.

Now that your interest is aroused, sensitize right away, groove right over to Swigart Hall and join the grooviest department on campus.

Recognition for

Cont'd from page 1

Or of the genius of Bach or Bruckner or Brahms? Where a student's mind is challenged to memorize just some term in order to pass a course, and then forgotten, but something that becomes a part of his life from that time forth. Can a student lose his inhibitions in a class-room? or a test? Yet as a member of the Choir he learns to relax and be himself in front of others. He learns to co-operate with fellow members by sharing the work-load and seeing that things are in order for rehearsals and/or performances. Through concerts, and tours, he meets new people and makes lasting acquaintances with those with whom he stays while on tour, or even through performances on campus. He ceases being a robot and becomes uman being. Could any other course or extra curricular activity give as much to its participants while its participants excite and thrill are who would take the time to stop and listen?

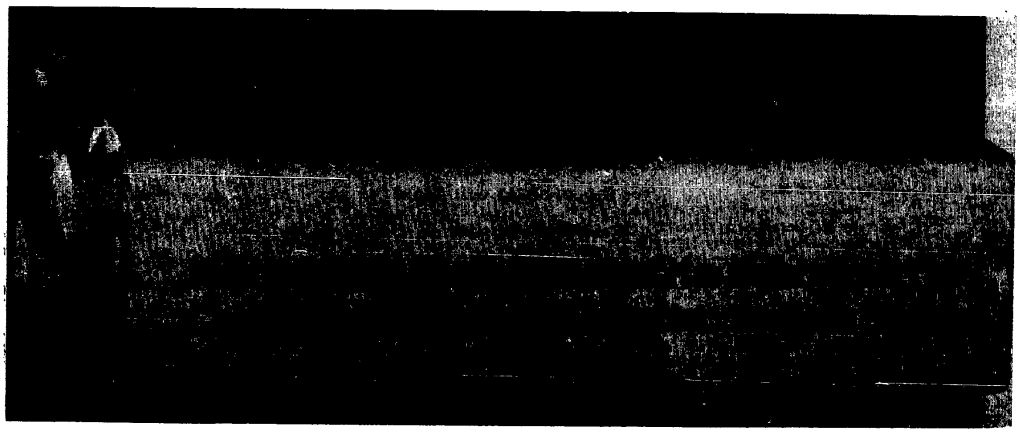
A Success ?

Cont'd from page 1

Dam Project, attended by a large group of alumni and faculty members and a few students; and in the evening, the performance of Much Ado About Nothing by the National Shakespeare Company.

Based on my observations, and the number of students who attended the various activities, I have come to the conclusion that the Homecoming was a success.

INTRODUCING OUR NEW IMPROVED WARNING



RENAISSANCE

Vol. XLVII, No. 5 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | October 30, 1970

Success or Failure ?
Task Force Day Reviewed

by Barbara M. Kulenich

On October 24, 1970, Juniata College again witnessed Task Force Day on its campus. As to whether or not anything has been accomplished because of this is difficult to determine. My afternoon session of the program left much to be desired. I was placed in a group, consisting of a majority of Chemistry majors, whose topic was Alternatives I and II on Governance. After a short discussion on Governance, we moved on to the Task Force in general. It is my opinion that nothing of importance concerning Task Force arose through our discourse. One thing did stand out, though, and that is the lack of unity among the three Divisions and the College as a whole. It seems that everyone here at Juniata is so wrapped up in his major that he has no time to become involved in or listen to the problems and ideas of others. He only worries about what affects his Department, and not what is good for the rest of the College. Students today talk about the Establishment and how unwilling it is to change. Isn't that just what Juniata is — a small Establishment where everyone is only looking out for himself and sees no need for changes, even if the changes will have no effect on them?

But one may mention that most of the Student Body want changes, of one kind or another. I agree with this, but then so does the Establishment. It is not just wanting something, it is doing something about it. I'm sure one can say that he wants a certain revision, but when the time comes for it to happen, then what will he say?

The Task Force is a start, a small one, but nevertheless, a start. And for something to end, there must be a beginning.

Calamity of the Cafeteria

Reluctant officials of the Mariana Food Service yesterday announced that the once unconfirmed rumors about something being wrong with the food were indeed true. This statement was made after the Pennsylvania Department of Emotional Security, Health, and Inner Peace had issued a report that the bubonic plague was being spread through the food that the cafeteria was serving.

This was the worst calamity to strike the food service at Juniata College since the great "Disaster of '03", on that black day, not only did several hundred students die of malnutrition while waiting in line, but also Herbie Zukowski, a townie, sneaked in line and ate lunch free.

Federal reaction (the forces of reaction?) has been swift. After President Nixon had declared the cafeteria a disaster area, and the pillars in front of Ellis Hall a fake, Attorney General John Mitchell sent 3,000 F.B.I. agents to infiltrate the cafeteria staff. A committee of prominent political figures, including such well known authorities as Barry Goldwater, Harold G. Carswell, Charles Percy, Abe Fortas, Mohammud 27X Kenyatta, Timothy Leary, D. Davis, Charles Addams, Nygen C. Ky, the Morman Tabernacle Choir, and also Vice-President S. Agnew, will investigate the possible, indeed probable, Communist infiltration of the Campus. The infiltration was reputed to have been done by the ultra-Marxist Student Eovironmental Action Committee. An undisclosed number of the Secret Service and C.I.A. agents have been assigned to gather information for the committee, and 6,000 troops of the battle-hardened Second Division of the Army of the Republic of Viet-Nam are being transfered to Huntingdon in an effort to Vietnamize the struggle. This move has been hailed by critics of the Vietnamese war as "a rational step towards a meaningful, relevent, and peaceful peace in Asia." Troops have been alerted in West Germany for a possible airlift to the strife torn area. Admiral J. P. "Bull" Nimitz-Halsey, Commander of the Sixth U.S. Fleet in the Mediterranean, has been quoted as saying, ". . . damn the torpedoes, we're coming up the Juniata. . . ." In addition, units of the Huntingdon Civil Guard are being reactivated and armed with zip guns.

Officials of the State Health Department believe the cause of the dreaded plague to be one of two possibilities:

First, the aforementioned S.E.A.C. somehow sneaked a shipment of suspect meat into the food lines. This meat, of unknown quality or origin, was sal-

Continued on page 3

Second Chamber Concert Series Starts in November

A second series of chamber music concerts on campus will open with a concert on Sunday, November 8, 1970, with Eleanor Lawrence, flutist as guest artist.

The series began last year under the direction of Dr. Robert King of the music department and received an enthusiastic response, which seems to reflect a growing interest in chamber music by the general public. The sheer amount of chamber music now being performed in larger cities is astonishing in comparison with only a few years ago. Dr. King and his wife also conduct a summer series of chamber music concerts in Michigan and have been pleasantly surprised by the support that they have received in areas where there has been no serious music of any kind.

The favorable response to the series last year has encouraged a continuation of the programs. Guest artists, who are well-known professionals will appear with the faculty of the Music Department, as well as with the college Chamber Orchestra under the direction of Dr. King.

The first guest artist to appear on the series, will be Mrs. Eleanor Lawrence, who is a member of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, and a teacher at the Manhattan College of Music. She is also a well-known soloist in New York City and elsewhere. Her ties with Juniata College come initially through her father, who is Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the college, and through her several previous performances on campus. She will appear in the role of soloist in the Telemann "Suite" for flute and strings, one of the most famous works of the Baroque Period for this combination. The soloist then will be joined by the College Chamber Orchestra composed of students and area residents. In the "Trio Sonata" by Bach for flute, violin, harpsichord, and cello, Mary Ruth Linton and Dr. King will present the new harpsichord to the public for the first time.

A composition by the Post-Romantic composer, Max Reger, will present the unusual combination of flute, violin, and viola. The "Serenade" is one of the few pieces of the composer to have survived, probably because of the skillful writing for these instruments and the rather sensuous ,light-hearted character of the piece. The final number on the concert calls for virtuoso performance by the flute, violin, and piano, in a "Madrigal Son-

Continued on page 4

Ellis Hall . . .

What Is A Center Board?

What is the College Center Board doing? This question has been passed to us numerous times, and although we answer it, we seem unable to get our point across. It seems what we are doing or have done is not obvious to many of you and in this article, we hope to clarify our job.

The College Center Board as we see it now came into existence three years ago, and presently there are eight members on the Board. Five of these are students and they are as follows. Lynne Nylund, Chairman of Social Activities. Her committee plans a program of varying levels of social activities for the whole college community. These activities consist of dances, movies, and big name entertainment. Linda Hoover is Chairman of the Recreation Committee. This committee plans programs of recreational nature for the college community such as the raft regatta, various tournaments and other recreational activities. Robert Marcus is the third student member to the Board and is chairman of Fine Arts and we are revamping the committee this year. John Loose is the Student Government representative to the Board. His specified function is for communication between the Board and Student Government but actually John is responsible for much more than that. The final student is Jack Reitnauer who is Chairman of the College Center Board. He is responsible for the basic functioning of the Board and oversees all the committees and sees that things are getting accomplished.

There are three other members on the Board. Charles Brown, who is elected by the Alumni Council, is the alumni representative. The faculty member is Dr. Erik Erikson, who is elected by the faculty. The administration member to the Board is Will Brandau, who is also the Center Director. The administrator is appointed by the President of the College. These people bring to the Board the thoughts of the various people they represent and are very instrumental in establishing our program. Each member of the Board has an equal vote, except the Chairman who votes only in a tie vote. The Center Board meets weekly and the meeting time and place is always made public and are open to the college community. In fact we want people to come to give us some ideas for programming, because, after all, it is your program.

The three committee chairmen are elected by students and elections for next year's Board will be on Nov. 12. The reason for the early election date is to give these new people almost a year's experience to learn the functioning of the Board before they become actual voting members. The Student Government representative is appointed by them and the Chairman of the Board is elected by the Board. He must have served at least one year on the Board prior to being elected.

A number of upcoming events have been planned in the area of Fine Arts, under the leadership of Bob Marcus. Tickets to Penn State's Artist Series were made available to Juniata Students by the Fine Arts Committee, and now the Committee is going to bring the Vanguard Theater Project here to campus on Nov. 17. Three one-acts plays will be presented—"The Chairs" by Eugene Ionesco, "Camera Obscure" by Robert Patrick, and "The Zoo Story" by Edward Albee. In December, a Madrigal Dinner is planned to celebrate the Christmas Season. Special foods will be served in the Old English tradition, and the Juniata Singers will provide music for the festivities. In addition to music and drama, the Fine Arts Committee is planning for student art exhibits to be displayed in the ballroom as well as exhibits to be brought in from other campuses and art associations. An interesting possibility which the committee is currently exploring is the "telelecture." By this means, the entire student body can be addressed by any speaker, and receive answers to their questions in dialogue—fashion — all through the use of special long-distance telephone equipment. If enough students are interested, the committee will set up "talk-back sessions," during which faculty and administrators will be invited to talk informally with small groups of students on topics of mutual interest. The Recreation

Continued on npage 2

Student View on Center Board's Past Activities

by B. H. Duncan

What is the purpose of the College Center Board? Having re-read the list of resolutions printed in the first issue of RENAISSANCE, one observes that very few have taken place. The first one states that a committee should be established to decorate, as well as clean up after the dances. However, the clean-up seems to take much longer as one can witness in the appearance of Lesher Dining Room a few days after a dance. The second resolution deals with the redecoration of the snack-bar and ballroom, using such articles as hurricane lamps, and perhaps adding a fireplace. As to the ballroom, it was suggested that "special effects" be used to lower the ceiling, but as yet one has not seen them. In regards to office hours, when are they? The sign was taken down as there was no one in the office during these so-called "office hours". A swimming pool is an necessary asset to this campus, but the only place one finds any mention of obtaining one is in this same list of resolutions: no effort has been made to collect those green stamp books or even to encourage the students to participate. The College Center Board itself is a self-perpetuating committee with members electing themselves and the chairman. Also, the use of petitions is not found in elections of the Center Board, but must be used in all other elections. Recently, the College Center Board received a letter from a sixteen-year-old girl in Kentucky asking for old clothes and materials for herself and her family. If the Center Board is concerned about the plight of this girl then it should sponsor a project by which clothes, books, food, and other useful materials could be collected and sent to these people. This will provide the College Center Board with a chance to improve its past record, and to become an active part of this campus.

Letters to the Editor

To the editor:

I have news for Kevin Bowers: Juniata College is alive and well and living in Huntingdon, Pennsylvania.

I don't understand what he means when he says that the students here aren't proud of where they go to college. I'm darn proud of having been accepted as a student at Juniata College and I don't care who knows it.

I've adapted to JC in a way that I don't consider "high schoolish." I don't like everyone I've met but the majority of the faculty and students that I know are truly lovely people. I won't try to convince anyone that I'm crazy about all my courses either but I'm trying to pass all of them and I can honestly say that I enjoy the majority of them. As to the world situation, my views haven't changed a great deal in the past month but that doesn't necessarily make me naive and ill-informed.

As far as life at JC goes, I'd be the first to admit that it isn't perfect but I don't think that Task Force has all the answers. I like JC the way it is — that's why I came here. And all this talk about abolishing comprehensives — now that's strictly "high school." If you can't even pass an exam on what you've learned, how can you ever hope to use this knowledge to find a job when you graduate?

About this word "involved" — just what must one do to get "involved" at JC? Student governments, at least the ones I've been involved with, are usually group gatherings that plan social events and do little else of any importance — and I can't say that the JC Student government has proved this notion to be false. I don't need this sort of thing, I know where I'm going, and what I'm going to do when I get there.

It's people like Kevin Bowers that make things seem worse than they really are. There are probably a lot of people who really liked JC until they read his article who are now going around saying: "Boy, is this a dead place!"

Juniata College can be a fantastically great school only if we believe in it. I believe in it. Does anyone else?

Irene M. Dean

Box 358 Juniata College
Huntingdon, Penna.

Editor of the Renaissance

After reading the article criticizing situations in which students are responsible for gradin other students, I would like to refute that argument, and explain why I support the arrangement just as it exists. I speak from experience at both vantage points: that of the student being graded and that of a lab assistant giving grades.

As a science major I have had probably eight or ten different students as lab instructors. As in any other situation, there have been those whom I liked more than others. However, I can honestly say that I have never felt that I was treated unjustly in any way by any student assistant.

While one seldom has a personal encounter with a student reader, and my experience with this aspect of student grading is limited, I have always felt that student readers make an honest effort to be fair in their evaluation of fellow student's work.

In my own role as lab assistant I feel I have a distinct advantage in dealing with students because I am one of them. True, I am not an education major. I have had no education courses. However, I think that in 15 years as a student I have learned to evaluate the quality of academic work and how to assign a grade based upon that evaluation.

I will not attempt to argue that all students are totally unbiased — or even one hundred per cent accurate — in assigning grades. These people are human beings capable of errors. I do argue that student assistants in any department attempt to deal fairly with the student body of which they are, after all, a part.

Lastly, I cannot help noting the odd twist to last week's article criticising student readers. The faculty members of this college too often come in for unjust criticism from students who feel they have been given a "bum deal." I am reminded of one student who commented recently that the faculty "can pull anything over on us." How odd that students who distrust the faculty and rebel against their evaluations now protest even grades assigned by fellow students.

In short, I cannot help but think that student graders are merely the latest target for attack in a much broader war on the current educational structure in general.

Name withheld by request

To the Editor:

We, the Juniata Environmental Action Committee are writing this letter to criticize the amount of littering connected with this year's Homecoming.

Before Homecoming, leaflets advertising Much Ado About Nothing and Hamlet, could be seen strewn on the sidewalk between the East Houses and Ellis Hall and were littering the parking lot behind the gym.

After Homecoming, debris from the floats could be seen blowing across the football practice field, in front of the East Houses, and into Muddy Run (the small stream that runs in front of the East Houses). The maintenance men picked up much of the trash in the foootball practice field several days after Homecoming, but not in the field in front of East Houses or along the banks of Muddy Run.

We are not trying to pin the blame for this littering on any particular person or persons but would like to suggest that in the future more responsibility and and care should be taken not to litter. We believe that the responsibility for cleaning up the floats belongs to the classes and groups that made the floats—not to the maintenance men; and we hope, in the future, steps will be taken immediately after Homecoming by the people that made the floats to clear them away.

Our committee takes a certain amount of pride in a natural, unlittered appearance of the Juniata College campus; but many of us in our committee don't feel like picking up the trash of others to have the campus look this way. Therefore we are asking everyone to help keep Juniata's campus unlittered and possibly a bit more beautiful.

The Juniata Environmental Comm.

The Renaissance

Student Weekly at Juniata College
Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED APRIL 24, 1970

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891 and "The Juniatian," established November 1924

DAN HARRIGER, Editor
JANET MASON, copy & proof editor
WILL SCARLETT, circulation
WILLIAM DAVID, photography editor
MARTHA RINKER, news & feature editor
SUE BERMEL, layout editor
BILL GASPER, sports editor
PAT MANNERS, secretary

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Barbara Duncan, Barbara Kulenich, Joan Thompson, Glenn Dean, Irene M. Dean, Jodi Schautz, Jeff Putt, Mary Ann Repman, Nancy Agnew, Dan Herzog, Kevin Bowers

The RENAISSANCE, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000

Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVII, No. 5

October 30, 1970

Calamity of Cafeteria

Continued from page 1

vaged from a sunken World War II warship by a Japanese salvage Company, carried across the wastes of China by 50,000 coolies, of which 10,000 died and were added to the supply, and thence shipped by sampan to New York.

Or second, the pancakes served at breakfast(known as the Huntingdon Heavies) could have been infected by the fleas from a stray dog which occasionally wanders into Ellis Hall.

At the present, we can only add that all meals have been cancelled until further notice; K-rations are being distributed; a curfew has been announced for all Juniata girls to protect them from the South Vietnamese troops; and the police are stopping all students and requiring them to give loyalty oaths and will continue to do so until martial law has been lifted.

(Note: We do not mean this as a disparagement of the food service. As a matter of fact, we like the food and think it's far better than the stuff that we had in high school. It's our hope that this article will merely bring a little mirth and humor to an issue that has been blown out of proportion by everybody. So if this report causes a chuckle or two, and the thought that "things aren't really that bad", we'll consider it a success.)

Your Reporter,

Francis White,

WE WANT YOU TO JOIN OUR CHURCH AS AN
ORDAINED MINISTER
AND HAVE THE RANK OF
DOCTOR of DIVINITY

We are a non-structured faith, undenominational, with no traditional doctrine or dogma. Our fast-growing church is actively seeking new ministers who believe what we believe; All men are entitled to their own convictions; To seek truth in their own way, whatever it may be, no questions asked. As a minister of the church you may:

1. Start your own church and apply for exemption from property and other taxes.
2. Perform marriages, baptisms, funerals and all other ministerial functions.
3. Enjoy reduced rates from some modes of transportation, some theatres, stores, hotels, etc.
4. Seek draft exemption as one of our working missionaries. We will tell you how.

Enclose a free will donation for the Minister's credentials and license. We also issue Doctor of Divinity Degrees. We are State Chartered and your ordination is recognized in all 50 states and most foreign countries.

FREE LIFE CHURCH — BOX 4039, HOLLYWOOD, FLORIDA 33023

Center Board, cont'd

Continued from page 1

Committee, headed by Linda Hoover, is planning a variety of activities for this coming year.

Tournaments of various kinds are being organized and run in Ellis Hall. Some of these tournaments have already been held with ments have already been held with very little student support, some are just now in the planning stages. Ping Pong, pool, and bridge tournaments are a few of the areas of competition in which students are welcome to participate.

This weekend's decorations are a result of recreation committee action. Planned around the Halloween theme their purpose is to add a bit of atmosphere to the Halloween Party Friday evening and Parents weekend affairs.

Reocurring events, from last year, that the Recreation Committee will either sponsor themselves or help sponsor will include: Car rallies, bowling days, Spring Carnival, raft regatta, and Casino Night.

Two new activities will be added to the program from the Recreation Committee this year. Nov. 21, the committee will present a "Gay 90's evening" including a banjo band, college entertainment refreshments, and fun for all. When the weather warms up look for information on Juniata's own soap Box Derby with cash prizes and lots of excitement.

Big Name Entertainment

As chairman of Social Activities, Lynne Nylund heads the committee whose main purpose is threefold: 1. to provide the students with Saturday night dances and semi-formal and formal dances; 2. to provide Friday night movies; and 3. to provide concerts. But many students seem to get confused into thinking that the only purpose the committee has, is to provide "Big Name Entertainment"— this is a fallacy. The committee is Social Activities and should be thought as such.

But since the big issue at present is "Big Name Entertainment" an explanation is needed into the problems of booking a bi-name group. First of all, the committee is working with a budget of $4,500 for a concert program—which for those of you students who do not know—that's not very much! That $4,500 is for the entire year in which, if at all possible, five concerts are to be provided. Two have already come about—the first being The Symbols on Oct. 16 and the second being Citation and Dreams which was held in the Memorial Gym on Oct. 26. But the problem many students are asking is "why can't we have a big-name group?"

1. First of all, any big-name group is between $10,000 and $40,000 and once a group has a record out—they go up to $5,000 to $6,000. The budget just can't afford this!
2. Secondly, if we were to have a big-name group we would need between 3,500 to 4,000 people to attend in order to break even or make money on such a concert. The college at present does not have facilities to hold this many people—but more important where are we going to get 4,000 people to attend such a concert? Since Juniata is located in central Pa. there are not enough area schools or big cities from which to draw this many people. So this problem comes about.
3. Thirdly, about the money. Students say they will pay $5,000 or $6,000—but will they really?

But is "Big Name Entertainment so important? Or does the importance come in providing good entertainment and a variety of such entertainment for the enjoyment of all students present at this college? This is why the committee bases its booking of entertainment on a variety of groups that will provide good concerts. An example of such a concert was last Sunday night when the Citation and Dreams put on a fantastic concert, which all who were present enjoyed. So keep this in mind, just because a group doesn't have a name doesn't mean that they are not good!

Continued on page 4

Center Board, cont'd

Although these problems are present, the committee is trying its best to overcome them. About a week ago an agency in New York, known as National Campus Concerts got in touch with the committee and there is a possibility of our booking James Taylor. This agency is working from a promotion angle and thus will book James Taylor at a lower and more feasible price for Juniata's budget; so please understand this does not mean that we can afford him—but through luck—he will be appearing at Juniata sometime in April. Another agency has contacted us (American Concert Association) in which they will being a well-known (big-name) group to Juniata—in which the only money that is exchanged will be money that is gained through ticket sales, so—the committee is working to bring the students good entertainment.

But the most important thing now is student support. Students must realize that if you all support our concerts—the committee can make some money and thus book another, possibly bigger group. We need your support!

Center Board rojects

There are various projects the Center Board has worked on in the past or is presently working on that students should be aware of.

This past summer, through Center Board efforts and the help of Dean Schoenherr and Mr. Fike, they leased six busses to provide transportation to school activities. Anyone associated with the college may rent these busses for any activity during the year. Information on how to rent them is available through the Directors office in Ellis Hall.

Through the efforts of the Center Board and Student Government these organization now have a joint office in which they can carry out their duties more efficiently and with better communications. Members from both the Center Board & Student Government try to be available in the office for students who wish to meet with them. It is impossible for someone to be there all the time. They have tried office hours, but very few if any students came in to meet with them. These people will make themselves available to students if they know students are interested in talking to them. Use the Center Director's office as a means of getting in touch with either Center Board or Student Government members when you do have something to discuss with them.

Have you noticed the "bumps" on the patio outside Ellis Hall? Those bumps are the walls of a skating rink to be put into use this winter. It was through Center Board and the Alumni Association that this more refined skating area was built on campus.

There is a committee that has developed from a Center Board idea investigating the feasibility of financing the building of a swimming pool on campus with gree stamps. This idea is in the planning stages only. It may prove to be an impossible idea. This is what the committee has set out to investigate.

If you are a pin ball or pool addict you may be interested to know that all of the pool money taken in and 40 per cent of the pin ball money goes back into the budget of the Center Board to help finance the activities of the year. (60 per cent of the pin ball money goes to the owner of the machines for the maintenance of the machines). With this added income the board is able to sponsor events they normally would have to eliminate because of lack of funds.

Center Board members attend regional and national conferences to learn ideas and share ideas with other schools. Some of the conferences the board will be represented at this year, include the Regional and National Entertainment Conferences and the Regional and National Association of College Union Conferences.

At the "Dreams" concert Tim English read a letter from a girl in Asher, Kentucky. You will be receiving a copy of this letter in your mail box within the next few days. The Board is interested in doing something to help this family and other families like hers. A comcittee is presently investigating the best way to go about doing something in this area right now. If you are interested in helping, contact Will Brandau, Jack Reitnauer, or Tim English. Your help is definitely needed.

Final exams are not too far off. Wouldn't it be nice to have some place nearby to go for a cup of coffee and a roll at 3 A.M. during an "all-nighter?" The Center Board will be providing just that. Every night during finals you will find coffee and donuts available in the post office lounge free of charge.

We have been in Ellis Hall for less than two years; it is still considered a new building on campus. The Center Board recognizes the inadequacies of the building and wants to do something about it. Of course, they must work within the limits of the standing structure as it now exists, but there are things that can be done. The Board has already met with the President and the wheels are turning to get something done. It won't happen over night, but it will happen.

There is a student coffee house located on Mifflin Street. Many students don't even know it is there. The Center Board believes this place has a lot of potential for expansion of their program. They are presently working with Doug Laird and Tim English to determine what can be done.

Student Support

All of the above activities are being worked on by the Center Board—but we cannot work alone. After all, these activities are for you students and without your support the Center Board as a functioning and workable body is nothing. Everything that happens at Juniata will work with you but only if your willing to work with us. It's a two-way relationship, without your support we can do nothing—so if you really want the most out of college, help us out—help yourself!

FOR SALE – SPINET PIANO

Wanted, responsible party to take over a spinet piano.

Easy terms available. Can be seen locally.

Write Credit Manager, P.O. Box 35, Cortland, Ohio 44410.

Additional Letters

Dear Weary Traveler:

I would be glad to address you with your right name but you did not give it to us. Any reason to do so?

John Mitchell to whom you wrote did sign his full name. I have the pleasure to know John and I really believe that our Biology and German major will major also in human relations and will become one of the links between different worlds.

But now I would like to say some words to you and not about John. You took six semesters of French before entering college. Who then does require from you to take four semesters more in a foreign language? Don't you know that you may pass your "Competency Exam" and be free from all these foreign languages!

To your experience as a hitchhiker in Europe I would say that it speaks good of European countries in which you were. The people were nice to an American student. But do not believe that you will remain always an American student and also do not believe that people are always so friendly.

Listen: . . . . . it was during the 2nd world war; on a battlefield were laying many dead and some wounded soldiers. . . German soldiers came to take their own people. Understand me, Traveler, it was the war, they were not able to look at the expression on the faces, but they did hear when . . . . suddenly one Russian soldier start-

Continued on page 4

Too Many "Little" Big Name Groups

by Jean Thompson

Within the space of ten days three "Big Name" rock music groups have performed on Juniata's campus: the Symbols, October 16 and Citation and Dreams October 25. There have been widely varied reactions to each of these groups which tends to indicate that there is both something to like and something to dislike about each.

The Symbols, though good musicians were not original enough. Citation, too, included many songs by other groups in their performance, but made them interesting by their use of original arrangements. Dreams, an excellent group of musicians, tended to make all their songs sound alike. When viewed in its totality, Juniata has had three rather mediocre groups: good, but not great. All three played so loudly they obscured both the words and the music, producing one monolithic, vibrating blob. A common complaint afterwards was calloused eardrums.

These three "Big Name" groups may be the only ones to come to Juniata this year since Citation and Dreams sold so poorly The Center Board should realize that the better known the group they get, the more tickets they will be able to sell regardless of the higher price. Many students will not be cornered into paying money to hear an unknown group labelled Big Name Entertainment that is in all probability a very mediocre group so that in the future they can hear someone who really deserves the label. It seems strange, too, that the three groups appeared in such close succession. What might have been gained by having several events was largely negated. If the Center Board continues to engage such unknow ngroups the least they can do is dispense with the erroneous title "Big Name."

"New" Curriculum Review

Juniatian (February 8, 1939

Last week, the Juniatian conducted, through its column of Campus Comments, a survey of student opinion as to the merits of the curriculum revision put into effect last fall.

The purpose of the revision, it will be remembered, was to produce graduates who have: 1) a command of certain technical skills; 2) the ability to integrate classroom work with a scheme for living; 3) a liberal education, i.e. a diversity of interest and understanding; 4) the benefits of freedom in choosing a large number of elective studies. To fulfill this purpose a group of introductory or survey courses together with certain additional work in fields other than the one of a student's concentration were made compulsory, and became the prescribed course for all Freshmen.

For several reasons the Juniatian felt the survey made last week was necessary: First of all, the semester's work of introductory courses had been completed by the first class of Freshmen under the new system; Secondly, because murmurings of discontent with the survey courses had become from time to time quite audible on campus; and Lastly, because we felt no more logical time than the close of the semester could be found to make this observation.

The survey was applied predominantly to Freshmen; they are, in our opinion best qualified among the students to estimate the results of the curriculum changes. The findings of the survey are interesting. The educational value of the compulsory survey courses was generally conceded. Criticisms were not directed at the intellectual value of the materials presented; the bulk of the criticisms came from students who felt the program required for their Freshman year was unfair in that it prevented them from immediately taking up their selected work. It was argued that the program prevented students from getting the necessary foundation work of specialized fields like Chemistry, Mathematics, Economics, etc., early enough to attain a degree of specialization in these fields comparable to that received by other students in other colleges. The idea of Biology major for example, who will have had no work in that field at the end of the year was ridiculed.

In view of these findings and in view of the fact that all Freshmen must complete, in addition to their language competence, Ethics, and Bible requirements, a total of twelve hours work outside of their division of concentration, the Juniatian holds that the following suggestions are worthy of some consideration.

I. The general Theory behind the revised curriculum is established as valuable and should be retained. Juniata aims to offer a liberal education, and to this end a diversity of interest and understanding is essential.

II. The curriculum as it stands now is too rigid: It should be made more flexible. We feel that it should be possible for students, who have selected their field of concentration, to begin work in that field immediately upon entering college. Courses aimed to give a general insight into other fields should be compulsory for all candidates for degrees, but the entire Freshman year should not, in our opinion, be filled with such courses. If the required general work outside the field of concentration were scattered out, heavy and confused schedules of difficult advanced work in the Junior and Senior years, which will result as the system now stands, could be minimized.

III. Students who are at Juniata to receive credits necessary for entrance to various types of technical schools should, in our opinion, be granted a larged measure of special consideration in the point of programs and exemption from required courses than we understand they now receive. Not only does the first year program under the revised curriculum delay the work of this type of individual, but it may also result in his receiving non-transferable credits.

IV. More stress should be placed upon English composition. From reports we have heard from students themselves, the new curriculum has failed to aid them materially in their writing. Composition cannot and must not be neglected. It is vital, and we contend that more emphasis should be placed upon this elementary tool of the student.

In conclusion, it is evident that the theory of the curriculum changes made last fall has proved its worth. However, it appears that a few concessions towards flexibility and more stress upon composition would make the application of the theory more successful and its results more valuable.

RENAISSANCE

Box 667

Sports Scene

by

Bill Gasper

After picking nine out of eleven last week, we will be brave and prognosticate again:

W & J over Juniata
(this is not the week)

Ohio State over Northwestern
(one more time)

Texas over SMU
(good luck, Chuck Hikson)

Notre Dame over Navy
(no comment)

Dartmouth over Yale
(winner will take the Ivy League title)

Cal. over USC
(McKay will not see Pasedena this year)

Auburn over Florida
(close)

Syracuse over Pitt
(Orange coming on strong)

West Va. over Penn State
(WVU in best game of the week)

Missouri over Kansas State (even)

UPSE OF THE WEEK
Cal over USC

MISMATCH
Tennessee - Wake forest

Everyone discusses the top ten, here's our bottom ten:

1. Holy Cross
2. Army
3. Indiana
4. Wash. State
5. Navy
6. Kentucky
7. Brown
8. Baylor
9. Vanderbilt
10. Virginia Tech

NOTES AT RANDOM: Chris Papanicolacre of Greece broke the 18 foot pole vault barrier last week . . .Bob Seagren can retire. . . . Cotton Speyer of Texas is out for the year with a broken arm. . . .All 17 blacks on the Idaho State football team were dropped by the coach. . . .Al Bowman of Shippensburg is one of the leading receives in the national small college scene . . . .Kentucky's basketball team integrates this year. . . .Arkansas State is the number one small college team in the nation . . .The New York Times sports section this past Sunday ran an interesting article on small college athletics. Someone predicted a turn to the club football approach. . . .Juniata frosh tied Thaddeus Stevens. . . . Worst football season ever at Juniata was 1921, 0-8-0. The schedule included Dickinson, Geneva, Drexel, Bellefonte Academy, Albright, Lebanon Valley, St. Bona, and Thiel. The team did not score all year. The season totals were: Juniata - 0, Opponents - 271.

Task Force Day

Task Force Quotes

"We'll end up a mini-university." E. Erikson

"The first year seminar is like a shot-gun wedding." Dr. Gooch

"(The first year seminar is) like coming off a desert and jumping into a pool of ice water . . . you can lose your breath and not come up."
Mo Taylor

"Most change is for the better, especially on this campus." Sal Azzaro

"Whatever the theory was, the practice is." B. Davis
"But that isn't what we're talking about. I guess I say that a lot."
G. Billingsley

"I may be a machine in Nature of Man, but I have weak tracks and take the easiest way." Dr. Blaisdell

"I don't think any college has the right to play God." G. Croce

Weekend 'Backing

by Bill Gasper

In spite of all the discussions we promised from last week and all the material accumulated since then, we will dispense with them and comment on what happened Saturday at Upsala. The remainder of those articles will be included in future editions of the Renaissance. But, for now, the bigger story is, should Coach Nadzak have sat on the 19-19 tie or go for the win late in the game. The Juniata mentor decided to play for the win which led to a pass interception and suddenly Upsala had a field goal and the victory. It would be easy to rack Coach Nadzak over the coals for apparently losing the game, but we disagree. Someone, somewhere, once said that "a tie si like kissing your own sister," and we heartily agree with this evaluation. The feeling of a tie is a hard one to explain: it is not the joy of victory, or the agony of defeat, but falls somewhere in between and leans toward the defeat side. Juniata had its chances to win (note two missed extra points), but that is not the point we are trying to make; the Indians went all out for the victory and we commend them for it. If Juniata would have pulled out a victory in the final minutes, Coach Nadzak would have been praised up and down the campus for his great coaching. Now, we congratulate him for his efforts to secure a win for his team.

Do you remember the storm of controversy which surrounded Ara Parseghian of Notre Dame after he played for the tie against Michigan state a few years ago?

In looking forward to this Saturday's encounter with the Presidents of Washington & Jefferson, the Indians are definitely underdogs. W & J comes into the Parents' Day battle undefeated (6-0) with their latest victory over Thiel, 41-28. It would be the perfect setting for the Indians to put it all together and pull an upset in this non-league game. By the seventh game, inexperience should not be much of a factor unless in a situation created by injury.

This will mark only the second encounter between Juniata and W & J, with the Indians emerging victorious, 41-21, in the first contest last year. It should be close and if the Indians jell, victory number two might be a sweet one.

Next week, the football team travels to Western Maryland and we will hopefully preview that game next week. Remember any suggestions or questions concerning sports at Juniata can be sent either to the Renaissance or me. After being unable to fulfill our promise of what would be included in this week's column, we cannot say what to look for next week. Whatever seems most pertinent will be included, that is our only

QUESTIONAIRE

At a recent Student Government meeting the Rennaissance was a center of discussion. Many personal ideas were expressed but no concensus of campus opinion was reached. We, therefore, are now turning to you, the students and asking for your opinions. Please check those items from the following list that you would care to see in the paper and return it to the Renaissance.

.... Calendar of events
.... Cartoons
.... Coming Events
.... Commentaries
.... Editorials
.... Feature Columns
.... Letters to the Editor
.... "Newsy-news"
.... Pictures
.... Sports
.... Statistics
.... Syndicated Columns
....Other .....
Comments .....

Additional Letters

Continued from page 3

ed to ask for help in German. This saved his life, he was taken with the others, he was not "finished." I know him very well and I think you do too. . . . it was also during the 2nd world war in a town in Yougoslavia, which was occupied by Germans and more or less surrounded by serbian partisans. There was hunger, cold and sickness. A young girl, may be just 3-4 years older than you now, did save not only her own life but also the lives of her old parents and sister's family (the sister was just expecting her second child) only by management of languages. Notice, Traveler, not language but languages! This "girl" is now here and is writing to you and other students, whom she likes and whose future is her great concern.

So, Weary Traveler, I wish you sincerely to be able always just to admire the Alps, Louvre, cathedral of Venice a.s.o. but your life as a mature person is just starting; who knows what it will bring ? ! Hopefully you will never be in a situation where you will need more than to ask "ou est la toilette?" nevertheless how necessary was also this! Can you imagine what could happen if you would not even know this after your long study of French?!

If you would like to hear more about my opinion of foreign languages (required or not required) so, please, do communicate.

Sincerely yours,
Tamara C. Benigni
Assistant Professor in German and Russian

To the editor:

I would like to thank you for your editorial recognition of my efforts in support of the Homecoming Parade. I'll not deny that was a lot of work. However, my efforts were more than matched by the efforts of many other people, including and especially Linda Markey.

Color Productions Presents
In Concrt
BLOOD, SWEAT AND TEARS
Saturday, December 5th
8:00 P.M.
Farm Show Arena, Hbg., Pa.
$5.00 Advance Ticket Purchase
$6.00 Door Ticket Price
Send self addressed stamped envelope to:
Color Productions, Inc.
Box 336, Hbg., Pa. 17108

A Look At the Past

Dear Editor:

In response to a recently published letter, long and fringed with fire, concerning the behavior in our social rooms, I wish to remind our self-appointed but very benevolent social room "Milquetoast" that we are living in a modern age where criticism is not made for restricting one's rights, but for bettering existing conditions.

In my humble opinion, I fail to see how we can better conditions by continuing to use embellished gossip to reprimand people for innocent friendliness.

The social room "scourge", as "Milquetoast" so politely (?) puts it, seems to me to be a very harsh word to use in describing one who is merely showing his finer sentiments. These dust-dry hermits who favor the curtailing of that "biological urge" commonly called hand-holding should remember that ever since man trod the world alone and chanced upon Eve we have had certain amount of this so-called "wooing."

In the first place, we must not lose sight of the fact that as college students we are supposed to be cultured people. And cultured people do not, as a rule, meet their girlfriends in obscure places, or make secret, hidden rendevous.

As for their admitted "wall-flower" feelings, if they wish to continue to adorn the walls, and are afraid to mingle with cultured people, merely because boys and girls scamper out as if the plague had arrived; if they are so narrow, how can they make a success of life? There is no place in this modern age; we are no longer in the Puritan era.

To the editor:

I would like to thank you for your editorial recognition of my efforts in support of the Homecoming Parade. I'll not deny that was a lot of work. However, my efforts were more than matched by the efforts of many other people, including and especially Linda Markey.

Baby Cooing Softly

Baby cooing softly
stammered his first sounds
Dada Da Da Da.

To his widowed mom
this joyful moment is sad
as he has no dad.

Tears fill her eyes slowly,
if only those words were ma ma
she could praise his coos.

But her thoughts were heavy on her dead husband who would never hear those words.

Oh God, give me power to raise this boy of mine strong as his dad would have.

An undeclared war protested by many took his life quickly.

Why do they cry stop?
Those who have never faced a chance to protect.

Freedom for everyone that is the real objective of an undeclared war.

Why not share that which we ourselves have had ever since we can recall.

A hoping world just waiting for a chance at free in every sense of it.

Maybe war is not for you but who is it for,
nobody wants it.

At least some have stood with the nation's feeling of freedom for all.

Baby cooing softly,
stammered his first sounds
Dada Da Da Da.

Candy Iacobucci

Chamber Concert

Continued from page 1

ata" by the contemporary Czech composer, Martinu. This piece exploits many of the most brilliant effects possible for these instruments and demands technical skills of the highest order.

The concert is free, and the college-community and area residents are cordially invited to attend. Concerts this year will be presented in the Old Stone Church, on campus, and will begin at 8:15.

The parade was, as you state, finally organized by me on Friday night. But all I was doing was to put together the work of many other people: The people who built the floats; The people who arranged for the trucks and cars and fire equipment; The people who agreed to drive these vehicles; The people who judged the parade; The many other people who took care of the many details which helped to make the parade whatever success it was, especially among these, the Boro Police, without whose cooperation our parade would have ended somewhere along the route in the biggest traffic snarl since the last L.I.R.R. strike.

While I yield to no one in my willingness to accept compliments, I want to stress that the parade was by no means, a single-handed effort on my, or anyone else's part.

J. M. Bixby

JUNIATA COLLEGE
HUNTINGDON, PA.

RENAISSANCE

Vol. XLVII, No. 6 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | December 15 1970

JEAC Fights Pollution

by Jean Thompson

The first major project of the Juniata Environmental Action Committee was conducted the week of November 9th - 14th when JEAC members personally circulated petitions in support of House Bill 2401 which would prohibit the sale, manufacture, or use of non-returnable bottles in the state of Pennsylvania. An attempt was made to contact the majority of faculty members and students enrolled at Juniata during the week and on Saturday the townspeople were also asked to consider the proposal. Similar activity was undertaken by students in the Huntingdon Area High School. The bill, however, in committee when the petitions were circulated, died in committee when the Legislature recessed for Thanksgiving. Nevertheless, the petitions will be sent to the Liquor Control Committee, the committee in charge of the bill, in hopes that it will be reintroduced. As on this project, JEAC will work on some future projects with the assistance of the analogous high school anti-pollution organization and the League of Women Voters.

Both the Science Library and the main library will soon have a collection of literature on the subject of pollution gathered by the organization's members. Though these materials will not circulate out of the library for the most part, they will be available for use by the entire college in the library.

JEAC is devising a plan to stop the erosion now occurring on the soil banks near the East Houses. It is hoped that the flat area on top of the banks can be made into a picnic grounds.

Posters listing the phosphate contents of various detergents will soon appear in the laundry rooms around campus. Phosphates encourage the growth of home forms of algae that seal off the surface of bodies of water, cutting off supply of oxygen for those organisms living in the water below. Detergent manufacturers are not required by law to list the phosphate contents of their products.

Suggestions are welcomed from students and faculty for projects they would like to see JEAC work on. Suggestions can be made by dropping a note to the committee by intra-college mail via box 1037.

JEAC remains a small organization. Many people still do not realize that the problem pollution presents is indeed very great and quite probably the most critical problem people now have to work on. There may be others who do realize the urgency and enormity of the problem, and therefore conclude that there is nothing that can be done about it by an organization such as JEAC.

It is the goal of JEAC to help educate people and help them find ways to begin solving the problem. So far the largest response of the population of Juniata College has been to steal the posters off the JEAC bulletin board as quickly as they are put up. Stealing posters will not help solve the problem, though it is evident from such a response that there is interest on campus in the problem of pollution. It is hoped that the posters will be returned to box 1037 in the near future.

Juniata Presents Christmas Concert For The Public

On December 13, at 8:15 P.M., the campus of Juniata College will resound with the sounds of Christmas a la 16-17th Century. The Christmas Concert which is to be given in Oller Hall will combine the talents of the Juniata Choral Union and the Juniata College/Community Orchestra with the genius of directors Bruce A. Hirsch and Robert F. King combined with the genius and dexterity of the Artist in Residence Temple Painter, harpsichordist.

Temple Painter, who's appearance will be first on the program, will perform a "Concerto in D Major" by Vivaldi, consisting of three movements: Allegro, Larghetto, Allegro. Mr. Painter's technical skill on this ancient instrument, by now, is no secret to the appeared to the community in a College Community. Mr. Painter recital in Shoemaker Galleries on the 4th of December, and again on the 6th of December in a joint concert with Dr. King, of the Juniata Faculty, at the Stone Church oft he Brethren.

Second on the program will be the "Concerto Grosso No. 8 Opus 6 (The Christmas Concerto)" of Corelli, performed by the Juniata College/Community Orchestra under the baton of Dr. King.

The Juniata Chamber Singers with an instrumental ensemble under the direction of Mr. Hirsch, will change the pace with a performance of the Buxtehude, "Jesu, meine Freude (Jesus, Joy and Treasure)". A very familiar chorale tune will catch the ear of the listener as well as the fine solo work of Glenn Billingsley, baritone and senior Music Major, and Anne Hench, soprano and senior Biology Major.

The choral forces of the 100 voice Choral Union and a Brass Ensemble will tintilate the environments with the "Jubilate Deo" of . Gabrieli under the direction of Mr. Hirsch.

"Come Ye Sons of Art" by Henry Purcell, presented by the Choral Union and College/Community Orchestra under Dr. King's direction will close the program. Featured as soloists in this work will be Barbara Hess alto and senior EL Ed. Major; Lynne Smires, alto and junior German and History Major; and Anne Hench, soprano, and Glenn Billingsley, baritone.

The College Community is heartily encouraged to attend.

Center Board

John Denver In Concert This Friday

Balladeer John Denver, who has written such popular musical hits as "Leaving on a Jet Plane," "That's the Way It's Gonna' Be," and "For Baby (For Bobbie)," will perform at Juniata College this Friday evening, Dec. 11.

The concert will begin at 8 p.m. in Oller Hall auditorium. Tickets for reserved seats are available in advance at the Ellis Hall information desk, and may also be purchased at the door Friday evening.

John Denver's career as folk-singer - writer - performer came to prominence when he was chosen in 1965 to replace Chad Mitchell Trio. He was lead singer with the group until it disbanded in 1968. Since then he has written songs for such notables as Peter, Paul and Mary, Spanky and Our Gang, Bobby Darin, Claudine Longet, and the Sandpipers, among others.

Following a long series of night club engagements he has been touring both as a soloist and with groups like Blood, Sweat and Tears at colleges and concert halls across the U.S.

Having recorded for Capitol, Mercury and Reprise Records, Denver recently signed with RCA Victor. His latest album, "Rhymes and Reasons," features his versatility from country satire to romantic ballads.

Grant Granted

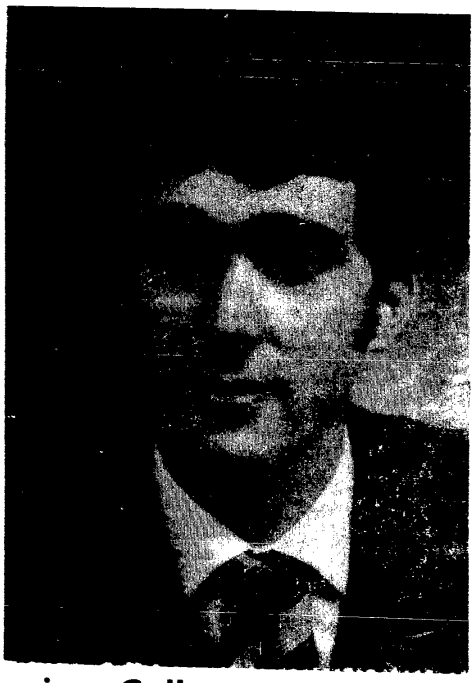
Juniata College has received a $1,500 grant from the Sears Roebuck Foundation, it was announced today by President Stauffer.

The grant is one of more than 950 awarded for the second consecutive year to privately supported colleges and universities in the U.S. by the Foundation. The institutions received $1 million in unrestricted funds and an additional $50,000 for college library acquisitions.

At Juniata, $1,000 of the grant will be applied directly to educational programs, while the $500 restricted portion will be used for the purchase of books for the L. A. Beeghly Library. A similar grant from the Sears Foundation last year was also used in this manner.

Mr. Charles L. Ferrell, Sears-Roebuck manager in Altoona, presented the Foundation's check to Foster G. Ulrich, Jr., executive director of development for the college, who represented President Stauffer.

In a letter of response to the Foundation, Dr. Stauffer wrote, "The Sears Foundation gift is a great encouragement to those of us who are involved directly in providing the means for a quality education for our students." The president expressed the gratitude of students, faculty, alumni and trustees of the 94 year-old institution for the contribution.



Juniata College Graduate Elected Bank Officer

John H. Funk, 722 Cottage Road, Glenside, has been elected an officer of The First Pennsylvania Banking and Trust Company with the title of administrative officer in the branch planning and marketing division of its metropolitan de p-artment.

Funk joined First Pennsylvania Bank in 1966 as a member of the branch management training program. Following experience in the credit and audit departments and service at the bank's Germantown office, in 1968 he was appointed officer's assistant at the Roxborough office. Later that year he was named assistant to the loan review officer in the loan review division of the commercial loan administration department. He was assigned to the branch planning and marketing division of the metropolitan department earlier this year.

A 1966 graduate of Juniata College, Huntingdon, Pennsylvania, with a B.A. degree in history, Funk is presently studying at Drexel University in pursuit of an M.B.A. degree.

Funk and his wife, Susanne, have three children, John, Jr., 6, who attends Glenside-Weidon Elementary School in Abington, Michael, 3, and Caroline, 9 months. The new bank officer's chief leisure interests are history and art.

McBride Exhibits Student Art in Shoemaker

by Barb Kulenich

On Dec. 7, 1970 the Art Department will open a student Art Exhibition under the direction of Mr. Alex McBride in Shoemaker Galleries. Art work from the three studies will be displayed. This will include charcoal drawings (Studio I), paintings (Studio II), and prints (Studio III).

The purposes of this exhibit are to show what's been happening" in the classes and to emphasize what can be done in a school not offering a major in Art. It is not to show individual accomplishments, but to help the student realize what he has to work with from now on.

The show will be beneficial to Mr. McBride, in that he can note improvements, and also to determine areas where improvement is needed. It will be beneficial to the Studio members, too. They can look at their works, and each others', to decide how well they've progressed.

Througout the semester the classes have worked on projects to supplement their paintings, drawings, or printmaking. These projects dealt with such things as perspective, equal values and intensities, shape and space control, and problems of organization. All these and more have aided the students in producing their respective "works of art."

S.G.—Is It Really?

Ed. Note: We of the newspaper staff realize our duty to print opinionated student articles regardless of the consequences to the paper. Therefore we print the following article eventhough we have been informed that derogatory remarks concerning Juniata's Student Government may result in the loss of our budget. We believe that the Freedom of the Press as set forth in the Bill of Rights should pertain to all responsible newspapers.

STUDENT GOVERNMENT

by Jeff Lesak

Juniata "Student Governments" in the last few years have been remarkably ineffective, uncreative, and largely unsupported (except maybe as a token on the part of the administration. This present "S.G." after a hopeful beginning has finally settled down to business as usual.

To find what is wrong with the "S.G." is a difficult thing. It is not easy to criticize their actions. This may be because it's difficult to find any of their actions. Unfortunately it is on the shoulders of the member of "S.G." that the resounding success of that group lies.

The success or failure of any organization can only be blamed on the members of that organization. "S.G." can be no different, and like many other groups, they do take the blame—for their successes.

It appears that the students are the ones to lay claim to the few failures that have marred the "S.G." remarkable record. When something the "S.G." is working on runs into difficulty, work is stopped because the "S.G." claim that the students did not support it. The charge is that unconcern killed the action. This may be an indication of the diligence and conviction of the "S.G."

Maybe the problem is that the students are so turned off by "S.G." that they couldn't care less what they do or maybe the things the "S.G." concerns itself with are not what the students are concerned about.

And even if "S.G." were concerned about the same thing, it's doubtful that the students would use its "structure" for action. This has been evidenced dramatically by the "library sit-in" and more recently by the comps issue. This later example warrants close examination.

A meeting was called by "S.G." to map actions to take to alter the examinations. The president of "S. G." stood up and asked for discussion—after he had proposed steps to be taken. The students would have little to do with his proposal. Almost immediately, the students found a new spokesman and proceeded to organize on their own. "S.G'. 'later supported the students, giving it "authority" and therefore tremendously enforcing the effort.

Why is it that students have such little concern for "S.G.?" The greater part of the reason may be that "S.G." has little sincere concern for the students. It is difficult to see how a group of egotistical politicians primarily concerned with nothing but their self-centered desire for power and control can offer much leadership to the "governed"

An indication of how impressed the students are with "S.G." and its members can be seen in the overwhelming turnout witnessed at "S.G." elections. "S.G." complains that this lack of enthusiasm hampers their efficiency. It would be more realisitic if the "S.G." would have the students vote when they don't.

Can the students have any hope for a better "S.G." in the future? At present, no.

Like it or not, "S.G." is practically self-perpetuating. Always the same old faces year after year. Even with new people they all have the same faces. And when there is a need for more personnel in "S.G." (as for committees and executive positions) it appears they turn to roommates and friends to fill these positions, obviously increasing the flow of new ideas.

A "new look" would improve the "Government," but no matter who is in there, they will run into great difficulty. The constitution of the "S.G." is unspecific, unclear in its division of power, and reads like it was written by an eighth grade civics class. Any meaningful change in the "S.G." would have to be concerned with this problem.

As any change in the personnel or constitution is highly unlikely, it appears that students will just have to do without a Student Government. The "S.G." we have now is not so hard to live with, though. After all, the only time we ever run into them is when they go out of their way to make themselves known.

The Renaissance

Student Weekly at Juniata College

Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED APRIL 24, 1970

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891 and "The Juniatian," established November 1924

DAN HARRIGER, Editor
JANET MASON, copy & proof editor
WILL SCARLETT, circulation
WILLIAM DAVID, photography editor
MARTHA RINKER, news & feature editor
SUE BERMEL, layout editor
BILL GASPER, sports editor
PAT MANNERS, secretary

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Barbara Duncan, Barbara Kulesich, Joan Thompson, Glenn Dean, Irene M. Dean, Jodi Schautz, Jeff Putt, Mary Ann Repman, Nancy Agnew, Dan Herzog, Kevin Bowers

The RENAISSANCE, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000

Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVII, No. 6

December 15, 1970

Concerning Juniata

"You reap what you sow" is the clause drawn in defense that is often heard when an institution of higher education is criticized for "not having anything to offer." This reflects the assumption that any good college has something to offer the great majority of its students, if they will but endeavor to seek out knowledge. Why else would they be there? (Don't pass this off by the way, it is a fundamental question that needs careful examination.) This may be true, but why then, on the larger educational scene, is dissatisfaction with "college" in general, growing? Why are more and more young people being "turned off" by the college experience?

The way the present students masses are reacting in the subject of a massive amount of research and literature by educators, sociologists, and psychologists. The facts can no longer be ignored that for increasing numbers of students college has become irrelevant boring, and "not worth it." This comment from a Berkeley senior who had the highest grade-point average of his graduating class: (quoted in School Review—Aug. '70).

"The first thing I would like to say to you is that it was not worth it. . . in the pursuit of his grades he had become subject to a paralyzing mental machinery: if I did not study twelve hours a day, compose at the speed of 1000 words an hour, while typing a paper, go through required reading at 33 pages an hour, I was a failure. I pushed myself until I was more enchained than a Russian factory worker in the 1930's. His longing for human contact, he said would come at night as I walked home from the library. I would look at the lights in the windows and think to myself: behind those windows are people—real, live, human, fleshy, thinking, feeling, loving, despairing people. I am out here and they are in there. They will never come out here to me, and they would never allow me to come inside to them."

The point I'm driving at is that these feelings of alienation and despair are on the rise, and JC is affected, but not responding. The ever-present questions concerning a college education and what it can be and do for a student have not been solidly met and dealt with. This we must do before we can discuss such things as curriculum change, if we are to make such changes effective.

One would hope that by the time the college students is a sophomore he could take over the control of his own education. However, many students cannot or will not because they are not convinced college is the place "where it's at." More and more people find themselves at college for reasons they were not aware of at first and now do not make any sense (these reasons are usually economic in one way or another). However, the question is raised more than ever, "Is it worth it?"

We sometimes lose sight of the fact that any college is a special enviroment, but not necessarily the only or even the best one offering the potential for a meaningful education. Each life situation itself holds an educational experience. An education is not something one builds from nothing through study, it is a seed one nourishes. One of our mistakes has been to make education a goal (achieved after completion of so many hours, such and such

continued on page 5

If No Man Will Hear You, Tell It To The Wind

by Scott Leedy

We set on route, my friend and I
(and thus, I went alone) to travel to that secret place where men are yet unknown.
I knew not where my search would end,
in distant lands or near.
But this I knew: the others failed who lost their bouts with fear.
I carried with me what I thought I'd need:
a tape, a pen, a yardstick, and some seed that I had gotten from an honest man who kept his treasures in a rusty can.
There were times when I wished that I would have owned more,
but I left my desires unsaid.
For I learned that the only thing living men have that distinguishes them from the dead is the greed that spills forth from their hearts when they beat and the hot, selfish breath they exhale, and the pleasures they take and the riches they make when their ways over justice prevail.
One bright morning I passed through a graveyard.
There it was where the universe bled.
And I marveled that sun light is wasted which reflects the carved names of the dead.
For living men care not to read the stone signs;
Dead men are no longer able to read.
And placing an empty shell inside a box, hiding it after its captive is freed, then, marking its cover with numbers and words engraved on a rock in a field on a hill is quick for the living, and easily done, but ignorant of every man's secret will.
It was there I decided to stay —
among the forever-missing on a never-again day.
I began to prepare my own shrine with my few only-possessions in a plan of timeless design.
I measured with my yardstick the cemetery zone.
I wrote a word upon the tape and placed it on a stone with sticky surface facing up so it would not remain like all the other words which spelled the graveyard's lost refrain.
Then, in the center of the lot, I lay beneath the sky.
I ate the seeds which I had brought, and waited there to die.
So I might not be lonely there a bird came down to sing.
But when he lit upon the stone, the tape clung to his wing.
And when his song was ended, the bird flew out of sight;
and with him to the heavens my clinging dream took flight.
The life I had I gave the seeds; by evening I was dead.
But now I live again as trees, and "love" flies overhead.

Peace Pipe Returns With Peace Movement Notes

by Jim Plitt

In Boston the constitutionality of the 1967 Selective Service Act is being challenged in the U.S. District Court on grounds that it discriminates against men because it exempts women from the draft. Speaking of the draft. . .

Juniata does have a draft Information Center in the library new-book reading area. It contains copies of the Draft laws, C.O. deferment forms along with many books on the various alternatives, C.O. Handbooks, different churches' positions, and books on resistance. This section should be of values in answering most questions students have about the draft. In addition the campus ministers are available for counseling in Room 312 Founders, or through ox 742.

Anyone interested in being trained as a draft counselor, contact me through Box 276. It is hoped and somewhat probable that next semester we will have trained counselors available and a room set aside for counseling purposes.

Music Mountain needs help! A non-profit corporation formed initially by Canned Heat and Alan Wilson needs contributions and letters. Its primary purpose is to raise sufficient funds to purchase a massive grove of giant redwoods, surrounded by the existing Redwood National Park but much higher in elevation. The area, presently owned by the Areata Redwood Company, if it is clean-cut will damage through erosion, wind and flooding, the other park areas.

Canned Heat and many other groups have already agreed to donate all proceeds from at least one major concert during the next few months.

After purchase of this land, the Federal Government has agreed to include this area as a separate sector of the Redwood National Park. It is important to emphasize that the donor's contribution is matched once by the Federal Government and again by the Ford Foundation. So the donation is actually tripled its original value.

Much help is needed. MUSIC MOUNTAIN is asking everyone possible to contribute whatever he can afford. In acknowledgement of your contribution of $2 or more you will receive a full-colored MUSIC MOUNTAIN decal and your name will be added to the ever growing list of concerned individuals which will eventually appear on a commomerative plaque in the MUSIC MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK! Help is needed as soon as possible.

Send any letters or contributions to:

MUSIC MOUNTAIN, INC.
SUITE 211
6331 Hollywood Blvd.
Hollywood, Calif. 90028
(213—466-4159)

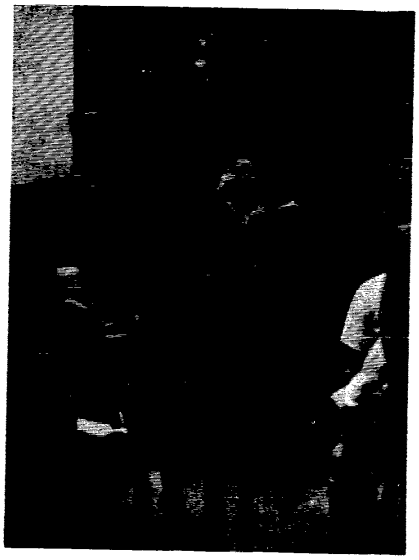
If anyone has any information which would be of use to this column please submit them to Box 276 or the Renaissance office.

Tennessee

On Oct. 9 three black students attending Morristown Junior College in Morristown Tennessee were shot by a campus security guard following the takeover of a college administration building by over 100 students. The occupation at the college, which has 300 students was centered around demands for students rights.

Who's on Whose Side Dept.?

continued on page 6



Juniata's Dr. Doyle Captivates Audiences With Her Readings

by David C. Linton

Dr. Esther M. Doyle captured the imaginations of two Juniata audiences with her performances of the 1960 play A Man For All Seasons, by Robert Bolt on the evenings of Nov. 12 and 13 at the Shoemaker Galleries. It is difficult to characterize effectively one personage in a play, but Dr. Doyle did this and much more. With vivid expression and excellent characterization, Dr. Doyle presented A Man For All Seasons and its entire cast of characters. Dr. Doyle exhibited amazing flexibility and control of emotions in shifting from the adamant Sr. Thomas More to the practical and somewhat mediocre Comman Man while continuously remaining in the gaze of the audience.

A Man For All Seasons contains many witty remarks and is thus quite entertaining. Most of us can find relief from the tensions of our troubled era by observing the problems of kings and queens of long ago. However, the moral questions of the sixteenth century are still relevant today. We read often in our daily newspapers of young men who, as Sir Thomas More, were far more eager to pay a penalty for their convictions than to change them.

Sir Thomas More was a man with a promising future all of his life. He rose from an honorable place in the middle class to the position of Lord Chancellor of Great Britain. By merely signing an oath and giving his unwavering allegiance to King Henry the eighth, More could have remained in his lofty position. He chose to stand by the Pope and face the penalty for treason, death.

We have analogies of Sir Thomas More's dilemma in the United States today. In the previous decade many young Americans have questioned the reasonability and the legality of being forced to fight in a morally dubious war. Many of the American dissenters have been men of promise and could have risen to positions of importance in our society. However, these men fought our draft laws in the same way that Sir Thomas More fought the Kink's law. In the minds of these idealists, God's laws were more important than men's. To Sir Thomas and these youths of today, the penalty for disobedience to their respective governments was a lesser evil than the one for disobedience to their consciences.

In A Man For All Seasons the author, Mr. Bolt, presents us with the ancient question of whether or not idealism is preferable to realism. Mr. Bolt does not answer that question, and by his silence, he is telling us that we must find our own answers.

Respirator

A blade of grass.

It's quiet. It has no moving parts. Yet it and its fellow blades take in carbon dioxide and the worst atmospheric pollutions — sulfur dioxide, ozone, peroxyacetyl nitrate, hydrogen fluoride — and give up pure oxygen in return.

The sturdier the plant, the more the purification. In fact, actively growing grass on a plot 25 feet square releases enough oxygen to sustain life day after day for a grown person.

The world needs more such greenery. Even a house plant beside a window in your home will help the cause.

Think of it.

Brought to you by the Juniata Enviromental Committee.

Cafeteria Women Were Forgotten In "Service" Change

by Barbara Duncan

The cafeteria food seems to be an issue of great concern here at Juniata, but one tends to forget about the women who serve this food. Under new management, these women have lost many former privileges. The fifteen minute breaks which occured during a meal have been eliminated, thus compelling these women to work without rest through an entire meal. The loss of overtime and sick pays form a portion of these unreasonable conditions. These women are not paid for working in the kitchen over holidays; if anyone remains at the school and eats any meals, these women are required to come in and serve food for nothing

The decrease in the number of women in each line is on inconvenience to all concerned. Three women are in charge of serving the entire meal, sometime with the assistance of a student. Sunday appears to be the worst day in this respect one can find only two women and a student working in the line. This means that these two women must shoulder most of the responsibility of serving meals to approximately eleven hundred impatient students.

The salad table presents another problem. With only three women working on keeping it replenished, there is a continuous rushing back and forth from the kitchen. This job should be handled by at least four or five.

Therefore, before one begins to complain about the food, think first of the plight of the women who must serve it.

· Foreign Gifts from Foreign Lands ·

Gifts—Curios—Novelties

Ellis Hall Ballroom Annex

Now 'till December 18

Afternoons 2—5 or ask Will Brandau

Concert Review

Artist In Residence Performs Concert With Amazing Ability

by David C. Linton

Juniata's artist in residence, Temple Painter, gave music devotees a survey of harpsichord music that spanned five centuries last Friday evening at the Shoemaker Galleries.

Mr. Painter presented brief explanations of each type of music that he played, and thus helped the audience appreciate the writing styles of several composers. The harpsichordist opened the concert with My Lady Cary's Dompe by an anonymous composer of the fifteenth century. This was an English composition, and Mr. Painter explained that in old English dompe means lament. For his example of harpsichord music of the sixteenth century, Mr. Painter played three selections from Fitzwilliam Virginal Book. These pieces were taken from a collection of more than 300 pieces and were English in origin. Two composers wrote the three pieces. La Volta and Pavan were written by William Byrd, and Galliardo was written by Peter Phillips. Mr. Painter explained that virginal book means small harpsichord book. He also said that Mr. Byrd had possibly been the most outstanding composer during the days of Tudor England. The third dance was especially interesting as it was played at a rather fast tempo, and Mr. Painter exhibited amazing agility in changing manuals.

The third selection that Mr. Painter played was Chaconne by J. C. de Chambonnieres, a Frenchman of the seventeenth century. I enjoyed the full chords that Mr. Painter played with his left hand under the melody, which he played with his right hand.

At this point, Mr. Painter explained how a harpsicord makes its tones. When one depresses a key, a plectrum will pluck a string of the harpsichord. As Mr. Painter said, A harpsichord is "essentially nothing more than a large lute or guitar."

Then Mr. Painter played anseventeenth century, Ground in C other sample of music of the Minor by an Englishman, Henry Purcell. Mr. Painter said that the name of this piece gives the listener a preview of the piece itself. He said, Ground is "a series of variations played over a ground, the base line." It was intriguing in this piece to watch Mr. Painter change manuals.

Mr. Painter then progressed to the seventeenth century. He made the comment that the year 1685 had been a golden year for music as Domenico Scarlotti, J. C. Bach, and G. F. Handel were all born in that year.

Mr. Painter played Toccata in four movements by J. S. Bach. In this piece it was a pleasure to watch the harpsichordist's hands glided across the two manuals. Mr. Painter had a gleam in his eye as he played much of this composition, and it was evident that he derived great pleasure from the sounds that he made.

After this, Mr. Painter played a piece from the twentieth century, Sonata-Fantasia by Harold Boatrite, an American. Mr. Painter said that he had just played this piece in a concert in Berlin in October and that the Berliners seemed to enjoy this piece better than any other piece that he had played. I liked the introduction of three or four notes played by the left hand on the upper manual of Mr. Painter's Challis harpsichord. I also enjoyed the slow, deliberate manner that the piece developed. It was dramatic to hear the single note that Mr. Boatrite employed to end his composition, which was played on a low register of the lower manual of the harpsichord.

At this point Mr. Painter played three eighteenth century compositions to end the formal program. He played two sonatas, one in B minor and one in D minor, by Domenico Scarlatti, an Italian. Then he played Sonata number 33 in D major by Franz Joseph Haydn. Then, Mr. Painter told of a way that Mr. Haydn could have effected this composition. He said that Haydn was always quite punctilious about his appearance before he sat down to compose. However, it appeared in this sonate of Haydn's that he had just sat down and, as Mr. Painter said, "had some fun with it."

In Scarlatti's second sonata I liked the light chordal effect that Mr. Painter achieved, which sounded as though he were playing on bagpipes.

In the Sonata by Haydn, I liked the light, bouncing rhythm of the first movement, Allegro, con brio.

After this selection, the audience applauded Mr. Painter quite enthusiastically, and he came back to the harpsichord to play an encore. He decided to play Passacaglia, from The Seventh Suite for Harpsichord in G Minor by G. F. Handel, a German. This piece made one think that he was hearing the strumming of a guitar as Mr. Painter's left hand played chords under a melody, which his right hand played.

After that, Mr. Painter said that his harpsichord had been made with a metal frame and a metal sounding board and was a stable instrument. He pointed out that a big difference between today's harpsichords and those of the eighteenth century is that today's are mostly metal while those of the eighteenth century had been constructed of soft wood. He said that the amount of sound that the listener hears depends upon the thickness of the material that the builder employs.

Yes, music devotees were rewarded last Friday night in two ways at the Shoemaker Galleries. They could not only listen to the beautiful music that Mr. Temple Painter was able to produce on the harpsichord, but they could also hear him explain how he produced it.

Artist Is In Residence

Artist in Residence wows audience at first public performance on the Juniata Campus in a concert December 4 at the Shoemaker Galleries.

Mr. Temple Painter, harpsichordist, is a graduate of Curtis Institute of Music, where he majored in organ. Mr. Painter's interest in music began at the age of three when he began to play the piano his graduation from Curtis, his interest turned to the harpsichord and he began to teach himself. In 1962, he made his debut recital in Philadelphia. The Philadelphia Inquired immediately listed him as "a major artist".

In 1963, he performed at the Carnegie Recital Hall and won acclaim from the New York Times. "Mr. Painter created comsistent interest with colorful registration that set the music off well and he projected the spirit of the pieces with force and a total absorption that was compelling."

Mr. Painter has toured Europe and has won recognition and acclaim as a soloist and lecture recognition and acclaim as a soloist and lecture recitalist. He is the first harpsichordist to recieve the Martha Baird Rockefeller grant for outstanding young artists. In addition to his recital work, Mr. Painter is an instructor of music Haverford College.

Nothing is left unsaid in his performances. From the flowing contour of the music to the depths of emotions, his concerts reveal the technical knowledge of the music of an era in which not all the notes were written down but only implied. His hand manipulates not only one keyboard at a time, but notes on both keyboards at the same time with fantastic dexterity. From the lightheartedness of the "Sonata No. 33 in D Major" by Haydn to the Somber, heartrending tones of the "Chaconne" by J.C. Chambonnieres, Mr. Painter shifts the mood with great skill and emotional clarity. The subtle nuances with which he permeates his music through the timbres of his Challis two manual instrument indeed leaves one breathless.

Included in the performance of mainly 15-16th Century music, Mr. Painter played a work by Harold Boatrite. Mr. Boatrite was Mr. Painter's landlord and upon hearing that Mr. Painter was having a harpsicord made, set about to write a modern work for the instrument. The final page of the work arrivd the same day as the instrument. This won an ovation in a recital recently by Mr. Painter in Berlin.

Letters to the Editor

Editor

The Renaissance

According to its masthead The Renaissance is entered as second class mail at the Huntingdon post office, which implies that it may circulate beyond College Hill. A word of warning here: if the October 23 issue ever gets out of town it will blow Juniata's cover as a respectable institution of higher learning. To judge by that issue of the paper, The Renaissance is the most inarticulate, infantile, illiterate, and ineptly-named journal to come off a college campus in many a moon -- a chilling testimonial to the monumental failure of modern education.

I don't think I've ever seen such a concerted onslaught on literacy and educated sensibilities, and I've read 'em all -- Hoard's Dairyman, Organic Gardening, Pennsylvania Game News. From the archness and ambiguity of the headlines to the wholesale ignoring of typos to the omnipresence of faulty grammar and punctuation to the unremitting coyness of style, The Renaissance is a veritable cornucopia of examples of bad writing. If Mr. Croce and his gang don't mine the Renaissance vein for all it is worth, they're missing the best English Conference source material to come off the press in years.

Granted that there may still be a reader or two out there who is willing to hear one more time about student apathy, institutional food, student ungovernment, Homecoming floats ("Disney Lives" -- Jesus! And Kleenex 33 cents a box), why the concerted effort to set the reader's teeth on edge with such improverished style? It's hard enough to swallow the pretentious and irritating technique of cliche's surrounded by quotes, but then one has to wade through a litany of apparently unrecognized cant phrases in addition: "last but not least, said cliche, left much to be desired, this day and age, events drew to a close, I submit that, we pick our poison, rub salt in the wounds, tip our hats," etc. ad nauseam.

The point of this unkind note is not to be unkind, but to suggest that something may be drastically wrong with the educational scene at Juniata. Clearly, those who write for the paper do it as a labor of love, and they try to do what they believe to be an articulate and effective job of writing. That they are neither articulate nor effective -- nor even grammatical -- suggests that they desperately need help from their educational program to become the educated people that they want to be. The chances would seem to be fairly good that those who write for The Renaissance are at least as competent in terms of writing ability as the average Juniatian; if this is a legitimate assumption, then the College is failing its students terribly. Whatever else may be implicit in the notion of a liberal arts program of education, there is no denying the essential commitment to accurate, effective expression of thought. If you don't believe that, you shouldn't be wasting your time in a liberal arts setting; if you do believe it, you should be demanding the guidance and training that is your due.

Sincerely,

Gordon M. Shedd
Class of 1958

To the Editor:

Kindly permit me to express my views on this controversial topic of academic and social "liberalism" here at Juniata College.

The impression I gain from the Task Force recommendations is rather negative because I seem to think that Juniata is going to lose its high academic rating. I am already disappointed with such courses as Great Epocks and Judaeo-Christian Heritage just because they do not mean a thing to me, and if these courses and seminars recommended by the Task Force are approved that will mean I will practically have gained nothing that is going to help me achieve my future goals. Some of us are very interested in making something of our lives and we want a stronger academic curriculum rather than one that is too relaxed. I hope there are some students here including myself who are going to attend graduate schools in other countries and I do not think from experience that there would be too much of a chance to get admitted with courses which have no parallels in foreign institutions or even here in the United States. Please leave Juniata the way it is!

Socially, many people say they want a more "liberal" atmosphere on campus. I hate to use the word "liberal" because it is old-fashioned and has no clear meaning. These days when "liberalism" used to be an asset are over and I think in an environment like this when most of the people are rather conservative and individualistic, any change would be unwelcome. I think anyone can make something out of this college and I do not see any reason for any radical change. As one student put it, "it is only when there are rules to break that students have fun." That seems to be true as some people may confess. I am sure the election of James Buckley, a conservative to the U.S. Senate from one of the most liberal states shows us the direction the world is moving towards.

Sammy Kum Bue

To the editor.

One of the serious problems in college and university life today is the lack of attention to the personality needs of the students. Suicide is the second most common cause of death on the campus. topped only by automobile accidents; but those who have studied the subject believe that half of the latter are "concealed suicides": thus suicide actually leads the list. Dr. Howard A. Rusk of the New York University Medical Center collected estimates that 90,000 students each year will threaten suicide, one in ten will make the attempt, and that there will be 1,000 actual deaths resulting. Beyond this, he calculates that among six million students, "some 600,000 have emotional problems for which they need professional assistance." The National Institute of Mental Mealth finds that "the factor of human isolation and withdrawal" appears to be critical; and the colleges recognize the serious problem created by these "loners" and are trying to provide help but admit (in hundreds of letters to us from deans) that they do not have adequate solutions.

This waste of some of the nation's finest young people is intrelerable. Since for every actual death, nearly a hundred have felt so desperate as to threaten it, much light could be thrown on the subject by learning what factors enabled the fortunate ones to work out of their difficulties and keep going.

With the help of a friend who is vitally interested in this subject, the American Institute of Family Relations is carrying out a nationwide study of what is being done and what could and should be done. We need to hear from as many students and former students as possible who have faced such a crisis. What pulled them out of it? Was it aid furnished by the college or university? or other community organization? or by a friend? or religion? or reading? Just how did they save themselves?

We will not publish the names of any individuals or schools; the information will be handled statistically and anonymously. If you can call the attention of your readers to this study and ask for volunteers who will write their exthe above address, it may contriperiences to me ("personal") at bute toward saving valuable lives.

We shall certainly be most grateful for any help you can give.

Cordially yours,
Paul Popenoe, Sc.D.
President

For more information contact Renaissance, Box 667.

To Ed.:

The Student Ski Association has designed a program to bring down the cost of skiing, thereby enabling college students around the country to ski more, or take up this growing winter sport. Says Chaffee, older brother of Olympic skiers Suzy and Rick Chaffee, and himself a former college ski racer: "As an undergraduate at Harvard and later as a graduate student at Berkley, I saw how dishearted college students were over the high cost of skiing. So, last year I set out to do something about it." That something is the Student Ski Association.

Chaffee admits that the Association's college rate program and Student Ski Card system was inspired by the airline youth fare card concept. "Through our national Student Ski Card program," says Chaffee, "we are now able to provide college students across the country with a large selection of prominent ski areas offering special low rates on lift tickets, lessons, rentals and lodging." Last year Chaffee signed up thirty-four ski areas around the nation, all granting half-price skiing to his first year membership of over 8,000.

The Student Ski Card program is open to undergraduate, graduate and professional school students of any age. High school students, faculty and students' wives and husbands who are not in school are as yet not eligible. In order to qualify for the special student rates at any of the participating areas, each Student Ski Card holder must present his school or student ID card along with the Ski Card. Proof of school attendance is not required when ordering a Ski Card through the mail.

Typical savings on a two-day ski trip during the week (non-holiday week) can net a college student over $17 with the use of a $4 Student Ski Card from the Student Ski Association. With most major ski areas charging over $6 for an all-day lift ticket, plus $6 for complete rentals and $4 for a ski school lesson, it's easy to see how half-price skiing through the Student Ski Card can save many times the small $4 cost.

"The Student Ski Association," says Chaffee, "is not actually a oriented, we have no meetings, no ski club. We are not politically officers, no dues and are most certainly non-violent. What we are is a group of college students and graduates that are putting modern marketing principles to work for our fellow skiing students." The acceptance of Chaffee's skiing Association into the skiing industry has been immediate, and his program is winning wide acceptance on college campuses around the country.

As part of the Student Ski Card program, the Student Ski Association has begun publication of a national skiing news-magazine -- The STUDENT SKIER. Distributed on college campuses and mailed to all Ski Card holder, The STUDENT SKIER features stories and articles on various ski areas in the SSA program, pointers on how to go skiing on a student's budget, plus listings of ski areas, lodges and ski shops granting students discounts. Stories on entertainment, travel, bus trips, racing, dating, equipment, and the inside of the skiing world make The STUDENT SKIER an interesting publication. Th new magazine is now the largest nationally circulated college publication in the country.

A nationwide Student Ski Card promotional campaign is now under way on nearly 1,000 college campuses in North America. Students at many colleges will find posters and application coupons on campus bulletin boards, ads in college newspapers and Ski Card sales being handled by fellow students, working as SSA Campus Representatives.

Information on the national program and the Ski Cards themselves (sold for $4) may be obtained by writing to SSA's National Office in West Dover, Vermont 05356 . . . or by writing directly to the Regional Office . . .
New England States
The Student Ski Association
21 Rose Marie Drive
Seekonk, Massachusetts 02771

Dear Editor,

You wanted to know what the students would like to see in the paper, well I can only tell you what I'd like to see.

Firstly, less mistakes. I'm sure some of them are the printer's fault, but how about the proofreaders?

Secondly, HUMOR! If I wanted a "newsy-news" paper, I'd buy the "New York Times," "Philadelphia Inquire," or "Pittsburgh Press." I care about the world situation, and also about the problems, etc. at Juniata, but I am growing tired of it. So far I've found few things here that I can laugh at or about. Taking notes, reading, and not-doing-so-well just aren't funny.

People can't exist without humor, even if it's just a little. At least I know I can't.

You are the ones that can supply this little extra. Just some witty comments, articles, cartoons, etc. will be (and are) appreciated. I know you are trying because of "Peanuts" and "Calamity in the Cafeteria," but try harder if you want to be No. 1.

Sincerely,
B. Kulenich

Letter to the Editor:

How Nasty Can You Be?

Recently the women's powder puff football teams were ousted from the "varsity" football field. The reason given was that they would "burn up the field." I ask you, how can fourteen girls, wearing sneakers, tear up a field? They were told to play on one of the intramural fields. This would have been perfectly acceptable if the fields were kept in reasonably decent condition. By this we mean lining the fields which has been requested on several occasions and was finally carried out but was lined the wrong way.

If this field is to be kept for varsity use only, as was indicated by a coach, why should discrimination be shown in deciding who may use it? Sunday afternoons serve as prime examples. Not only do the college kids use the field, but the townspeople use it. Quite often these people are wearing spikes rather than sneakers.
,Is all of this fair? Please comment!

Concerned Students

e g

Dear Friends and Fellow Students,

Our campus sits along the northwest edge of Escambia Bay, which empties into the Gulf of Mexico at Pensacola, Florida. So far this year, Escambia Bay has suffered over 60 major fish kills, each one of close to or more than a million fish -- food fish, sport fish, 'commercial fish', you name it.

These kills have been traced to industries and municipalities just north of and on the bay, which have been using the Escambia River and the bay for a dump. One such industry is Monsanto Co., which, as of January, 1970, was dumping into the river, and the bay, the following wastes:

10,000 lbs/day 5 days biological oxygen demand
3,900 lbs/day total organic carbon
1,875 lbs/day TKN
1,331 lbs/day nitrite nitrogen
1,104 lbs/day ammonia nitrogen & nitrite
421 lbs/day total phosphate
264 lbs/day ortho phosphate

One of Monsanto's most advertized and ecologically deleterious products is Astro Turf, an artificial grass; some of its other products are Arochlor (1250) compounds and herbicides. Because our public officials have been tragically slow to respond, and because citizen initiated 'pollution controll' legislation is being successively weakened and stifled, and will have only moderate 'success' if ever passed, we have concluded that only economic sanctions can force the industries involved to recycle their wastes and quit using the Escambia River -- the public domain -- for a dump.

We intend to take sanctions against all industries, of which there are six locally, dumping into the Escambia River and the bay. To establish our effectiveness, we have decided to begin by calling for a boycott of Astro Turf, the Monsanto product that depends most heavily on the college market. We desperately need your support. There is nothing less at stake than the bay itself -- the bay which is a integral part of our biosphere, is essensial to a balanced environment.

It doesn't take much thought to

continued on page 6

Concerning Juniata
continued

courses, etc.) and not a daily experience of personal growth.

It would seem to me that the goal of an educational system should be to guide the individual to realize the full potential of his own life. A sense of real meaningfullness and purposeness does not often follow from the mastery of a set of facts or even a methodology. Unless those things are a part of the individuals reality and aid him to expand his universe, they gain him nothing. If the "educational enviroment" is not one in which an individual can come to a better understanding of himself and his position in the world, and to be confident in that position, the environment is a wasteland. If the student cannot adapt himself, he usually runs into any number of conflicts the end result of which are usually anxiety, fear, frustration, anger, silent submission, or a combination of these.

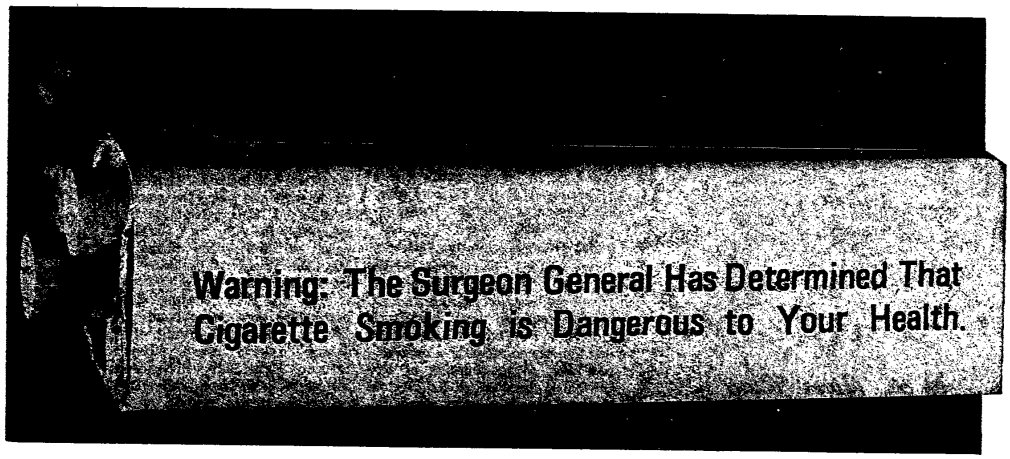
Persaps more so than in recent years, Juniata's faculty and administration are having to deal first hand with a growing dissatisfaction with the "educational enviroment" here. Often from capable students who no longer find satisfaction with their studies. I have my own ideas about JC and have hinted as to where I stand on the idea of a college education, and I stand gladly ready to discuss them with anyone interested. However, the questions I raise affect all here and response is welcome. The idea that anyone here doesn't have time to send their ideas in can mean that they are not willing to take time to think about them. Don't cop out, let's hear someone else's thoughts.

Kevin Bowers

Box 208

P.S. To whom it may concern: Pardon my grammar but—do you want honest expression or accuracy? Yes, I am in sore need of a good composition course, although I supposedly had a good one here freshman year.

Introducing our new improved warning:



By Act of Congress, the above warning must be placed on all cigarettes manufactured for sale in the United States on or after November 1, 1970.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE
Public Health Service

This space contributed as a public service.

Box Scores

Sports Rundown

JUNIATA	FG	FT	PTS
Harvey	5	0-3	10
Smith	12	5-9	29
McCarthy	5	2-4	12
Le Wentz	2	3-4	7
Rinaldi	4	0-0	8
Griffith	1	0-0	2
Black	1	0-0	2
Totals	30	10-20	70

LEBANON VALLEY	FG	FT	PTS
Iannarella	4	2-3	10
Jonnson	10	2-6	14
Linde	7	0-0	14
Mellini	5	1-2	11
Petrie	3	2-5	8
Etter	7	8-10	22
Harubin	1	0-0	2
Mardola	1	0-0	2
Totals	38	15-26	91

Juniata	24	40 - 70
Lebanon Valley	44	47 - 91

Juniata 9 Delaware Valley 26

118 — Massingham (J) decisioned Jennings, 11 - 3
126 — McCartney (J) decisioned Lewis, 9 - 0
134 — Cummings (DV) decisioned Dangl, 9 - 1
142 — Fredricks (DV) decisioned Emenheiser, 6 - 0
150 — Rudy (J) decisioned Hoover, 4 - 0
158 — Thonus (DV) decisioned Fisher, 1 - 0
167 — Franklin (DV) decisioned Dunne, 12 - 0
177 — Johnson (DV) pinned Radbill
190 — Eisenhart (DV) pinned Mears
Heavyweight — Stren (DV) decisioned Truby, 6 - 2

JUNIATA	FG	FT	PTS
Harvey	2	2-5	6
Smith	10	7-10	27
Rinaldi	7	4-5	18
McCarthy	11	5-7	27
Le Wentz	2	2-3	6
Totals	32	20-30	84

GETTYSBURG	FG	FT	PTS
Daniels	4	1-5	9
Strimple	2	2-3	6
Gonglesici	4	0-0	8
Mason	3	1-2	7
Bucher	12	6-7	30
Kershaw	6	1-1	13
Jann	1	0-0	2
Totals	32	11-18	75

Juniata	45	39 - 84
Gettysburg	33	42 - 75

Why Does A River Run?

by George Magruder

Watching a river, have you ever
Been fascinated by its continuous motion?
How it never stops, but continues on,
Through its endless journey,
To its ultimate goal. . . ?
Rolling, heaving - - -,
like the internal source
of an immortal soul.
As though lacking in all emotion,
An intrepid force, which will always win, ? ?
And reach the ocean,
its destined
Place of rest. . . ?
Until the sun,
- - - and then the rain
Present the challenging feat all over again.
So why does a river run ? ?
Gathering strength and power the waters surge,
- - - Forward once more,?
Grinding out new paths toward the distant shore
Then winding and weaving through rock and plain,
Tired and weary by the increasing strain. . . . .
So why does a river strive for an endless goal - - -,
With nothing to gain when it reaches the shoals?
Just think what would happen, - - - - - -
If rivers ceased to roll. ? ?

Letters—cont'd

continued from page 3

realize that Escambia Bay is about as important to you as it is to us. By supporting our boycott you not only deny revenue to an enemy of the bay, you also help assert, for once, that our waters and our skies are not dumps, and that even large industries must be held responsible for their wastes.

—We ask that you put up with natural grass for a good while longer

—We ask that you compell your friends and local industries not to buy Astro Turf and other Monsanto products

—We very respectfully and urgently request that you obtain, through your student government and alumni associations, a binding, official promise not to purchase Astro Turf until Monsanto quits dumping its into Escambia River and Escambia Bay.

—We recommend that before you or your college administration buy any other sort of artificial grass, you determine that manufacturer is not, like Monsanto, using the environment for a dump.

We need your active response to this appeal, even if you have no need at your institution for Astro Turf. Your support is urgently requested. Please send us notification of your administration's promise not to purchase Astro Turf as soon as it can be obtained.

Responsible Env. Act. Pgm.

Peace Pipe—cont'd

Four corporate buddies of Tricky Dick—Warner Lambert, Reader's Digest, Hawthorne Books and Pepsi Cola sponsored an edited national T.V. presentation of the President's speech on campus unrest, just before Tuesday's elections. So you of the Pepsi generation may want to think twice before you say, "Pepsi please. . ."

Draft Counseling

Free draft counseling is available through the Penn State Peace Center (814) 237-0222 during the afternoons or evenings. Also, there will be counselors in Room 209 from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. weekday evenings. Or an appointment can be arranged at the Peace Center 249 S. Pugh St., Box 254, State College, Pa. 16801.

Radford College Has the Answer

4000-student 4-yr. girls school in Virginia, Radford Colleee, has solved the ever increasing, morally repugnant and nasty marijuana problem! The school administration announced recently a campus-wide ban on the burning of INCENSE(!) because of its all too common use as a cover smell for grass. Obviously now that none of the girls has incense to hide them, all the smoking has stopped. The rumor on campus is that the next move may be the banning of beer mugs to stop any drinking problems.

Tune in and turn on again next week for the continuing adventures. Peace.

Many Activities For JC Center Board Plans

by Barbara Dnucan

On December 11 the College Center Board will present John Denver in concert. This is one of a series sponsored by the Center Board. Other concerts this year were the Symbols concert and Dreams and Citations concert. Those planned for the second semester are as follows: Borrowed Time prforming on February 28 and the Brotherhood and Livingston Taylor on April 30. A semi-definite concert may bring one of the following to Juniata College: Sly and the Family Stone, Steppenwolf, Dionne Warwick, or Richie Haven.

A few weeks ago Juniata College received a letter from Geraldine Hoshins, a sixteen-year-old, poverty—stricken girl from Kentucky. The letter was a request for food, clothes, and other necessary materials for herself and her family. The Center Board decided to sponsor this project, and a committee was formed with Tim English as chairman. So far, five to six boxes have been collected, and the committee will personally deliver these articles the weekend of December 11, and will return with Christmas greens. The committee is pleased with the student response but admits there could have been more, and perhaps the Center Board will sponsor another drive either at the end of the winter season or next Christmas.

A Madrigal Dinner will be held December 16. The Madrigal Dinner dates back to the Sixteenth Century when English kings held feasts for the serfs. The dinner will be one of dining and singing with the College Choir, Chorale Group, and Chamber group performing. Madrigal Dinners have been held at other colleges and have proved very successful.

Other Center Board—sponsored activities will include Twirp Week which will take place the week of February 8, Casino Night, a Raft Regatta, the Spring Carnival, which will take place during the May Day Weekend, a Soap Box Derby and Ski Trips. Smaller activities are free bowling days, car rallies, scavenger hunts and "Psych. Breaks" during final exams. During these "Psych. Breaks" Ellis Hall will be open all night with free coffee and coffeecake being served in the Post Office lounge.

There has been quite a rise in Center Board activities in the past two years. According to statistics found in the college calender one finds eighteen Center Board—sponsored activities in October 1968 as opposed to forty-seven of October 1970. This jump in activities was because of an active group divided up among the committees of students who constitute the College Center Board.

The Center Board receives $16,000 from the Student Government, $6000 of which is used for concerts. The remainder of the money is associated with the Center Board: the Recreation Committee, the Social Activities Committee, and the Fine Arts Committee.

These committees consist of only a few people who must do all the work in order for an activity to take place. Much of the responsibility rests on the chairmen of these committees. Will Brandau, the head of the College Center, calls these chairmen the "unsung heroes on campus" because of the great amount of their own time and effort which they spend on the organization of various activities.

One problem which the Center Board must contend with is the lack of student participation. Everyone seems to want concerts, but not everyone attends them. Each activity is planned for a greater number of people than those who do attend, hopefully to encourage more people to come. For example, Gay Nineties Night was planned for 500 people with 375 - 400 people attending.

Therefore, in order for the College Center Board to fulfill its purpose of planning activities for the students at Juniata College, the studentbody must show more interest in the present activities.

bC- idRreaks' sgLB'.. 5....

Christmas Request

We see as hypocrisy the extravagant celebration of Christmas when there is no peace on earth. So our group feels it is time for a Christmas boycott. We are not going to buy presents this year, nor are we going to receive them. We will do without decorations, and may be fasting on Christmas day instead of feasting.

Instead of spending, we will work for peace on earth by giving our money to help make amends for the suffering we have caused — such as by financially adopting a Vietnamese child, and by giving our time to stop the war. We are calling for people to put peace back in Christmas — what better way to observe the birth of Christ than to bring an end to the war this year?

We are counting on college groups to do most of the local work. Here are some possible approaches for organizing the boycott:

1. Contact local clergy — many should be receptive to taking commercialism out of Christmas and putting peace back in.

2. Organize picket lines at department stores and shopping centers.

3. Do guerilla theater on the sidewalk in front of large stores. Dramatize the horrors of war or the contradictions in the thinking of the military.

4. Leaflet at high schools, train stations, churches and shopping centers.

5. Urge fellow students not to go home for vacation unless their parents agree to participate in the boycott.

We would welcome any criticisms and suggestions readers might have of this proposal.

Westport Citizens for Peace

ATTENTION, NOVEL POETS AND WRITERS

ELMAN PUBLISHING HOUSE is selecting poems and short stories for their annual books "VOICES OF POETRY 1971" and "SELECTED SHORT STORIES 1971".

All poets and writers are invited to participate.

Contestants for poetry may send up to three entries, each of fifty lines or less, and for short stories only one entry not exceeding eighteen hundred words, which must be accompanied by a self addressed post-paid envelope, and mailed not later than December 15th.

All winners will be notified by January 15th, 1971.

These contests are free, with no obligation of any sort.
So poets and writers, send your entries to ELMAN PUBLISHING HOUSE, 8261 North Bayshore Drive, Miami, Florida 33138 — and good luck !

RENAISSANCE

Vol. XLVII, No. 9 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | February 15, 1971

Try Your Luck !

by Barbara M. Kulenich

On February 12, 1971, the "J" Club, co-operation with the Student Center Board, will sponsor "Casino Night" in the Baker Dining Room of Ellis Hall. Like last year, the event will be modelled after Las Vegas and will have a "Roaring Twenties" theme.

The price of admission, one dollar, will provide those attending with $1000 of "Casino" money and two coupons for a prize drawing. Every $500 made can be traded in for another coupon. A grand prize for the person winning the most money during the night will be a tape recorder vadued from $75-$100.

The games will consist of Black Jack tables (10), Beat the Dealer (2), Poker Dice (1), Crap (2), Roulette Wheels (2), Dice Cages (2), Over/Under Seven (2), Three Dice Hazard (1), Dice Ball (1), and Gerbil Races. Other entertainment will include a Rock and Roll Group and a designed provram (monelogue-skit) by Salzare and Loose.

The games will be manned by members of "J" Club and the Faculty. Cheerleaders and Pom-Pom girls, dressed according to the Twenties, will circulate and add tothe gaiety charcterized by this period.

Garters, derbies, and vests will be distributed and food will be available for a nominal charge (15¢-hamburgers, 10¢-hot dogs, 5¢-"near beer" and FREE coke).

Last year over 600 people attended, along with the 100 students and Faculty needed to work. The initial expense was around $500 ($136 for game rental.

This year $2 million dollars of "Casino" money will be printed. House rules will be distributed before Feb. 12, and the Black Jack rules will be posted at the tables. No more than $5 at a time can be cashed-in for "Casino" money.

Everyone is urged to attend and dress according to the Twenties (This is not necessary, but a prize will be given for the best-dressed). The event, lasting from 8:30 to 12:30, will be MC'd by Sal Mercadante.

Concert Choir Sings Aloud

The Juniata Concert Choir, directed by Bruce Hirsch, will be heard in a special broadcast on WUHY-FM radio, Philadelphia, Wednesday, Feb. 10, at 8 p.m.

The 25-minute broadcast, entitled "A Local Song," will feature the 65-voice mixed chorus and the 20-member Juniata Chamber Singers inperformances of a variety of sacred, secular and folk songs recorded during a recent Parents Day concert at Juniata College.

The program features the full Concert Choir in "Swell the Full Chorus," by G. F. Handel, "Come, Blessed Rest," by J. S. Bach, and a Spanish folk carol. The Chamber Singers perform three madrigal pieces, while men of the choir sing a lilting "Barn Song" by Edward Grieg.

A special arrangement of the popular "Water Boy" by Bruce features soloists Glenn Dean, tenor, and Glenn Billingsley, baritone. Miss Anne Hench, soprano, performs with Billingsleg in duet selections from the Gershwin musical, "Porgy and Bess."

The Juniata Concert Choir is currently preparing for its annual spring tour, planned for April 12-18, which will offer concert performances in schools, churches and public auditoriums in central and southeastern Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware and New Jersey.

"A Local Song" is narrated by Jeffrey M. Bixby, director of audio-visual aids at Juniata, who recorded and edited the broadcast tapes.

Listeners may tune in the musical broadcast at 90.9mc on the FM radio dial Wednesday evening at ported public radio service of 8:00. WUHY-FM is a listener-sup-MHYY, Inc., Philadelphia.

JC Faculty

Stroman To Make Study

Dr. Duane F. Stroman, associate professor and chairman of Juniata's Department of Sociology, will head a tram of student researchers in a survey of drug abuse among high school students in south central Pennsylvania next fall.

Dr. Stroman recently received approval from the Pennsylvania Criminal Justice Planning Board to conduct the six-month survey with the aid of under-graduate students and professional consultants. The Board released information in mid-December that it had approved a grant in the amount of $12,512 to finance the project.

The survey will be conducted in eight southern Pennsylvania conuties beginning in June, in conjunction with the first session of summer school here. It will cover 51 senior and joint junior-senior high schools in Bedford, Blair, Cambria, Fulton, Huntingdon, Juniata, Mifflin nd Somerset Counties.

According to Dr. Stroman, who is on leave for the Spring semester, the survey will be conducted in two phases. The first phase will be primarily one of preparation for the actual work of interviewing, sampling and gathering data. The project will begin with a summer seminar designed to acquaint the undergraduate students who will conduct the survey with various dimensions of drug use and control, and also methods of interviewing, gathering statistics and analyzing data.

A second summer session will be used to establish patterns for the research work. Information on area high schools, their student populations, rural-urban locations, and their proximity to institutions of higher learning will be used to draw a sample of 16 high schools from which a random sample of students will be drawn for the actual survey.

The work of conducting interviews and compiling information will be done by students during the 1971 fall semester. About 120 high school students will be interviewed directly by the researchers, while come 1,200randomly selected students will be askd to respond to a questionnaire. The results will be coded and analyzed nd fed into a computer for final analysis.

During the three-month period from December, 1971 through February, 1972, Dr. Stroman will be

Cont'd on page 8

New Feature

New Column To Appear Weakly

The staff of the Renaissance is pleased to announce the recent auquisition of a contract agreement to purchase and reprint the popular interest column, "Practically, Nothing." As the literate public well knows and appreciates. "Practically, Nothing" is one of the best-known syndicated features on the contemporary American journalistic scene, boasting an enthusiastic international audience of well over 200 readers who follow its author in the many seed catalogs, almanach, and public rest rooms in which his works regularly appear. The column deals specifically with just about everything (often simultaneously) and its author is a well-known former high school honor society member, a one-time Little League all-star second-baseman, and a current guest speaker at numerous bible school picnics and junior high schools in the Butte, Montana area. The following is the second of a two-part feature by the author and the first of a series contracted to be carried by the Renaissance until the end of the Spring term or until the newspaper becomes defunct (whichever occurs first).

by Scott Leedy

There are two types of dragons.

One type of dragon is the kind that lives inside dark caves. Its body is usually very large, growing upwards to 50 feet in length. It is usually a dark green color except for its faintly yellow underside. The larger portion of a cave-dwelling dragon's body is covered with a series of inpenetrable scaley platelets which overlap onto the next posterior one, forming an armor-like covering starting from the back of the huge head and extending out to the spikes on the tip of its wicked tail. Its eyes are luminous crimson and its hind legs are highly developed for supporting the body in a haunched position — a posture assumed when the beast eats its usual meal of large animals. This is the type of dragon that scuba divers believe in.

The other type of dragon is also about 50 feet long. But its body is covered with a smooth, leathery skin which is as strong as the canvas used in large circus tents. The skin is actually blue-green in color, but the thick slime which oozes out onto the surface gives the dragon an almost black hue (the secretion serves a protective function as body insulation). Its long, sleek body ends in a whip-like tail which is flattened into a paddle at the tip. All four feet have become webbed to facilitate locomotion and maneuverability at deceptive speeds in the murky waters of its habitat. It has no external ears but its small black eyes are sunk deeply back into the top of its evil face. And its teeth (unlike the large, spiked homologs of its cave-dwelling cusin) are reduced greatly, as it uses them little to aid in the digestion of the large animals upon which it feeds. The teeth are used only to immobilize the victim while the long body is wrapped around the prey. Death is inflicted by slow constriction of the fiercely powerful abdomenal muscles. The crushed prey is swallowed whole. Spelunkers believe in this type of dragon.

People who neither swim nor explore caves believe in both types of dragons.

Isn't that something.

Juniata College Receives Grants

Juniata College has received $1,500 from the Shell Companies Foundation, Inc., in the form of three grants known as Shell Assists.

The Assists comprise three seperate grants of $500 specified for use in each of three areas: institutional use at the discretion of the college president; general faculty development at the discretion of the academic dean; and additional professional development of individual faculty membrs in the natural sciences and mathematics.

This is the fifth time Juniata College has been priviliged to participate in Shell Assists Program, which was established in 1958 by the Foundation to aid privately supported colleges and universities.

Juniata has also received a $25,000 grant from the Crystal Trust, of Wilmington, Del. The grant came to Juniata as the result of a proposal submitted by the college's Department of Chemistry. Funds will be used to purchase equiptment needed for various laboratory activities in chemistry under the direction of Dr. William E. Russey and Dr Dale L. Wampler.

The Crystal Trust was a major contributor to an earlier campaign to raise funds for the construction of the Brumbaugh Science Center.

The grant will be applied to the $2.5-million second phase of Juniata's "Margin of Difference" development program, in which it was recently announced that more than $700,000 has been raised toward the campaign goal.

Also Juniata has received $6,000 in science grants from the E. I. DuPont de Nemours and Company. The grants will be administered by Juniata's Department of Chemistry and it's Chairman. An additional College Discretionary Fund Grant of $1000 will be administered by Dr. Stauffer for institutional needs beyond those normally met by restricted gifts.

This is the fourth consecutive year that Juniata has been of a grant of this nature. The college has received numerous other DuPont Grants over a period of more than twenty years in support of it's programs in science.

Social Environment Changes Are Needed

by Jean Thompson

The first weekend of the spring semester has come and gone. That's about all one can say about it. For many it was an empty two days during which nothing occurred. True, we had two snow storms. True, there was a basketball game: away. True, there was a wrestling match: away. True, there was a movie down town, but what if you've already seen it? True, the coffee house was open. True, Mo Taylor's radio shows are back. But the fact still stands that for at least one group of students watching the "activities" of two dogs was the high point of the weekend.

Why do weekends like this happen at Juniata? It seems as though there are several reasons. I think a fundamental and pervasive reason is the philosophy of the very institution we students have chosen to attend. Juniata, in putting its emphasis squarely and firmly on the academic aspect of college life, has done so at the expense of the social aspect of campus life. A student's experience at a residence college, a total living experience, should develop the whole person, not just one aspect of that person. In placing its emphasis on academics, Juniata has become a very good school, but I do not think it has provided many students with "the interpersonal environment within which each student may achieve optimum intellectual, so-

Letters to the Editor

To Mr. Lesak:

I was quite glad to hear that an article critical of the Student Government would be written for the paper. For it is through constructive criticism that improvement is fostered.

I was quite sorry, however, to see the finished article, for the name calling, half truths, and misinformation it creates does little or nothing to generate any constructive change.

Concerning the comment that it is difficult to find any action of the S.G.; might I suggest an examination of the list of resolutions for the 1970-71 Student Government that you helped to draft. You will find all of them have been implemented or are in the process of being implemented. So if you want to criticize the actions of the S.G., fine, but don't claim that no actions exist.

If the success or failure of any organization can only be blamed on the members of that organization. as you suggest, I guess the failure of the Owl is completely within the structure of its management. I disagree with the premise in both cases.

Concerning the statement that "when something the S.G. is working on runs into difficulty, work is stopped, because the S.G. claims that the students did not support it." No action started this year has been stopped short of comp'etion for any reason. This is an indication of the diligence and conviction of the S.G.

It seems that the author feels that the things the "S.G." concerns itself with are not what the students want. I can't believe that students don't care about the Faculty and Course Evaluations. Or, that students aren't concerned with the plight of minority group students at Juniata.

As for the reference to Student Government appointing friends to positions; it seems that the writer fails to realize that when the most important appointmnts any Student Government ever made, the students for the Board of Trustees, the Senate chose students, a maherity of whom could hardly be called roommates or friends of the Senate.

Finally, the writer suggests a positive step at the end of his article. He calls for a new constitution. To this I whole-heartedly agree. But what the writer fails to realize is that "S.G." has already begun work on this. This was started two weeks before the article appeared: Might I suggest that the author submit his suggestions for the new constitution to the committee.

If the goal of the Student Government is to make Juniata a better school for the students here in the future, what action has been in conflict with the goal? None! Certainly this is not the feelings of a group of "egotistical politicians primarily concerned with nothing but their self-centered desire for power and control."

Larry Hull

—0—

Dear Editor:

I would like to commend the Renaissance for reflecting the progressive ideas of a modern society, i.e. making available to its readrs information on how to secur e a legal abortion.

I strongly believe that bringing a child into the world should be a joyful and wanted experience, a matter of choice, not of circumstance. In order to help others as I have been aided, I would like to make available through this newspaper the name and phone number of the Women's Medical Group, a professional clinic in New York City which performs abortions for any woman regardless of race, religion, age, financial status, or residence.

The methods of this clinic are safe and modern (they use an aspirator), and the operation takes only about twenty minutes. Before the operation each patient has a conference with a nurse or doctor to discuss personal problems if desired, and is informed how the operation is performed in order to dispel any fears. Women's Medical Group does not moralize to their patients but merely helps them obtain reasonably priced qualified doctors for abortions if the women think this is what they need.

Women's Medical Group can be contacted between 9:00 A.M. and 4:00 P.M. by calling 212 - 472-9164 or 212 - 744-6319. Their address is 133 E. 73rd Street, New York City, New York, and the cost of the abortion is about $200.

I sincerely wish any woman who goes through such an experience could have the personal attention Women's Medical Group gives each of its patients.

A grateful J.C. student

—0—

To the Editor:

In a recent article in the Renaissance (Student Government — Is It Really), several untrue statements were either made or implied that were clearly aimed at discrediting the Student Government. Therefore, I feel it is my responsibility to answer those who are so badly misinformed.

Concerning the Editor's Note, I would like to make it clear that the Student Government has never attempted to censor any means of communication on campus. It is a serious mistatement of fact to report that "derogatory remarks concerning Juniata's Student Government may result in the loss of our (the Renaissance) budget." This has never been stated nor even implied by the Student Government, and for the Renaissance to print such a statement shows a complete lack of responsibility on the part of the editor. This seems rather ironic since the editor stated in this very note that he believes in operating a "responsible newspaper" interested in "Freedom of the Press." I certainly hope that in future notes and editorials the editor will seek to print the truth.

Regarding the article that followed this note, I feel it is unnecessary to point out the lack of specific and constructive criticism that was offered. Those people who mkae th slightest effort to keep informed about the Student Government will quickly discover the abundance of fallacies presented. The only responsible criticism set forth by Mr. Lesak dealt with the weaknesses of the Student Government Constitution. However, the Student Government also realizes the inadequacies of this document and has already organized a committee to rewrite it. In fact, this action was taken two weeks before Mr. Lesak's article was written. Despite the fact that his article was irresponsible and written in poor taste, the committee would welcome any help that Mr. Lesak could offer in this difficult

Sincerely,

Doug Laird

—0—

Fellow Students,

Goals set by college students have seen a drastic change in recent years. Most students prime concern in getting an education has been deferred from material gains to the enlightenment and betterment of his fellow man. College grads applying for the Peace Corps and VISTA exceeded all federal expectations. We at Juniata are, also, concerned. We hear faculty and students discussing the oradication of poverty, equal opportunity for minority groups, and other good things. Then after a vigerous rheterical attack on the problem, we go to lunch.

The women who serve you that meal take home $48.75 a week. $1.45 an hour, a fare wage? And benefits: no overtime; no sick days; no paid holidays; no company insurance plan. After punch-out they are required to clean up on there time! If they got in fifty weeks a year, a near impossibility, the yearly wage would come to $2437.50. The figure is below the proposed gauranteed income. The hourly wage is in violation of the Pennsylvania minimum wage.

We liberal humanitarians can do more than participate in classroom discussion. The power for change lies with us. A petition to Broughten Food Service, Inc., is a first effort. If results are not seen pressure should be brought on the Administration not to renew the contract.

Concerned Students

—0—

Though I realize it is the policy of the newspaper not to publish unsigned letters, I do not feel I can risk disclosing my identity. Because abortion is still such a controversial subject and Huntingdon is a small conservative community I would rather not expose myself to public criticism.

If the Renaissance is truly interested in Juniata students and wants to help those who need aid, then I trust you will either publish my letter or, may I suggest, run another article as you did on the Abortion Referral Service.

Thank You.

Ed. note: The followirg is the publication policy of this paper. Any article that abides by these guidelines will be printed.

Articles must be turned in to the Renaissance office, or to Renaissance, Box 667, or to Dan Harriger, Box 721, by noon Monday of the week the letter is to be published. All articles must be typewritten and presented in the form which the author would like it to be printed. All articles must be signed, however names will be omitted if so desired. The names on letters which are to be printed unsigned will be known only to the Editor and will be held in the strictest confidence.

Students Join Honor Society

Juniata College's first national honor society, Beta Beta Beta, installed 31 persons as new members in the Lambda Epsilon chapter during a recent meeting at the college.

Tri-Beta, as it is also known, is a national honor society for students of the biological sciences, whose purpose is to encourage research at the undergraduate level.

The installation was the first since the organization was chartered at Juniata last May. Of the 31 new members, 28 are active, two are provisional, and one, Dr. John W. Moser, instructor in biology, is a graduate member.

Dr. John N. Stauffer, college president, delivered the main address at the installation. He spoke

Cont'd on page 5

Editorial

Student Leaders ?

I recently attended one of the meetings of Men's House. The meeting was first known to me when at 6:15 an announcement was made over the public address in Ellis Hall that a Men's House meeting was now in session in the ballroom annex. Granted, I'm not a member of Men's House but my roommate is my hall's representative and he was not informed of the meeting any earlier than I. I had heard many things about Men' House meetings and decided to see for myself.

The meeing was called to order by the President of Men's House, who asked for a motion to dispense with the reading of the minutes. The motion was made and passed by a show-of-hands vote. Next, the president apologized for not having a meeting in preceding weeks, but he had to take his army physical, which he flunked. He was congratulated by a round of applause. The members were next informed that the $400 color TV set had been purchased and placed in North Dorm lounge. A representative, presumably from North, then announced that the guys were griping because the color wasn't quite right and he was reassured by Bill Berrier that this matter would be taken care of. Next followed discussion concerning what Men's House could do about the dog pack running around campus. The discussion pursued both the sociological and biological aspects of the problem. A hall counselor from East Houses informed all the members that in a few days "nature would run its course" and the problem would take care of itself. Finally, at least for me, Bill Berrier led a discussion on what could be done to set up the men's dorms for next year for dorms consisting of different regulations in quiet hours and visitation hours. The "discussion" period lasted, as reported to me, until shortly after 7:00. I, myself, was thoroughly tired of listening to much the same ideas as were expressed last year before roomdrawing. But none of the ideas carried through. Last year the Ranch was to be converted to either a lounge or washing machine rooms and was so set aside from room drawing. But, no, this year Freshmen are rooming there.

I guess the question behind all that I've written is "What has Men's House done?" Their achievements seem to be the purchase of a $400 color TV for one men's dorm (East House lounges haven't even a black and white), and the return of power back to the administration and faculty. Oh, yes, we mustn't forget when the Juniata College S.G. attempted to remove the making of visitation hour regulations from Student Activities Council (consisting of students, administration, and faculty) to the Senate (consisting only of students). I often hear members of Men's House grumbling after the meetings, but why doesn't someone speak up during the meetings? Is Men's House a student organization with an administrative advisor, or a herd of sheep with a shepherd?

The Renaissance

Student Weekly at Juniata College

Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED APRIL 24, 1970

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891 and "The Juniatian," established November 1924

DAN HARRIGER, Editor
JANET MASON, copy & proof editor
WILL SCARLETT, circulation
WILLIAM DAVID, photography editor
MARTHA RINKER, news & feature editor
SUE BERMEL, layout editor
BILL GASPER, sports editor
PAT MANNERS, secretary

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Carl Koval, Barbara Duncan, Barbara Kulenich, Joan Thompson, Glenn Dean, Jodi Schautz, Mary Ann Repman, Nancy Agnew, Dan Herzog, Kevin Bowers

The RENAISSANCE, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000

Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVII, No. 9

February 15, 1971

Juniata's SG To Be Busy This Semester

At the beginning of the academic year certain goal or guidelines were set forth by the 1970 Leadership Conference. Student Government has now evaluated its position at the end of the first semester. The following is a memo as dlivered to the Student Government from Doug Laird concerning scond semester.

"The 1970 Leadership Conference more or less charted the course of our activities as a Student Government this year. Through much hard work and a great deal of cooperation from the administration, we have successfully completed most of the resolutions set forth we have successfully completed most of the resolutions set forth at that conference. However, there are still several resolutions that await completion and a few items that concern the students, in which we must get involved. For these reasons, I have compiled a list of things which may serve as a guideline for discussion and activity between now and Move-Up Day.

1. The first item concerns comprehensive examinations. At the beginning of the first semester we decided not to take a stand on this issue until the fate of the Task Force Proposals had been resolved. Now that the faculty has acted favorably on these proposals, it is time for us to speak out on the question of comps. Once we have made our decision we must be willing to stand firmly behind it. We have to be ready to confront the faculty with whatever tactics we deem necessary to reach our goals.

2. The second area of concern is the Broughton Food Service. In the fall we organized a Dining Hall Committee for the purpose of voicing complaints and suggestions to the food service. For a while the committee seemed to be a success. Since Thanksgiving, however, the quality and selection of food has deteriorated to the point of absurdity. In fact, several members of the committee have reported that the director of the food service is unresponsive to the will of the students. If this is the case, the Student Government has the responsibility to see that the situation is corrected.

Added to this, I feel it is our rsponsibility to examine the administrative procedures of the food service with regard to the treatment of employees. It is no secret that these people are grossly underpaid and lack the priveleges and benefits of other workers in the community.

3. The third task that confronts us is the evaluation of the courses and professors. Now that we have the completed questionnaires from the course evaluation, the mammoth job of compiling the results and formulating a course guide (prior to preregistration in the spring) lies ahead of us. We must also direct more energy toward the faculty evaluation, which would serve to compliment this course guide.

4. As a result of three resolutions passed at the Leadership Conference, the Student Government organized a committee to study the plight of Juniata's black students. The committee has failed to make any significant progress, during the first semester and must be reorganized as soon as possible. The purpose of this "now" committee should be to make an in-depth study of the problems of blacks on our campus. It should also make strong recommendations to students, faculty, and administration as to how we can remedy the situation.

5. Another resolution from the Leadership Conference that has not been fulfilled conlerns the possibility of a campus T.V. program. The Student Government should make a renewed effort to assist the communications Board in this endeavor.

6. Prior to Christmas vacation, the Student Government organized a committee to study campus governance. It is time for this committee to begin its investigation of existing structures and recommend changes for the future.

7. Another committee of great importance that must begin its work is charged with the task of rewriting the Student Government Constitution. At present, this document is outdated and incomplete. It needs a great deal of revision for the Student Governments of the future to have a workable source of legitimacy.

8. Finally, we must expand our efforts in environmental control. A serious problem such as polution cannot be ignored anywhere if our civilization is to survive. Thus, even in Huntingdon and on Juniata's campus, we must actively seek solutions to problems such as these."

BIG DEAL you bet it is

OFFICIAL DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE PHOTO. ORIGINALLY RELEASED IN NORTH VIETNAM.

No matter how you feel about the war in Vietnam, the fate of this prisoner of war is a big deal. To his wife and children. To his parents. To the signatories of the Geneva Conventions. To all rational people in the world.

The Red Cross is asking you to consider the matter of prisoners of war and those who are missing in action in Asia.

It is not asking you to take a stand on the war itself. It is asking you to ask Hanoi to observe the humanitarian provisions of the Geneva Conventions.

Ask Hanoi to release the names of men it holds prisoner. Ask them to allow prisoners to communicate regularly with their families. Ask them to repatriate seriously ill and wounded prisoners. Ask them to allow a neutral intermediary to inspect places of detention.

Ask them this in a letter mailed to:

25¢ AIRMAIL POSTAGE

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT
DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF VIETNAM
HANOI, NORTH VIETNAM

THE AMERICAN NATIONAL RED CROSS

Spend an unforgettable
SEMESTER AT SEA
on the former
QUEEN ELIZABETH

New lower rates; full credit for courses. Write today for details from World Campus Afloat, Chapman College, Box CC16, Orange, CA 92666

Sorbonne Summer Session

for American Students
Extension universitaire de l'Universitaire de Paris

COURSES OFFERED

Professorial Staff from l'Université de Paris: M. Georges MATORÉ, M. Antoine ADAM, M. Maurice DUVERGER, Mme Cécile GOLDSCHEIDER, M. Jacques Van den HEUVEL

I. Lower Division Courses

102 Elementary French - emphasis on grammar, phonetics and conversation. 60 hours
(prerequisite: 2 years high school French or 1 semester college French.)

201 Intermediate French - grammar review with emphasis on conversation. 60 hours
(prerequisite: 1 year college French.)

202 Intermediate French - composition and syntax study. 30 hours
(prerequisite: 201 or equivalent.)

212 Intermediate Phonetics - emphasis on pronunciation, reading and speaking. 30 hours
(prerequisite: 102 or equivalent.)

II. Upper Division Courses

331 French Civilization - political, social and intellectual development up to the French Revolution, with emphasis on literature and art. 30 hours
(prerequisite: 202 or equivalent.)

332 French Civilization - political, social and intellectual development from the French Revolution to the present, with special attention given to literature and art. (to be offered summer 1971.) 30 hours

412 Advanced Phonetics - intensive practice in pronunciation, reading and speaking, to achieve a true command of the spoken language. 30 hours
(prerequisite: 202 or equivalent.)

421 Survey of French Literature - advanced study of French literature from the Middle Ages to the French Revolution. 30 hours
(prerequisite: 202 or equivalent.)

422 Survey of French Literature - advanced study of French literature from the French Revolution to the present. (to be offered summer 1971.) 30 hours

433 Principles and Methods of "Explication de Textes" - advanced study of techniques and elements of literary expression in poetry, drama, and prose. 30 hours

III. Graduate Courses (open to last semester seniors)

515 17th Century Literature - study of Baroque and Classical trends of 17th century. 30 hours

525 18th Century Literature - study of the whirlpool of new ideas during the first half of the 18th century. 30 hours

535 19th Century Literature - study of French Idealism from Lamartine to Hugo. 30 hours

555 French Drama - indepth study of 2 or 3 contemporary plays including ALL aspects of its presentation and literary merit (décor, mise-en-scène, audience participation, etc.). 30 hours

565 French Art - study of the evolution and revolution in art from the Middle Ages to the 17th century. 30 hours

566 French Art - study of the movements and schools of art from the 17th century to the present. (to be offered summer 1971.) 30 hours

585 French Stylistics and Creative Writing - study of structural and semantic elements and their application in literary expression. 30 hours

IV. Graduate Seminars

605 Baudelaire - les origines de la poésie contemporaine. 30 hours

615 Flaubert devant la Critique - ses contemporains, la critique traditionnelle, la nouvelle critique. 30 hours

655 La Notion d'Engagement - de 1918 à 1938, de 1939 à 1958, de 1958 à 1970. 30 hours

NOTE: Special "Conférences" will be given, if the demand for them is sufficient. (Gallo-Roman Art, The Recent Discoveries in Archaeology, The New Wave in French Cinema, French Politics since De Gaulle; France and the Common Market, The French Press, Education since May '68, France and the Problems of Big Business, etc.). Therefore, students are asked to indicate their choice on the application form. 10 hours

KEY TO COURSE NUMERATION

Undergraduate Courses: The first number represents the academic year (100 = Freshman, 200 Sophomore, etc.).
The second number indicates the general subject-area treated (0= Grammar & Composition, 1 Phonetics, 2 & 3 - Literature, Civilization, and related subjects).
The third number represents the semester level.

Graduate Courses: The 500 and 600 serie courses represent graduate level. The last two numbers designate the course title.

CREDIT

REGULAR ATTENDANCE is a requisite for obtaining credit.

Although the purpose of this summer session is to fulfill the requirements of American college and university credits, it also conforms to French university regulations. Each 30 hours course is usually equal to 2 American credits. If students successfully complete the average summer session load of 90 hours, they normally receive 6 American college credits. However, students are advised to consult with their professors, their Department Chairman, their own school's Registrar's Office, BEFORE MAKING FINAL ARRANGEMENTS, to ascertain the EXACT number of credits their school grants for the Sorbonne Summer Session.

SORBONNE SUMMER SESSION
for American Students

A special Summer Session is offered by the "Cours de Civilisation Française" at the Sorbonne for those students who wish to improve their knowledge of French language, literature, and civilization. This program is particularly designed with American academic needs in mind, as it can meet the standard semester requirements of most universities and colleges.

Thus American students can derive the double benefit of foreign travel and college credits.

Similar to American summer sessions, the Sorbonne Summer Session lasts six weeks, June 29 to August 7.

A round trip flight from New York to Paris by Air France will be scheduled to leave New York June 28 and return from Paris August 8. Students on this program will enjoy the privacy of a luxurious apartment plus two meals a day. All university fees, a round trip ticket, apartment and meals will cost only $1638.

RESERVATIONS MUST BE RECEIVED BEFORE JAN. 20, 1971.

For Pre-Enrollment and Reservations, please air mail special delivery the following items to Dir. M. Ward McIntosh/ASTRA, Summer Session for American Students, Cours de Civilisation Francaise, Sorbonne, 47, rue des Ecoles, Paris 5e, France:

1. this application form.
2. a 65 dollar deposit (by International postal money order).
3. a transcript or transcripts of college or university work.
4. a small recent photograph.

APPLICATION FORM

Please type or print all information.

Last name (Mr., Mrs., Miss) .....

First name ..... Date of birth .....

Permanent address .....

Academic standing as of Sept 1970: Freshman, Sophomore, Junior, Senior, Graduate University or college last attented .....

University or college address .....

If different than the above, address of university or college to which Sorbonne transcript should be sent .....

.....

Date and type of diplomas earned (or to be earned) as of June 30, 1970.....

.....

Major ..... Minor .....

Teaching experience (indicate level, subjects taught, number of years):

.....

.....

.....

Name and address of persons to be contacted in case of emergency: .....

.....

Courses selected: (please check)

102 ☐	301 ☐	515 ☐	605 ☐
201 ☐	302 ☐	525 ☐	615 ☐
202 ☐	331 ☐	535 ☐	655 ☐
212 ☐	412 ☐	555 ☐
	421 ☐	565 ☐
	433 ☐	585 ☐

Choice (or choices) of special "Conférences" .....

Will you be taking the final examinations for credit? .....

Student Review

Hal Shine Presents A Panorama of Folk Music

by David C. Linton

On the evening of February 2, 1971, guitarist Hal Shine was featured by the Huntingdon Concert Association at Oller Auditorium. Versatility characterized Mr. Shine's concert. He took the audience on a musical journey of guitar music that spanned four centuries, the 17th through the 20th.

Mr. Shine opened the program with some songs from Old England. He first played Early One Morning, 17th century English. This number was followed by Man is for the Woman Made by Henry Purcell, a composer of 17the century England. In this number Mr. Shine's enunciation was especially delightful, and the words that he sang were quite amusing. As he said, "The song reflects its time," meaning the time of Charles the second. He next sang O No John, a Somerset folk song. This was an amusing song about courting, an art that, as Mr. Shine said, "has been prevolent since time began." Then, one heard Geordie, a Somerset folk ballad. This was a song of an execution. After this, Mr. Shine sang The Vicar of Bray, 18th century English. This opening part of the program was concluded by The Oyster Girl, 17the century English. Before singing this number, Mr. Shine said about The Oyster Girl what I think can be said of much of the folk music that the world has known. He said, Whether it be 1620 or 1971, the times and the ideas have really not changed at all, so saysThe Oyster Girl."

Mr. Shine next played three pieces that were without lyrics, Musette (arranged by Below) by J. S. Bach and then Adelita and Lagrima by Tarrega.

Mr. Shine next treated the audience to some ballads and folk songs or, as he said, "songs of the people." e sang Copper Kettle by Beddoe, a song about moonshine. Polly Von, 18th century English, a song about a dejected lover, came next and was followed by a West Indian song, the familiar Kumbaya. Before a brief intermission, Mr. Shine sang Shame and Scandal On the Family, Trinidadian. The audience liked the amusing words and delightful calypso rhythm in this number and gave Mr. Shine a warm round of applause at its conclusion.

After the intermission, Mr. Shine traveled to the 20th century and sang Marvelous Toy by Paxton. He then sang Both Sides, Now by Mitchell. After that, he sang Sweet Caroline by Diamond. This was followed by a moving rendition of Yesterday by Lennon and McCarthey. Mr. Shine completed this section of the program with What the World Needs Now by Bacharach and David.

At this point, the audience heard two pieces without lyrics, Bouree by De Visee and Prelude No. 4 in Emminor by Villa-Lobos.

The final section of the printed program was composed of sections from musicals. Mr. Shine said of the musicals of today that "when someone combines rock and musical, he comes out with a rock musical."

In this group, Mr. Shine first sang Aquarius from Hair by McDermett, Rade, and Ragni. Then, he sang Walk Him Up the Stairs from Purdie by Gell and Udell. He concluded the announced program by singing I, Don Quixote from Man of La Mancha by Leigh and Darion.

The audience gave Mr. Shine a fine applause and he came back on to the stage carrying a banjo to play an oncore. He sang, "When I'm 64" with the banjo, and then he sang with his guitar, "Those Were the Days" by the Beatles. At The Battle Hymn of the Republic this point, Mr. Shine performed by Julian Ward Howe. This song has been sung for over a hundred years in the United States and has symbolized the ideologies of various movements that often had contrasting viewpoints. When this song is sung, one often visualizes domocracy, freedom, or togetherness. One may disagree about the best methods by which these concepts can be achieved; however, he probably will agree with the observation of Mr. Shine that "The Battle Hymn of the Republic is the folk song of America."

Social Environment

Cont'd from page 1

cial, and personal development" which the 1969-71 college catalogue speaks of as the concern of the Student Personnel Services.

I do not, however, mean to imply that the students have no part or responsibility in creating the environment described in the catalogue. We do indeed have such a part and responsibility, but why does it seem as though Juniata students are unable or unwilling to fulfill their responsibility? Perhaps Juniata, as an institution with a definite academic emphasis, has attracted mostly students who themselves place an emphasis on academic matters in their own lives. Such people, faced with a block of unstructured time on campus, where social life is played down, perhaps do not know what to do with their time in the campus' socially limiting environment. Perhaps there are other explanations, but I am unaware of these.

I think it should be possible for Juniata to alter the campus' limiting social environment without substantially disturbing the quality of the intellectual environment that it for the most part offers its students. In fact such improvement would pribably enhance the intellectual opportunities offered. But I do think if anything is to be done about the social situation of the campus, it must be done by the institution but at the insistence and with the assistance of the students. Indeed, in the next decade Juniata may find it must improve the social environment to encourage students to take advantage of the fine academic environment it offers or it may be faced with greater drop out and transfer rates. The student who can and does live on academics alone is indeed a rare bird and usually one with a dull song to sing.

Robinson Accepts New Position

The appointment of Thomas B. Robinson as associate director of development for Juniata College was announced by Dr. John N. Stauffer. It was further announced that Mr. Robinson will continue in his capacity as administrative assistant to the president at Juniata.

Mr. Robinson, whose appointment becomes effective immediately, replaces Mr. Glenn C. Zug, who served on the development staff as director of alumni relations. Mr. Zug is no longer employed by the college, and is expected to take up new work, probably in the Harrisburg area.

A 1966 graduate of Juniata College, Mr. Robinson received his Master's degree in higher education administration from The Pennsylvania State University in 1967. He is currently completing his doctoral studies at Penn State.

Prior to his appointment as administrative assistant to the president at Juniata in 1969, Mr. Robinson held a number of student personnel positions at Penn State.

Honor Society

Cont'd from page 2

of the nature of an honor society, and urged all Tri-Beta members to strive not only for excellence in the understanding of biology, but also in the understanding of many fields. It is such striving, he sail, that will help them use Juniata's liberal arts training to aid their fellow men.

Following his address, President Stauffer was awarded an honorary membership in Tri-Beta. A 1936 graduate of Juniata with a major in biology and chemistry, Dr. Stauffer was cited for his proficiency in these sciences and his later attainments both in psychology and education as well as in college administration.

Tri-Beta officers Arthur Hayes, president, Lance Radbill, vice president, and Pat Gould, secretary, presented the honorary membership to Dr. Stauffer.

Earlier this month, 22 members of Tri-Beta toured the Milton S. Hershey Medical Center at Hershey, where they met several Juniata College alumni who are enrolled in medical school there. It was noted that Juniata has placed at least one of its graduates in every medical class at Hershey since the school was established there four years ago.

Dr. Robert P. Zimmerer, associate professor of biology, is currently on leave from Juniata to be involved in a research project at Hershey. He will return to Huntingdon in January, it was noted.

Dr. Robert L. Fisher, associate professor of biology, serves as faculty advisor to Tri-Beta.

CALENDAR

Feb. 5	Movie: Born Free
Feb. 6	Wrestling: Mansfield—Home
Feb. 6	Basketball: Albright—Home
Feb. 9	Basketball: Dickinson—Home
Feb. 10	Spanish Film in Oller
Feb. 11	Basketball: Susquehanna—Home
Feb. 12	Casino Night: 6 - 10:30 p.m.
Feb. 13	Wrestling: St. Francis—Home
Feb. 13	Basketball: Lycoming—Home
Feb. 13	Dance: Loki
Feb. 14	Chamber Music Concert
Feb. 15	Pinochle Tournament (week)
Feb. 16	Wrestling: Elizabethtown—Away
Feb. 17	Basketball: Elizabethtown—Home
Feb. 17	Camera Club
Feb. 18	Will Judy Lecture: Benjamin DeMott
Feb. 20	Basketball: Philadlphia Textile—Away
Feb. 20	Dance
Feb. 23	Wrestling: Susquehanna—Away
Feb. 23	Basketball: York—Home
Feb. 24	Camera Club
Feb. 26	Basketball: F&M—Away
Feb. 26	Concert: Borrowed Thyme—Inspiration
Feb. 27	Wrestling: Indiana—Away
Feb. 27	Basketball: Upsala—Away
Feb. 27	Mid-Winter Formal

Alpha Phi Gamma Holds Initiation

Five Juniata College students were initiated into Alpha Phi Gamma, a national honorary professional journalism fraternity, in a ceremony held January 28 on the college campus.

All upperclassmen, the initiates include Adele Aboutok, of Basking Ridge, N.J., Barbara L. Claar, Duncansville, Jeanne E. More, Ardmore, Richard M. Ablard, Silver Spring, Md., and William M. David, Philadelphia.

David, a junior who is president of the Juniata Photography Club, was elected president of Juniata's Delta Epsilon chapter of Alpha Phi Gamma. Miss Claar, a senior, was elected vice president.

Both Miss Claar and Miss Aboutok are former editors of "The Juniatian," the college's student newspaper, which is now called "The Renaissance." Miss More, a senior, edited the 1970 Juniata yearbook, "Alfarata."

Present at the initiation was Edward Baker, Jr., of Huntingdon, a 1970 Juniata graduate who is a charter member and immediate past president of Delta Epsilon chapter. Baker is now a sales representative for Prismo Universal Corp.

Alpha Phi Gamma, with headquarters at Ohio University in Athens, Ohio, received its national charter in 1919. The organization has 57 chapters on college campuses from coast to coast, including four in Pennsylvana. A magazine entitled "The Collegiate Journalist" is publishd three times yearly for distribution to college newspaper editors and professional journalists under the auspices of Alpha Phi Gamma.

ATTENTION, NOVEL POETS AND WRITERS

ELMAN PUBLISHING HOUSE
is selecting poems and short stories for their annual books
"VOICES OF POETRY 1971" and "SELECTED SHORT STORIES 1971."

All poets and writers are invited to participate.

Contestants for poetry may send up to three entries, each of fifty lines or less, and for short stories only one entry not exceeding eighteen hundred words, which must be accompanied by a self addressed post-paid envelope, and mailed not later than December 15th.

All winners will be notified by January 15th, 1971.
These contests are free, with no obligation of any sort.

So poets and writers, send your entries to

ELMAN PUBLISHING HOUSE,
8261 North Bayshore Drive,
Miami, Florida 33138
AND GOOD LUCK!

BSC, MCC, AFSC Pacifist Student Coalition

Dear Editor,

Enclosed is a copy of a proposal last year with the Brethren Coldrawn up by a group of students who were in Marburg, Germany leges Abroad program.

Unfortunately we all split for various parts of Europe and the U.S. before we had a chance to formalize the proposal and its suggestions. Now we are finally trying to do something about it.

We are sending it to you with hopes that you will print it in your college newspapr. Copies have been sent to editors of newspapers at Brethren, Mennonite and Quaker schools. Hopefully we can get it together, but this will happen only with your cooperation.

Other articles on the religious and legal aspects of the pacifist position, the Resistance, book lists and addresses of people and groups may be obtained by contacting

Suzanne Iudicello
Wilson College
Chambersburg, Pa. 17201
or
Janey Willems
Fresno Pacific College
Fresno, Calif. 93703

We would also appreciate any information you can give us.

Thank you for your cooperation.

Sincerely,
Suzanne Iudicello

PROPOSED: Brethren, Mennonite and Quaker students and youthe get themselves together.
WHY COALITION? ? ? ? ?

1. We need to be aware of and feel a solidarity with the struggles of o.her pacifist students.

2. There is a great need for more communication between Brethren Service Committee, Mennonite Central Committee and American Friends Service Committee so that we realize the vast opportunities already for service either on a short term basis or for the two year alternative service.

3. Youth need help understanding the pacifist alternative. We must organize ourselves so that we can further this consciousness not only among our fellow students but eventually so that we could offer counselling to high school students. (through summer camps, conferences, and possibly a publication)

4. BSC, MCC and AFSC must be made aware that both males and females need to face the issues involved in a pacifist life style even though our government only requires males to verbalize their position.

5. To open the dialoge between non - combatants, persons who choose to fulfill their military obligation outside the armed forces and persons who see their responsibility to the present situation in complete non-cooperation and resistance.

6. Th possibilities of joining forces to re-evaluate a peace studies program and its relevance in our historical situation. The possibilities if student and professor exchanges within a peace studies program and the basis for a circulation library.

7. The scheduling of conference during vacations to discuss and BE pacifists (short term work camps, inner city projects).

8. CONTACT. The possibility of having a dorm or house open on every sister campus where one could stay overnight and get in contact with what is happening (pre - requisite: something is happening-) during one's summer vacation and wanderings. An address list should be made available to all interested parties.

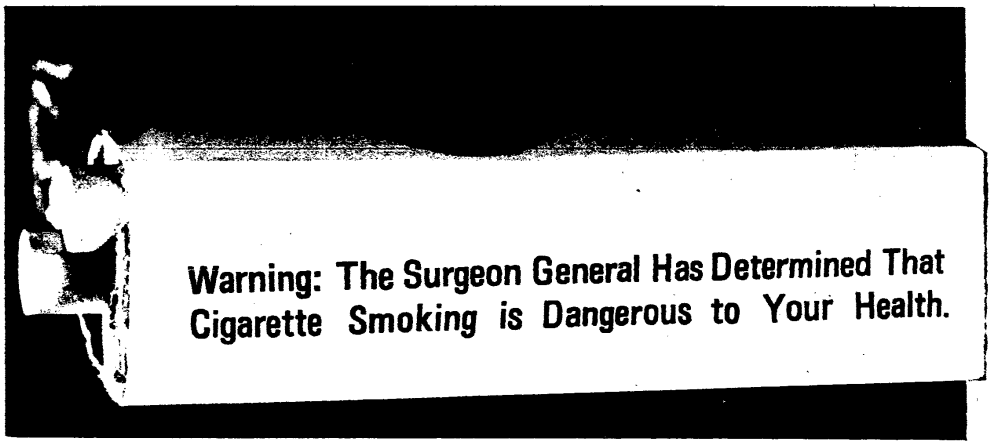
9. EXCHANGE of ideas for coffee houses, non - violence workshops and information centers and other ideas for distributing information.

10. To help us understand the historical position of the three peace Churches in their relationship to government and politics and discuss the relevance of this position in our world; to help us understand how our world is different from that of our founding fathers.

11. To help us re-evaluate the relationship between a pacifist life - style and the CHURCH as an institution. (this demands an understanding as to how the three churches differ as institutions)

12. To support and increase the existing cooperative projects.

Introducing our new improved warning:



By Act of Congress, the above warning must be placed on all cigarettes manufactured for sale in the United States on or after November 1, 1970.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE
Public Health Service

This space contributed as a public service.

Halt Pollution !

The following is brought to you by the Juniata Environmental Action Committee. For further information contact Cathy Hess. Box 401.

CONCERN, INC.
Consumer Guide ECO-TIPS

What you choose at the store reflects your concern for the quality of our environment.

PROSPHATE DETERGENTS

The increasing quantity of phosphorous entering our waterways stimulates excess algae growth. When large amounts of algae decay, a study by the Federal Water Quality Administration, WISK, cerD oxygen necessary for acquatic life is depleted. Pollution results. In a study by the Federal Water Quality Administration, WISH, TREND, and LIAPER PURE had substantially the lowest phosphate content out of 23 major presoaks, laundry and automatic dishwasher detergents.

SO: Use WISK, TREND, or DIAPER PURE for laundry, or Use Soap powder and Washing Soda.

Use much less dishwasher detergent.
Write detergent companies to print analysis of contents on boxes and to eliminate phosphates.

POLYVINYL CHLORIDE (PVC) CONTAINERS

The Bureau of Solid Waste Management Director, Mr. Richard Vaughan, says "When packaging containers manufactured of PVC are burner, corrosive gases are formed capable of severely damaging air cleaning devices in incinerators. In addition, if exeeussive quantities are omitted from the incinerators, damage to plants and buildings may result."

SO: Avoid products in clear, non-rigid, glass like containers. Some products which frequently are packaged in PVC are:

Shampoos
Hand lotions
Mouthwashes
Cooking oils
Hair tonics
Some alcoholic beverrages.
Buy these products only in glass containers.
Write companees protesting the use of PVC.

RETURNABLE BOTTLES

Our nation is facing a garbage and litter crisis. Throw-away containers are among the worst offenders. Returnable bottles are still our best buy: they are cheaper and can be reused.

SO: Buy soft drings and beer in returnable bottles.

Ask your dairy company to use returnable bottles.
Write to companies (i.e. Reynolds and Kaiser Aluminum) commending recycling projects.

OVER-PACKAGING

The consumer pays twice for over-packing: in the cost of the product and in trash disposal. The Bureau of Solid Waste Management statistics show that 46% of municipal Solid Waste is paper and cardboard.

SO: Buy simply-packaged items, not items in multiple containers or wrapper in sevral layers of paper.

wrapper in sevral layers of paper.

PESTICIDES

Unwise use of pesticides can destroy our environment and threaten man's health. The Rachel Carson Trust for the Living Environment recommends:

Use sprays and dusts only when absolutely necessary.

Use mulches, cultivation, diversity in planting and manures in gardening.

Never Use:
Dioldrin	DDT
Endrin	Dhlerdane
Aldrin	Lindano
Texaphone	Mercury
Heptachlor	Lead
	Arsenic

Suggested for specific, careful use—Read fine print on label.

Household insects: Dri-Die, Drione, diatomaceous earth.

Household and garden insects: pyrethrum, retenene (poisonous to fish), ryania, sabadilla (poisonous to bees).

Fungi, rusts, rots, viruses and some insects: Bordeaux mixture (hydrated lime and copper-sulphate), copper-lime mixtures, sulphur, and sulphur-lime mixtures.

Rats: Warfarin (keep secure from other animals).

Never pour posticides down drains or into streams or lakes.

Take ECO-TIPS with you whn shopping. Show it to a friend.

Prepared by Concern, Inc., 2100 M Street, N.W. Washington, .C. 1970.

Olde English Spirit Prevails In Juniata's Student Dining Hall

by David C. Linton

When one went to Baker Dining Hall on the evening of December 16, 1970, he entred into an atmosphere of sixteenth century England. By means of elaborate decorations and costumes, a meal from sexteenth century England, and The Madrigal Singers, Hr. Will Brandau, production advisor, staged a Madrigal Dinner at Juniata.

As the guests arrived, they were greeted by a recording of a trumpet fanfare by Lully, which foretold of coming magnificence. At that point The Madrigal Singers sang Deck the alls, and old Welsch tune, Christmas is Coming, an English tune, and The Boar's Head., an old English tune, which featured a solo by baritone Mr. William Dick.

Before the guests enjoyed a delicious meal, which began with sirloin au jus and ended with an old English custom, a drink from a wassail bowl, Dr. Kenneth Crosby gave the invocation followed by another trumpet fanfare.

Next on the program Shirley Strock sang the English carol, What Child Is This. As the guests, who were students, but in sixteenth century England would have been the common folk, enjoyed their meal and the festivities, Mr. George Harpster sang Sonny Bank and Miss Barbara Hunt sang This Endris Night. Then the Madrigal singers, who are under the direction of Professor Bruce A. Hirsch, sang the melody Ya Viene La Veija. This observer liked the fine instrumental accompanyists in the program, harpsichordist, Mr. Philip Simmons, guitarist, Mr. Aden Wertz, Mr. Clarence Fritz on the percussion, and Miss Beth Wagner on the flute.

Next the singers performed an English carol, Masters In This Hall. The singers for the Madrigal Dinner were not only the Madrigal Singers but also the larger ensemble, The Choral Union. The following number was the carol Pat-a-Pan. This observer found the next number, Fum-Fum-Fum, delightful. He enjoyed the simple rhythm and the fine performances of the two singers of this duet, Miss Ann Hench and Miss Judy Rosen.

The guests next heard a traditional English carol, Wassail Song. In order to conclude the program, the singers sang a French carol, Angels We Have Heard on High.

The English citizens of the sixteenth century had neither electric lights nor gas heat, but they did have the fellowship of one another, and they had the appreciation for their labors of the British nobility. These things made their lives and especially their holidays more liveable.

As a matter of fact, in today's world of electric lights and gas heat, unless we have fellowship and appreciation for our labors, we can not have happiness and joy, commodities greatly needed for success in life. If one looks back upon the past Christmas season, he will see that most of the happiness which he derived from it came ween he was with others. The message that the Madrigal Dinner and all its pageantry and its festive singing can teach us is that after 400 years we still need fellowship.

Chamber Music Concert

This Sunday evening February 14 at 8:15 P.M. at the Stone Church of the Brethren thrre will be a Chamber Music Concert featuring Mr. Peter Segal, classical guitarist.

Mr. Seal began his study of the guitar at the age of seven. He has studied with Jose Tomas at the University of Santiago in Spain where he had been granted a full scholarship by the Spanish government. He has also studied with Pete Colonna.

Mr. Segal is presently a college student at Temple University. He is a teacher at the Settlement Music School where he is the youngest member of the faculty. He has taught guitar at the Lighthouse Music Camp and is a board member of the Philadelphia Classical Guitar Society. He made his debut with the Springfield Symphony. Mr. Segal has been seen over WFIL TV in Philadelphia and is a popular attraction with Franklin Concerts' audiences. Mr. Segals concert repetoire covers music from the Baroque to and including the Contemporary Age. Although the music written by J. S. Bach was originally written for the lute, much of the music has been transcribed for the guitar and Mr. Segal will be playing a Suite written by Bach on the concert program.

Accompanying Mr. Segal on the concert program will be the Altoona String Quartet and Mary Ruth Linton at the harpsicord. The program will be comprised of the following selections: Trio Sonata, No. 6, Opus 5 by Handel, Three Pavans by L. Milan, The Suite by J.S.Bach, Two Studies by Sor. English Suite by J. W. Duart, Quintet in E Minor by L. Boccherini. Spanish Dance No. 5 by E. Granados and Mallorca by I. Albinez.

Miss Central Pennsylvania Scholarhip Contest

The Altoona Jaycees are formulating plans for the upcoming 1971 Miss Central Pennsylvania Scholarship Pageant to be held April 3 at the Jaffa Mosque at 8:00 P.M. in Altoona, Pa.

General Chairman, Duane Bordell, and Richard Teacher invite all girls who meet the following requirements to contact Mr. Teacher immediatly.

Entrant agrees to abide by the rules of the local and national pageants now in effect or announced in the future.

Entrant agrees that the time, manner and method of judging the pageant shall be solely within the discretion of the Altoona Jaycees and that the dicision of the judges will be final.

Entrant agrees that if she is selected as the winner of this pageant, she will not sign a management contract withany individual or corporation, and that she will not give any written or verbal endorsement of any mercantile commodity or commercial organization, nor will she prmit any photographs to be used in connection with any advertised commodity or service not associated with contest, without the written permission of the Miss American Pageant.

Entrant must be a resident of Blair, Bedford, Cambria, Fulton, Somerset, or Huntingdon County for six months. This rule is waived only for contestants whose residence is out of the city of state, but she may be a college or university student in the city where the contest is held and at the time the contest is held. She must not have competed in more than one official preliminary contest this year.

Entrant must be single, and never have been married, divorced, or had a marriag anulled. Entrant must be a high school graduate by September of this year. Entrant's age on September 1 shall not be less than 18 or more than 28 years.

Entrant must be of good character and possess poise, personality, charm and beauty of face and figure.

Entrant must perform in a three- minute routine. This talent may be singing, dancing, playing a musical instrument, dramatic reading, art display, dress designing, etc., or she may give a three-minute talk on the career she wishes to pursue.

Entrant may be either amateur or professional.

Prospective entrants are urged to return to following application immediately.

Application for Miss Central Pennsylvania Scholarship Pageant
Send to: Richard Teacher, 602 E. 26th Ave., Aloona, Pa. 16601

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ County _____

Phone _____ State _____

Financial Problems In Athletics

by Bill Gasper

The February 1, 1971 issue of Sports Illustrated contains an article pertinent to all colleges. No, it is not the pictorial essay concerning Haiti; but the article by Pat Ryan about spiralling costs of college athltics. While the substance of this article revolves around the inflated expenses of the various football programs, its impact affects the entire gamut of all intercollegiate athletics.

Within the past ten years, forty-two colleges have dropped intercollegiate football. Buffalo is the most recent example and others who terminated their intercollegiate programs are Detroit, Marquette, Denver, Bradley, etc. During this same decade the entire athletic budgets have been increased 108%, to the point where some schools are spending $3 million annually on athletics. Today, 400 of the 655 NCAA members operate their entire sports program in the red. All these figures are direct quotes from the text of the article.

Why has the pinch hit so hard now? Inflation, rising coaches salaries, higher costs on most fronts, increase in the number of grant-in-aids, rising tuition, and the expanded costs of recruiting are a few of the reasons. Television used to make up the difference but now that industry is confronted by a financial bind. Many other statistics could be listed here, but the point is that athletics is about to burst its bubble and something must be done.

There are several extreme proposals to try to curb this situation. These include: 1) elimination of spring football, 2) new recruiting limitations, 3) limiting coaching staffs, 4) trimming traveling squads, 5) abolishment of "jock" tutoring, and the most extreme 6) return to one platoon football. Here, we would quote Mr. Ryan's words,

> "But sooner or later the NCAA is going to have to step in, stand very tall and pass legislation to institute wise economies nation wide. No athletic director is going to cut back on football unless he is assured his competition is doing likewise."

This throws the ball back into the NCAA's lap and this organization is studying three proposals, 1) limit football scholarships to 120 or 130 per year, which would be renewable grant-in-aids, 2) award scholarships only on the basis of need, 3) establish a national date for signing letters of intent. None of these will pass without stern opposition, most of which would come from the South and Southwest. There appears to be no ready-will take a great deal of soul made answer to this question. It searching and money tightening if this problem is to be solved.

But, now, one could say that these are the problems of the major universities and it would not affect isolated Juniata. Possibly not on a major scale, but this institution is beginning to feel the pinch on the financial front as tuition rates and cost spiral. Certainly, we cannot point the finger solely at the athletic program and this is not meant to be a condemnation of the athletic program. But, while a major renovation is taking place on the academic level at Juniata, why not do an intensive study of the athletic program? Among the proposals that could be considered would be: 1) sharing the emphasis now placed on football and basketball to other intercollegiate sports and even to the intramural program, 2) build a swimming pool on campus, 3) expand the intramural program to include female sports and expand the outlay now given to female athletics. Many other proposals could be listed here, but time and space does not permit.

Inconclusion, an intensive study of the athletic situation at Juniata is needed and needed now before a serious financial situation develops. If a de-emphasis of programs is needed—good! But, expand the facilities available so that it touches more students.

We do not want to condemn intercollegiate athletics, but only to question their seemingly lofty position. Any response to this position would be appreciated, and we will give the time and space necessary for such a response.

On The Sports Scene

by Bill Gasper

It is the time of the year for rumers to run wild in the football ranks with so many posts opening up. Among the most surprising; Willie Davis, ex-Green Bay Packer and Grambling star mentioned for the Harvard post and Hank Stram, the Harvard post and Hank Stram, Kansas City Chief menter mentioned for the Miami of Florida job. . . .Tommy Prothro's choice for the La Rams head spot was a shock. John McKay of USC was thought to have the inside track. . Rick Barry might be back with the San Francisco Warriors next season. . . .The Boston Patriots run the number one draft choice (probably Stanford's Jim Plunkett) in the NFL draft. They will probably trade either it or expensive Joe Kapp. . . .The Oriolos might deal Frank Robinson for the right price . . . .Mo Taylor made the wire service all Pennsylvania football second team. . . .NotreDame's victory over Texas was a thing of beauty. It took Joe Thiesmann and a rock-ribbed defense to do it. . . .Our top ten college teams at this desk:

1. NEBRASKA
2. NOTRE DAME
3. TENNESSEE
4. TEXAS
5. ARIZONA STATE
6. STANFORD
7. LSU
8. OHIO STATE
9. ARKANSAS
10. MICHIGAN

Arizona State's starting backfield all do the 100 yards in under 10 seconds. They looked impressive over North Carolina in the Peach Bowl. . . .Kentucky is vulnerable in the SEC basketball race. Look for Tennessee and Vanderbilt to rock them. . . .UCLA's freshman basketball squad is awesome. So what else is new. . . .Alabama has a black basketball player. George Wallace must be softening. . . . Tulane showed a lot of emotion in their Liberty Bowl triumph. . . . Delaware disposed of Morgan State in the Boardwalk Bowl for Eastern small college supremacy. . . .Is a national football playoff feasible? TV money could push it through. . . . .Milwaukee should face New York in the NBA finals. . . .St. Louis defeated UCLA for the NCAA soccer crown. . . .U of California at Irvine defeated UCLA for the NCAA water pole championship. . . . . .Indiana U. has a super soph in George McGinnis He broke Oscar Robertson's scoring records in Indiana . . .

PEACE, WAR AND THE CHRISTIAN CONSCIENCE

By Joseph Fahey

A 24-page booklet that traces Christianity's efforts, through 2,000 years, to limit the savagery of war. A balanced, factual picture of positions ranging from all-out approval (the Crusades), through limited war (the just-war theory), to Christian pacifism.

"Peace, War and the Christian Conscience" concludes with concrete steps the average individual can take to promote "peace on earth."

In one year, over 600,000 copies in circulation. Single copies are available free from—

Peace Booklet
The Christophers
Department SC
12 East 48th Street
New York, N.Y. 10017

Student Find

Eureka, Monte Gold

If you've been wondering what ever happened to the Gold Nugget, well it was found—behind Oller Hall in a rock pile! Mark Monti was the finder and the recipient of the $10 prize. How did he find it? It could have been luck or logic.

The clues broke down like this:

1 Not out of the way,
You may pass it every day.
Look around, it can be found
Ten bucks we will pay.
Burma Shave.
Easily found around campus (Oller Hall).
Burma Shave signs were always planted in rock piles the road side. (Come on now, you're old enough to remember the Burma Shave series.)

2 You have to move a thing or two,
But it's worth ten bucks to you.
Four rocks were on top of the nugget.

3 Recognizing the nugget is not such a chore,
It's an inch around or maybe more.
There's a tag attached that pays what it is.
Look whre gold is found, but not where a 49er found his.
Gold is found among rocks, the 49ers looked for theirs in streams.

4 John Denver will be here this week, the 11th of December. A paper company helps you seek, if the name you can remember.
Paper company? Yep, Scott paper company. Scott Street runs behind Oller Hall, and Oller sat the rockpile containing the gold nugget.

Check next week's Campus Crier for the first clue of the new gold nugget competition.

J.C. Cagers In Contention

Juniata College's senior basketball co-captain John Smith, of Lebanon, was named Jan. 20 to the Eastrenn College Athletic Conference's third weekly All-East team.

Smith scored 25 points Saturday Jan. 16 in a game against Ursinus College, which Juniata won, 100-68. The 6-foot-3 forward is currently ranked scond in the Middle Atlantic Conference in scoring, and is also ranked among the top 20 scorers in small colleges across the nation by the N.C.A.A.

Leading Juniata's Indians in scoring with 193 points in eight games. Smith is averaging better than 24 points per game. This season he will become Juniata's candidate for Little All- American in basketball.

According to Juniata's head coach Jack Swinderman, "John is a very sincere, hard-working basketball player—not only on game night, but on the practice floor as well. His leadership and his quiet seriousness have a remarkable influence on his teammates."

The first-year coach said Smith has adapted well to Juniata's new moving offense, taking advantage of fast breaks and moving always at the hight time. "He has the advantage of a good outside shot as well as a tremendous record of success in layups," Swinderman noted. "He can shoot with great accuracy from 15 to 20 feet away, and opponents can seldom block him," he dded.

New Coach On Juniata's Basketball Staff

by Bill Gasper

Paul Stainbrook, of Cochranton, Pa., is the new assistant basketball coach at Juniata.

A June, 1970 graduate of Penn State's College of Health and Phys. Ed., Mr. Stainbrook has been working mainly with Juniata's freshman cage team. He will coach the Indian JV squad in addition to helping the new head basketball menter Jack Swindorman with scouting and recruiting later in the year.

A native of Crawford County, Mr. Stainbrook lettered in high school basketball, and joined the Penn State varsity as a sophomore. He did not play his final two years.

His first coaching experience is also his first job out of college and he is available as a substitute teacher in the district. Single, Mr. tainbrook plans to pursue studies toward a career in physical therapy.

Juniata's JV squad posted a 11-1 record last season and so far this season sports a 1-1 chart, losing its opener to Indiana and defeating Federal City on the home hardwood.

How About A Summer In England ?

Students are urgently invited to help in archaeological excavations in England this summer. Deadline for applications is March 1.

City center redevelopment, new road-building programs and rapidly changing land use are threatening the disappearance of prehistoric graves, Iron-age settlements, Roman villas, fascinating relics of medieval towns, all over Britain.

American students free from mid-May, and with previous archaeological experience, are invited to join an international team on the final season's dig of the important Anglo-Saxon site at North Elmham, Norfolk. The excavation is expected to throw important new light on how the Anglo-Saxon forefathers of the English lived. Experienced helpers will receive free board for helping in this important work.

Other students without experience are invited to join the British Archaeology Seminar at Lincoln College, Oxford, organised by the Association for Cultural Exchange. Six academic credits can be earned from participating in this low-cost program which ends by three weeks' participation on digs in different parts of England or Scotland Cost, inclusive of Trans-At-$750.

Professor Ian Lowson, 539 West lantic travel by scheduled jet, is Write now for further details to 112 Street, New York, N.Y. 10025.

PSEA Trip

Five Juniata students: Peggy Slaughter, Cindy White, Valerie Derrickson, Kathy Cambell, and Cathy Hess, attended a conference sponsored jointly by the Student National Education Association and the U.S. State Department on Feb. 3 and 4.

The conference was held at the State Department in Washington D.CC. topics discussed by State Department officials included U.S. foreign policy for the 1970's, the war in Viet Nam, cross-cultural communication, and population and environmental problems.

All participants in the conference wre invited to a reception given by the Secretary of State at the Diplomatic Functions Suite of the State Department. This reception was attended by Secretary of State William Rogers, astronaut Michael Collins of Apollo XI, and many other officials from the State Department.

Stroman to

Cont'd from page 1

aided by research consultants Paul M. Heberling, associate professor of sociology, and Dr. John Swisher, assistant professor of education from The Pennsylvania State University. Together the three men will analyze the final data and write the report for use by the Central Region of the Pennsylvania Criminal Justice Planning Board.

Students will gain first-hand experience in interviewing and conducting a professionally-guided survey. "It's a rare opportunity for undergraduates to engage of research of this significance," Dr. Stroman said, "and it's not something they can learn from textbooks."

He added further that the use of students in the research work actually makes the survey program possible, since the cost of professional survey personnel for such a long period would be prohibitive.

Dr. Stroman said he is excited bout the project "because it's not of the usual type that students find tedious. It deals with a truly crucial problem that many of them are deeply concerned about."

A 1956 graduate of Ohio Wesleyan University, Dr. Stroman earned his S.T.B. degree in 1959 and his Ph.D. in 1966 from Boston University. He joined the Juniata College faculty in 1963, and was named chairman of the Department of Sociology in 1965.

RENAISSANCE

Vol. XLVII No. 10 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | February 26, 1971

Big Entertainment - Borrowed Thyme

by Barbara Duncan

On Friday, Feb. 26, at 8:00 p.m., the College Center Board will present "Borrowed Thyme" and "Inspirations" in concert. The event is to be held in the Memorial Gymnasium and tickets are one dollar.

"Borrowed Thyme" appeared at Juniata last year during the May Day Weekend and were the second group to perform during the fireworks. This group is composed of seven musicians, aged 21-23 who come from various parts of Pennsylvania, and except for one, were graduated from Penn State University. They have given concerts at Penn State, Bucknell University, University of Penn., and have appeared with such well-knowns as Flip Wilson and "The New York Rock and Roll Ensemble". The group had trouble at first deciding upon what type of music they wanted to play, and it was only under the direction of their manager, Lou Munson that these seven musicians were able to find a sound they liked, "simple, perfect structures, with a mellow approach." Their concerts are a must for anyone who enjoys this type of music. "They are more than a seven-piece rock-jazz band, they are show," and while they are presenting their sound, they are having a good time. Presently they are working on an album, which, when completed, should sell quite well. Their name refers to the music they write, involving new ideas and sounds, and "Borrowed Thyme" is what they live on as they await the reactions of audiences to their music.

"Inspirations" has appeared at Juniata to play for the Saturday night dances. Their home base is Altoona, and they have played in the surrounding area at various high school and college events.

These two groups should put on quite a show, so set Feb. 26 aside as an evening of musical entertainment.

Comprehensive Exams

During the fall semester and now in the spring semester there has been growing concern by students and faculty over comprehensive examinations. These concerns seem to center around three major weaknesses in the exam as it is presently structured.

The first problem with the comprehensive exam is that it is usually quite time-consumming for both students and faculty. It restricts many professors in performing their basic function, that is, teaching. The time spent in the administration of "comps" could be better used in improving existing courses and developing new ones. Since the fall of 1971 will bring with it a new curriculum, this problem can hardly be overlooked. The comprehensive exams also place a heavy time burden on the students who are "forced" to prepare for them. During this preparation current course study is often neglected.

The second problem with "comps" is that the areas of the examination are often restrictive and non-integrative. This fact is in opposition to the nature of the examination. The cause of this problem is probably the inclusion of the "content" and "methodology" requirements adopted by the faculty last year. While the faculty had probably intended to give the students an idea of what to expect on the exam by adding these requirements, it has too often made the comprehensive a retest of past courses and, thus, a form of "double jeopardy".

The third problem with comprehensive exams is involved with the inconsistencies among departments and faculty. While some faculty members are very uncertain as to the nature and administrative procedures of the exam, others refuse to conform to them. In many departments the exam might be considered easy and taken lightly. In others it might be very difficult and taken quite seriously. To the student, at least, these inconsistencies are very unjust especially when graduation is dependent on passing this exam.

In an attempt to solve some of the above problems, we propose the following changes in the comprehensive examination:

1. We propose a written part that would not exceed a total of one and one-half hours. We feel that this would give the examining board members a much shorter exam upon which to comment.
2. We propose that the student should select one broad, integrative topic as the area from which more specific guidelines should be suggsted for the examination by the examining board. The question for the written examination must apply to the general area selected, and the suggested guidelines must be coordinated by the board chairman so that they are interrelated. The board chairman would also be responsible for drafting the exam question. We feel this proposal would eliminate the content and methodology restrictions, and make the exam a more integrative, educational experience. It would also allow the exam to conform better to the shorter testing period.
3. We propose that each member of the examining board submit written comments to the student within one week of the written examination. We also propose that the oral exam be scheduled one week after the return of the written examination and comments to the student. We feel that these steps serve to speed up the examining period.
4. We propose that the oral part of the exam "be organized as an opportunity for the student to discuss and reflect upon his achievements", (1) and to answer the comments and questions directed to him concerning his written exam. This would help bring the comprehensive exam closer to the philosophy which the faculty adopted when they passed the task force proposals.
5. Finally, we propose that following the oral exam each board member submit a written evaluation of the student's overall performance on both parts of the exam to the student, the departmental chairman, and the Registrar. These evaluative statements should become part of the student's official record, but satisfactory performance on the exam "would not be required for a degree and would not, in fact, be formally defined". (2) This new type of evaluation would be far less ambiguous than the present system which simply states "pass, fail, or pass with distinction". Anyone interested in a student's performance on the exam would have three clearly written statements by qualified examiners. This "non-contingent" comprehensive would also allow more room for experimentation in an attempt to discover the best system for those who will soon be under the task force curriculum. (Similar to what is now being done with the writing program). It would end the extreme mental duress that students are subjected to since "passing" would no longer be a degree requirement. Also ended would be the unfair system of "double jeopardy", and the time-consuming appeals to the curriculum committee.

We urge your immediate attention on this very important matter.

Footnotes

1 Page D-8 f the Task Force proposals.

2 IBID.

Reply To P.O. 293

Recently I received in my mailbox a piece of paper with the stirring question: "Should Student Government be abolished?" I respect all opinions and give any person no matter what his persuassion the opportunity to air his views. I honestly feel that the Student Government organization is presently a constructive and worthwhile endeavor. However, if the person behind this box number just as honestly feels that a better structure for serving the students could be found I welcome his thoughts and actions. I want to know that his suggestion of Student Government abolition is not selfishly oriented, but aimed at giving the J.C. student a better life on this campus. People can talk and talk about what S.G. is not doing, but its a different story when one gets active and begins working with the ideas and people that make a college what it is. There's so much giving and taking— one cannot just assert and that is that! Sometimes it takes time to get something done, but all the time its a learning experience for everybody. You may have a better, more efficient way of accomplishing student goals. Let's hear them together. My experience with Student Government has indicated that real people make up those two words, people who can listen, who can understand, and who can work effectively. I'm sure their goals and desires are not as far from yours as you might suppose. We can abolish and tear down until nothing stands. But there are many who have worked hard, who care and want to serve well. Are they to be buried under all that debris? Self-honesty beckons me onto a different course. A course that leads into the realization that no matter what our differences we can still talk with each other, and we can understand. I am willing and I'm sure Student Government is. Are you?

Daniel Cardoni
Senior Legislator

John Smith, Again

Juniata College senior John Smith was named today for the third time this season to the All-East basketball first team by the Eastern College Athletic Conference (E.C.A.C.).

Chosen as a forward in the E.C.A.C.'s Division II squad, Smith was recognized for having scored 107 points and capturing 46 rebounds in three games last week.

The 6-foot-3 co-captain for the Indians broke a long-standing school record Saturday, Feb. 3 in a game Juniata won against Lycoming, 121-94, by scoring 46 points. He made 20 of 29 field goal attempts (70%), equalling the record for attempts set in 1952 by Juniatian Dave Pollock, who had also set the 43-point scoring record.

The all-time high pulled Smith's season scoring average per game up to 25 points and set his season total for 16 games at 400. Smith needs only 35 points to reach the 1,500-point mark in his four-year career.

In addition, junior guard Jim McCarthy and sophomore center Tom Rinaldi were accorded honorable mention on the E.C.A.C. weekly team. McCarthy scored 38 points and played outstanding defense against Middle Atlantic Conference rivals Dickinson, Susquehanna and Lycoming last week. Rinaldi scored 40 points and grabbed 41 rebounds in the same three games, helping to keep the Indians in contention among the top three teams in the M.A.C. Northern Division.

Juniata will host the Blue Jays of Elizabethtown College tonight (Wednesday) in Huntingdon in another crucial M.A.C. contest, and will travel to Philadelphia on Saturday to face last year's M.A.C. and NCAA champions, the Rams of Philadelphia Textile.

President's Message

This will confirm a conversation which I had with Mr. Brandau by telephone and, more particularly, a conference that I have had with Mrs. Shedd, Mr. James Plitt, and Dean Schoenherr.

The primary concern is for the provision of Draft Counseling for interested members of the student body. This is to be done under the general auspicies of a group composed of Mr. James Plitt, Miss Jackae Andoniades, Miss Sue Dobson, Mrs. Jane Crosby, Mrs. Nancy Shedd, and others who are associated with them.

In order to facilitate their intended Draft Counseling services to the campus, it was agreed that you will supply a table, two chairs, and a bookrack (one to fit on the table). It is anticipated that these facilities will be needed immediately. The location of this counseling service activity will be in the cloakroom or alcove in the northwest corner of the second floor of Ellis Hall. The responsible group will post the hours when counselors will be available to talk with students who seek the service.

We will provide a simple notice, a draft of which is attached. The group promoting this activity will be responsible to pay for other duplicating and printing which may be done at the college print shop. Occasionally certain authoritative items on such matters as the draft lottery, draft board procedures, etc., may be issued by the Dean of Students office for use at the Draft Counseling desk in Ellis Hall, as well as at other points on the campus.

We also agreed that, in the future, recruiters from the various military services will be housed in the regular placement facilities in Founders Hall when they are on the campus. This means that they will be expected to make their contacts with students in Founders Hall instead of Ellis Hall. They are to be provided with the same facilities as are used by recruiters interested in providing students — usually seniors — with information about non-military career opportunities.

Peter Segal-Review

by David C. Linton

The result of the mixing of the talents of guitarist Peter Segal with those of the Altoona Symphony String Quartet and harpsichordist Mary Ruth Linton is musical excellence. On the evening of February 14, 1971, at the Stone Church, a fine, attentive audience ascertained this at a program in the current Chamber Music Series.

The first selection of the program was Trio Sonata No. 6, op. 5 by G. F. Handel. In this piece there were four movements, largo, allegro, allegro-adagio, and allegro. This selection was played by the Altoona Symphony String Quartet and harpsichordist Mary Ruth Linton. The allegro-adagio movement was especially interesting because it was characterized by pleasant chords on the harpsichord, the allegro movement also proved to be delightful as it contained many difficult bowings executed well and rapidly by first violinist Robert King.

Cont'd on page 2

Segal Cont'd from page 1

In the second selection, Three Pavans, by L. Milan, the audience saw and heard guitarist and guest artist Peter Segal. Before playing Mr. Segal talked about his instrument and the selection that he was going to perform. He said that this selection had been written in 1535 for the court of the count of Valencia in Spain. He mentioned that this music had a courtly flavor to it and that one of the pieces in the suite was entitled Pavarse, which means to walk in a courtly manner in Spanish. In this selection, one was impressed by the fine tones that Mr. Segal elicited from his guitar.

The third selection was Suite by J. S. Bach. Mr. Segal said that at the time that Bach composed, the guitar was an unrespected instrument. He then said that because of this, the numbers in this suite are adaptations of pieces that Bach wrote for other instruments. He also mentioned that when a guitarist is faced with performing a piece which is composed of adaptations, he can either "make the guitar sound like the other instrument or interpret how Bach (or any other composer) would have written the selection if he had written it for the guitar." In Mr. Segal's opinion the latter is the more preferable of the two choices. The fourth dance, Bourree, was especially enjoyable because of its very melodious and smoothly flowing rhythms.

After this selection, Mr. Segal played Two Studies by F. Sor. The first was very melancholy, and the second was slow and light.

The final selection before a brief intermission was English Suite by J. W. Duarte. There were four selections in the suite. The first, "prelude," was very light. The second, "folk song," was composed of melodies characterized by sadness. Mr. Segal said that, "round dance," the third selection had been written to commemorate the marriage of the Spanish guitarist, Segovia. It was enjoyable to hear the recurring themes and the low chords played at the base of the guitar in this number. Before playing the fourth selection in the suite, Mr. Segal made a quip about the necessity to tune the guitar continually. He said, "I guess it (the guitar) is like an automobile. Sometimes it just doesn't sound right."

After the intermission, Mr. Segal returned in front of the audience along with the Altoona Symphony String Quartet composed of violinists Robert King and Charles Redenberger, violist Louella Snyder, and cellist William Deremer. The ensemble played Quintet in E minor in five movements by L. Boccherini. The second movement, adagio, was especially interesting because of its many themes first stated by the guitarist and then answered by the quartet.

Following this selection, Mr. Segal played Spanish Danse No. 5 by E. Granados, and then he concluded the printed program by playing Mallorca by I. Albeniz. In the third piece of Mallorca, it was pleasant to hear the rich, full sounding chords followed by ascending tones that Mr. Segal created.

After the audience gave Mr. Segal a fine round of applause, he returned to view to play one encore, Choros Typico, by the Brazilian composer, Heitor Villa-Lobos.

Basketball

SPORTS SCENE

by Bill Gasper

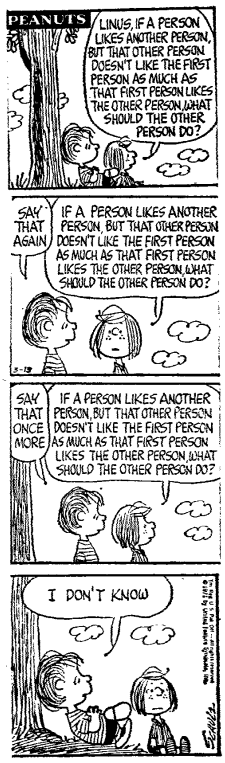
As collegiate basketball turns toward thought of the past season tournaments, we would like to choose our top ten major college powers:

1. UCLA
2. Penn
3. Marquette
4. Kansas
5. Jacksonville
6. USC
7. South Carolina
8. Western Kentucky
9. Duquesne
10. North Carolina

Yet, one cannot forget the bottom ten teams, as we see them:

1. Leyola (at Chicago)
2. VMI
3. Hardin-Simmons
4. Xavior
5. De Paul
6. Brown
7. Stanford
8. Portland
9. Oklahoma City
10. Yale

During the past twenty years, the guitar has come to be viewed by many as an instrument for rock and roll music but hardly one for classical sounds. Mr. Segal showed us by means of his program that there is most certainly a place as well as a need for a classical guitar in any chamber ensemble.



ANNOUNCING.....

The twelfth annual scholarship awards of the
PENNSYLVANIA FEDERATION OF DEMOCRATIC WOMEN

THE AWARDS — Two scholarships will be awarded, The Florence Dornblaser Memorial Scholarship in the amount of $250 and The Emma Guffey Miller Memorial Scholarship also in the amount of $250.

ELIGIBILITY — Any deserving woman student in the Junior class of an accredited college or university may apply. The awards are for use during her Senior year. She must be majoring in government, political science, economics or history or preparing to teach one of these subjects. She must have good scholastic standing; must be reasonably active in student activities; must be a resident of Pennsylvania; must establish the need for financial aid; and must possess a Democratic family background or be an active participant in the affairs of the Democratic Party.

PURPOSES — To encourage qualified young women to pursue and to develop interests in politics and government.

To honor the memories of two distinguished Democratic women, the late Florence Dornblaser, who was first Treasurer of the Pennsylvania Federation of Democratic Women, and the late Emma Guffey Miller, who was the first woman to be nominated for President of the United States. Both women left bequests to the Federation, the proceeds of which were placed in a scholarship fund. Additional funds have been added by the clubs and individual members of the Federation.

DEADLINE — Applications must be postmarked on or before May 15, 1971.

The awards will be presented to the winners in person on Tuesday, June 22nd, at the Annual Convention of the Pennsylvania Federation of Democratic Women at Mount Pocono, Pennsylvania. Travel expenses will be partially paid by the Federation.

APPLICATIONS — Additional applications may be obtained by writing to:
The Memorial Scholarship Fund
Pennsylvania Federation of Democratic Women
510 North Third Street
Harrisburg, Pennsylvania 17101

Congratulations!
John Smith
on your new high scoring basketball record
46 points in one game
Great Game!

Football Honors

Two Juniata College football players have been named to the 1970 College Division Academic All-America football teams, it was announced today in Jacksonville, Fla.

The young men are juniors Ray Grabiak of Mount Pleasant, Pa., and Mo Taylor of Baltimore, Md. Grabiak, a 5-foot-10, 185-pound defensive end, was named to the first defensive team as a lineman, while Taylor, a 6-foot-2, 200-pound tackle, made both offensive and defensive second teams.

During the 1970 season both players were named to weekly all-star teams in the Eastern College Athletic Conference, and both earned recognition on the All-Star Team, Middle Atlantic Conference at the close of the season. In addition, Taylor was named to the E.C.A.C. First Team for 1970.

This week Grabiak and Taylor along with 5-foot-7, 150-pound flanker Dan Rackovan of Spangler were named tri-captains of the Juniata squad for the 1971 football season.

Grabiak, a chemistry major at Juniata with a 3.53 "B-plus" cumulative average, is a 1967 graduate of Mt. Pleasant High School. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond P. Grabiak, of 610 Broad St., Mount Pleasant, Pa.

Taylor, a sociology major, has maintained a 3.04 average while participating in athletics as well as student government and numerous other campus activities. He is a 1967 graduate of Cardinal Gibbons High School, Baltimore, and is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Taylor, of 2814 Mosher St., Baltimore, Md.

Selection of the Academic All-America teams was achieved through balloting by members of the College Sports Information Directors of America (CoSIDA), conducted by Ted Emery of the Gator Bowl Association. In order to qualify for nomination players had to maintain a "B" average or better during the past year, and had to be first-string performers.

In all, 23 different schools are represented on the teams this year.

FREE INFORMATION
LOW COST, SAFE, LEGAL ABORTION
IN NEW YORK
SCHEDULED IMMEDIATELY
(212) TR 7-8562
CERTIFIED ABORTION REFERRAL
All Inquiries Confidential

J. C. Statistics —

No.	Player	G	FGM-FGA	Pct.	FTM-FTA	Pct.	Rebs.	PF	Ast's.	Tot. Pts.	Avg.
40	Harvey,	17	71-148	47.9	45-77	58.5	170	63	46	185	10.9
44	Smith,	16	162-283	57.3	76-125	60.6	150	53	32	400	25.0
20	McCarthy,	17	91-232	39.2	25-39	64.2	37	36	74	207	12.2
23	Wentz, Le	17	63-147	42.8	24-36	66.7	31	52	49	149	8.8
42	Rinaldi,	17	105-218	48.3	47-70	67.2	201	52	23	257	14.9
10	Griffin,	16	32- 70	45.8	12-31	38.8	18	20	50	81	5.1
12	Wentz, La	10	7- 13	18.6	3-6	50.0	3	9	0	17	1.7
25	Straley,	11	10- 42	23.6	12-17	70.8	40	27	5	32	2.9
24	Valasek,	15	29- 65	44.6	18-27	66.7	73	40	21	76	5.1
24	Black,	9	4- 12	33.3	4-4	100.	6	1	2	12	1.3
TEAM TOTALS:
Juniata		17	576-1278	45.1	273-440	62.2	724	344	298	1425	83.8
Opponents		17	508-1271	39.8	323-492	65.6	781	293	149	1336	78.5

The Renaissance
Student Weekly at Juniata College
Huntingdon, Pa.
FOUNDED APRIL 24, 1970
Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891 and "The Juniatian," established November 1924

DAN HARRIGER, Editor
JANET MASON, copy & proof editor
WILL SCARLETT, circulation
WILLIAM DAVID, photography editor
MARTHA RINKER, news & feature editor
JODI SCHAUTZ, layout editor
BILL GASPER, sports editor
PAT MANNERS, secretary

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Carl Koval, Barbara Duncan, Barbara Kulonich, Joan Thompson, Glenn Dean, Mary Ann Repman, Nancy Agnew, Dan Herzog, Kevin Bowers

The RENAISSANCE, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000
Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVII No. 10
February 26, 1971

RENAISSANCE

Vol. XLVII No. 11 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | March 5, 1971

Appointment For Norris

Dr. John N. Stauffer, president of Juniata College, has announced the appointment of Dr. Wilfred G. Norris as dean of academic affairs for the college.

Dr. Norris, professor and chairman of Juniata's Department of Physics, accepted an appointment last September as interim academic dean while a nationwide search was being conducted for a permanent replacement for Dr. Donald M. Rockwell, who resigned as dean at the end of the academic year.

In his announcement Dr. Stauffer explained that a wide, yearlong search for a new dean had produced 130 names of nominees and applicants for the deanship. A student-faculty advisory committee that examined all applications with Dr. Stauffer concluded unanimously that Dr. Norris was "the best man available."

Dr. Stauffer noted that the 38 year-old dean has in many ways "proved himself an able, energetic and imaginative leader."

He described as Norris's chief qualifications for the job such attributes as "a good mind, scholarly attainment, dedication to liberal learning and to Juniata College, experience as a teacher, broad cultural and intellectual interests, sympathetic concern for all academic departments and for balance in the Juniata curriculum, and the courage of his convictions."

Dr. Wilfred G. Norris

In addition to having served with distinction as Task Force chairman and head of the physics department at Juniata, Dr. Norris has served in leadership, roles on Juniata faculty and campus-wide committees.

In 1966-67 he was president of the Central Pennsylvania Section of the American Association of Physics Teachers.

A native of Sweden and a graduate of Juniata College, Dr. Norris has led a distinguished academic career. Following his graduation in 1954 "With Highest Honors," he became a Fulbright Scholar at the University of Tubingen, West Germany. He later held the General Electric Fellowship in chemistry at Harvard Graduate School of the Arts and Sciences, as well as teaching fellowships in 1957 and 1958.

He joined the Juniata College faculty in 1958, and received his Ph.D. from Harvard in 1963. In 1964 he was named chairman of Juniata's physics department, and in 1966 became the first William I. and Zella B. Book Professor of Physics, a chair which he still holds.

Juniata College
in association with Music Productions of Boston
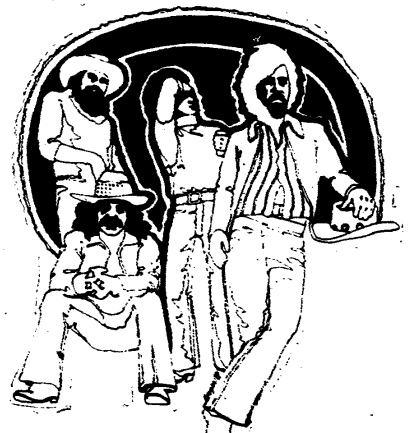
Presents
In Concert
The Byrds
& THE FLYING BURRITO BROTHERS



Memorial Gymnasium, Juniata College
Friday/ March 12/ 8:00 P.M.
Tickets/ $4.00 Advance/ $5.00 At The Door

Letters Policy

Letters to the editor should be typed and double-spaced and should be submitted no later than 1:30 p.m. Monday. The editors reserve the right to print only non-libelous and responsible letters submitted to The Renaissance. All letters must be signed and the staff reserves the right to publish all full signatures unless the writer can supply valid reasons for omitting his name.

Ya Gotta Come !

Esso Awards Grant

Juniata College has received a $2,500 Presidential Contingency from the Esso Education Foundation.

According to Dr. John N Stauffer the grant is to be used to underwrite the cost of unbudgeted items or activities that will further the college's institutional objectives.

In a letter of acknowledgement to the Foundation, Dr. Stauffer wrote, "It is particularly valuable to have funds which can be used to encourage creativity in our educational program and to meet unusual opportunities which present themselves as we work with students and faculty throughout the year."

More than 180 private institutions in the U.S. have received similar grants totaling $505,000 from the Foundation for the 1970-71 academic year.

Practically, Nothing
National Defense

by Scott Leedy

Since civilized man has created his security through the active categorization of the dragons which serve as potential threats to his placidity, he has subsequently endeavored to plan and execute several undertakings (the least of which is strikingly complex and extravagant in both its design and its function) to preserve the perfectness of his comfort. Therefore, in the spirit of status-quo maintainance, he has taken many pains in devising a system of preparedness — a premeditated mode of procedures designed as appropriate measures of retaliation in response to possible occurrences of all types. It is paramount to the preservation of security that there be a standing force maintained and perpetually ready to be activated to efficiently and effectively deal with any and all threats of both personal and national distress. In fact, it seems to be the general concensus that the very nature of higher learning and the "cultivation of the human intellect" is wholly dependent upon security. For, it is only security which frees man from the necessary burdens on his capacities and performances of self-preservation. When one is preoccupied with merely staying alive, he is unlikely to have either the time or the design to exercise his cognitive processes by entertaining concerns of intellectual consequence.

In light of that observation, then, would it be germane to inquire into the possibility that those persons who are vocationally or intensely preoccupiedly devoted to the concerns of survival are otherwise devoid of significant intellectual development? Are professional defenders otherwise aesthetically, morally, and rationally sterile? This author does not pretend to know the answer to this inquiry (nor is he even certain he fully understands the question!), however, what follows is the fictitious account of a small episode which may bear some pertinence upon this issue:

Not long ago I posed a hypothetical question in one of my writings which, by means totally unknown to me, attracted the attention of certain members of a department of defense. The very nature of the question soon illicited top priority from all the thousands of subordinate and affiliate bodies within the bureau-cratic web of the department's superstructure. In an aside to a rather jumbled piece of chicanery I asked what would be the consequences of an alien power's intrusion into our earthly domain for the purpose of subjecting the entire earth to a dreadful ray which would make everything that is presently round, red. That is to say, what would happen if everything that is presently round became red instead of round?

The department immediately recognized the weight (heavy) of this concern and realized with perfect horror that it would be totally unprepared to meet decisively with such a dilemma. So it wasted no time in enlisting the efforts of its most accomplished expertise toward preparing systems of prevention and retaliation in the case of such an event. As a result, countless millions were appropriated for subsidation of research and development of plans and materials, and committees were formed to conduct hearings — all parts of an intense cooperative national effort to insure security.

In the fields of science the problem was approached from every discipline. Physicists labored on the physical nature of redness as a property. Such a redness, if suddenly substituted for roundness would be an entirely new phenomenon, for it would not be dependent upon a specific wavelength of light, or any light, for that matter. Thus, they pondered how to deal with a redness that could be seen in the dark. And they also wondered if all round objects would become the same if they became red instead of round. Surely, a ball would no longer be a ball if it were red instead of round. What would it be? Would it roll? Could it bounce?

Ballistics experts set at work designing a shotgun which would propell red shot pellets from a long, red barrel.

Biologists directed research to conclude if man would be able to taste a red pill. Would it taste red? Would it feel red?

Ecologists set to work to determine the effects of large amounts of redness upon the environment and proposed establishing maximal levels of red tolerance and creating government agencies to insure strict enforcement of the new legislature.

Not only were physical scientists mobilized in the research, but also were men of the social sciences and the arts. Literary scholars pondered the impact which would be most certainly felt in their field if, suddenly, they were confronted with King Arthur and his knights of the red table. And actors froze at the thought of having to perform in a theater in the red.

Semanticists labored over the very concept of redness. How does one define such a theory?

Philosophers debated feverishly to justify the possibility of substituting a notion such as redness for one as tangeable as roundness.

Psychologists were taken to devising tests to reveal how well-redded a person's character might be.

(It was even reported that several of the large cattle ranchers in the

Cont'd on page 2

Basketball Comments —

by Bill Gasper

By the time this reaches the reader, the MAC playoffs will have come and gone, and the possibility does not exist that the Juniata Indians have pulled off a major upset and swept through to the championship. Juniata never made it to the playoffs. Let us look at the reasons why as we see them.

All the praise we could give to those four senior starters would be insufficient. The standing ovation of the crowd at the York game shows that their play on behalf of the Juniata basketball program has been appreciated. Even an individual who has not seen too much basketball can notice the talents of Smith, Harvey, McCarthy, and Lee Wentz, the four seniors, and Tom Rinaldi around whom the Indians must rebuild next season. The talent was there, but all too often their efforts appeared flat and uninspired.

Now to search for a scapegoat. The refereeing at the home games alone has been atrocious and rash. They were not biased against either team, equally bad for both squads. It would be simple to place the blame solely on the shoulders of the referees, yet there is a deeper and a more important causation behind Juniata's up and down season. The referees are just an alibi source which people look to when things are going wrong.

Another motive might be the recent arrival of Coach Swinderman and the team's difficulty in adjusting to his coaching techniques. With the talent available, it should not take a great deal of effort to coach them. An example of this is Fordham where a new coach turned around the basketball program after a poor season in 1969-70. Juniata did not need a renovator, just a strong hand to continue and prolong their successful program. Certainly, Coach Swinderman can not be compared to Coach Trimmer in emotionalism and showmanship; but, it is possible that this is what the team needed to urge them on to the heights which they have the ability to attain.

Here, let us look at the Susquehanna game which was Juniata's sole defeat on their home boards. Juniata's talent was superior to the opposition; it does not take an expert basketball observor to notice that fact. Still, Juniata came out and only flashed the brilliance that they are capable of, while Susquehanna played a controlled, patterned game and never lost their nerve. . Their coach guided that team throughout and in our eyes, vastly outcoached Juniata's mentor. He was constantly off the bench, battling and scrapping for his team all the way. The JC fans did not enjoy his actions, but the final story was the score. The blame is not entirely to be levelled at Coach Swinderman; Smith has been sick, seniors who have reached goals before are often difficult to motivate, his bench is not deep. Still, in the close games, the coach is often the difference and too often the Indians have come out on the short end.

The basketball season has been a successful one, but also a disappointment. To those four seniors goes a large pat on the back and a thank you for a job well done. We had hoped that in the MAC's Juniata would be able to snap out of it and finally put together the game they are capable of. Juniata should look deeper into their basketball program.

National Sports

Sports Scene

by Bill Gasper

Our choices at this desk: UCLA to sweep through to another consecutive NCAA basketball crown, Milwaukee to overtake the Knicks, and the Boston Bruins to make it two Stanley Cups in a row. . . A woman applied for an Idaho State football staff post. She was rejected. . . .At a recent Indiana Pacer ABA contest, a fan was accidentally shot when an off-duty policeman's gun discharged, when it struck the floor. The policeman jumped up during some exciting action and the gun slipped to the floor. . . .These are the sights for the NCAA basketball championship for the next few years. (Host school in parenthesies) 1971 — Huston Astrodome (Houston); 1972 — LA Sports Arena (USC); 1973 — St. Louis Arena (St. Louis U); 1974 — Greensboro Coliseum (North Carolina); This year's regionals are at North Carolina State, Georgia, Wichita State, and Utah. . . LSU won the Chevrolet sponsored TV band contest. . . .The Michigan-Ohio State football game drew 52 per cent of the television audience. . . .

The Renaissance

Student Weekly at Juniata College
Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED APRIL 24, 1970

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891 and "The Juniatian," established November 1924

DAN HARRIGER, Editor
JANET MASON, copy & proof editor
WILL SCARLETT, circulation
BRUCE BORDNER, Photography editor
MARTHA RINKER, news & feature editor
JODI SCHAUTZ, layout editor
BILL GASPER, sports editor
PAT MANNERS, secretary

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Carl Koval, Barbara Duncan, Barbara Kuisnich, Joan Thompson, Glenn Dean, Mary Ann Repman, Nancy Agnew, Dan Herzog, Kevin Bowers

The RENAISSANCE, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000
Subscription $4.00 per year

Vol. XLVII No. 11
March 5, 1971

FREE INFORMATION

LOW COST, SAFE, LEGAL

ABORTION

IN NEW YORK

SCHEDULED IMMEDIATELY
(212) TR 7-8562

CERTIFIED ABORTION REFERRAL

All Inquiries Confidential

Environmental Action

On Feb. 25, Mrs. Judy Johnsrud, a speaker sponsored by the Juniata Environmental Action Committee, spoke at Juniata on the topic of "The Peaceful Atom and the Ecosystem." She told about some of the dangers and potential dangers of pollution from atomic power. Several of the more startling things she cited were a study by Dr. Ernest Sternglass that indicated an increase in the infant mortality rate in areas near atomic power plants, that Dow Chemical Company had admitted to storing plutonium on a plant site in open barrels, and that an atomic waste storage unit had been planned to be built on a fault line in an earthquake area. (The plan has been abandoned.)

Mrs. Johnsrud suggested that people concerned about pollution from atomic power should write to Governor Milton Shapp (of Pa.) asking that he put a moratorium on the use and development of atomic power until Dr. Sternglass's study has been refuted.

If you wish to find out more about the area of atomic pollution contact Mary McCubbin, P.O. Box 1495.

Projects toward the goal of planting the baly eroding bank near the East Houses are slowly proceeding. Anyone interested in working toward the eventual planting of the bank please contact Doug Marschka, P.O. Box 1753 or Cathy Hess, P.O. Box 401.

A bake sale in Ellis Hall and a poster contest are two money raising projects for the purpose of raising money for the planting of the bank that are planned for the near future. Details on these projects will be announced as soon as the plans become definite.

PEACE, WAR AND THE CHRISTIAN CONSCIENCE
By Joseph Fahey

A 24-page booklet that traces Christianity's efforts, through 2,000 years, to limit the savagery of war. A balanced, factual picture of positions ranging from all-out approval (the Crusades), through limited war (the just-war theory), to Christian pacifism.
"Peace, War and the Christian Conscience" concludes with concrete steps the average individual can take to promote "peace on earth."
In one year, over 600,000 copies in circulation. Single copies are available free from—

Peace Booklet
The Christophers
Department SC
12 East 48th Street
New York, N.Y. 10017

National Defense

Cont'd from page 1

Midwest were advertising for cowhands to aid in their annual cattle reups).

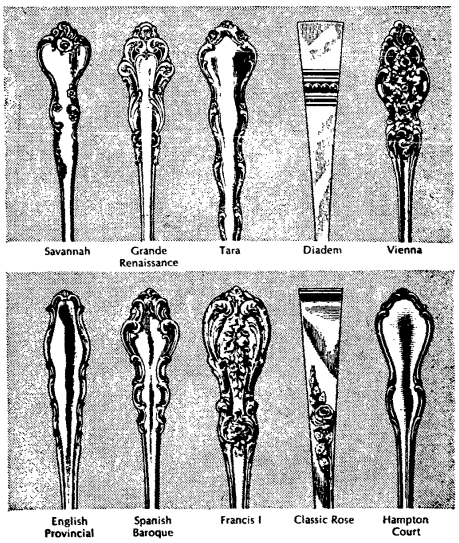
After many months of unrewarded inquests and research, and millions of tax dollars put to fruitless expenditure, the department heirarchy (in one of their many executive caucasses) was forced to admit that they were completely stymied by the concept. And, it was then that one senior bureaucrat came upon the notion of asking the author for aid in approaching the problem ("after all," he probably thought, "the inventor just might have some insight of consequence into his very own brainchild.") Although a notion of such basic simplicity did seem quite absurd (and, normally, out of the question) to a department accustomed to approaching problems in a sophisticated and complex fashion, their lack of productivity on a notion of such immediacy allowed them to abandon their traditional modes of pursuit in favor of any notion which held hopes of a simple, uninvolved, inexpensive solution.

Thus it was that a magnificent-looking general came to the door of my apartment one day and stood before me with hat in hand and a brief case which bore the exotic label, TOP SECRET. He managed to maintain the pride in himself which was obviously his driving force as he explained the predicament of his department to me. And he looked not humble as he asked for my help. I almost found myself succumbing to the stalwart dignity of that shining soldier who was at the mercy of a somewhat simple question. Nobody could tell him what to do.

I am certainly not effective in pondering solutions to matters of such proportion, and I was at a total loss for devising a suitable plan of defense; so, I did the only thing I knew to deal with the problem. I agreed to withdraw my original question, recall all written copies in which it had appeared, and testify before the department high officials that my question had never existed, and that, to the best of my knowledge, the situation could never arise anyway.

It has since been time enough for the department to officially forget the issue and all the concern it had created. And now the department is again functioning smoothly and is confident in its readiness.

And I have (reluctantly) consented to give up hunting dragons (at least, for the time being).



We have your favorite sterling pattern . . . as featured in Reed & Barton's

SILVER OPINION COMPETITION

See the complete Reed & Barton collection as well as those of other famed silversmiths at

Black's Jewelry Store
421 Penn Street — Huntingdon

OPPORTUNITY, sparetime, addressing envelopes and circulars! Make $27.00 per thousand. Handwritten or typed, in your home. Send just $2. for INSTRUCTIONS and a LIST OF FIRMS USING ADDRESSERS. Satisfaction Guaranteed! B&V ENTERPRISES, Dept. 2-112, P.O. Box 398, Pearblossom, Calif. 93553.

RENAISSANCE

VOL. XLVII NO. 12 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | APRIL 9, 1971

New Leaders Elected

Two prominent industrialists have been named to leadership roles in the $2.5-million second phase of Juniata College's "Margin of Difference" development program.

Mr. Cecil E. Loomis, chairman and chief executive officer of the Columbia Gas System, Inc., will serve as chairman of the corporate gifts committee in the campaign, while Mr. Lester M. Rosenberger, president of the National Milling and Chemical Company, will head the foundation gifts committee in the drive.

Both men are trustees of the college, Mr. Loomis having been so named in 1967, and Mr. Rosenberger having served since 1952 on the college board.

A native of Columbus, Ohio, Mr. Loomis became a professional engineer and joined the Columbia Gas System in 1928. He was elected senior vice president and a director of the company in 1956, president in 1960, and vice chairman of the board and chief executive officer in 1961.

He has also served as president in 1960, and vice chairman of the bbard and chief executive officer in 1961.

He has also served as president of the Columbia Hydrocarbon Corp., one of Columbia's subsidiaries, and still serves as a director of that firm.

Mr. Loomis was named in 1968 as co-chairman of the first phase in Juniata's "Margin of Difference" program.

Mr. Rosenberger, a graduate of Philadelphia Textile Institute, resides in Narberth, Pa., near Philadelphia. A son, W. Clemens, is a 1954 graduate of Juniata.

The $2,500,000 campaign is the second phase of Juniata's long-range development program aimed at raising $10.0 million by the college's centennial year, 1976. Alumni and trustee volunteers are actively the support of philanthropic and corporate foundations, business organizations, special friends and benefactors.

Funds raised in this manner will be earmarked for support of teaching, financial assistance for students, and development of the academic program at the 94 year-old independent, coeducational liberal arts institution, ·cording to Dr. John N. Stauffer, college president.

In announcing the appointments of Loomis and Rosenberger to the leadership posts, Dr. Stauffer noted that to date more than $960,000 has been raised toward the $2.5-m llion goal in the Phase II campaign.

The campaign seeks the support of philanthropic and corporate foundations, business organizations, special friends and benefactors.

Assisting Mr. Rosenberger as members of the foundation gifts comm ttee will be: Robert C Baker, Washington, D.C., president, American Security & Trust Co.; Dr. Calvert N. Ellis, Huntingdon, Pa., president emeritus, Juniata College; Denton B. Emmert, Dearborn, Michigan, director, Personnel & Organization Staff, Ford Motor Company; Benn F. Goodrich, St. Marys, Pa., controller, Stackpole Carbon Company; Warren L. Newcomer, Lititz, Pa., president, Wilbur Chocolate Company; Klare S. Sunderland, Lemoyne, Pa., president, Sunderland Chevrolet Company; and Ronald W. Wertz, Pittsburgh, Pa., executive director, The Hillman Foundation, Inc.

Serving as members of the corporate gifts committee with Mr. Loomis will be: Dr. Harry L. Baird, Hanover, N.J., director, Drug Regulatory Affairs, Sandoz Pharmaceuticals; John H. Biddle, Huntingdon, Pa., president of Joseph F. Biddle Publishing Co.; Charles C. Ellis, New York City, executive vice president, Irving Trust Company; Generald F. Hartzel, Vernfield, Pa., president, Nyce Manufacturing Co., Inc.; Dr. John R. E. Hoover, Philadelphia, Pa., associate director, Chemistry Research-Microbiology, Smith, Kline and French; Dr. Thomas R. Miller, New York City, vice president, Union Carbide Corporation; and Donaid G. Everhart, Huntingdon, Pa., president, Reeves Parvin & Company.

Common Cause — SST

A showdown is coming soon on the proposed supersonic transport plane SST. It is a commercial aircraft of no importance to national defense which will be largely financed by the taxpayers. Local and national members of Common Cause, John W. Gardner's Citizen lobby, have taken a position opposing further public appropriations for this project. Why?

What are the Costs? These are the facts. Boeing Co. is under contract to the Government to develop and test two proto-types of the SST. General Electric Co. is the contractor for the plane's engines. The Government has agreed to pay 90 per cent of their costs—a subsidy now estimated as $1.34 billion and expected to increase.

From $750 to $800 million in public money has already been spent by these companies trying to develop a feasible supersonic commercial transport. (SST)

If the plane eventually goes into production, each SST will cost $40 to $50 million, compared to $19 to $22 million for the giant Boeing 747, which can carry many more passengers.

The Government says it will be paid back from the royalties on eventual sales of SSTs—seven or eight years from now. The fact of the Government's very large subsidy for the plane indicates it is not a sound economic investment.

Of further interest to the pennsylvania taxpayer is the information that Penna. is one of 44 States that stand to lose money if Congress votes to continue with this project. Based on the state's percentage of

Cont'd on page 2

Center Board

JC's First Soap Box Derby

by Barbara M. Kulenich

A Soap Box Derby will be sponsored by the Center Board on April 25, 1971.

The prizes will be $100 for first place, $50 for second, and $25 for third.

The rules are as follows:

1. Open to Juniata students only.
2. Each entrant must register by April 22, 1971, at 5:00 p.m.
3. Vehicles must be entirely built by students, with the exception of the wheels and axles.
4. Vehicles must be equipped with a steering mechanism and a reliable braking system (other than dragging shoe leather).
5. Propulsion of the vehicle will be by down hill rolling only. When a driver touchs the ground or is given assistance in any way during a heat, he is eliminated from that heat.
6. All vehicles must have at least three wheels on the ground.
7. The course will consist of a starting slope and a 100 yard stretch to the finish line. The first vehicle's front wheels to the finish will determine the winner of each heat.
8. Each contestant will be allowed three (3) trial runs down the course.
9. Failure to show up for the start of your heat within 10 minutes after your heat has been announced, will result in elimination from that heat.
10. During a heat, vehicles or drivers are not allowed to touch one another or obstruct the path of the other vehicle. If contact or obstruction should occur, the vehicle and driver causing the obstruction or contact will be eliminated from that heat and the other vehicle will automatically be declared the winner of that heat.
11. In the case where both vehicles are eliminated from a heat, there will be a reheat. If in the reheat they both fail to finish, they both will be eliminated from the derby.
12. False starts will result in a restart with no penalty to either driver. False starts will be determined by the officials.
13. Each driver must have at least one (1) person in his pit crew to assist in getting the vehicle in the start position.
14. All drivers must be equipped with approved crash helments.
15. Each driver and vehicle must clearly indicate the registration number given at the time of registration.
16. All vehicles must undergo an inspection by the judges on April 24. Time to be announced.
17. Winners will be determined by a double elimination tournament running two vehicles at a time to determine the winner of each heat.
18. Decision of the officials is final.

Registration blanks containing spaces for entrant's name, pit crew, and registration number are available at Ellis Hall Information Desk.

Remember those dates:

1. Registration by April 22, 1971 at 5:00 p.m.
2. Inspection on April 24, 1971. Time to be announced.
3. Race on April 25, 1971.

Zero Population Growth

We have a lot to do in the next few years if man is to survive. The key problem is overpopulation.

In order to live, we have to obtain certain things from the Earth. In order to have meaningful, happy lives, we have to preserve the quality of our enviroment. We have already suffered irretrivable losses. No matter what we do now, no matter how wise we are, there will be great future losses.

The only long-range solution is population stability.

ECOLOGY

Ecology is a field that has to do with the relationships betweeen living things and their environment.

An ecological point of view is a new way of looking at the world, with man inseparable from his surroundings. This way does not come easily to us, for throughout most of western civilization the emphasis has been on man against nature. This old way of looking at things no longer works. Our past mistakes have caught up with us.

A new age has come and our survival depends upon creating a balanced ecological system for ourselves on the Earth.

SOME POPULATION-RELATED PROBLEMS

POLLUTION:
Air: smog, noise, fallout
Water: sewage, thermal, industrial
Land: garbage, litter, junkyards, mining, roads
Biological Systems: pesticides, bio-active chemicals, radioactivity CROWDING:
Tension
Indifference-cheapening of life
Jams-traffic, airways
Blight-slums
Crime
Congested parks
SHORTAGES:
Minerals
Energy-oil, gas, coal, uranium
Water
Land— open space, forests, agriculture, recreation FACILITIES:
Food
Housing
Schools-higher education
Hospitals—medical care
Services—fire, police, courts
Cultural
Transportation—highways, mass transit, airports

Cont'd on page 5

Practically, Nothing

by Scott Leedy

L. A. Beeghly Library (not to be of the world-famous Beechly Library) is dimly illuminated. It may seem odd that it took me over 2½ years as a student here to make that startling observation; but I just recently realized the fact. One night last week, I happened to walk out of the library at 10:30 and I was amazed at how bright, by contrast to the inside, the night seemed, being lit by a full moon and thousands of bright stars. I had to squint my eyes before my sight adjusted to the outside. However, I am not at all complaining or criticizing. After much individual thought and discussion with key janitors and administrators, I am convinced that the present lighting policy is rationally the best, rather than being the result bureaucratic inefficiency or negligence.

One advantage to the present lighting pattern is its diversity. Of the 270 double fluorescent lights recessed in the upstairs ceiling, 151 double units are maintained unlighted (55.9%); and 77 of the 306 units on the ground floor are kept constantly dark (25.2%). (the light in the service elevator was disregarded in the counting because it could not be decided to which floor to credit it; and, besides, when it is turned on, the elevator doors are usually closed, so that light is of little value to the library patrons.) However, the sporadic and irregular array of lighted units randomly beaming down from the quiet dusk of the surrounding inoperative units, reminds one of divine design such as that which dotted the nocturnal heavens with distant stellar jewelry. It is much more aesthetically appealing than an otherwise rigidly-structured, mathematically-concise, monotonous pattern of formulated placement. Add to this the soft glowing beads of blue which dot the mellow walls at fire extinguisher placements and one can

Cont'd on page 2

WJC—620 AM

Sunday
7:00—Schuldiner
10:00—McCubbin
1:00—Cantwell
4:00—Hart
7:00—Hopper
10:00—Lenharr
1:00—Sign-off
Monday
6:30—Rosenberg
8:00—Magrath
10:00—Timebrook
12:00—McQueen
2:00—Huber
4:00—Metz
5:00—Goss
7:00—Pote
10:00—Hueglin
1:00—Sign-off
Tuesday
6:30—Kent
9:30—Smith
11:00—Magrath
1:00—Winther & Willie
2:00—Carbaugh
4:00—Wise
7:00—Kotz
10:00—Hanson
1:00—Sign-off
Wednesday
6:30—Heberling
9:00—Lewis until 11:30
12:00—Morgan
3:00—Kotz
5:00—Goss
7:00—Elder
10:00—Billingsley
1:00—Sign-off
Thursday
6:30—Gray until 8:30
10:00—DeMarrio
1:00—Irwin
3:00—Griffith & Corry
4:00—Moyer
7:00—Brelsford & Nivinski
10:00—Rosenberg
1:00—Sign-off
Friday
6:30—Kampmeier
9:00—Huber until 10:00
12:30—Lee
2:00—Iacobucci & Dean
5:00—Bagshaw
7:00—Taylor
10:00—Noonan
1:00—Sign-off
Saturday
7:00—Hopper
10:00—Shumaker until 12:00
1:00—Taylor
4:00—Tiedemann
7:00—Lammey
10:00—Kampmeier
1:00—Sign-off

Alumni Council

The Alumni Council of Juniata College has passed a resolution voicing support of college alumni for the establishment of a half-million dollar endowment for four professorships.

Expressed as a testimonial to Juniata's "dedicated and unselfish teaching faculty," the resolution was presented by Lititz insurance executive Henry H. Gibbel, vice president of the alumni governing body which met Saturday in Ellis Hall, the college center.

On behalf of the council members present and of more than 5,000 Juniata alumni, Gibbel pledged "wholehearted individual and collective support" to the college's efforts to match a $250,000 grant given last year by the Charles A. Dana Foundation.

As chairman of the Dana Matching Gift committee for the second phase of Juniata's "Margin of Difference" development program, Gibbel reported that more than $43,000 has already been committed toward the quarter-million dollar matching goal.

The Dana grant provided the initial thrust for the establishment of the four professorial chairs, which will be maintaind by income from the endowment produced when the ultimate goal is reached, Gibbel explained.

In other business Saturday, the Alumni Council heard reports from members of the college faculty and administration regarding the appointment of Dr. Wilfred G. Norris as academic dean, the implementation of a new curriculum next fall, a progress report on college admissions, the April tour of the Juniata Concert Choir, plans for the publication of a 1971 alumni directory, and plans for the 1971 alumni weekend in May.

Practically, Nothing

Cont'd from page 1

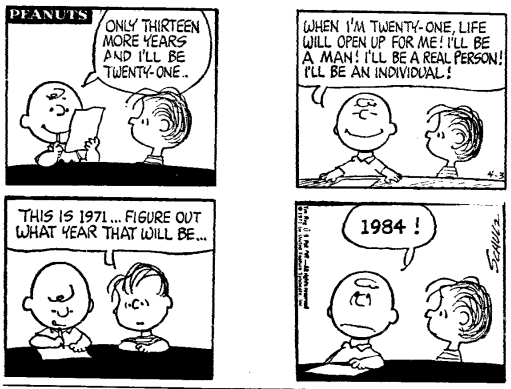
envisage an atmosphere indeed conducive to phrenology, soothsaying, seances, or astrology.

Another advantage to the present lighting plan is that it provides many places for withdrawn, maladjusted persons to seclude themselves amidst the darkness and harbor all their inseurities within the accomodating, cave-like atmosphere. For most of the 1,824 linear feet of non-operational lighting units (comprising 39.6% of the total amount of linear lighting on bothfloors) is situated so strategically that they make functional use of the many rows of shelves to cast deep shadows on the numerous study tables placed along the walls and in the corners. And, if one desires additional light at night, he needs only to open the curtains at the windows (if he can avoid being redressed for violating the library's "hands off the fixtures" policy) to let in light from a nearby streetlight. Or, if traffic is unusually heavy, he might take advantage of the rhythmic flashing of passing automobile headlights. Also, if astrological conditions are favorable, and if weather permits, additional light may be enjoyed from the moon or brilliant constellations. The Summer months are particularly accomodating for these purposes, since, then, the days are considerably longer.

It should also be mentioned that those who argue that the lack of detectable lighting between the rows of bookshelves and within the depths of the library's corners is a threat to personal safety actually lack a sound basis for their qualms. For, as was recently reported by the local police chief's annual State of the Campus Address, there has been a below-average number of criminal incidences committed in the darkness of those shadowy regions. In fact, the only known attempted mugging was inadvertantly foiled by a library assistant who was reshelving books in the 930-to-946.71 section. And a coroner's report officially established the cause of death of that elderly man whose body was recently found in the Philosophy section as being a heart attack and not murder or eye-strain.

A committee of administrative status has recently completed a very thorough investigation into the possibilities of improving lighting conditions in the library for those fickle nit-pickers who persistantly harp and bicker, insisting that they need light by which to which to read. The committee's report contains a number of enlightening solutions to the problem —all of which are now under official executive consideration. One suggestion is to sell long-life flashlights at the college bookstore to library patrons for aiding night reading in the library (battery-operated lighting is a necessity since there are no electrical outlets at the study desks). In conjunction to this idea was a proposal to install coin-operated battery rechargers at strategic locations in the library restrooms and the periodical sections. However, opposition to this proposal stems from the notion that the restroom rechargers might be put to misuse. It has been definitely decided that the use of candles and cigarette lighters as sources of lighting will be strictly prohibited, since many of the volumes in the library are ancient and are, therefore, highly flammable. Another of the committee's suggestions includes restocking the library with volumes containing texts printed with incandescent ink so the print can be read in both the presence and the absence of visible light. This idea met with the sound opposition of the observation that a library stocked with thousands of volumes of brightly glowing books would give the appearance at night of being on fire — a condition unsafe to exist in that a real fire would be undetectable until it had progressed to a raging inferno. The final suggestion by the committee was a proposal to move Juniata College (and, consequently, L. A. Beeghly Library) to Anchorage, Alaska, and devise a 6-month calendar year. Of the three proposals made by the committee, this last one seems to have gained the favor of the administration. The major impediment appears to be the formality of finding a suitable locaton for replacement of the campus near a small rive with an adjacent cliff formation. In fact, a team of freshman Geology majors has been dispatched recently to take a college station wagon and a year's supply of peanut butter-and-jelly sandwiches to Alaska to locate just a spot. They are to return by May 10 of next year and report their findings to the board of trustees.

In the meantime, I would like to offer one more proposal for alleviation of the problem to be considered by the administration. I would hope they are not offended by its basic simplicity and its lack of an officially-sponsered origin. Might I suggest merely replacing the burned-out lights with new ones?



Enjoyment, Excitement, and Rivalry

by David C. Linton

If all Juniata students enjoy competition, then it follows that they all enjoy All Class Night. It seems that this proposition is correct. On the evening of March 13, at Oller Auditorium at Juniata's 34th annual All Class Night, there was a large audience and vigorous competition among the four classes for the coveted trophy denoting victory.

After an introduction by the general chairman for All Class Night, Miss Sue Schroeder, one saw the senior class play, Cuma's Calamity or Tumbling Tradition. This play told of a young woman's quest for, and failure to find, happiness. Cuma, the young woman, played by Don Hockman. However, Cuma was engaged, not because of love but, because of Japanese tradition. Cuma really loved a young American army officer, Lt. William Makum, played by Mr. Harvey Wason. Lt. Makum, alas, was going to be sent back to the United States, and he would have to part with Cuma. Cuma said that that didn't matter and that she would come back to America with him.

Cont'd to page 6

Abortion Assistance

New York City (March 3, 1971) The Council on Abortion Research & Education has established a fund to provide financial assistance to women seeking legal abortions, it was announced to women seeking legal abortions, it was announced by Richard Roman, executive director.

The amount of financial aid granted by the Council will be determined by the economic circumstances of the woman requesting such assistance. Initially, the Council will provide partial /up to $50 per woman) rather than total financial assistance so that as many women as possible may be helped by the fund. The Council plans to increase the amount of financial aid available to each woman as more funds become available.

According to Mr. Roman, the fund will enable more college students and economically disadvantaged women to obtain legal abortions performed by board certified gynecologists under quality medical care conditions. The fund was set up by the Council as part of its overall program to provide information and assistance regarding legal abortion. The Council is a non-profit organization chartered under the laws of the State of New York.

Women seeking details about the fund or general information about legal abortions should call (212) 682-6856 or write to the Council on Abortion Research & Education at 312 Madison Avenue, N.Y. 10017.

For additional information, contact Richard Roman or Mrs. Tanya Rose.

Common Cause, con't'd

Cont'd from page 1

total U.S. income taxes paid by both individual and industry Penna. will contribute $94.9 million toward the initial phase of the project and stand to receive in potential contracts $13.7 million—a loss of $81.1 million dollars to the taxpayers of this state.

Proponents of the project face an uphill battle. The administration, Boeing, and GE, aided by other groups from California and Seattle will throw much time ann money into the fight for the SST. They argue its effect upon the economp, transportation, and the airline market. But above all, there will be two emotional arguments: We must remain number one in aviation; and we most save the jobs of SST workers.

Here are the claims for continoed federal subsidy of the SST, and the counter-arguments against it.

Need. The SST is essential in a growing world with a large consumer appetite for air transportation.

Reply: International travelers will be the prime benefiiiaries of the SST, for th Administration has agreed to prohibit its flight over populated areas. Other countries may do the same. The project, then, is an unfair subsidy; it takes money from the general taxpayers to benefit the wealthy or expense —account traveler. Most travelers would benefit more from reduced time in getting to and from airports than from the SST's shorter flight time.

Airlines have misgivings about the plane—its cost, range, payload, premium fare, and noise, plus the possibility it may be banned from airports around the world. "A lot of people care more about the quality of life and the

Cont'd to page 5

The Renaissance

Student Weekly at Juniata College

Huntingdon, Pa.

FOUNDED APRIL 24, 1970

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891 and "The Juniatian," established November 1924

DAN HARRIGER, Editor
JANET MASON, copy & proof editor
WILL SCARLETT, circulation
BRUCE BORDNER, Photography editor
MARTHA RINKER, news & feature editor
JODI SCHAUTZ, layout editor
BILL GASPER, sports editor
PAT MANNERS, secretary

REPORTERS AND ASSISTANTS: Carl Koval, Barbara Duncan, Barbara Kulenich, Joan Thompson, Glenn Dean, Mary Ann Repman, Nancy Agnew, Dan Herzog, Kevin Bowers

The RENAISSANCE, published weekly throughout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students at Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 2000
Subscription $4.00 per year

VOL. XLVII NO. 12
APRIL 9, 1971

Here And Gone, Was It Really Worth It?

Well, we had a pretty big concert Friday night. At least, it was a big concert from the standpoint of total cost ($9500 dollars) and total attendance (est. 3000). The promoter was satisfied and I am sure would be willing to return to Juniata for future concerts.

The question that runs through my mind is whether you, the students of Juniata, feel it was really worth it. Those of you who paid to get in are probably disturbed because so many others got in for free. Some of you stood in line for over two hours, many in the rain.

There was damage to the gymnasium, broken windows, and cigarette burns on the gym floor. People were pushed, punched, choked, had their hair pulled, were crushed and trampled trying to get through the doors.

The first group, "Manhattan Transfer", due to sound problems (they were never able to complete their sound check and so never had good balance till their last few songs) did not go over well. All in all, was it really worth the hassle that goes along with putting on a concert of this size or bigger? problems with any future concerts We will run into the same types of of this size.

Perhaps if I go back ovr the events of the evening you can decide for yourself whether it was worth it. At one o'clock in the afternoon the gym was all ready for the groups to arrive. The "Byrds" were in town and "Manhattan Transfer" was on the way. The major problem was that the sound system had not yet arrived. It was the Byrds' own sound system and they had insisted that that was the only system they would use. It wasn't until a little after seven o'clock that the sound truck did arrive. The groups refused to let us open the doors at the scheduled time (7:30) because the sound system wasn't set up and they wanted to do a sound check with the hall empty. They gave us a choice. We could open up the doors and let the people in, in which case the groups would leave without performing, or we could keep the doors closed until they did their sound check. We really didn't have a choice. Therefore, it wasn't until 8:30 that we could open the doors, and ven then, the sound check for "Manhattan Transfer" hadn't been completed to their satisfaction. However, the Byrds were satisfied at that point, and we felt we would have a show if we opened the doors at that time.

So we opened the doors and the angry crowd rushed in. I was never so scared in all my life. I was sure someone was going to get hurt. We tried to collect tickets but it was impossible. We had to stop the pushing before someone did get hurt, so the doors were thrown open. We couldn't even try to collect tickets. After about one thousand people came through the doors, the rush had slowed down enough so that we could check tickets.

A lot of people came in with tickets and started collecting tickets to take outside and hand out among the crowd. We didn't sell a whole lot of tickets at the door because of this.

Once the people got in, the concert came off fairly well, except for the sound balance problems that "Manhattan Transfer" had.

What happens now . . . I don't know. The promoter is willing to come back to do further concerts, but I wouldn't be surprised, nor would I blame anyone, if we were not allowed to use the gym for future concerts. To understand that put yourself in the place of the people that have to work in the gymnasium. A concert of that size with the amount of set up that is required disrupts the normal operation of the gym for at least three days. Not even considering the damage to the building, this would seem to be enough to say nix to future concerts.

Nor would I be surprised if there are many students who would prefer to avoid the hassle of a concert that size in the future, not only among those who worked to present this one, but also among those who merely attended the performance. Where do we go from here? Was it really worth it? . . .

by Sal Azzaro
and Will Brandau

CAN YOU BE INDIFFERENT?

photo by Brian Davies

The baby seal in the photo was one of 50,000 killed in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, one of over half a million seals clubbed, speared, shot, gaffed during the 1970 Canadian-Norwegian slaughter in the Atlantic.

Don't believe furriers who would persuade you that Friends of Animals has been "misleading" you, that any slaughter anywhere is done for the benefit of the seals.

I, Alice Herrington, testify that on March 21, 1970—the second day of the Canadian season on seals—I saw the same brutal massacre against which Friends of Animals, of which I am president, has been protesting for years.

As the bubble-domed helicopter flew low over the first day's kill, I saw mother seals nuzzling the skinless corpses of their babies. Standing ten feet away from the killers on the ice floes, twenty miles out in the Gulf, I saw baby seals, clubbed twice, raise their heads as they were sliced open. Other babies were battered as many as fourteen times while the mothers watched in terror and stress.

If You Are One Who Cannot Be Indifferent to the Suffering of Other Creatures

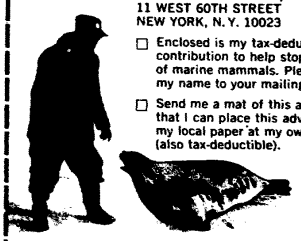
YOU CAN HELP

First—by refusing to garb yourself in the agony of another, by refusing to buy the skins of wildlife.

Second—by causing this advertisement to be inserted in your local newspaper. (A mat will be sent upon your request to Friends of Animals. See coupon.)

Third—by sending a tax-deductible contribution to Friends of Animals, Inc., a non-profit organization that intends to pound on the world's conscience until sentient men and women everywhere are made aware of the unnecessary cruelty and destruction being inflicted upon animals. Your contribution will be used to plead for those creatures who cannot speak for themselves but who dumbly implore your pity.

Friends of Animals, Inc.
11 WEST 60TH STREET
NEW YORK, N.Y. 10023



☐ Enclosed is my tax-deductible contribution to help stop the slaughter of marine mammals. Please add my name to your mailing list.

☐ Send me a mat of this advertisement so that I can place this advertisement in my local paper at my own expense (also tax-deductible).

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ STATE _____ ZIP _____

Minister to JC Students

The appointment of the Reverend Mr. M. Andrew Murry, of Portland, Ore., a campus minister at Juniata was announced today by president John N. Stauffer.

Mr. Murray, 28, has served since 1968 as pastor of the Peace Church of the Brethren in Portland. He will assume full-time duties on campus on Sept. 1, 1971, filling a position left vacant last summer by the Reverend Mr. Robert A. Faus, who is now at Wichita State.

Dr. Stauffer described the new minister as "one who is responsive to the needs and interests of this student generation," and added "it is a particular pleasure to brin to the campus a young man who is so committed and vital a person."

According to Dr. Charles W. Schoenherr, dean of student affairs, Mr. Murray had been interviewed by Juniata students and faculty last summer, and was offered the position at that time. Commitments in Oregon, however, prevented his accepting the offer until now, the dean explained.

The dean commended Mr. Murray on what he observed as "his willingness to explore new ways and new approaches to age-old problems and questions," and added that the entire college community would be looking forward to his arrival on campus in September.

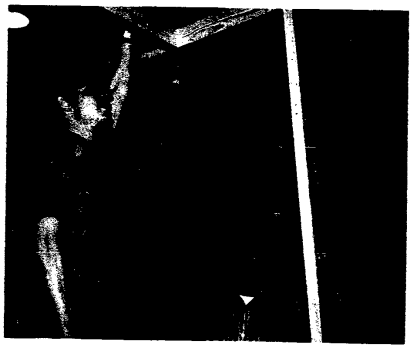
A native of Roanoke, Va., Mr. Murray earned his B.A. degree in sociology at Bridgewater College in 1964, and received his Master of Divinity degree in 1968 from Bethany Theological Seminary, where he was president of his class.

He has served congregations in Little River, Va., Palos Park, Ill., and Wenatchee, Wash. He has traveled extensively throughout the U.S. and Canada, and spent two summers touring Europe.

In other work, he has served as a youth counselor for an American Friends Service Committee program known as P.R.E.P., canvassed for the Martin Luther King drive in 1966-67 to "End Slums" in Chicago, and performed in a folk-singing trio in a number of television engagements.

Mr. Murray and his wife Terry have one child, and will reside on or near the campus next year.

The 34th All Class Night Was A Success ?



Working ,for a change

Class of '74 Comes In Last

Class chairman helps out

Class of '73 Takes third

Changing Richard's sign to Arthur's

Thunder Alley lends a hand

Yea, Juniata! Beat NotreDame!

15 all! 15 all!

Class of '72 Receives second

Seniors take five during rehearsal

Class of '71 Squeaks by for first

The Joyous Winners!

Common Cause contd
from page 2

nation's urgent economic and social needs than they do about breakfasting in London and New York at roughly the same time on the same day." (Washington Post.)

Prestige If the United States does not build the SST, other countries will corner the market. From being first in the world in commercial aviation, the United States would not just be second, it would run out of the ballpark.

Reply: No one is asking that America default her leadership in aviation. We have already proved that we can develop supersonic craft for defense purposes. We will still lead the world in sales of much more economical subersonic jets.

The Anglo-French SST (the Concorde) is in serious financial and technical difficulty. The Russian TU-144 is a marginal airplane technically and economically, unlikely to find many purchasers in the non-Communist world.

The U.S. could exert leadership by requesting a world convention to limit SST development until all environmental dangers of such craft no longer exist.

Jobs: President Nixon and other supporters claim that ending the SST would mean the loss of "at least 150,000 jobs."

Reply: Only about 10,000 people are working on the SST now — 4,800 at Boeing in Seattle and a little over 5,000 for sub-contractors in other parts of the country.

The 150,000 figure is an estimate for peak production (not development) which would not be reached for at last seven years (1978-1980 at best). Even then, only 50,000 would be directly employed on the SST. The other 100,000 would be auxiliary workers — restaurant cooks, truck drivers, cleaners, who would be hired in connection with any kind of large project.

The loss of any job hurts. But there are many other ways that the talents of SST workers can be used, notably in mass transit and the anti-pollution field. Government and private industry should cooperate in working out this conversion, for a prime test of the economy's managers is to find truly productive ways of employing the work force.

The cities and states, financially strapped, cannot provide all the services the public needs. But on grounds of economizing, President Nixon vetoes a Public Service Employment bill that would have financed 250,000 sorely needed jobs in public agencies. SST workers could easily qualify for these jobs if the program is enacted.

Environment. "According to the best scientific opinion available to the Government, the possibilities that SST operations might affect weather, temperature, or the surface environment adversely have been held to be 'very remote'." To be doubly sure, an Environmental Advisory Council will plan research "in any areas where doubts or uncertainties exist." (Wm Magruder, SST Director, Department of Transportation).

Reply: The President has refused to release a scientific advisory panel's report to his Science Adviser that reportedly was very critical of the SST. Opponents of the plan say the secret report labeled the SST 'an economic fiasco, an environmental disaster and a social outrage." They have brought suit under the Freedom of Information Act, asking that the report be made public.

PEACE, WAR AND THE CHRISTIAN CONSCIENCE

By Joseph Fahey

A 24-page booklet that traces Christianity's efforts, through 2,000 years, to limit the savagery of war. A balanced, factual picture of positions ranging from all-out approval (the Crusades), through limited war (the just-war theory), to Christian pacifism.

"Peace, War and the Christian Conscience" concludes with concrete steps the average individual can take to promote "peace on earth."

In one year, over 600,000 copies in circulation. Single copies are available free from—

Peace Booklet
The Christophers
Department SC
12 East 48th Street
New York, N.Y. 10017

The Government's Environmental Advisory Council upon which the Department of Transportation relies for impartial analysis, is composed entirely of Government employees and the chairman is an Assistant Secretary of Commerce. It can hardly be independent and objective.

In testimony before Congressional committees, scientists have raised frightening possibilities of the SST's offect on the earth's weather, on the ability of the upper atmosphere to protect us from the sun's radiation, on human and property damage from the plan's sonic boom and on its ground noise, which will be several times worse than that of the present jets. It does not require an SST prototype to explore these environmental effects. The same information could be obtained more quickly and at lss cost by conducting test with existing high altitude airplanes like the U-2 and SR-71 and from ground test of proto-type engines with noise suppressors.

Balance of Payments. The United States can help its balance of payments (selling aboad as much as it buys from abroad) by the sale of $10 billion worth of SSTs to other countries.

Reply: Leading economists, including top U.S. trade economist Professor Charles Kindleberger of MIT and key Nixon adviser, Professor Milton Friedman of the University of Chicago, reject this argument as a "red herring" (Friedman's phrase). Other countries will continue to buy U.S. commercial jets of subsonic speed and greater passenger-carrying capacity than the Concorde (if that plane is eventually marketed).

Wasted Money: President Nixon claims it would cost $277 million to terminate the SST contract.

Reply: The figure is debatable—the Administration has not provided detailed documentation of its figure. Opponents say $80 million is a likelier figure.

Even paying out $277 million, the nation would save $300 million now, and more in the future, by terminating the project. Moreover, the cost of certifying the safety and feasibility of the plane are estimatd at $600 million.

If development was carried to the production stage, the demand to recoup on the Government's investment would be even stronger than now. The argument then would be: Never mind the noise or pollution threat or the uncertain market for the plane, we must try to eet back some of the taxpayers' investment by promoting sales of the SST. This is compounding the folly.

To expand the market for the plans there would be pressure for overland flights. As Charles Lindbergh, an opponent of the SST says, "I do not accept as practical or lasting the idea that SSTs would be flown supersonically only over water."

Special Interest Opposition. Only the environmentalists, with their unproved alarms, and the conservationists opposed to economic progress are fighting the SST.

Reply: True in part, for these groups have led the lobbying fight against the SST. But they are not alone.

Besides Common Cause, the following groups that do not specialize in the environment are working against the SST: Consumer Federation of America, the Coalition on National Priorities, the National Council of Churches, National Federation of Social Service Employees, National Tax Action, Inc., National Taxpayers Union and the Oil, Chmical and Atomic Workers International Union.

Common Cause members ask that you get in touch with your U.S. Representative and your two Senators and let them know how you feel on this issue. Indications are that this will be brought before Congress the second or third week of March.

What to Do to Beat the SST: Get in touch with your U.S. Representative and two Senators—by letter, phone, telegram, or personal visit. Ask if they will answer this question:

Do you plan to vote against further funds for developing a supersonic transport plane?

Call or write your local newspaper editor and TV and radio stations. Ask them to interview your congressmen on the SST issue and to run editorials on it. Mention how these Congressmen voted on SST funds last December.

If you receive an answer from your Congressmen, send a press release to the newspapers and broadcasters to publicize his position— or lack of position on the issue. Inform the Common Cause office in Washington of his position.

ZERO POPULATION GROWTH
Cont'd from page 1

QUALITY OF LIFE:
Space—hiking, thinking
Quiet
Wilderness—wildlife
Individuality

Each of these population-related problems can be solved by itself. An expert on air pollution may be full of ideas on how to decrease the amount of pollution in the air. An expert on education may have many ideas on how to improve our educational system to meet increasing demands. A sociologist may have many ideas on how to decrease crime and violence in our cities. An expert on housing will have a solution for the housing shortage.

However, if you look into the plans presented by each of these experts, you will find that their plans have one thing in common; each costs a great deal of money. We could afford to solve two or three major problems. However, there is not enough money or resources to solve the hundreds of problems that face us by the piecemeal approach of attacking each problem individually. Solving only one or two of these problems will not save man.

Furthermore, it is entirely inappropriate to attack each problem as an independnt entity because these problems are interrelated. Crime is related to poverty, and poverty to education. Pollution is related to the amount of medical care we will need, and the amount of pollution we experience is related to how our transportation system is structured. We now have to force ourselves to look at the whole picture at once.

In the United States, population threatens the quality of our lives, but in much of the world, population threatens life itself. At present the world's population is doubling every 37 years. This means that by the year 2000 there will be two people competing for the air, space and food that one person now claims as his own.

More critical is the fact that in the poorist countries the doubling time is even less. In India, South America and in parts of Asia, the population doubles every 20 to 30 years. In these places—where food is in short supply and people are starving now—there is no escape from the fact that famines will occur on a massive scale. Millions of people will starve. The social and political consequences of this fact are grim. Unless we control our numbers, man faces famine, disease, and war. Unless we control population growth, man may breed his way to extinction.

We must stabilize, perhaps even reduce, the population of the United States. We must do this in order to conserve our own resources and to have the time to resolve our own population-related problems. We must will arise as overpopulation destroys the countries in which the problem is now nearly hopeless and to set a credible example for countries which can still save themselves by stopping their population growth.

ZERO POPULATION GROWTH is a political action orgainzation whose purpose is to bring about population stability n the United States, then n the rest of the world. We will achieve this end by political and educational means.

1. We will do everything we can—speak, write, talk, even demonstrate—to educate the public and governmental agencies to the immediate dangers of the population problem. We emphasize the science of ecology and the importance of man's total environment and his dependence upon the entire Earth.
2. We stress the importance of limiting families to not more than two natural children, an essential for achieving population stability. This fact should be made so obvious to everyone that it becomes socially unacceptable to have more than two children.
3. We will fight policies and programs on the local, state, and national level designed to foster population growth. We reject the idea that population growth is necessary for a growing economy. We oppose advertising by public and business agencies designed to bring additional persons into already overcrowded areas and by manufacturers to promote large

---

Urge Common Cause members and friends to bring up the subject at meetings of clubs and organizations and to pass resolutions against the SST. Let your Congressmen know of these resolutions when passed.

Cooperate on strategy and publicity with local groups such as the Sierra Club, Wilderness Society or Friends of the Earth who are working to beat the SST.

Persons wishing to obtain information on membership in Common Cause can do so by contacting Huntingdon, Pa. or Common Cause Howard H. Crouch, 1412 Scott St., 2100 M St., N.W. Washington, D.C. 20037.

FREE INFORMATION

LOW COST, SAFE, LEGAL

ABORTION

IN NEW YORK

SCHEDULED IMMEDIATELY

(212) TR 7-8562

CERTIFIED ABORTION REFERRAL

All Inquiries Confidential

LINDBERGH ON THE SST

Dear Congressman Yates:

Replying to your letter of January 20th, my impression is that the supersonic transport is within the state of the art technically but not economically or environmentally. Seat-mile costs are to high, and the pollution of the upper atmosphere too dangerous on the basis of present knowledge. I believe it would be a mistake to become committed to a multi-billion dollar supersonic transport program without reasonable certainty that SST's will be practical economically and acceptable environmentally.

I do not now see any partical way to avoid the disturbance that would be caused by rgular sonic booms. As a citizen, I feel we are already subjected to more than enough technologcal noises, and my vote will be against adding to the present noise level in any unnecessary way. I do not accept as practical or lasting the idea that supersonic transports would be flown at supersonic speeds only over water.

Please accept my apology for the lateness of this reply to your letter. I have been travelling almost constantly, and have been unable to keep in close contact with my mail.

Sincerely,
Charles A. Lindbergh

Sports Scene

The sports editors representing the various institutions which make up the Pennsylvania Collegiate Press Association recently selected an All-State basketball team. The following are the selections for the first three teams, honorabl mention candidates, and the Player and Coach-of-the-Year. Note that no Juniata player made the team.

1971 PENNSYLVANIA COLLEGIATE PRESS ASSOCIATION ALL-STATE BASKETBALL TEAM

FIRST TEAM

Pos.	Name	School
For.	Howard Porter	La Salle
For.	Kenny Durrett	Villanova
Cent.	Dave Calhoun	Pennsylvania
Guard	Jarrett Durham	Duquesne
Guarr	Dave Wohl	Pennsylvania

SECOND TEAM

For.	Mickey Davis	Duquesne
For.	Bob Morse	Pennsylvania
Cent.	Gary Nelson	Duquesne
Guard	Bobby Fields	La Salle
Guard	Steve Bilsky	Pennsylvania

THIRD TEAM

For.	Lee McCullough	Indiana
For.	Chris Ford	Villanova
Cent.	Hank Siemientkowski	Villanova
Guard	Ray Greene	California State
Guard	Tracy Tripucka	La Fayette

Player-of-the-Year Ken Durrett-La Salle

Coach-of-the-Year: Paul Westhead-La Salle

Honorable Mention: Barry Nelson-Duquesne,, Mike Bantom-St. Joseph's, Don Sechler-Susquehanna, Gene Munford-University of Scranton, Kevin Porter-St. Francis, Wally Rice-Pennsylvania Military College, Ken Scott-Pitt, Tom Kerstetter-Indiana, Don Wilson-Clarion, Al Chrisman-Gannon, Brain Smalley-Philadelphia Textile, Fred Riley-Edinboro, Mike O'Rourke-Philadelphia Textile, Joe Sebestyn-Clarion.

NOTES AT RANDOM: The outlook for Juniata's track and baseball looks favorable. On Saturday, the track squad opened their season on the indoor boards at Swarthmore and from all reports, the performance was impressive. The tennis team will make a Southern swing during spring break. . . . .With only the collegiate playoffs remaining, here are our choices for the top ten during the regular season:

1. UCLA
2. Penn
3. Marquette
4. Kansas
5. Jacksonville
6. South Carolina
7. Kentucky
8. USC
9. North Carolina
10. Duquesne

Philadelphia Textile won the MAC's again. . . . . .Maryland's freshman basketball team was undefeated and should give them a pre-season national ranking for next season. Tom McMillen will probably be a forward, with a seven-foot and six-nine centers on the freshman squad. . . . Ed Searcy, from Power Memorial, who left Duquesne, is now at St. John's in New York City. . . . . .

Freshman Review of All-Class Night

by Barbara Duncan

The 34th Annual All Class Night plays were held on March 13, 1971. Each class competed by putting on a twenty-two minute original play, complete with scenery and costumes. The Seniors' was entitled Cuma's Calamity, or Tumbling Tradition! ? ! It dealt with a young Japanese irl, who by tradition, is to marry a man of her parents' choice, but decides that she is in love with an American soldier. The Seniors also made use of a projector which projected different background scenes onto screens.

The Juniors presented us with a picture of the changing life at Juniata in Juniata: A Tragedy in Four Years. Their play included a combination of events concerning part and present life at Juniata. They presented their point very well with little need for elaborate costume or scenery.

The Class of 1974 presented Belch! It portrayed how people react in a situation that is new to them, and what the final outcome can be. The Freshmen used quite a bit of scenery, including an elevator, and many costumes in the production of this play.

The final play, A Knight for a Day, was presented by the Sophomore Class. Their purpose was to show how man's thinking is changing and how progress is replacing humanism. They achieved this by placing a knight in a situation both in his own and modern times by the use of two sets of players and scenery.

Then the moment arrived for the presentation of the cup. After the suspense had reached its peak, and everyone was sure he knew who would win, the cup was presented to the Class of 1971.

The PeacePipe

Hats off to Debra Jean Sweet, who is, as President Nixon described her, one of "four fine young Americans who represents the very best in American youth. we hear too much these days about the very small minority of young Americans who have lost faith in their country."

Debra, 19, had earned her "Young American Medal" by leading Wisconsin high-school students on a 30-mile fund-rising march for the poor. When Nixon presented her with the medal she replied in a quiet voice: "Mr. President, I'd like to say I find it very hard to believe in you until you get us out of this war."

Shortly afterwards, Nixon responded negatively to a request for a group picture with the medal winners.

TALKIN' DRAFT

John Braxton, 22, a draft resister who refused to report for alternative service was sentenced by a federal judge to 2½ years in prison last month.

U.S. District Court Judge Alfred Luango refused Braxton's request to meet his military obligation by being allowed to perform work for the Quaker Action Group.

Judge Luango told Braxton, a former Swathmore College student government president, that granting the request would permit Braxton to obey the court order rather than that of the Selective Service.

The Peace Center Coffee House, at 249 S. Pugh St., State College, will be open from 9:00 P.M. to 1:00 A.M. weekends for anyone needing something to do.

In what was billed as the Battle between the Forces of Good and the Forces of Law and Order football teams from Philadelphia Rock Station WMMR-FM and local offices of the FBI, clashed in a city park before more than 1,000 wisecracking spectators. The G-men tromped the Freaks, 44-0, but refused to give their names to reporters while eating apple pie and hot dogs during a subdued post-game victory celebration.

The weekend of January 30-31, Jackea Andoniades, Sue Dobson and I were trained as draft counslers in a session sponsered by the State College Coalition for Peace and the Control Committee for Conscientious Objectors.

Anyone who has any questions concerning the draft or draft counseling is invited to check with Jackea, Box 742, Faculty Club, Sue, Box 333, 402 Flory, or me, Box 276, Emmert House.

A draft information service has been set aside in Ellis Hall and will be manned at regular hours. It should be strongly emphasized that draft counseling entails all alternatives, not just that of conscientious objection and that no particular posit on is emphasized.

Cont'd from page 5

4. We support legislation to provide comprehensive and realistic birth-control programs designed to reach every member of our society. These programs should not discriminate against minority groups, nor be compulsive.
5. We will argue for increased recearch to improve contraceptive technology.
6. We urge the repeal of archaic laws and the abandonment of anachronistic policies that run counter to our goals— anti-abortion laws, anti-contraception laws, backward hospital policies, and attitudes which constrict the role of women.
8. We support legislation which creates commission and committees to study the population problem and make recommendations, provided that such agencies have a chance of substantive accomplishment and are not a means of avoiding coming to grips with the problems.
9. We suggest revision of state and Federal tax law to discourage rather than encourage large families. Such laws should not affect families already established; their purpose should be to discourage future births, not to penalize children already born.
10. We advocate that state and Federal legislation be enacted requiring insurance companies to regulate accidents, disability, and medical insurance premiums in proportion to the number of persons in a family.
11. We support measures designed to reorient our foreign policy and foreign aid to reflect the realities of the population problem. ZPG's ideas should soon form the basis for an international movement.
12. We will support and actively campaign for candidates who are especially knowledgeable and articulate in the field of environment and population.
13. We encourage people to invent and discuss other ideas, even if they are unproven or controversial.

ABOUT CHAPTERS

ZPG has chapters throughout the United States. These chapters are working units. Many are in college communities. Chapters are authorized to retain half of the dues of members they recruit.

These local units are ane an effective and independent force working toward the common goal, both on national and local issues.

MEMBERSHIP BLANK

To join ZPG and receive the monthly Newsletter, fill out this form and return to:

Zero Population Growth
367 State Street
Los Altos, California, 94022

Name .....

Address .....
Street City State (zip)
..... General: $10 annually Student: $4 annually .... Donor: $20
..... Patron: $120

Recommended reading on population and environmental problems:
1. The Population Bomb by Paul Ehrlich (Sierra Club-Ballantine)
2. Movement in the Sun by Robert Rienow and Leona Train Rienow (Sierra Club-Ballantine)

(Above 2 books available from ZPG, postpaid $1.00 each)

ALL CLASS NIGHT

Cont'd from page 2

The audience found that it really did matter as Lt. Makum informed Cuma that he was already married and that he most certainly could not take Cuma with him back to America. At this point, Cuma, having lost the man that she had chosen, as well as the one for whom she had been chosen, said, "I must regain honor where I lost it, with tradition." After these words, Cuma committed suicide by stabbing herself with a sharp sword.

In this play, it was enjoyable to observe the excellent performance of Mr. Harvey Wason as he played the part of Lt. Makum.

The Junior class play, Juniata: A Tragedy In Four Years was next. This play was an excellent satire of college life, and it also had a uniform plan of action as each scene followed well from the preceding one.

The play, a story of the college career of the class of 1972, was put in a framework of a class history read by a sagacious looking figure, played by Mr. Jon Hunter.

The first scene was composed of characters making fun of freshmen hazing. It was interesting to hear the l'ne at the end of the scene in which Mr. Richard James said to Mr. Steve Woodworth, "Someday, these freshmen will be as mature as you and me." Another interesting scene dealt with the issue of drinking on campus. It was amusing to see the magnifying glass bearing detective searching for offenders. The conversation was also enjoyable between the detective and a student. The detective said, "What is your name?" This was a bland question, indeed. The next question was more disarming than the first and was excellent satire. The detective said, "What is your cafeteria number?" The student replied, being somewhat at a loss, "One thousand."

After the intermission and an introduction by the assistant chairman, Mr. Dan Harriger, one observed the Freshman class play, Belch.

This play opened with two men, played by Mr. Bellamy Shivers and Mr. Lenny Brooks, preparing for a masquerade party to be held at their apartment that evening. The guests came, and they all seemed to be properly attired for a costume party until the advent of four late arrivals. The four were wearing, not costumes but, formal attire. At their arrival, the hosts and the guests already present showed signs of tension. As for the four people played by Mr. Chris Umble, Miss Diane Miller, Mr. Al Rohrer, and Miss Kandi Foust; they were visibly distressed because of their conspicuousness.

At this point, one saw an interesting aspect of the play, its resemblance to the existential world of Sartre displayed in the play No Exit. The four people had entered into a room but were unable to depart from it. There was "no exit" because the people were dead; they had been killed in an automobile accident earlier in the evening.

The final play was the Sophomore one, A Knight For a Day. In this play, one's eyes were first directed to a seance on stage, in which a group of people were calling for a spirit from the past in order to ascertain whether our present day society or the medieval one was the more progressive. After the spirit's arrival, one saw two skits: One dealt with the present day and was a board meeting in which the participants were searching for better methods of operation. The second was a medieval meeting complete with a king and knights. The task before the group was to rid the kingdom of a ferocious dragon. The analogy that can be drawn between the two groups is that they both had to defeat the opposition. The method of the former group was to destroy the opposition while that of the latter was to appase it. At this point, it was pointed out that even though the medieval period was not as fancy as ours, it was more humane than ours. Or in the words of the spirit from the past, "I would rathr be a human than a being."

After the conclusion of the plays, the audience waited eagerly for the presentation of the trophy to the winning class. In a few minutes, the judges pronounced the class of 1971 the winner.

In each contest, there is destined to be only one winner. The rest must be losers. It is the belief of this reviewer that, whether it be the winner or one of the three losers, each participating class deserves many plaudits for giving to all who attendd the event a most enjoyable evening.

378
JS
v. 47-49
1971-73

THE JUNIATIAN

Vol. XLVIII, No. 1 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | September 22, 1971

resident Stauffer Greets Upperclassmen and Frosh

all members of the Juniata community:

The college year now beginning is one of unique promise. We embark w on a new educational venture. We may all join in the expectation at Juniata's educational effectiveness will be enhanced as we work ithfully to implement the new academic program.

This is a time to express gratitude to the many students and faculty ho have contributed their best thinking in formilation of the new pro- ram. It is our hope that these efforts will be especially beneficial to embers of the Class of 1975, but it is my personal conviction that even is year the total intellectual life of the campus will be stimulated in a ost positive way because of the new curriculum.

There are before us many new opportunities to make of Juniata the ruly great institution that we want her to be. Let us especially aim not nly at serving ourselves but in serving the world which needs men and omen of vision and courage to serve their followmen.

On behalf of all the members of the college community, I would ex- press a particularly warm welcome to members of the class of 1975.

Sincerely yours,

John N. Stauffer

President of Juniata College

GREETINGS, LAZARUS

by Scott Leedy

This is "The Juniatian." Again; but unlike ever before. It is very real — touch it. It is pretty good — watch it get better. It arrives on time — count on it.

This is the first issue of a regular weekly newspaper run entirely by interested students on a volunteer basis. "The Juniatian" will be distributed throughout the campus of Juniata College and to friends and subscribers every Wednesday of every week during the academic year, except during examination and vacation periods.

The intent of "The Juniatian" is to serve as the primary source of written information for all members of the Juniata Community. In addition to being a bulletin of campus happenings and a compiling of objective reporting, "The Juniatian" will also act as a medium for the free exchange of the ideas of its contributors and as an outlet for creative offerings of many sorts to be provided from among its individual readers.

Since this issue is the first brought forth from the disorganized body of a totally new staff, it is not to be considered as being entirely indicative of the quality of those issues yet to come in subsequent weeks. It is the intent of the staff to continually improve upon every facet of "The Juniatian" — from areas such as layout, design, photography, information, student services, quality of composition, entertainment, originality, reporting, and other concerns — while simultaneously producing a publication of dependable content and distribution.

We are not asking that our readers bear with us until we produce a newspaper worth reading. We do not intend to make apology for our progeny and promise that we have good intentions which will materialize at some later date into a product deserving of their time and attention. We are very proud of "The Juniation." We rightly feel a degree of accomplishment for succeeding with this first issue when many felt that our efforts were futile and our goals hopelessly lofty. We feel that our product is worthy of your attention —now—and from now on. And we intend to keep it that way.

But keep this in mind: this product is your product. The success of "The Juniatian" depends ultimately upon the interest of its readers. A product's value is measured by the degree to which it is in demand. Therefore, the staff maintains its policy as one intending to continually assure that the content material of "The Juniatian" is of constant interest to the students and faculty of Juniata College. This policy will succeed only as long as there is avid interest in this newspaper. Here is how you fit into the implementation of our policy:

As an individual, you can take part in the production of your newspaper in several ways. If you wish to work on "The Juniatian" staff, either contact Scott Leedy (308 Miller Dormatory), P.O. Box 113, or drop a short note in the Intracollege Mail addressed to "The Juniatian", P.O. Box 667, stating your intentions and preferences.

There are openings in every department listed below:

- proofreading
- typing
- bookkeeping
- copy and layout
- reporting
- feature writing
- photography
- circulation
- advertising
- creative writing
- sketching
- cartooning
- public relations
- unrestricted thinking

No previous experience is needed to secure a position in which you will receive training as you work with others in your specific areas of interest. In addition, all staff members choose their own hours to work by scheduling their free time in conjunction with the time others choose to work on the newspaper. Thus, there will be no burdening of a few persons with a large amount of work.

Another way to participate in the production of the newspaper is by informing "The Juniatian" of any news of club meetings, happenings, or events of interest you know of, by contacting a staff member or by Box 667 in the Intracollege Mail. Poems, sketches, photographs, cartoons, unrestricted articles, and any other items of worth can also gain publication simply by submitting them to "The Juniatian" staff, post box, or office.

"The Juniatian" office is located in the basement of Ellis Hall. For directions, contact the information desk. The staff hopes to soon be able to publish its office hours; but don't hesitate to come to the office — we are usually open. When the basment corridor is sealed off in the evenings, the office is accessable via the double doors at the northeast corner (in the rear) of Ellis Hall. Drop in any time.

If there is a genuine interest among students and faculty in the fate of "The Juniatian" — as there now seems to be (for the first time in recent years) — there can be no doubt as to the success and quality of this publication.

The necessary interrelationship is simply this: when we can count on you, you can count on us.

GRASS ROOTS

This year we are instituting a new concept: at-random journalism! In the future the author of this column could be you! Every week we will select, at random, a name from the official student roster. The person belonging to that name will be expected to submit an article for the next week's paper on any subject he wishes. Our Goal? ? To try to generate greater interest in the Juniatian and at the same time to create a more interesting paper by printing a wide cross-selection of articles.

A Freshman Speaks Out

There are always the typical hassles that every freshman at every college campus goes through. The problems range from simply missing close friends at home to the lonely Romeos mourning over a chick who is 300 miles away.

Grades are a major problem, and colleges are wakening to this institutional issue by instituting a pass-fail system. Freshmen no longer have to worry about making a 3.2 average. Parents love to look at grades; now they must settle for a simple pass-fail. Overwhelming pressure is now taken away from obtaining the almighty grade. Emphasis is placed on learning for learning's sake. I always thought that the Establishment was stone deaf. . . .I guess it's just hard of hearing.

by Mick Vaughn

B-52's Alter Flight to Bypass Birds. Omaha, Neb. Sept. 15 the Strat. Air Com. says it is suspending low-level training flights by B-52 bombers over 2 Canadian provinces and over North and South Dakota to avoid interfering with the fall migration of waterfowl.

COURSE CHANGE

Course Change Period and Pass/Fail Period ends at 3:00 Monday, September 27.

The Six Week Make-up period for completion for work of last year ends at 5:00 Tuesday, October 5.

"Communications Central" Ties It All Together

Do you know what's happening on Campus? If the answer is NO, then you are feeling the impact of the "communications gap" here at Juniata College. The reason why the members of our campus community have been so poorly informed stems from a lack of coordination between media and sometimes from a complete lack of media. To end the "communications gap", an organization, called Communications Central, shall be created to collect and distribute information.

Communications Central shall consist of a committee of students who will work with the newspaper, the radio station, television, bulletin boards, and all other means of disseminating information here at Juniata. Central's function will be to coordinate the various publications and media. No longer will each type of media operate completely separate from the others. All media will work together as a communications system. Hopefully, Communications Central will operate in a manner similar to this: A concert is to be held. That information is given to Communications Central. From Central, the information goes to WJC, the Juniatian, bulletin boards, etc. In this manner, the information hits the campus in a way which can assure that almost everyone will hear or see it.

If you wish to work with Communications Central, contact Chris Peterson, 205 Cloister Arch or P.O. Box 1338.

Voter Registration Ends Sept. 24

The Huntingdon County Election Commission waited for a court order telling the commission to open voter registration books to students for five additional days.

A three-judge U.S. District Court panel ruled Thursday that registration commissioners who had not complied with the recent ruling by Attorney General J. Shane Creamer, must register students for five working days after they are served with the court notice.

As of Friday (September 17) the notice had not arrived in Huntingdon. This means that Juniata College students will have an opportunity to register from Monday through Friday next week, September 20 to 24.

Students must register in the Commissioner's Office at the County Court House on Penn Street (between 2nd and Third Streets).

A friend is a present you give yourself.

I need Help! ! ! Envelope stuffers —part-time. $25 guaranteed for every 100 envelopes you stuff. All postage pre-paid. Send stamped, self-addressed envelope, plus $1.00 for registration and handling to: Allen King Corp; P.O. Box 6525, PGH; Penna; 15212.

ETS Announces Teacher Exams For Seniors

College seniors preparing to teach school may take the National Teacher Examinations on any of the four different test dates announced by the Educational Testing Service. Dates are: November 13, 1971 and January 29, April 8, and July 15, 1972. Results of the N.T.E. are used by many large school districts as one of several factors in the selection of new teachers and by several states for certification or licensing of teachers. The school systems and state departments of education which use the examination results are listed in a N.T.E. leaflet entitled Score Users, which may be obtained by writing to E.T.S. Prospective teachers should contact the school systems in which they seek employment for specific advice on which examinations to take and on which date they should be taken.

Help Wanted

Sparetime or full time opportunity earn as much as $27.00 per thousand and up thru mail service. Addressing and/or stuffing envelopes. Handwritten or typed. Guaranteed money making deal. Send $2.00 cash or M.O. for complete instructions and list of firms using these services to . . . C and S Company Dept. 971, P.O. Box 522, Harrah, Okla. 73045

Wanted! Persons interested in sales work. Excellent commission rate. Opportunity to earn money in your free time. Sales will be made for WJC and the Juniatian. Contact Chris Peterson, 205 Cloister Arch or P. O. Box 1338.

"D" and "F" Eliminated . . .

PERSPECTIVE ON CURRICULUM

Perspective on Curriculum

This is the first of a series of articles which are intended to accurately describe the development of policies regarding the implementation of the new curriculum and to analyze the probable effects of these policies on all students.

Grading and Reporting policy

While grading and reporting is not necessarily the most important new policy to be established, it is one which will be of great concern to all students. Also, because of its nature it may be the one most easily misunderstood. For these reasons it is the subject of this first article.

Karl Kindig, second from left, discussing New Curriculum with other Task Force members.

The Faculty, following the recommendation of the Academic Standards Committee, has adopted a policy for the new curriculum with respect to grading which is at once similar to that of the old curriculum, yet different in important respects. It is similar to the old policy in that the faculty member will evaluate each student's work in a unit (name for a course in the new curriculum) on an "A", "B", "C", "D", "F" basis. This grade will be reported to the Registrar who will in turn inform the student and his advisor. This is the same as the procedure which is followed for students working under the old curriculum. The two procedures diverge, however, in the effect these grades have upon the student's progress toward fulfilling his graduation requirements. Students working under the old curriculum who receive "D's" will continue to receive credit for that work. Students under the new curriculum will not receive credit for "D" work.

The rationale for this decision goes something like this. According to the curriculum proposal passed by the Faculty last January, a student must satisfactorily complete 34 units in order to graduate. The "D", by definition of the 1969-1971 catalogue (p.44), indicates less than satisfactory work; therefore it is argued that it would be inconsistent to allow a unit completed at the "D" level to be counted towards graduation. Although credit will not be given for "D" work, the "D" is retained in order to provide the student with a more accurate knowledge of his actual achievement level. (It must be admitted, though, that under these circumstances, the "D" takes on some of the disingeuous quality of an "F" — "well, you almost made it.")

In analyzing the Faculty's discussion concerning this new policy, it is evident that it was caught in a conflict between two eventualities which are recurring themes in academic discussion, namely, the possibility of lowering academic standards below an "acceptable" level or raising them to the point where student initiative becomes stifled. Some felt that "D" work ought to be accepted for units designated "electives" in order to encourage more experimentation, while retaining the "C"-or-better standard for units in the Program of Emphasis. However, opponents to this plan pointed out that this would allow the possibility of a student graduating under this system with a 1.33 cumulative average. It was felt that this would place the academic reputation of the College (and thus all student's degrees) in jeopardy.

There can be little determination at this time whether the standards set in this policy are unrealistically high or not. This is because the Faculty has not determined a policy for academic standing. If it were to be decided that a student had only four years to complete his 34 units, then the grading policy as now stated could place an unfair burden on the students. On the other hand, if students were permitted to remain in good standing for a longer period, the failure to achieve "C" level or more than two units would not have such drastic consequences. There would be some financial penalty to be sure but not the complete loss of a degree. It seems evident that the Faculty and the students who sit on faculty committees (myself included) have made a serious mistake. The academic standing policy should have been determined concurrently with the grading policy, not separately.

The new grading policy formally applies only to the students under the new curriculum. However, there may be some cross effects during the transition period. This possibility exists in cases where students under each curriculum are taking the same course. Professors, as a rule, do not like to give failing grades, and where students are "on the line" between a "C" and a "D" there may be a tendency for a professor to give the higher grade. Of course, students under the old curriculum could benefit from this as well.

This introduces another important aspect of this new policy—the possibile devaluation of the "C". As every student knows, each professor has his own ideas about what constitutes "A", "B", "C", "D", or "F" work, regardless of what the catalogue says. There was an indication in the Faculty's discussion of this policy that many professors feel that the "C" level (whatever that means to the individual) is too high for a minimum passing grade. It is conceivable that under this policy an informal lowering of the "C" on an ad hoc basis could take place. If this practice was widespread, it could subvert the intent of those who supported this policy for reasons of maintaining high academic standards.

In sum, it is always an interesting question as to the ultimate effect of a formal, written policy statement. As in the past, it is possible that precedent will be established by subsequent interpretation to the extent that in a few years the policy means something quite different than it appeared to when it was written. This is what the policy says now; what it will mean in three, two, or even one year from now will greatly depend on what faculty and students say and do about it.

Things Artistic

At Juniata no one is neutral about things artistic. Juniatians' thoughts on art put them into three categories: for convenience, Types A, B, and C.

Type A: This individual digs concerts by the Byrds or Livingston Taylor. He is an avid watcher of shows like Rod Serling's Night Gallery. On the other hand, he will suddenly remember ten unanswered letters demanding immediate attention when someone asks him to go along to the latest episode of "Civilization". He grimaces at words like "cultural" or names like "Dvorak". To him that kind of "serious" art is something to be feared rather than enjoyed. This idea is a great misconception.

Type B: He is the person who will hitchhike to Penn State in the rain to see the latest performance of the Artist Series. He faithfully attends every exhibit at Shoemaker Gallery. At the same time, he scorns anything to be seen on television. He enjoys the music of current rock groups, but tends not to take it seriously. For him, "art" is something which elevates him above the masses. This also is a great misconception.

Type C: He is a member of an enlightened minority who can see value in both forms of art. He feels equally at home at a Leon Russell concert or at a performance of Aida. He realizes that since any attempt of man to be creative is art even television is an art form. Art, for him, is something to be enjoyed in all forms.

The purpose of this column is to try to widen the artistic scope of students on the Juniata campus. We will cover anything from symphonies to rock concerts. We will do this by reviewing numerous assortments of artistic events related to Juniata students. This relationship can be as direct as a performance of the Juniata Concert Choir or as indirect as an off-Broadway production of "Hair". Through such diversity we hope to create a greater interest in art on our campus.

BIKE FREAKS UNITE!

by Bob McIntosh

Here is something positive for the earth lover. "Bikecology" is ecology through bicycling. A group is now being formed on campus. Bikecologists is a fast-growing group out of Santa Barbara, Calif., which seeks to end useless travel by automobile, one of the greatest contributors to air pollution.

Beside recycling cans and other waste or using low-phosphate detergents there are other things which reasonsible human beings can do for their environment. Individuals can take a more complete view of their existance by realizing that driving an automobile for short and long distances can be eliminated.

The group forming on campus wishes to aid in fulfilling national goals such as promoting legislation for making biking a legitimate means of transportation.

If you wish to help implement some or all of those ideas at Juniata College and do your part for helping the ecology movement, come to the organizational meeting at 8 p.m., Tuesday, Sept. 21, in the Gold Room of Ellis Hall. Come and help plan bike back-packing trips or shorter jaunts.

ETS Announces GRE Registration Opening Now

The Educational Testing Service of Princeton, New Jersey, has announced that undergraduates and others preparing to go to graduate school may take the Graduate Record Examinations on October 23, December 11, 1971 and January 15, February 26, April 22, and June 17, 1972. Students planning to register for the October test date are advised that applications received by E.T.S. after October 5 will incur a $3.50 registration fee. Equivalent late fee and registration deadlines apply to the other dates. Scores are usually reported to graduate schools five weeks after a test date. Full details and registration forms are contained in the 1971-72 G.R.E. Information Bulletin. This booklet may be ordered from: Educational Testing Service, Box 955 Princeton, New Jersey 08540.

J. C. SPORTS OUTLOOK

FOOTBALL

by Tony Martuzas

The Juniata Indians open their 1971-72 football campaign against the Aggies of Delaware Valley with hopes of coming off last year's losing season on a good note. A large number of veteran players are back, including the defensive front seven who were noted for their success last year against running plays. The two linebackers are juniors Jeff Zeigler and Bob Waggoner. The defensive ends are senior Ray Grabiak and junior Tom Hermen. Seniors Jim Gunthoer and Charley Jaquish fill the defensive tackle positions. In the middle of the 5-2 alignment is senior Sal Mercadante.

The offense is going to depend on the efforts of senior tailback Dave Sparks, sophomore Mike McNeal at left-half, with sophomore Joe Laurer calling the signals. Dan Greening, senior, will back up the offense. This could be a big year for Sparks who needs only 222 yards rushing for the career rushing record for Juniata.

As is the case, Juniata has been plagued with injuries. Five letter winners from last season are out from one month to the entire season.

The Indians face a tough schedule this season, but Coach Nadzak and team are very optimistic. The only thing they ask is that the entire student body give them the strong support they will need for the best season ever. GOOD LUCK!

CROSS COUNTRY

by J. Brian Richardson

The J C cross country team opens its 1971 season on September 22 against Delaware Valley College on our home course. Senior Dennis Weidler, one of the top runners in the league, is back for his second year as captain of the homers. Dennis, who holds the school record and who lost only one meet last year, hopes to lead one of the most dedicated groups of athletes on campus to a winning season.

Coach Jack Swinderman is optimistic that this year's team will better last year's record of 5-8. Thirteen men reported for the team this fall, which is an increase of almost 50% over last year. Eight upperclassmen, four freshmen and one junior transfer student comprise the team.

One of the biggest problems of last year was the overall team scoring. Coach Swinderman is looking for the freshmen to be a big help in that capacity this season. The coach is also impressed with the overall devotion of every member of the team.

It was noted that student participation at cross country contests was practically nil last year. Distance running is one of the loneliest and most demanding sports. Its goes without saying that spectator participation would be greatly appreciated by the team. It is hoped that this year's student body will not be as apathetic as those in the past. Let's all get out and support our team to a winning season!

Anyone who doesn't believe in spirits should stop in our favorite watering hole sometime.

"Crucible" Starts New Dramatic Season

This year's fall production will be Authur Miller's "The Crucible" directed by Mrs. Doris Goehring. Performances will be given on November 5, 6, and 7. The play should be relevant to today's audience because of it's theme of prejudice and distrust among men. An audition schedule will be announced in the following issues.

Cartoonist Charles Schulz earned $90 the first month his comic strip "Peanuts" was syndicated. In 1966 it was estimated he earned $300,000 a year from the daily strip, plus income from books, toys, sweatshirts, and occasional television shows.

A New Perspective

It is difficult to choose words to express to your peers sentiments that you are reasonably sure most of them will scoff at in spite of what you say. I feel in just such a position as that while writing this article which is trying to express some of the hopes that this year's "student leaders" have envisioned in the course of the just recently completed edition of the Annual Student Leadership Conference. The most meaningful thing to emerge from that conference is the fact that at least the leaders now look at Student Government with a new perspective.

It is merely an exercise in self-delusion to argue that any student organization on this campus, at this time, can be a "government". However, it is also a very immature brand of negativism to cry about the lack of effect of student influence on the decision making bodies of the college. The fact that a decision is not made in complete concurrence with student opinion does not mean that the decision was not, in some part, the result of student work.

The new perspective we are using is perhaps summarized in the preamble to the new constitution we hope to have ready for your approval within the first two weeks of the new year. It reads: "As students, we believe it is necessary to provide for ourselves an organization to promote student voice and participation in the decision making processes of the College. We further believe that such an organization is necessary to protect student interest and to provide for ourselves certain services that are not or can not be provided by the College or its agencies. Commensurate with these beliefs, we hereby establish the Students Executive Council."

Within this outline there are several things we hope to accomplish in the coming year. One of the most important is already on the way to solution as you read this article. We are determined that the communications structures owned and operated by the students work. The dissolution of the newspaper last year was largely unnecessary. The same will not happen this year. We also hope to deal more intimately with the various student services on campus. We are going to demand that students on this campus be treated as humans and as individuals, not only by the cafeteria, but also by the bookstore, the post office, the bank, the janitors, etc. We hope to provide, for any group anxious to promote activities to make its position known to students, the kinds of communications media to reach them and the kind of help that will make such activities successful. We are extremely proud of the way that the Center Board has so radically improved the opportunities for recreation over the last couple of years and we solidly support them in their attempts at making Ellis Hall more attractive to students. We hope that we can join with other student governments to work to make the 18 year old vote an effective means for lobbying on behalf of the students here and at other institutions across the State.

The equipment to make these ideas become reality and to make effective the kinds of changes the students want, exist. The only limiting factor will be whether or not they use it. If they use it, real changes can be made; if they merely sit in their rooms and cry in their beer nothing will happen, just as in the past. For now, I guess that's where we are. . . .

JON HUNTER
Student Government President and Head of 1971 Leadership Conference.

Info Board Committee Organized

One of the major problems that the 1971 Leadership Conference dealt with was that of communications. As a result of the conference, a Bulletin Board Committee was established in an effort to futher link students with exactly what is happening on this campus.

Up until this time, the network of bulletin boards on campus have been sloppy, unorganized, and uninformative. It is now our job to organize this facility and use it to its fullest potential. In about a week, you will only have to look around you to find out what's "for sale", where you can get a ride, what activities are going on, and what Student Government is doing.

Our goal in this endeavor is to keep the students better informed and hopefully, more organized. We will need some assistance in preparing the bulletin boards and keeping them up to date. If you are interested, please contact Judy Rosen, Box 1606 or 132 Tussey.

What's Your G.I.Q.?
(General Information Quotient)

1. What was the date that man took his first steps on the moon?
2. What happened six years and ten months ago today?
3. Where is ECC 12?

25 YEARS AGO JC opened with an all-time record enrollment of 575 students despite a setback in its veterans housing project caused by a walkout of carpenters. Juniata enrolled 260 veterans.

Selective Service Clarifies New Deferment Plan

College students who were enrolled full-time in the 1970-71 academic year will be eligible for student deferments in the 1971-72 school year if they continue to make satisfactory progress in their programs of study, Selective Service officials announced in a clarification of expected policy changes on undergraduate student deferments.

Young men who entered school for the first time this summer and those who enroll as freshmen this fall will not qualify for student deferments if the pending changes to the Selective Service Act are passed by Congress. The House has completed action on the bill and final Senate action is expected in September.

College students will not be drafted in the middle of a semester or term. "If called while enrolled, they will be allowed to postpone their induction until the end of the semester, or term. If in their last academic year, they will be able to postpone their induction until after graduation," said Dr. Curtis W. Tarr, Selective Service director.

WOODEN SHIPS

Wooden ships set sail one day.
Moving east across the water,
Seeking out a world to conquer:
Land on which to force their way,
Fertile earth on which to prey.

Bearing sickness, pain and woe,
Inherited from unwise fathers,
Born from fruitless wombs of mothers,
Whose hearts were greed that overflowed,
These ships across the sea did go.

Looking out o'er sea one dawn,
Off the bow a land was shining,
Green and new where life was living,
As the former place had been,
Before that earth was scarred by sin.

The bows were turned port to the land.
The sails were lifted; wind was blowing.
Moving close, the dream was showing.
Inches there from outstretched hands—
Then wooden bows struck saddened sands. . .

Wooden ships set sail again,
Bearing east across the water,
Seeking out new worlds to conquer,
Lands on which to grow and prey. . .
Lost, to never find their way.

—Brian Maurer

Oh, Those Icy Fingers

by Rev. M. Andrew Murray

"What do you plan to do?"

The question hits me in different ways depending on my quota of ego strength for the particular day. At times it doesn't disturb me at all and I answer with the cool confidence of an itinerant evangelist that one should wait and see, or, time will tell. (Which means in less sophisticates and more vulnerable language—the Lord will lead). At other times, the question feels more like someone has put their icy fingers on my warm back. I cower and mumble something like "What do you have in mind?" The stark truth is that I really don't knowwhat I am going to do. I have no game plan, no strategy for the salvation of the Juniata campus.

The question comes in an even more difficult form. "How do you see the role for a campus minister?" I am disturbed in some vague way that is difficult for me to get in touch with by the fact that the occupation of ministry is so often seen in terms of "role" rather than function. Therefore, it is the "role" of the minister (parish, campus, industrial, etc.) to love people, to be well adjusted, to smile a lot, to know most everyone, to attend most everything and so it goes. Unfortunately, there still exists, I believe, some situations of ministry where if one plays the role well he can get by without filling any vital function.

I do have some ideas about the function of a campus minister. He should be available to people in times of crisis. In a sense, he offers himself to listen, to accept, just "to be". What you see is what you get. He should also work with others in dealing both verbally and symbolically with questions that can't be satisfied through normal academic processes—questions about God, death, meaning in life, love, hate, and what campus ministers should do. He should also assist persons in finding ways of expressing their own faith that are satisfactory to them both intellectually and emotionally.

Having refined the question of role to one of function we are now left with some very noble sounding jobs. But, what does one do to get those jobs done?

Oh, those icy fingers!

WANT TO BECOME YOUR OWN
DEALER
We're looking for representatives to sell
RECORDS - TAPES - STEREO EQUIPMENT ON YOUR COLLEGE CAMPUS
write or call: JEM RECORDS
P. O. Box 1167 Union, N. J. 07083 (201) 964-7947
This Offer Will Not Be Repeated

good ole days . . .

The following article appeared in the Juniatian during the year 1950 for the fashion-conscience person. Are all the styles coming back?

From the Juniatian of March 3, 1950 (2-2)

A progressive haberdashers' movement decrees that the keynote of clothing purchases should be "rugged masculinity." This is further designated as the "lusty look." Step one in achieving a stylish lust is the introduction for large patch pockets. There ought to be four, at least, on coats, suits and jackets. Sex appeal now comes in tweeds, serges and gabbardines.

Pastels are prophesied with all certainty on the Easter horizon. Within a month it is expected to be a la mode for a man to sally forth in a cutie whipped up in robin's egg blue, pea green, or eggshell . . . only because he's rugged.

Clothing Softer—

A matter of great concern to the male fashion dictators is the fear that, in attempting to masculinize their clientele, they should in any way make them uncomfortable. For instance, the materials selected for Spring fashions are to be of softer texture. All the less to scrape against little male selves.

Then, there is to be a marked prevalence of widespread collars. This might well be corrupted into plunging neckline for the hairy-chested. Summer shoes are going to be of even lighter weight than the lattice-work sandals of yesteryear.

Finally—A Cigar

But best of all is the final touch to this bizarre swain of '49. Absolutely indispensible in creating the all-out rugged "lusty-look" is —a cigar. "It's the ultimate indication of the man who truly enjoys living," goes the justification.

If this is a preview of the flashing fifties, it looks as though the era to come will revolve about an anti-joey movement which has as its basic platform the abolition of white bucks and pipes.

PHEA Opens Regional Office

The Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency (PHEAA) has announced that it has established a regional office at Millersville State College.

Robert Fleming, the regional representative for this area, stated that students at Juniata may also check with the Financial Aid Office for information concerning the State Scholarship and Guaranty Loan Program.

Appointments to meet with the agency's representative the day of his periodic visit to campus may be made by contacting the financial aid office prior to that date.

Students and parents seeking information are urged to contact the regional representative by calling: 717 - 872-4643.

A direct descendent of the cave bear, the Alaskan Kodiak bear stands 12 feet high and weighs eighteen hundred pounds. This near-sighted bear is the largest in the world.

Juniata Campus Crier

Wednesday	September	22	Cuthesan Students Association	Faculty Lounge
			Deputation Club	7:00 P.M. Alumni Hall
			Cross Country vs. Delaware	Home
Thursday		23
Friday		24	IVCF Retreat through September 26
			Film: "The Heart is a Lonely Hunter"	8:00 P.M. Alumni Hall
			Film Buff's Club, Tickets at Ellis Hall Information Desk
Saturday		25	Football, at Albright	Away
			Cross Country, at Albright	Away
			Coffee House: Burt Myne	9:00 P.M.
Sunday		26
Monday		27	Dames Meeting	8:15 P.M. Shoemaker Gallery
			End of course change period and Pass/Fail Grading.
Tuesday		28
Wednesday		29	Cross Country, at Dickinson	Away
Thursday		30
Friday	October	1	Dance, "City Chicken"	9:00 P.M. Ballroom
			College Science Improvement Program	1:30P.M.
			Professor Kuenne on Model Building for the Social Sciences.
Saturday		2	Football Susquehanna	1:30 P.M. Home
			Cross Country, Susquehanna	Home
			Brethren Campus Day
			Alumni Council
			Dr. Alvin Brightbill Hymn Sing	Oller Hall
			10:30 - 12 noon, 4:00 - 5:30, 7:30 - 9:30 P.M.
			Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra	8:30 P.M. Rec. Hall, P.S.U.
			Film: "East of Eden"	8:00 P.M. Alumni Hall
			Film Buff's Club
			Church Relations Council

Gift Pax Available To Frosh

Over five million students will receive gift-pax samples this fall! Our campus will again be distributing the free student gift-pax of toilet articles as over 2,000 other colleges and universities throughout the United States have done for the past sixteen years. A good will promotion of leading U.S. manufacturers are packed by Gift-Pax, Inc., West Hempstead, N.Y. who makes them available to us each semester.

Free student gift-pax will be available to the Freshman class in Ellis Hall. There are coed assortments and male oriented product assortments which will be available to Freshmen only. Posters located at various focal points on campus indicate time and place of distribution and it's Free! Free! Free!

The various clients represented in each student gift-pax kit are—Bristol-Myers, Colgate-Palmolive, Proctor & Gamble, Schick Razor, etc.—with appropriate assortments going to male and female students in colorful timely designed reusable plastic toilet article kits.

Come early (while the supply lasts) and bring your identification (I.D. card) to receive your student gift-pax.

Author Arrives As Artist In Residence

Dean Wilfred G. Norris has announced that Martin F. Russ will be the artist-in-residence at Juniata College for the fall term. He will also be a part-time instructor in English.

Mr. Russ is a literary consultant for Charles Scribner's Sons. He has written book reviews for Saturday Review, the National Observer, the Chicago Sun-Times, Playboy, and Publisher's Weekly. He has published four books, which are: "The Last Parallel," "War Memorial," "Happy Hunting Ground," and "Half Moon Haven." A fifth book will be published by Atheneum in 1972.

He attended St. Lawrence University from 1949-51; then joined the Marine Corps and saw action in the Korean War where he received the Purple Heart.

He is married to the former Lucy Blaisdell, and they have two children, Phoebe and Luke.

A professional ABORTION that is safe, legal & inexpensive

can be set up on an outpatient basis by calling The Problem Pregnancy Educational Service, Inc.

215-722-5360

24 hours—7 days for professional, confidential and caring help.

EARTHLY SALVATION

by Barbara Clain

Let your mind release the flowers of its thought
Til they fall upon fresh frozen grounds,
Melting the ice with perfect blooms
And vibrant musical sounds.

Let your heart pulsate life in echoing streams
Into those who've ossified their own,
Circulation of love in red-blood form
Until perfect affection has grown.

Let your face betray truth in wrinkled smiles
To impress imperceptive peers,
That thoughts of love shall never burn
Through cremation of social fears.

New Style Pix For Alfarata

by Pat Minnick

A New York City firm, Victor O'Neill Studios, a subsidiary of Bradbury, Sayles, O'Neill, Paragon, Inc., has been contracted to take the senior photographs for Alfarata, replacing the local company that had done past photography.

The announcement was made at a senior class meeting held Sept. 5.

Under the new system, formal pictures will not be placed in the yearbook. "Candid" shots, placed into a character study of the class member, will be used. Pictures will be taken around the campus and other surrounding areas.

A $7.75 sitting fee will be charged. This includes five candid shots and five formals which are for the personal use of class members.

Photos will be taken between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m., Sept. 27 through 30. All seniors who missed the meeting are advised to contact class officers with regard to the scheduling of the photographs.

Juniata Film Buffs Club Minimum of 12 outstanding films a semester for $1.75. Display of films and tickets now at InFo Desk. Admission is 50¢ a film to non-members.

New Music Instructors Denoted

Dean Wilfred G. Norris of Juniata College has announced the appointment of two part-time instructors in the music department, Mrs. Bruce A. Hirsch and Mrs. Robert F. King, and one part-time instructor in German, Mrs. Bonnie B. Lashlee.

Wife of the music department chairman, Mrs. Hirsch received her bachelor's degree in opera performance from the University of Southern California. She has been featured in several musical productions at Juniata, including the 1971 commencement performance of Menotti's "The Medium."

Mrs. King, wife of Dr. Robert King, associate professor of music, received her bachelor's and master's degrees from the University of Kentucky.

She has been an instructor of stringed instruments in the public schools of Kentucky and Pennsylvania and has taught music at St. Francis College, Loretto, Pa.

Mrs. Lashlee will bring the experience of seven years residence in Marburg, West Germany, to her new position in the German department.

She is a 1956 graduate of Juniata, and she has had further study at Harvard University and the University of Marburg.

Temporary Jobs Available In Europe

Now any student can independently earn his or her trip to Europe by simply obtaining a paying job in Europe. A few weeks at a resort, hotel, or similar job in Europe paying free room and board plus a wage more than pays for the new 1165 round-trip Youth Fare being offered by the scheduled airlines. A couple more weeks on the job earns money for traveling around Europe before returning home.

Thousands of paying student jobs are available in Switzerland, France, Germany, Italy and Spain. Neither previous working experience nor knowledge of a foreign language are required for most jobs. However, to make certain every student gets off to a good start on their job the Student Overseas Service (SOS) provides job orientation in Europe. Jobs immediately available include resort, hotel, restaurant, hospital, farm and sales work. Jobs almost always pay free room and board in addition to a standard wage.

Jobs, work permits, visas, and other necessary working papers are issued to students on a first come, first served basis. Although thousands of jobs are immediately available, applications should be submitted far enough in advance to allow SOS ample time to obtain the necessary working papers and permits. Any student may obtain an applicatin form, job listings, and the SOS Handbook on earning a trip to Europe by only sending their name, address, name of educational institution, and $1 (for addressing, handling, and air mail postage from Europe) to SOS-Student Overseas Services, Box 1812, 22 Ave. de la Liberte, Luxemburg, Europe.

THE JUNIATIAN

VOL. XLVIII, NO. 2 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | September 29, 1971

Sounds of the Waverly Consort: Medieval, Rennaissance & Baroque

The Waverly Concort, an ensemble of six musicians specializing in the performance of early vocal and instrumental music, will perform at Juniata College on October 15. Their current tour to several states is being made under the auspices of the Association of American Colleges' Arts Program.

The ensemble draws on a repertory of over five centuries of music from the courts and churches of the Middle Ages, Renaissance and Baroque. All members of the consort have versatile backgrounds that include not only mastery of their unusual instruments, but extensive study of the history of these periods and their performance practices.

The Waverly Consort made its New York debut in 1966 to the critical acclaim of the New York Times and the New York Herald Tribune.

The instrumentalists of the Waverly Consort perform regularly in the New York area and throughout the Northeastern states under the auspices of Young Audiences, Inc. In recent years they have participated in hundreds of concerts for young people of all ages and have invariably delighted students and teachers alike with their exciting and informative presentations of early music.

In October 1970 the Waverly Consort received a grant from the New York State Council on the Arts for the development of new programs for college audiences. One of these programs, entitled "Las Cantigas de Santa Maria", is a costumed production of music and verse at a 13th Century Spanish Court and includes a narrator-troubador. "Las Cantigas de Santa Maria" made its New York debut on April 7, 1971 at Hunter College, and was hailed by the New York Times as "a performance that can only be described as perfect".

In addition to their performance here, members of the Consort will conduct, if desired, a workshop in which they will demonstrate the remarkable variety of instruments on which they perform, and will discuss early music and its performance practices. Such educational "bonuses", in addition to a formal program, are a regular feature of the Campus Visit Plan pioneered by the Arts Program. The non-commercial concert and lecture agency has served higher education nearly thirty-five years.

New Constitution in Offing

S. G. Seeks Closer Contact with Students

by Kim Hershberger

"As students, we believe it is necessary to provide for ourselves an organization to promote student voice and participation . . . ," thus begins the preamble to the new constitution authorized at the Student Government meeting last Wednesday. The renovated constitution must be ratified by a majority of the students. However, student body president, Jon Hunter, felt the constitution would be given "rubber stamp" approval. Because of the present apathetic mood on campus, Hunter estimated that only five percent of the voters would even read the new government plan.

During the meeting, some representatives expressed what the responsibility of the novel Student Executive Council should be. One suggestion was that the legislators go back to the people to begin feeling the pulse of the campus. Another delegate stated that often in the past the organization has fallen short of student needs. He felt that action must be taken quickly to illustrate the genuine concern of the government.

For this year's Homecoming, representatives decided to operate the traditional queen's contest. No floats or dorm competition will be held. This change of policy was made to alleviate the customary pressure placed on classes in creating a float.

The other business discussed at the assembly included: a deficit budget, a suggestion for bettering relations between the townspeople of Huntingdon and Juniata students, should students register to vote this fall in Huntingdon County and the election of three legislators to the Student Activities Council (the primary policy-making body for dormitory life).

September 22nd. Student Gov't. Meeting

by Henry Siedzikowski

In a contiuing effort to improve communications on campus, the Student Government instituted a plan letting them meet the students easier.

The plan would have Government members visit the dorms informally; and following that, there will be a formal dorm meeting. This will be on a trial basis.

Also discussed at the meeting Tuesday night was an offer for a State Department representative to visit the campus. President Jon Hunter proposed either October 11 or 18 as the date for the visit.

There was also more discussion on the college-town relations. Nothing definite was decided, however. The Student Services Commission was also discussed and there were several appointments to committees.

Ford Announces Advanced Study Minority Grants

The Ford Foundation has announced that three Advanced-Study Fellowships programs will be instituted for the academic year, 1972-73. The Advanced-Study Fellowships programs are open to Black Americans, Mexican Americans and Puerto Ricans, and American Indians, who are citizens of the United States.

Each fellowship award will support full-time graduate study for one year, beginning in either the summer session of 1972 (a twelve-month award) or the fall term of 1972 (a ten-month award).

Applicants must act quickly to meet the deadline. The deadline is January 14, 1972. Instructions and application forms can be secured from The Ford Foundation, 320 East 43rd Street, New York, New York 10017.

Maynard Ferguson Chosen To Please Alumni

by David Andrews

John Denver, the Byrds, Livingstone Taylor, and now Maynard Ferguson. That's right— Maynard Ferguson. Maynard and his orchestra are the feature group for this year's Homecoming concert and dance, Saturday night, October 23.

Just when it appeared that Juniata was beginning to make a habit of attracting entertainment that the students really wants, to this

MERRIMENT OR MADNESS?

Over all lies an aura of hatred. There is a frightening silence like the deathly stillness before a storm. A command slices through the night and the vicious roar of frenzied attack follows. The blackness emits flashes of blinding light, groans of pain, and the sickening sound of falling bodies: the insanity of man against man.

The scene is Juniata's traditional storming of the arch. What began as a lighthearted initiation of freshmen has turned through the years into a violent struggle between freshmen and upperclassmen. The mock battle which once consisted only of egg-throwing and good-natured scorn of the Frosh has become a raging mob of flying fists and cursing tongues.

How can this madness be explained? Is it the multiplication of each individual's contempt that causes the crowd as a whole to go berserk? Do Juniatians really bear each other malice? Is the conflict an outlet for accumulated inner frustration? The answer must be found before more students are injured for a ridiculous cause.

by Smitty campus we are confronted with Maynard. The ironic part of this situation is that the students of the college did not have a say at all in deciding the choice of entertainment. Maynard was contracted without the student body's consent.

A committee including the Director of the College Center, Will Brandau, Director of Alumni Relations, Tom Snyder, and Jeff Bixby chose Maynard and his band this summer. Jody Harpster, the current Student Government vice-president, was also to have been on this committee, but the decision to have Maynard was made before he was even contacted.

Since there may not be too many jazz or big band followers on campus, the students may be glad to hear that Maynard and his group are considered to be one of the best in their style of music. But is this the type of music the students want to hear? Maynard is supposedly famous for his improvisations; however, it is questionable whether students will even be able to dance to this type of music.

Another fact that may disenchant the student body is that Maynard and his group cost $2,500. For a little more money, we could have a group like "Seatrain". That's like substituting "Alphonse Googenheim and his Fireballs" for "Chicago".

Brandau explained that the reason for contracting Maynard was to attract more alumni to this year's dance. Alumni may indeed attend in greater numbers this year to dance to "more of their kind of music." However, it is doubtful whether many students have been practicing their jitterbugging lately!

Brandau further explained that he "can't please everybody all the time," and he is right. But this raises one vital question. Who is Homecoming designed for — the alumni or the students? Homecoming 1971 appears to be the alumni's.

Law School Admission Test To Be Given on Five Dates

The Law School Admission Test, required of candidates for admission to most American law schools, will be given on October 16, 1971, December 18, 1971, February 12, 1972, April 8, 1972, and July 29, 1972. Since many law schools select their freshman classes in the spring preceding entrance, candidates for admission to next year's classes are advised to register for the October, December, or February administration. Registration for this test does not constitute application for admission to law school. Such application must be made by filing appropriate papers with the institutions involved.

The Law School Admission Test is a half-day test. Designed to predict scholastic achievement in law school and to provide information about the undergraduate preparation of law school applicants, the test yields two scores: the LSAT, which is a measure of academic ability, and writing ability, which is a measure of competence in writing skills.

Candidates for the test should secure a copy of the Bulletin of Information, which includes the LSAT-LSAS Registration Form and sample questions. The Registration Form and fees must reach Education Testing Service at least three weeks before the desired test date. The Bulletin includes information about LSDAS, the new admission services and the names of law schools participating in the services.

Over 150 law schools require or recommend that applicants submit LSAT scores. Over 100 law schools participate in the LSDAS. Still other schools welcome reports. Find out from each law school in which you are interested whether you are to take the test and when to take it. Scholarship applicants are advised to register for the October or December administration.

Chang Wu-Kuang, a cab driver, got three days in jail after admitting he pinched a 16-year-old girl because "the hotpants under the glare of my car headlights were too hot for me."

Letters to The Editor

Last year when students gained representation in the Board of Trustees, and other policy-making committees, somehow I was impressed with a new sense of mutual trust, of true cooperation and a willingness to work together, one side with the other. At Men's House meeting last night however, an edict was lowered which seems to indicate, to me at least, a definite warning in this new spirit. The "one on one escort policy" will not eliminate the problem it was designed to stop and also shows a definite reversal of the administration's willing to work hand in hand with the student. Considering all the obvious personal benefits the new dorm policy has created out of a spirit of cooperation, I would hope the persons who designed this and any future rules, would consult the students on the policies that affects us, the students. I would appreciate it!

Chris McFarland '73

Less than a week after entering Juniata College. I attended my first Student Government meeting. I came out of it wondering and questioning. I wondered about the value of traditions here, when Homecoming is being cut back. I wonder about the condition of a student body that is expected to give almost blind approval to a new constitution that will probably affect them all in some way. I question the motivations of a group of people who are saying virtually nothing about being deprived of the right to vote. I wonder most of all, how any group of people, especially intelligent students, could show so little interest in the government that runs their life.

Henry Siedzkowski

Reading for parts in "The Crucible", the year's fall production, will be held on Friday, October 1, at 3:00-5:00 P.M. and from 7:00-9:00 P.M. There are 21 speaking parts, 12 male and 11 female. Volunteers are also needed to be ushers, to help with publicity, and to work on make-up, costume, and scenery committees. The dress rehearsal of "The Crucible" will be performed at the Huntingdon Correctional Institute.

A New Idea In Higher Education To Help Underprivileged Children

Pennsylvania's Senator Richard S. Schweiker played a major role in drafting a higher education reform bill titled, "Higher Education Amendments of 1971." Working to make a reality of President Nixon's dream that "no qualified student who wants to go to college should be barred by the lack of money," the Senator feels that this bill "represents a major breakthrough for higher education."

The bill contains four key provisions:

1. A federal entitlement of $1400 to every student towards full costs of post-secondary education, less personal and family contributions and not to exceed 50% of college costs.
2. Assurances that middle-economic families will receive financial support to help meet the "crisis of soaring educational expenses." "In the past, aid has been limited to university construction, library programs, and other institutional purposes and to disadvantaged families and prorverty children."
3. Authorization of aid to every institution in which a student is receiving an Education Opportunity Grant. Each school will receive money on a student per capita basis in order to assure a degree of fairness between the large universities and small colleges.
4. Guarantees of the improvement of "post-secondary" education rather than just "higher" education. Senator Schweiker stated that "I have always been a strong advocate of improving our vocational education programs and opportunities feeling that our concern with academic degrees has been overdrawn and overemphasized."

In addition, a number of other important concepts are included in this bill:

1. An Ethnic Heritage Studies Center Act to help foster greater understanding by all people of all other peoples.
2. A national study by the Secretary of HEW of the educational costs of all such institutions for the purpose of preparing a uniform national standard for submissions by these institutions of the data per student costs required. This will allow for equity in all cases of federal grants.

The real value of this bill lies in the fact that it focuses upon the student and not the institution. The federal government will not have any voice in determining curriculum or shaping content. This idea is in accordance with the concensus of the Committee that political priorities should be completely absent from this area.

The Senator regards these measures as giant leaps in the field of education and will work diligently for their passage. He said, speaking of the Higher Education Amendments, that "it will do for future generations what the GI Bill did for past generations."

The staff of "The Juniatian" will conduct a sale of old photographs accumulated by newspaper staffs of previous years. These photos range in age dating from the early 1950's until just last year.

It will be great chance for upperclassmen to see themselves in their earlier days at J.C. and for everyone to meet the people, places, and happenings that were Juniata College before the days of open dorms and Super Tote.

All pictures will cost just five cents a piece. So come up to the Snack Bar Lounge Thursday, Sept. 30, from noon to 9:00 at night, and look around. You might discover a memory well worth a nickel.

WAA Exposes Itself

The Women's Athletic Association has met and come up with these activities for women on campus. An intramural hockey program has been organized. Sue Hutt is the chairman. Teams have already been organized and are playing. If you are interested, but not involved, get a hold of Sue and get in on the fun. Some games with Huntingdon High School are anticipated, as, perhaps with some other schools.

Powderpuff football is going again. Many teams are already scheduled to play. Mary Ann Repman is in charge. Watch for season records and team rankings.

Tennis is being organized as an inter-scholastic activity. Miss Dashbach is handling this activity.

The following activities are being organized for later in the year: Badminton (Kathy Barr), an inter-scholastic activity, will overlay the semester break. Intramurally, volleyball and softball (Barb Kulenich and Marsha Saylor, respective chairmen) will be scheduled next spring. More details will be announced when appropriate. There's something for everyone, so enjoy yourself!

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College

Huntingdon, Pa.

REESETABISHED September 9, 1971

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891 and "The Juniatian," established November 1924

SCOTT K. LEEDY, Managing Editor — PATRICK E. FLEAGLE, Associate Editor
DEBI KRAZER, Assistant Editor — ROBERT A. JONES, Business Manager
STEVEN S. KIMMEL, Assistant Editor — WILLIAM E. SCARLETT, Circulation Manager
BRIAN T. MAURER, Assistant Editor — WILLIAM M. DAVED, Photography Editor

ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANTS: Joan Thompson, Deborah Walker, Susan Stalker, General Information; Stephen Crowley, Linda Richardson, Public Relations; Steward A. Kauffman, Sports; Linda Markey, Karl K. Kenoil, Feature Columnists; William Rea, Stuart Treacy, Valerie Priddie, Gayle Truff, Sandra Currier, Margaret Haines, Secretarial; Roger Devonald, Arthur Ritter, Keith Keith, Catharine Real, Layout; Lawrence stem, Ann Grote, Art.

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughtout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students of Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized in Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 1500 — Subscription $5.00 per year

VOL. XLVIII, NO. 2 — September 29, 1971

Lend

Lend
A friend
A helping hand
When he or she's in need.
Then someday,
That person may
Repay your favorable deed.

by Dave Judd

Hypocrisy

You who live upon your untouchalbe pedestal
Turning your back upon lowly sincerity,
Condemning with synthetic-sceptered hands
All but those who deserve your charity.
You who live upon your untouchable pedestal
Graciously, socially lending your time,
Only to peers of similar fraudulency;
I cast off your kingdom and hereby resign.

by Barbara Clain

Perspective on Curriculum

by Karl Kinding

Students on Faculty Committees

Last year, along with the basic curriculum reform of the new academic program, the faculty reorganized its committee structure, creating the Academic Program Committee, Academic Standards Committee, Planning Committee, and Personnel Committee, to implement and administer the academic program. At its first meeting of the year the faculty amended its by-laws to increase, for one year, student representation on the Academic Standards Committee to five, thus establishing a voting membership of five students, five faculty members, and the Dean of the College. Previously, all committees had two students as regular members. As the Academic Standards Committee is responsible for the approval of proposed units (courses), grading policy, academic honors, and other related areas, the five students are in a position to effectively influence policy decisions which vitally affect every student on this campus. Students here and elsewhere have long been demanding more control over these areas of their academic life, and now they have an opportunity to show that they are willing to exercise responsibility as well as control.

Perhaps one of the most important developments evidenced by the new curriculum is the changing relationship between the students and the faculty. Until now it was fairly generally agreed that students were to have responsibilities within a given academic structure, while it was the job of the faculty to determine those structures. For instance, before, it was the faculty's responsibility to see to it that the requirements for a degree in a given area, or major, gave the student a justifiable experience in that field. It was the student's responsibility to choose his major and somehow or other meet its requirements. Under the new program ,the student has the opportunity to develop his own Program of Emphasis, the faculty member becoming an advisor rather than a requirer. Thus, the student is no longer asked merely to act responsibly within a given academic structure as well.

It is within this context that the faculty's action increasing student membership on the Academic Standards Committee seems particularly appropriate. If the College is going to move seriously in the direction that the Program of Emphasis concept implies, then it seems that students must be able to give significant input to decisions on what units will be offered by the faculty. What good does it do to tell someone he can develop his own program if the units from which he must construct it are predetermined? Certainly, the active participation of students of a formal basis in the development of unit or course offerings is a relatively new idea; therefore, it is a step which the faculty has every right to take cautiously. Judging by the past performance of students on faculty committees, though, it seems like a good risk.

This step, even if successful, will not provide the complete answer to the problem of the student-faculty communication at the level where units will be developed, however. For the new program to be successful in letter and spirit, cooperation and understanding will be required as never before. Many other avenues of communication should be explored; in that, it is abundantly clear that under the new program education depends on that communication. Antagonism and distrust will be more than annoying; they will be fatal.

For all those who've ever had the urge to be on television, now's your chance. Juniata Campus T.V. Program needs you! There will be a program meeting tonight, Wednesday, September 29, at 7:30 in the Ballroom Annex. All comers are welcome. Absolutely no experience is necessary!

A professional ABORTION that is safe, legal & inexpensive

can be set up on an outpatient basis by calling The Problem Pregnancy Educational Service, Inc.

215-722-5360

24 hours—7 days for professional, confidential and caring help.

WANT TO BECOME YOUR OWN DEALER

We're looking for representatives to sell

RECORDS - TAPES - STEREO EQUIPMENT ON YOUR COLLEGE CAMPUS

write or call: JEM RECORDS

P. O. Box 1167 Union, N. J. 07083 (201) 964-7947

This Offer Will Not Be Repeated

NSF Announces Graduate Awards For 1972-73

The deadline date for the submission of applications for the National Science Foundation Graduate Fellowships is November 29, 1971. These fellowships will be awarded for study or work leading to master's or doctoral degrees in the mathematical, physical, medical, biological, engineering, and social sciences, and in the history and philosophy of science. Awards will not be made in clinical, education, or business fields, in history or social work, or for work leading to medical, dental, law or joint Ph.D.—professional degrees. All applicants must be citizens of the United States and beginning graduate students by the Fall of 1972, or must not have completed more than one calendar year of full-time or part-time graduate study by the Fall of 1972. Ability will be the sole basis for judging. The annual stipend for Graduate Fellows will be $3,600 for a twelve-month tenure with no dependency allowances.

Applicants will be required to take the Graduate Record Examinations designed to test scientific aptitude and achievement. The examinations, administered by the Educational Testing Service, will be given on December 11, 1971 at designated centers throughout the United States and in certain foreign countries. Further information and application materials may be obtained from the Fellowship Office, National Research Council, 2101 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20418.

Juniata Campus Crier

September	29	Cross Country, at Dickinson	Away
	30	"Juniatian" Old Photgraph Sale, Snack Bar Lounge	noon - 9:00 p.m.
		Television program, Ballroom Annex	7:30 p.m.
		Camera Club and Dark Room Patrons, Blue Room, Ellis Hall	8:00 p.m.
October	1	Dance, "City Chicken", Ballroom	9:00 p.m.
		Deputation Club, Ballroom	9 - 12 a.m.
		Church Relations Council, Ballroom Annez,	10 - 12 a.m.
		Alumni Council Meeting, Faculty Lounge	9 - 12 a.m.
		All Brightbill on church music, Oller Hall	10:30 - 12:00 noon, 4:00 - 5:30, 7:30 - 9:30 p.m.
		Football, Susquehanna	1:30 p.m. Home
		Cross Country, Susquehanna	Home
		Brethren Campus Day
		Men's House, Ball Room	7:30 p.m.
		Film—"East of Eden"—Film Buff's Club	Alumni Hall, 8:00 p.m.
	3	Rock Concert (free), Oller Hall Canyon & Daedalus	5:30 p.m.
	6	Cross Country, Indiana, Clarion, Pitt-Johnstown	Away
	8	Board of Trustees Meeting
	9	Football, Georgetown University	Home
		Cross Country, Lebanon Valley	Away
		Film—"Rebed Without a Cause", Alumni Hall	8:00 p.m.
		Board of Trustees Meeting

Classes Discuss Homecoming

Juniors

The first Junior class meeting of the year was conducted briefly with a small number of students present. The first thing mentioned was that no float will be made for homecoming this October 23rd. President Debbie Welch suggested that anyone still interested in other forms of competition between the classes this year should make their opinion known. There will still be one junior attendant picked for the queen competition at the Homecoming.

Juniors were encouraged to read through the new constitution and vote on it. Support was also solicited for the student government's plans to adopt a new system of hearing student complaints. This would involve dorm visitations every other week by the legislators. The following are the representatives for the Junior Class: Frank Pote; Judy Rosen; Pat Fleagle; Rick Fornadel.

Juniors were encouraged to apply for some of the ten positions available on the Board of Trustees. Application times were to be September 24 in the Student Government office, but interested Juniors are advised to check to see if all of these positions were filled at that time.

The financial state of the Junior Class was not known at the time of the meeting. No future fund-raising plans were announced. The next meeting won't be called until the need arises for the organization of a particular function or project.

For those unaware of their class officers, they are: President - Debbie Welch; Vice-president - Lynn Reed; Secretary - Nancy Oliver; Treasurer - Pat Mannus.

Sophomores

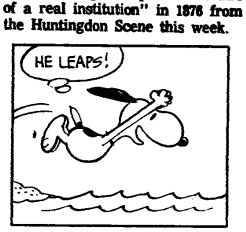
The only main topic open for discussion Thursday night was Homecoming. The floor was open for ideas concerning sophomore representation in some activity during half-time. Suggested by the class officers was a tribute to the Alumni. This would involve hundreds of helium-filled balloons being floated off after an announcement denoting their significance. Hopefully the cost would be under fifty dollars. Adequate support was given to this.

The question was brought up as to whether or not the sophomore class would still build a float despite the lack of competition or judging. It was decided by majority vote that if possible, any interested sophomores could collaborate with members of the other classes in building one great float. Another idea for this would be to have the float displayed at half-time with the Homecoming Queen riding on top. If the other classes agree on the float idea, a meeting will probably be called to organize all students interested.

The treasurer announced that there was definitely twenty dollars and fifty cents carried over in the class account from fund-raising activities last year. Also, only fifty dollars was spent of last semester's allotment for the class treasury, leaving $75. This semester's $125 added to that makes a total of approximately $222.50 in the Sophomore Class treasury.

Beatle George Harrison's "My Sweet Lord" was voted best single record of the year in both the international and British sections of the Melody Maker poll.

The three-story building downtown where Juniata College "blossomed forth and began to put on the airs of a real institution" in 1876 from the Huntingdon Scene this week.

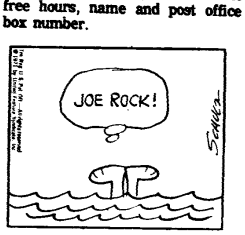


Ensemble Openings

The Music Department will again offer opportunities for interested students to participate in informal ensembles for their own pleasure. Since this program was initiated, many students have been rather surprised to discover the wealth of excellent music which is not too difficult and which requires only a few players. Not only does this provide a source of pleasure while attending college, but also opens up new possibilities for genuine satisfaction after college when membership in a large organization may be difficult or impossible.

Among combinations that have formed in the past are those for flute (or flutes) and strings; clarinet and strings; or clarinet, flute and piano; piano and strings; clarinet, violin (or viola) and piano; brass quartets or trios; soprano and strings; alto and soprano and strings; etc. There exists good music for almost any combination conceivable.

Interested students should see Dr. King in the Music Department, Swigart Hall, room 203, and leave information about voice or instrument preferred, schedule of free hours, name and post office box number.



New Education and Biology Instructors Appointed At Juniata

Dean Wilfred G. Norris has announced the appointment of two new instructors at Juniata College: Mrs. Sally Ondrejcak, education; and Dr. Kenneth M. Singer, biology.

A resident of State College, Mrs. Ondrejcak received her B.S. and M.S. degrees in special education from Penn State University. She also has a B.S. degree in early childhood education from Penn State.

She has worked with the Head Start program in Philadelphia. Last year she was a special education instructor in Coburn, Pa.

Dr. Singer received his B.A. degree from Brooklyn College, his M.S. from Hunter College of the City University of New York, and his Ph.D. degree from the University of Connecticut.

Before receiving his Ph.D., he taught genetics at the University of Connecticut. Since September 1970, he has been an instructor at Parris Hill High School, Chaplin, Connecticut.

Reward Offered for Information on Eagle Killers

The National Wildlife Federation has announced a $500 bounty for information leading to the conviction of anyone shooting a bald eagle anywhere in the United States.

Federation Director Thomas L. Kimball said the reward program was started as a result of hunters throughout the U.S. expressing their outrage at the recently revealed mass slaughter of eagles in Wyoming.

The bald eagle, America's national bird and emblem, is in serious trouble from hard pesticides and diminishing habitat. The southern race of bald eagle found in the eastern half of the U.S. is classified as an endangered species by the U.S. Interior Department. The total bald eagle population in the lower forty-eight states may contain as few as three to four thousand birds.

Since 1940 it has been against Federal law to shoot or otherwise molest bald eagles, but as their numbers decline, illegal shooting is becoming a more important factor working against the bird's survival. A national furor was raised when recent testimony before a Senate subcommittee in Washington, D.C. revealed that air-borne sharpshooters were hired by local ranchers in Rawlins, Wyoming, area to slaughter eagles and other wildlife. More than 65 golden and bald eagles were reported in a pile at one ranch. "Frankly," Kimball said, "American hunters are tired of being tarred and feathered for the actions of criminals erroneously identified as hunters."

Effective immediately, the Federation will pay a $500 reward upon verifying that the claimant's information was of substantial assistance in obtaining a conviction for shooting a bald eagle (Haliaeetus leucocephalus) in violation of 16 USC 668.

The claimant must request the reward in writing to the National Wildlife Federation 1412 16th Street, NW, Washington, D.C. 20036, within six months after conviction. If more than one bald eagle was shot by the convicted person, $500 will be awarded for one bird representing the total number shot.

The Good Ole Days

From the Juniata of 10/7/55

GIRLS MAY NOW VISIT
LOUNGE OF MEN'S DORM

The Senate, Administration, and Men's House committee have approved a trial program whereby women will be allowed to visit in the lounge of the men's new dormitory from 2 to 5:30 p.m. and from 6 to 12 p.m. on Saturdays and from 2 to 5:30 and 6 to 10 p.m. on Sundays.

If, however, when the program is re-examined after Thanksgiving, it is found that the coeds have not been taking advantage of the lounge facilities, or other undesirable situations have arisen, the Senate, Administration, and Men's House committee have the option of revoking the privilege. The program will go into effect this weekend.

Jerry Richards presented to the Senate a petition, signed by 124 students, to have a committee formed to investigate the existing policy and practice for expressing affection in social relationships on campus.

From the Juniatian of 9/27/51

OLD RECORDS PROVE
TIMES HAVE CHANGED

The following gems were taken from the Rules and Regulations of the Brethren Normal School, 1877-78.

* All students, unless excused, must remain in their rooms during evening study hours.

* Students of the two sexes, other than relatives, must not meet privately unless on business, and then only by permission.

* All students are expected to join the Literary Society and to discharge faithfully all duties connected therewith.

Co-education hasn't always been taken as a matter of course. An early JC letterhead contains the following legend:

Brethren's
Normal College
FOR BOTH SEXES
Huntingdon, Pa.
J. H. Brumbaugh, Principal

Things Artistic

by Linda Markey

One of the most bitter disappointments of my past summer was seeing the musical "Hair" off-Broadway. For some reason, I went eargerly expecting the most beautiful and meaningful experience of my life. To me, a beautiful experience is not watching a pregnant woman try to make love to a vacuum cleaner. To me, a meaningful experience is not seeing six, dirty tee-shirt-clad girls squirm out of a stage-length penis. No valid reason existed for showing these obscenities on stage making them even more offensive.

I found it difficult to believe the excitement that "Hair" caused among reviewers and many, many people I know who saw it. The reason may be that since I saw it late in it's run, the cast may have lost some of it's initial sparkle and energy. However, I doubt that even an opening night level of energy would compensate for a total lack of meaning or coherence in the dialogue. Even the dynamic energy of 21 youths could make up for chaotic staging.

I think the original, and in my opinion, uncalled for, enthusiasm for the show was caused by the "older" people trying to be a part of the "youth movement" vicariously. In order to appear in tune with the "hippie" movement, olders felt compelled to show that they can sit through dismal vulgarities without being shocked. One over-30 friend my parents told me had tears come to her eyes when she witnessed the nude scene. She described "Hair" as a religious experience, hoping in that way to plug up holes between our generations. "Hair's" popularity has been perpetuated by that type of audience. I sadly realize that instead of the radical revelation I expected "Hair" to be, all that it is, is just another example of today's demented society.

SPSEA Inducting New Members

The Student Pennsylvania State Education Association is presently in the process of soliciting and inducting new members for the current academic year. The Student PSEA is an organization established for and comprised of persons interested in or majoring in Elementary or Secondary Education.

The initiation fee of $5.75 includes the cost of membership and a one-year subscription to each of the following official PSEA publications: the weekly newspaper, "The Voice", the monthly magazine, "Education Today", and the quarterly PSEA Journal.

Persons interested in learning more about the Student PSEA or desiring information about membership procedures should contact any one of three persons: Esther Phillips-407 Miller; Karen Pepe-127 Tussey; Judy Alson-127 South.

Gathering Storm

by Stephen Wesley

A white dome hangs over the landscape. The sun tries in vain to burn through it. There is no wind to blow it away. It appears not to change at all.

"Do you think it will rain?" someone asks.

"I don't know," another replies.

Students walk to and from classes. The sky has not changed since morning; it is now afternoon. Hot, humid weather keeps students from wearing jackets. The bells ring. Some students rush into the buildings, and others, who have been standing around, walk slowly in.

A bluejay scolds from a group of trees, then a breeze rustles through their leaves. So many crickets fill the air with their music that one can almost hear one unchanging note. A flock of birds flies overhead, silhouetted by the somber sky.

Dark lead-gray clouds appear in the west. A sound like a growling bear occasionally comes from the same direction. Trees bend back and forth in the strong wind. The canopy rapidly slides eastward, bringing the dark clouds. Lightning flashes accompany the growls.

Cars travel by with their headlights on. The dark, cottony sky has transformed day into early evening. The wind plucks leaves from waving trees. Lightning flashes everywhere, followed a few seconds afterward by thunder. It is the flash of a cannon, and then the report.

Something hits the roof sounding like a pellet. There is another, and then several more. It comes down faster, producing a rythmic beat. It slaps the roads, the sidewalks, and the asphalt paths. Changing gusts blow it in changing directions. It collects in pools, flows in streams, and refreshes the air. It is the rain.

One Game Does Not A Season Make (Howard Cocell)

Indians Lose First Game

Aggies Avenge Indians

by Tony Matuzas

Delaware Valley avenged their last year's 28-6 defeat by frustrating Juniata, 21-14. Thes Aggies jumped off to an early 13-0 lead by Jasper Meadow's one-yard plunge and also by Rich Glenn's sixteen yard skirt into the end zone. Meadows scored on a 46-yard drive following a fumble recovery while Glenn's score resulted from an interception.

The Indians first score was set up by Tom Herrman's fumble recovery on the Del Val's 7 yard line. Bruce Brooks banged over from the one with 4:50 left in the third quarter. Mike McNeal's P.A.T. was blocked. The tide of the game shifted to Juniata's favor following a brilliant 59-yard punt return by Sophomore Bob Zimmerman, spotting the ball on the Aggie 13-yard line. Dave Sparks, from the five yard line, zipped into the end zone behind Dave Brown's interference. The Indians gambled for two points, successfully gained by Spark's run on a pitchout into the left-hand corner.

Delaware Valley regained their lost momentum as Dan Gures caught a quick hook pass from Jim Foote and rambled 66 yards to the Indian's five-yard line. The Blue and old defense dug in and held Glenn for no gain on his first attempt. Glenn got one yard on his second try while quarterback Foote made it to the one-yard line on the third play. Glenn was stopped cold on his third attempt, but a dropped flag signified defensive offsides, giving the Aggies one more chance. The emotionally drained defense buckled as Foote sneaked in for the ren made it 21-14.

go-ahead tally. Foote's flip to War-

Delaware Valley coach Bill Graver praised his 588 man squad for coming back after Juniata's go-ahead score. Coach Craver commented on his team's attitude, "I've been coaching since 1952 and this is the first year I've had a 58 man roster and 58 men healthy and ready to play."

Statistically, the Aggies held the edge in first downs, 18-7; 169 yards rushing compared to 63; 233 yards passing v. 59; Delaware Valley's Rich Glenn gained 103 yards in 23 carries for an impressive 4.5 yard average. The Aggies' Guers had 5 receptions, Urban 3 for a total of 180 yards.

photo by Chas Albright

Dennie Weidler, who broke the course record at Albright, is shown here flashing to victory at Delaware Valley.

Cross-Country

by J. Brian Richardson

On Wednesday, September 22, the J.C. cross country team met Delaware Valley on our home course. The Indian harriers came out on the short end of a 36-25 score. Senior captain Dennis Weidler and freshman flash Brian Maurer finished 1-2 with times of 25:28 and 26:05. The Aggies' Don Murphy finished third with a 27:23 clocking.

The whole story of the meet for the winning Aggies was in overall team balance. After Weidler and Maurer broke the tape for Juniata, the next eight runners to finish were all from Delaware Valley. The remainder of the scorers for the Indians were Sophs Jim Bowen, who finished eleventh in 29:51, Soph Mark Edgecomb, twelfth in 30:24 and Junior Scott Williams, thirteenth in 30:27.

The next C.C. meet will be on Saturday, September 25 at Albright College, where there will undoubtedly be a large crowd.

Weidler Sets Course Record

by Stan Kauffman

Senior Denny Weidler paced the Juniata cross country team to its first victory of the season with a 20 to 39 score over the Lions of Albright. Weidler finished the 4.8 mile course in a record time of 25 minutes 54 seconds. Freshman Brian Maurer finished second for the Indians only 47 seconds off the pace set by Weidler. Jim Blankenhorn finished first for Albright, third place in the meet, with a time of 28.02. Sophomore Grant Brewin captured fourth place for the Indians while Wayne Sirer of Albright finished fifth. Sixth and seventh places were both taken by Juniatians. They were sophomore Jim Bowen and junior Scott Williams. This rounded out the scoring for Juniata. Albright was awarded the ninth, tenth, and twelth positions. The next cross country meet will be Wednesday afternoon at Dickinson College in Carlisle.

Lions and Indians Battle for Tie

by Tony Matuzas

Saturday's game with Albright College was marked by numerous interceptions, futile drives, and some bad breaks. The first break came in the first period when Albright recovered a Juniata fumble on the Juniata 29 yard line. Four plays later, Ken Strome scored the first touchdown for the Lions. The PAT was no good.

There were no other scores the first half. Both teams exchanged punts and interceptions with Chunk Kensinger intercepting for the Indians.

The third quarter was much the same story with interceptions by linebacker Bob Waggoner and Steve Gelnett. Juniata put together a drive late in the third period but penalties and incomplete passes ended the drive on the Lion 4 yard line.

Albright was unable to move the ball as was Juniata until late in the fourth quarter. With three minutes to go, Joe Lauver hit Dave Sparks on a 47 yard pass play. Two passes to Rackovan put the Indians on the Lion 29 yard line. Three plays later, Lauver sneaked across to tie the game. McNeal's PAT attempt was no good.

Albright put together one more drive but time ran out with the ball on the one yard line. The final score; Juniata 6, Albright 6.

photo by Chas Albright

McNeal (44) and Grabiak (50) get in on the defensive action as Juniata tied Albright 6 - 6.

THE JUNIATIAN

VOL. XLVIII, No. 3 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | October 6, 1971

Trustee Committees Appointed

Center Board Receives Intramural Activities Comm.

by Dave Sparks

In response to S.G. President Hunter the Center Board welcomed, among its ranks, Intramural Activities. The new post will be called Committee on Sports and Games. Its responsibilities will encompass all sporting events on campus and will work in conjunction with the Center Board and Physical Ed. Department.

The chair will be filled for the first year by Dave Sparks. Last year, as part of Student Government, Dave headed the program of all intramural sports. In making the move to Center Board the post accepts the added responsibilities of the Soap Box Derby races, car rallies, raft regattas and tournaments such as pool, football, etc.

The chair has full voting rights and hopefully will be a good addition to Center Board. There is definite optimism among the chairmen.

When asked about the move to Center Board, Dave responded, "I feel it's a good move for consolidation. It enables the Student Gov. to get out of something it never knew anything about and puts the activities where they belong—with the students on Center Board."

Looking toward the future, things are definitely bright for the new chair. Intramurals hopes to complete a student handbook of I. M. Sports by the end of the term and with its new appropiations there is hope for more sports being included in the program and more sporting activities like skiing trips on weekends, swimming days, and much more.

S.G. Meeting 9/28

by Henry Siedzikowski

The Student Government meeting on September 28 was mainly a business meeting. The main topic of discussion was the budget. The Government seems to be doing a good job of taking care of the deficit produced by last year's Government.

President Jon Hunter nominated ten students to be placed on the Committees of the Board of Trustees. All were approved. They were: Jody Harpster, Mike Rish, Academic Affairs; Mike O'Neill, Scott Gustafson, Pam Herd, Plans and Resources; Bill Rea, Building and Grounds; Bill David, Audit; Debbie Welch, Budget; Mick Vaughn, Nominating; Fred Mason, Finance and Investment.

Finally, it was announced that the dorm visitation would take place at the next meeting on October 5.

GRASS ROOTS

Compiled by Kim Hershberger and Donna Trelease

Each week, the Grass Roots staff selects, at random, the name of a Juniata student, and asks him to contribute an article, impromptu, concerning anything he chooses. What follows is the result of this week's chance soliciting:

Being the lucky (?) individual selected to write this week's column and being at a total loss for a topic, I searched through previous "Grass Roots" for an idea. Suddenly (Flash!), I was inspired by the title of the column — Grass Roots —. Instantly, visions of downy quilts, homemade bread, and blueberry jam (blueberry jam?!) (Keep reading you'll catch on.) floated through my head. Thus inspired, I felt compelled to share with the world my recipe for blueberry jam. Blueberries, being out of season, will require the careful storage regrettably of this world-reknowned recipe from Diane's Division of Bates Kitchens, until next summer. The recipe, having been written from memory is under no guarantee, and the author cannot be reached in a state of emergency(ptomaine or various and sundry related illnesses). However, friends, rest assured, this recipe has been successful numerous times and may, with a little luck, be successful again. Well, down to the business at hand. Here it is (Dah-Dah!) The Recipe.

Ingredients:

3 Dry pints fresh blueberries carefully washed and hulled

4 cups granulated sugar

the juice of one fresh lemon

1 box powdered pectin

7 or 8 glass jam jars

double-seal lids or 1 box paraffin for sealing jars (both may be purchased in most large food stores)

To begin:

1. Sterilize jars and lids in boiling water. Scald for approximately 3 minutes.

2. Remove lids and jars from boiling water with tongs and invert on clean dry towels away from a draft.

3. Working rapidly (but carefully), so that jars do not completely cool, mash blueberries in large (5-7 quart) pot.

4. Add lemon juice.

5. Place pot on high heat and while heating stir in pectin.

6. Allow mixture to boil hard and add sugar all at once.

7. Let mixture come to a hard rolling boil (one that cannot be stirred down) and boil for exactly one minute.

8. Remove from heat and immediately skim foam off top. (For jars to be sealed with paraffin alternately stir and skim for 5 minutes to prevent floating fruit.)

9. Quickly ladle into jars approximately ⅛ of an inch from the top (¼ inch if sealing with paraffin) and seal tightly.

10. Invert double-seal jars only for ¼ hour and then turn over. Store in a cool dry place.

Note: When sealing with paraffin carefully pour slightly thickened hot wax over jam approximately ⅛ of an inch thick covering carefully to edge of jar and seal with a standard lid.

Diane Bates

NOTICE TO FROSH

Any Freshman interested in taking French during the second or third term of this academic year is urged to take the French Placement Test to be administered next Wednesday, October 10, at 7:00 p.m. in the basement of Good Hall, room G100.

County Commissioners "Unhappy" With Student Voting Decision

by Jeffery A. Naugle

Jeff Naugle prepares to enter the Huntingdon County Courthouse where the County Commissioners expressed their views on letting J.C. students vote in Huntingdon.

For the first time in Huntingdon County election history, individuals eighteen to twenty years of age will be voting in the fall general election. Another all-time-first was that Juniata College students could register and those who did, now have the privilege to vote in the Huntingdon County elections. The later issue resulted from an announcement from the State Attorney General, J. Shane Creamer, that college students could be considered residents in their college town and register to vote there. Many counties throughout the Commonwealth opposed this proclamation by questioning its legality, Huntingdon County included.

The basic instructions received by the Registrar of Huntingdon County reads as follows:

"The Federal and State Constitutions and the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania permit a student to qualify to register to vote at his college residence and do not prohibit a student from qualifying to register to vote at his college residence and do not prohibit a student from qualifying to register to vote at his college residence solely because of his status as a student; and specifically, a student whose length of residence at his college satisfies the ninety (90) day and sixty (60) day durational requirefide intention not to return to ments and who declares a bona residence at his previous domicile, or who declares a bona fide intention to remain indefinitely at his college residence, is entitled to register to vote at his college residence. Registrars may inquire into a registrant's qualifications to register and his intentions as to residence, so long as registrars do not discriminate against students and do not direct to students special questions not asked of other registrants."

The Huntingdon County Commissioners, Gordon W. Haverstock, Henry C. McCamant, and James DiCosimo, on the advice of the County Solicitor, A. Lynn Corcelius, openly expressed opposition to this edict.

When asked why, the commissioners expressed their feelings on the College vote as follows: first, they took the legal advice, as always in legal matters, of their solicitor to investigate the law. Second, they questioned whether or not the law was discriminatory in any way, and finally, how the work of one man could over-ride the decision of the Pennsylvania State Legislature by extending the registration dates.

Following the advice of the County Solicitor is easily understood as a precautionary measure. The legality of any vital law deserves study. As for the law being discriminatory in ways against some people, the following cases were cited: The college student, regardless of where he lives while not attending college (excluding Huntingdon County) may register to vote in Huntingdon County, if the sixty to ninety day residency requirements are met or the student may register to vote in his "home" county. This is primarily the upper-classmen who can declare the previous year's residency.

However, a man transferring from an industry anywhere in the U.S. other than Pennsylvania to a local industry, cannot register to vote until he achieves the ninety day residency requirement. The student makes the deadline, while the transferred man does not.

Also there is the issue of taxes. The people living in Huntingdon Borough or County pay numerous taxes related to their residency or they may be working outside of the county spending many hours there and paying the county or municipality occupational or wage tax. But this does not yield to him the privilege to vote in his employing county. While the student who pays relatively little or no tax in Huntingdon County or Borough, has no difficulty registering. It was also brought to light by one of the commissioners, that two of his colleagues living outside the borough of Huntingdon do not have the choice of voting in either the borough or their township elections. They have to vote in the township in which they reside where again the student may make a choice as to the county in which he wants to vote. Just last year, the student 21 years of age, attending Juniata, did not have this choice. The individual was required to vote by absentee ballot. Now, why all of a sudden should the policy change?

Each year the Pennsylvania State Legislature votes on the registration period, which was to end September 13, 1971. Then came the announcement from the State Attorney General, on September 10, 1971, ordering a week extension. This was the third point to the explanation for opposition. Does one man have the right to override the established dates of registration set by the state legislature?

The law has been passed and initiated. It survived a public hearing before three Federal judges in Philadelphia and would probably hold up the same anywhere else. The commissioners stated that "The law is the law" and they will pursue and exercise this law to its fullest extent. The County Commissioners did state that they are still "unhappy" with the law on the college vote. This is not to reflect any displeasure in the eighteen to twenty-one year old vote or the Juniata College student, these two, the commissioners unanimously support. They hoped and felt that a Juniata student who took the time to register in Huntingdon County would also take the time to become familiar with the issues and candidates prior to the election.

Interviews with the Mayor of Huntingdon, M.H. DeForrest, and the men running for borough council, Charles Jamison, Earl F. Rupert, and Thomas Meloy, yielded a somewhat different opinion. All four of these men had no objections to the college vote in local elec-

Continued on page 3

Buddy Rich Brings Beat To Juniata

On October 8 Buddy Rich, the noted jazz drummer, will be performing in Oller Hall. He will perform in place of John Sebastian, the big name entertainer scheduled for that date. On doctor's orders, John Sebastian is vacationing in Italy, and therefore has been forced to cancel all his scheduled concerts. Will Brandeau wants everyone to understand that even though Buddy Rich is replacing John Sebastian, his concert will not count as one of the four Big Name Entertainers scheduled to perform at Juniata this year. Four evenings of big name entertainment are still to come. Will refused to disclose the names of the entertainers scheduled but he promises that they will be at least of the same caliber as the Byrds. Be watching for notice on who these performers are in "The Juniatian".

Faces in Sports

by Stew Kauffman

Dave Sparks, senior tailback on this year's football team, is a history and biology major. He has put most of his efforts in the predental program and is looking forward to attending Dental School next fall. In addition to this dual-major program, Dave is very deeply involved in the extracurricular programs of Juniata College. He participates in varsity football and track and is the chairman of intramural sports. Dave is a member of the Tri-Beta honorary biological fraternity. This year Dave has been appointed chairman of sports and games on the Center Board. Even with this extra work, Dave holds the M.A.C. 100 yard dash record and is co-holder of Juniata's record in the same event. Dave also holds the record for the most yards rushing in a single season. He rushed for 940 yards in his sophomore year with the Indians. This year could be another record-breaking year for Dave. He needs only 121 yards to set the school record for the highest total lifetime rushing yardage. This record is now held by Bill Berrier who piled up a total of 1,857 yards in his four years at Juniata.

Dave feels this year's football team will show much improvement with each game. There is a strong nucleus of upperclassmen with many capable underclassmen on the team. Dave says that the defensive team is very well balanced and the offense is strong and is capable of moving against any of their opponents. Dave feels that the team was "stale" for their opener against Delaware Valley. They came off of two tough scrimmages and went into the game not making their own breaks. They seemed to be waiting for something to happen to set them up. Dave says this problem was corrected for the game with Albright but many mistakes were made. He feels these mistakes against the good strong Albright team made the game what it was.

The Juniata coaching staff was praised highly by Dave. He believes the coaches do a great job in preparing the team for the games and that they have the full respect of their players. Dave feels that Jack Rabine is a very good strategist. Jack is the offensive back coach. Chuck Bunton, the line coach, received praise as being the spiritual leader of the team, in addition to coaching a fine line. Dave says that Walter Nadzak, head coach, is doing a great job in getting the team together. He feels that it takes any coach an average of five years to put a team together when he moves into a new position and that Walt is doing a more than admirable job.

Dave is looking forward to the best track season ever at Juniata this year. Last year was the best and many of the boys are back again. The team finished third in the M.A.C. division last season.

How does Dave feel about athletics as a whole here at Juniata? A factor to remember is that this is small college sports. The sports at Juniata are sports for sports sake and not for the big production as is the case at many of the bigger schools. The people who participate in sports at Juniata do so because they like the sport, not for the large scholarship or the fringe benefits. Because of the size of the school, however, the varsity sports are limited in the number of participants they can accept. For this reason, the members of the teams are representatives for the entire school, not only in their actions in a game but also their actions off the field or court. Sports need the support of the entire student body. It is as necessary for success as is the training of the team. Do your job. Be there for the games.

Perspective On Curriculum

by Karl K. Kindig

Comprehensive Examination

Last year, as most upperclassmen know, the Faculty significantly revised the nature of the Comprehensive Examination. This revision came about largely due to student pressure, and although the major student objective of making graduation non-contingent upon passing the Comprehensive was achieved, this was not the only aspect of the Comp. that was altered. In order to clear up some of the ambiguity which surrounds the new procedure, I discussed the nature of the examination with Dean Norris on September 22. As a result of our discussion, it is possible to report that the following procedure is likely to be followed:

(1) All students who entered under the old curriculum are required to participate in a Comprehensive Examination.

(2) The faculty of the student's major department have exclusive responsibility for determining the nature of the Comprehensive. (Any student input with respect to nature of the Comp. is at the Faculty's discretion.)

(3) Each department must submit its examination(s) to the Program Committee. However, that committee need not approve the examination unless an appeal is lodged from some student or faculty member.

(4) A description of the examination taken by the student and evaluative statements by the faculty members involved will be placed on the student's transcript. Students may have an opportunity to register their own comments at the discretion of the faculty members.

(5) The level of performance of the student on his Comprehensive will not affect the granting of a degree. However, he must participate.

(6) Any student or faculty member involved has the right to appeal at any point to the Program Committee.

The most obvious question which arises from this procedure involves the definition of the word "participate". In conversation with Dean Norris it was learned that the Faculty has not adopted a formal definition of this word and that a general consensus to its meaning has not been achieved. It is thought, at this time, that the Program Committee will be responsible for defining this term more precisely.

Given the fact that faculty involved in a student's Comprehensive are to make evaluative statements which become part of his transcript, the question of a "participation level" of performance should concern few students. Most students probably will try to do as well as they can on their Comp., possibly more so than under the old procedure because evaluative comments are much more discriminating than the "fail", "pass", "distinction" system. Therefore, there is likely to be as much student interest in the content of the Comp. as there was in previous years; although the power of the student to determine that content has been drastically reduced.

This reduction in a student's control over his Comp. should not,, however, discourage him from cooperating with his department on an informal basis as much as possible. Most professors seem genuinely interested in making the Comprehensive Examination educationally meaningful, and they can be expected to generally welcome student suggestions. At this time most department's ideas about Comprehensives are in a state of flux. Consequently, students wishing to express views on Comps. should contact their department chairman within the next few weeks.

At present, it is difficult to evaluate the ultimate effect the new procedure will have on the eight-hundred or so students who will take Comps. in the next three years. It is clear, though, that much more emphasis will have to be placed on student initiated cooperation with his department faculty. If this cooperation is not achieved, there is little reason to expect that the new procedure will represent a significant improvement over the old.

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College

Huntingdon, Pa.

REESTABLISHED September 9, 1971

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891 and

SCOTT K. LEEDY, Managing Editor

PATRICK E. FLEAGLE, Associate Editor — ROBERT A. JONES, Business Manager
DEBI FRAZER, Assistant Editor — STEWARD A. KAUFFMAN, Jr., Sports Editor
STEVEN S. KIMMEL, Assistant Editor — WILLIAM E. SCARLETT, Circulation Manager
BRIAN T. MAURER, Assistant Editor — WILLIAM M. DAVID, Photography Editor

ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANTS: General Information, Susan Stalker, Jean Thompson, Deborah Walker; Community Relations, Stephen J. Crowley, Jeffrey A. Naugle, Linda Richardson; Feature Columnists, Karl K. Kindig, Linda Markey; Business, Thomas E. Alessi, Jean Jarrow, Nancy Tamburo; Typing and Proofing, Sandra Currier, Nancy Floyd, Sara Frank, Carol Garzillo, Margaret Haines, Anne Holzinger, Donna Lee, Janet Mason, Valorie Priddle, William M. Rea, Cynthia Smith, Stuart C. Treacy, Gayle Trofe, Gretchen Yost; Layout, Janet Bartschat, Roger C. Devonald, Margery Herr, Keith E. Klein, Catharine Real, James S. Reiley, Arthur W. Ritter; Art, Ann Grote, Lawrence R. Stem; Circulation, Ralph P. Casale, Denise Deaner, Susan Dochtermann, Marlyn Hoover, Miriam Smith.

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughtout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students of Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized in Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 1500

Subscription $5.00 per year

VOL. XLVIII, No. 3

October 6, 1971

Things Artistic

by Linda Markey

I was pleasantly surprised by the Huntingdon Community Theatre's performance of Seane and Bolderstron's "Dracula". Instead of being bored as I expected, I found myself responding with terror to the excellent stage effects and completely believable performances by the actors. To use any kind of special affects convincingly in a theatre-in-the-round situation is not an easy task. The director, Glen Gress, accomplished this quite successfully. By building a staircase into the set he was able to use different levels of height which proved very effective for frightening entrances of Dracula. The dark, heavy furniture and the dark lighting creating a foreboding atmosphere on the stage and soaring bats and creaking trap doors kept the audience on the edge of their seats for the entire show. The gorgeous costumes of Dracula and Lucy Steward emphasized the dreary atmosphere of Mr. Gress' stage. Particularly notable was a flowing gray silk dress with billowing sleeves worn by Mrs. Bruce Davis as Lucy Steward.

Jim Krut as Dracula and Mrs. Bruce Davis performance as the Huntingdon Community Theatre presented "Dracula".

The cast deserves thanks and applause for not yielding to the temptation to "ham up" the dialogue, which would have changed this Gothic story of terror to a farce. To say lines such as "I'll go quietly" and "Hammer the dagger into Dracula's heart" realistically can be difficult. Since few snickers were heard from the audience, I would rate the actors' attempts at realism a success. Special mention need be made of the fine performances of Tim Krut as Dracula and Lynn Streighton as Renfield, the mad man.

I found only a few technical faults in the production. To me, it was annoying that half the cast used British accents and the other half didn't. Also, at times the blocking seemed tedious and unjustified. Scenes between the two doctors tended to drag. Despite these faults, I would evaluate the performance as very entertaining. If it is indicative of things to come from the Huntingdon Community Theatre, I would recommend that more students attend future performances.

by Rick Mitz

The list of Relevant Issues, as they are called, seems over-whelming: prison reform, women's liberation, crime, drugs, nuclear weapons, pollution, the Vietnam War, feeding the poor, the population bomb, the job market, 1972 elections, minority rights, the student vote, educational reform, consumer information, the legal system, voter registration, foreign relations. .

That's a lot of problems for only 8.4 million U.S. college students to solve. And since education almost always has meant fighting for causes as well as — or instead of — grades, it's no wonder that in-depth disillusionment has draped itself over unsuspecting college students.

The above problems all are maladies that students themselves didn't even create. The philosophy in recent years has been that the world has been bent, folded mutilated, and stapled. For about the last ten years, students thought it was their responsibility to unfold, un-mutilate, and re-staple the parts back together again.

Now it's the dawning of a new era. Evolution of revolution. Sit-ins, teach-ins, riots, confrontations, bombings, moratoriums, rallies and strikes now are mere memories of the Sixties.

After seven years of disoriented student disruptions, the Seventies breezed in. And with them, the War continued and we demonstrated.

. . . and we continued to demonstrate vehemently for and against what we did and didn't believe in. And the nation listened. Not to the message of the student protests, but only to the message of the medium — the screaming headline, the loud newcast, the acrimonious editorial about the student protests.

The problems still are there, but our tactics have changed, if not vanished, according to Drew Olim, a National Student Association senior staff member. Olim said he sees definite symptoms of "withdrawl, defeatism, lack of direction and dropping out."

The Attica incident, and the continuing War are a few of the ongoing frustrations that, Olim said, "have produced feelings of major disillusionment among students." Olim said he sees these as feelings brought on by a national student feeling of innefectuality.

Students have retreated within themselves in a quiet-dissent, self-exploratory way. And the result is a new individuality, a new problem-orientation that might yet solve the problems that violent protest couldn't.

Individualism skips rampant

Continued on page 4

UPTOWN CUT-RATE
1229 MIFFLIN STREET
Food — Magazines

Lucky's Discount Shoes Inc.
715 WASHINGDON STREET

SHERWIN-WILLIAMS CO.
740 WASHINGTON STREET
We're More Than a Paint Store

PRO . . . CON

Pro and Con, Opinion Poll, Viewpoint. . . We've already been called a lot of names and we'll probably be called a lot more before it's all over. But, see, that's good. To hate us, or like us, you have to read us and any newspaper column thrives on that.

We're new. We're different. For years Juniata has been known as the most apathetic, unopinionated campus in Huntingdon, and, for that matter, outside of Huntingdon. We're going to see if that's true, or prove it wrong.

Every week our reporters will be out, asking your opinion on some issue which is pertinent to your life at J.C. Then we will take your opinion, and John Stauffer's opinion, and Joe Byrd's opinion, and Ron Cherry's opinion, and Mary Taylor's opinion, and the opinions of anyone else who has something to say, throw them all together, and present you with "Pro and Con".

And we hope it's the most opinionated thing you've read since that little red book, 'Thoughts of Chairman Agnew'. We would like to be known as the great polarizers of Juniata College in this day of peace and reconciliation.

Every week we'll try to keep you informed on next week's issue. So, if you've got something to say, just write your name on a slip of paper and send it to Pro and Con, Box 667. We'll get to you. If you have an issue we need to know about or report on, let us know. Write it on a slip of paper and send it to us. Now, this week's Pro and Con: Should the Juniatian have a Pro and Con column?

With this burning issue on our minds, we attacked our fair campus. And who should we run into but J. Brian Richardson, frosh. "I couldn't care less. I refuse to answer." Undaunted by such enthusiasm, we forged ahead.

Actually, campus opinion was more receptive to our column than we make it sound. Sure there were people who were disinterested and uncooperative, and we thank you, oh great and wonderful apathetic ones!

We don't need help like that.

For you see, people, in order for this star-studded column to flourish, we need a veritable wealth of opinions. You must supply them.

We need people like Sue Grimes, "You can quote me". or Gene Esterline, "I'll be glad to help", Debbie Trotter, "I know some issues I'd like to see be discussed", or Bruce Hirsch, "Yes, I've got opinions."

This column exists only if you say something. You make it work. This is your chance.

Pro and Con offers no solutions. It is your forum. If you only become more aware, more concerned about the issues that affect us, Pro and Con has served its purpose.

Next Issue: Juniata's Present Drinking Policy: Pro and Con.

Juniata Campus Crier

October

6	Spanish Table — Cafeteria	4:45 - 6:15 P.M.
	Cross Country — Indiana, Clarion, and Pitt-Johnstown at Indiana	Away
7	IVCF — Faculty Lounge	7:00 P.M.
8	Board of Trustees Meeting — Blue Room	3:00 P.M.
	Buddy Rich — Oller Hall	8:00 P.M.
9	Football — Georgetown University	1:30 P.M. Home
	Cross Country — Lebanon Valley	Away
	Film — "Rebel Without a Cause" — Film Buff's Club Alumni Hall	8:00 P.M.
12	Fall Mountain Day
	J.C. Movie Night — "The Battle of Algiers" Kalos Clifton Theater	7:30 P.M.
13	Spanish Table — Cafeteria	4:45 - 6:15 P.M.
	Cross Country — Franklin & Marshall and Bucknell at Frank & Marshall
	French Placement Test — Language Lab (G100)	7:00 P.M.
14	Mountain Day Rain Date
15	Concert Series — Waverly Consort Oller Hall	8:15 P.M.
16	Football — Lycoming	Away
	Film — "Petulia" Film Buff's Club Alumni Hall	8:00 P.M.

Frosh To Elect Four S.G. Members

by Henry Siedzikowski

Are you a freshman with government on the brain? Particularly student government, that is.

If so, the freshman class meeting, September 27, supplied information that could be vital to you. The main topic discussed was the upcoming freshman elections. The freshman steering committee elections were set for Wednesday, October 5. The elections for the four freshman representatives to the Student Government body were tentatively set for a week later. A petition of seventy-five names will be required to get on either ballot.

Also, the head freshman class advisor, Dave Andrews, gave the freshmen who attended the meeting a rundown on some of the events that occur during the school year. Those in the near future include Homecoming and Fall Mountain Day.

Carole King Weaves Beautiful "Tapestry"

by Stuart Treacy

It appears the last few months have really brought out the true talent and genius of writer-singer Carole King. Her second album, "Tapestry", is truly a work of art; she sings songs about love, violence, and good times which have a cohesive quality, making the album a logical progression of music. "Tapestry" has brought Carole King to the forefront of the contemporary pop music scene. The songs are melodious, meaningful, and plain nice to listen to. Her first single "It's Too Late" was a number one hit and was the first exposure of Carole to the music listeners of the country. She truly deserves a name in the music of yesterday as well as today. She has written many songs in the past thirteen years, which include "Will You Still Love Me Tomorrow" done by the Shirelles, "Go Away Little Girl" sung by Steve Lawrence, "A Natural Woman" recorded by Aretha Franklin, and "Hi-Di-Ho" done by Blood, Sweat and Tears. James Taylor did a beautiful version of "You've Got A Friend" also written and sung by Carole King. Because she writes songs of meaning and songs that will be remembered as great ones, she has become the — "King."

Infant drafted — Sidney, Australia, Sept. 15 Jamie Abbo of Sidney has been notified he may soon be drafted into the army. Jamie is 11 months old.

An organgutan in the Topeka, Kansas Zoo paints pictures on canvas. What's more, when one of his oils was entered in a human art show under a phony name recently, it was awarded first prize. While this may say something about the judgment of the critics, the ape's feat has more important aspects. According to October SCIENCE DIGEST, the five-year-old orang, Djakarta Jim, is providing physical anthropologists with valuable information about ape proclivity for tool invention and use— something that has been in serious question until now.

"The Lottery" Facilitates Modes of Thought Symbolism

by Gerald J. Croce

The Freshman class in their Modes of Thought lecture last Thursday saw a workshop performance of The Lottery done by their fellow classmen, members of Prof. Doris Goehring's Freshmen Seminar —Drama Workshop. The performance was given to dramatically emphasize the transition Modes of Thought is making in its treatment of symbolism and man as symbol-maker. The course, so far, has been dealing with the symbolization process in non verbal and verbal communication. It now moves up a level into symbols of myth, ritual, and religion. The Lottery was seen as a means for facilitating this more.

While it may be impossible at the moment to judge the success of the play in terms of the course, it is not impossible to judge it as theatre — it worked, and effectively at that!

The outstanding features of Prof. Goehring's production were effective movement and dialogue. Working with a minimum of scenery and lighting, she and her troupe managed to capture the essence of the play. Her well-trained group of actors kept the action so well paced that the tension increased to where the ending relieved as well as shocked.

In a series of well executed upstage and downstage crossings, and short intense scenes with a minimum of dialogue, the actors established the context for the main action — the bustle, attitudes, and expectancies of the townspeop'e. In colloquial dialogue, they developed the context concentrating on the expectancies. And, at the end they manage to turn the tables on their audience by satisfying them, but in a totally unexpected way. The result: an exciting experience, and exciting theatre. Juniata needs more of them.

Continued from page 1

tions. Mayor DeForrest made a point of saying that he would hope that Juniata students would take an active interest in the community as some have done previously in other aspects. He had hoped Huntingdon would be able to provide the necessary avenues for active participation in town affairs for those interested. It was again the general consensus that the voter should definitely make himself aware of the issues and candidates prior to election day. There was no doubt in anyone's mind that a student could not shoulder this responsibility. The mayor explained that an individual 21 years of age could even accept the responsibility of a town position, "as long as he was willing to sit back a little while and fully understand and familiarize himself with the procedures and laws".

The registration is now closed. During the extended period, 19 Juniata students registered to vote, bringing the total youth vote to four hundred and eleven in Huntingdon County. Last spring's primary registration figure was 16,085 with around 70% of the registered voters turning out or approximately 11,260 voting. At this rate, with 100% of the youth voting, the election cannot be mistreated. The possibility of a political machine at Juniata does exist, but the probability is very low that such would ever happen. The main place a machine could utilize its power, for improvement hopefully, would be in the borough elections. However, even this would be difficult without proper leadership, plus the fact that councilmen are no longer elected by wards, but at large.

Anyone registered for the 1971 November General election will be voting for all of the county offices, with the exception of Sheriff, Prothonotary, and Jury Commissioners. Those registered to vote on borough officials will be electing two councilmen. The law enabling the student vote is here for the time-being at least, maybe permanently. There is no doubt that questions can arise from some phrases used in the instructions to the registrar printed previously in this article. There is also no doubt that each individual voter who decides to exercise the privilege to vote must fully shoulder the responsibility and know the issues and candidates. This is all that anyone expects or can ask of any voter regardless of race, color, religion, or age.

Montgomery Sales Agency
516 WASHINGTON STREET
Telephone 643-1390

GROVE'S FASHION FABRICS
formerly H & R Egolfs
Full Line of Dry Goods, Trim, Notions

STRAIT'S TROPICAL FISH & PET SUPPLIES
522 WASHINGTON STREET
Telephone 643-5070

Help Wanted
Sparetime or full time opportunity. Earn as much as $27.00 per thousand and up thru mail service, addressing and/or stuffing envelopes, handwritten or typed. Guaranteed money making deal. Send $2.00 cash or M. O. for complete instructions and list of firms using these services to — C and S Company, Dept. 971, P.O. Box 522, Harrah, Okla. 73045

FRESHMAN REGULATIONS OF 1926

In view of the fact that entirely too large a number of Freshmen have been conditioned or have failed in one or more subjects in the first six weeks' work, the Men's Student Council, in accord with Section IX, Paragraph 9, passed the following rules which apply to Freshmen men boarding students:

1. All Freshmen leaving the halls after 7:30 P.M. shall sign up with their hall presidents, stating their destination, time of leaving the halls, and time of return. This does not apply to Saturday evening.

2. All Freshmen shall sign up in the men's library record, giving the time of entering the library and the time of leaving.

November 11, 1926
THE JUNIATIAN MAKES MODEST PROPOSAL
"DOWN WITH FOOTBALL, OLE' BULLFIGHTS"

Albright 33 — Juniata 0. Duquesne 30 — Juniata 6. Alfred 7 — Juniata 7. Susquehanna 14 — Juniata 0. Haverford 33 — Juniata 0. Loyola 32 — Juniata 0. In the face of such a record we ask the question. "Why have football at Juniata?"

Football is not a Juniata tradition. In fact, it is considered by the Board of Directors as only an experiment and as such it has proven unsuccessful. It was probably introduced because most other schools had it and because of the advertising the college would get. But as an advertising medium it brings nothing but adverse opinions, and it is now time to consider something which will advertise Juniata favorably or will at least greatly benefit the school: For if football provided physical development for a majority of the students it would be justified, but since it cannot possibly do that, something better should be found.

As a substitute we nominate for the position the ancient and honorable game of bull-fighting. No, don't laugh, this is serious. Think of the marvelous possibilities in it for Juniata. There is probably no school in the United States with such an inter-collegiate sport, and should it adopt this nomination, Juniata would stand supreme. There would be no one to dispute our right and our teams would be undefeated. We could lay down the rules, produce the coaches, elect the All-American team and completely monopolize the field. And if such supremacy would not advertise us favorably, no sport could.

That is not the only point in its favor. Think of the money it would save the school. As lady patrons might object, it would not be necessary for our toreadors to kill the bulls, but only to defeat them. Then three or four bulls should last a whole season, and if one should be slain, the meat would make fine filling for hash, etc. Instead of having thirty men neglect their studies, only a few would have to. Scrub teams would be eliminated, because no scrimmage is necessary, and in the end one man could be the whole squad if he is properly trained and survives for the season.

Coach Nadzak shows the strain of the tight 10-10 score against Susquehanna.

its the RIGHT TIME

Continued from page 2

through the student life-style. Give Peace A Chance chants have evolved into a new soft music, a new gentle sound of manifesting itself in quiet love stories in song. Small shops and co-ops have opened, selling hand-made, back-to-earth clothing and organic goods, a reaction against (de-personalized) mass-produced culture.

But our newly-discovered Student Age of Individualism isn't beneficial if it isn't channeled in positive directions. Hopefully, it isn't self-indulgent, isolated individualism. Hopefully, in developing ourselves as individuals, we'll create the impetus to get back together and then get it all together.

There seems to be a change of consciousness, but, hopefully, not a lack of it. Students are looking for new kinds of solutions. Hopefully, they are no less concerned about the problems.

But if — through the vote and working within the system rather than without it — students can't be effective in changing our environment, another stage of disillusionment — one punctuated with apathy, discouragement and 1950s nostalgia — may set in.

The list of Relevant Issues is growing longer and longer.

ENGLISH'S CARRIAGE HOUSE

Fashions from
John Meyer of Norwich
and
Jonathan Logan

Stop in and Browse

Juniata Does It Again

Indians Tie In Home Opener

Today A Tie — Tomorrow A Victory

by Pat Monahan and Sue Snyder

The odds on the game against Susquehanna were highly in favor of a Crusader victory. The Indians, however, on a great team effort came up with their second tie game in as many weeks. The 10-10 score was an important one for the Indians.

Mike McNeal kicked off for the Indians and the next ten minutes of the game were controlled by the Crusaders. This was reversed when Sal Mercadante (61) intercepted a pass and gave Juniata their first break of the day.

The first points of the game were scored by Susquehanna on a field goal in the second quarter of play. Later in the same period, Mike McNeal (44) tied the score with a 25 yard field goal. The half ended in a 3-3 deadlock.

It wasn't until the third quarter that the Indians were able to attain their first first down of the game. Later in this same drive, Joe Lauver (12) pushed Juniata ahead with the first touchdown of the game. Susquehanna then managed to score and it was again a tie game.

The game was marked with many breaks for both teams. Holding and illegal procedure penalties menaced the Crusaders. Juniata was plagued by clipping, intentional grounding, and off-side penalties. The game ended on a note of controversy when a penalty was called and no play followed.

Congratulations are due to our team on a truly important tie ballgame. Their effort was an entire team effort. A wish for good luck goes out to them as they meet Georgetown U. next Saturday.

Dave Sparks (21) sweeps the end as Dan Greening (10) and Jack Gallie (58) put up interference.

I. M. SPORTS ACTION

by Chuck Barr

The 1971-72 Juniata College Intramural Program got under way last Friday as football, soccer, and tournament tennis held their opening events of the fall season.

In football, the Skunk Hill Institute of Technology and the Anheuser-Busch Bears played a torrid defensive game in the first half of their game. The score at halftime was Skunk Hill 7, Bears 2. In the second half, though, the Bears broke the ice with two touchdowns. but the Bears' defense held them, and the final score was 20-13.

In the second game of the day the Sherwood Hornies bombed the Sherwood Suckers, 57-26. The Hornies combined a stubborn defense with an aggressive offense to go ahead 41-7 at the end of the first half. The Suckers fought back, however, outscoring the Hornies, 19-13 in the second half. Their effort was futile, though, for the Hornies all but had the game wrapped up. Keith Klein starred for the Suckers, scoring three of their four touchdowns.

In soccer, the Plitts won their game by a forfeit when their opposition failed to show up.

The tennis tournament also got underway this week. In singles action, Dana Ono beat Brian Richardson, 6-1,6-1. In another match, Mike Grissinger beat Bob Dellinger by a score of 6-0,6-0.

In doubles play, the team of Fritz and Erwin defeated the team of Belis and Hanna. They lost their second match, though, to the team of Stout and White by a score of 6-, 6-2. Also in doubles action, the Buckwalter-Post team coasted to an easy win over Deb Smith and Sharon Chilcote, 6-0, 6-0.

Dave Beahm and Doug Wolf defeated the team of Drews and Taylor, 6-1 and 7-5. The doubles team that wins the championship will win a prize of 15.00. The singles champion will win a prize of $5.00.

Cross Country Couriers

by Vernne Wetzel

On Saturday, October 2, the Juniata Indians outran the Susquehanna Crusaders for a 25-30 victory in cross-country. In the wet and cloudy conditions, Dennis Weidler once again led the field to finish with a winning time of 25:05. Juniata runners placed first, second, fifth, and tenth. Four more Indians completed the course.

One Susquehanna runner was injured in a fall near the end of the course. He was taken to J. C. Blair Memorial Hospital for an examination. He was released later in the afternoon.

Juniata has six more meets before the Middle Atlantic Conference meet at Temple on November 19. Their next meet is on Wednesday, October 6, at Indiana where they will compete against Indiana, Clarion, and Pitt-Johnstown.

Skunk Hill desperately fought back,

Dore's
Home of
Famous Brand Name Shoes
713 WASHINGTON STREET

WESTBROOK'S SHOE STORE
Shoes and Boots
since 1813

Juniata Nipped

by Mike Finkle

The Juniata cross country team lost a close 29-28 meet to Dickinson on September 29. Senior captain Dennis Weidler finished first on the Dickinson Camp Shand course with a time of 23:42. Promising frosh Brian Mauer finished second to Weidler for the third straight contest, flashing a clocking of 24:08.

Dickinson harriers Tim Quigley and Kurt Olafsen took third and fourth, followed by JC's Grant Brewin in fifth position with a time of 26:22. Jim Bowen and Mark Edgecomb rounded out the Juniata scoring with ninth and twelfth place finishes, respectively.

The loss set the Indians record at 1-2 for the young season, Coach Swinderman's charges face Susquehanna in a home meet on October 2nd.

DeFranceso(22) looks for running room.

THE JUNIATIAN

VOL. XLVIII, No. 4 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | October 13, 1971

Buddy Rich and Orchestra Deliver Amazing Performance Despite Delay

by Linda Markey

Despite doubts about his hearing and being unable to find the right Pennsylvania Turnpike exit, Buddy Rich proved to be a dynamic performer. He was immediately able to create a rapport with an impatient audience making them forget the hour delay. His performance on the drums was awesome. Even those who are ignorant of drumming techniques were aware that his feats on the drum were incredible. His efforts were justly rewarded with a spontaneous ovation unlike any I've seen since Dick Gregory spoke.

The other members of the Buddy Rich Band were also impressive. The youthful group of musicians shared equally with their leader in talent and enthusiasm. Particularly enjoyable were the trumpet and saxaphone solos. Being used to the chaotic performances of most rock groups, I appreciate the discipline and unity that this professional group showed.

The only thing that disturbed me about the concert was Mr. Rich's uncalled rudeness towards Jeff Bixby, the sound technician. The inadequacies laid not with Mr. Bixby but inferior sound equipment.

I hope that all of Will Brandau's "Big Name Entertainment" evenings are as generally delightful as this "Little Entertainment" evening was.

photo by Borden

Buddy Rich leads his band in another exciting number.

A Student's Reaction

"No, Buddy Rich is not a non-dairy coffee creamer or an underarm deoderant. Before last Friday night, to most Juniatians, (and especially to Jeff Bixby; post-symphonia) he could have been either one of these items. "Heavier than Tex Ritter, some might say. "Better than Grand Funk Railroad," say others. I'll stick with the latter.

photo by Borden

Buddy Rich starts one of his fantastic solos.

N.S.L. Effectively Organizes College Student's Interests

by Kim Hershberger

We, as students of Juniata, now have the opportunity to influence American politics and society. Juniata and other colleges and universities throughout the country have been invited to become members of the National Student Lobby. The National Student Lobby is a non-profit, registered lobby in Washington, D.C. It is the only national student organization with a tax status that allows it to lobby Congress in behalf of student interests. The positions taken by the NSL will be based upon the results of referenda put before the students of member colleges.

One out of every five Americans eligible to vote in 1972 will have that power because of the 26th Amendment to the constitution. In a majority of states, the number of these potential young voters exceeds the vote margin of the 1968 presidential winner. If the college students of this country can effectively organize, this bloc of newly enfranchised policies will have the ability to influence decisions made in Congress.

Members of Juniata's Executive Council have recently polled the students to find the general opinion concerning Juniata's membership in the National Student Lobby.

Concerning Subscriptions

This year, the staff of the Juniatian is extending to Juniata alumni, parents and relatives of students, and interested friends, the opportunity of receiving "The Juniatian" at their homes. The staff is reinstating a subscription service for the 1971-1972 academic year. The Juniatian is published each Wednesday of every week thoughout the academic year (except during vacation and examination periods) by interested students on a voluntary basis. Copies are mailed from Huntingdon, Pa., immediately upon publication.

If you would like to receive the Juniatian this year, please notify the staff by writing to: The Juniatian, Box 867, Juniata College, Huntingdon, Pa., 16652.

You may enclose a personal check in the amount of $5.00 or you may request the staff to bill you. "The Juniatian" will be sent out immediately upon receipt of subscription request.

The Juniata Dames has announced its second annual Student Aid plan. Instead of spending money on faculty Christmas cards, the Dames are urging students to send a check for a like amount to the Student Aid Fund, o/o Financial Aid Office, Juniata College. This tax deductible money will help a student in need of financial assistance. For more information call Mrs. Donald Mitchell (643-5616) or Mrs. Earl Mollohan (643-5210). All checks are due by December 6, 1971.

Meets high level officials

Hunter Visits Presidents Conference in Washington

by David M. Rieker

Jonathan Hunter, Student Government president at Juniata College, attended the Third Annual President to Presidents Conference in Washington, D.C., October 1-3, with the Dean of Students of Juniata, Dr. Charles W. Schoenherr. The Association of Student Governments sponsored the conference to inform student leaders and school administrators of present political currents.

Student Government presidents from colleges and universities of the nation, accompanied by an administrator, met with members of the Nixon administration to get an idea of just what is happening in the nation today. Among the guest speakers were George Romney, Secretary of Housing and Urban Development; John Ehrlichman, Special Assistant to the President; Elliot Richardson, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare; Rep. Pete McCloskey and Senators George McGovern, Edmund Muskie, Birch Bayh, Fred Harris and Hubert Humphrey.

Hunter, a senior from Modesto, California, said that it was a very valuable week-end because he was given a chance to see what government administrators are really like. He was impressed by a few, though many seemed to avoid confrontation with the students themselves.

With the ratification of the 26th Amendment to the Constitution, the position of University politics in relation to national politics will be greatly altered. At a conference such as this, the exchange of ideas between university and administration should create a better understanding on both sides.

S.G. Meeting 10/5

by Henry Siedzikowski

Dorm visitation was supposed to be the main item on the agenda for the Student Government meeting of October 5. The visits were postponed until October 12. One topic that will be discussed is the possibility of joining the National Students Lobby. This is an organization set up to lobby for students' views on a wide spectrum of issues.

Plans were also announced for the Student Government's part in the Board of Trustees meeting, October 8-10. The Trustees ate in our cafeteria Friday night and Saturday afternoon. They also had student escorts for both meals.

Hiroshima

On Thursday, October 14, at 8:00 p.m. in Oller Hall the movie Hiroshima Mon Amour will be shown. It is a French film directed by Alain Resnais who also directed Last Year at Marienbad and Je T'Aime, Je T'Aime. The film is in French with English subtitles. Two lovers, trapped in their remembrances of the Second World War with no hope for the future, are the main characters. It is a memorable movie which should not be missed.

Dr. Kuenne Directs Seminar

Dr. Robert E. Kuenne, professor of economics, Princeton University, is directing a series of seminars on model building at Juniata College at 1:30 p.m. each Friday afternoon through October 29.

According to Dr. Ronald Cherry, professor of economics at Juniata, the object of the sessions is to stimulate discussion and ideas for the structuring of courses and the improvement of the curriculum. Seminar participants include faculty and student representatives from the mathematics, economics, political science, psychology and sociology departments.

Dr. Kuenne is a graduate of the University of Missouri. He received a master's degree from both Washington University and Harvard University, where he also received his Ph.D.

He is the director of the General Economics Systems Project at Princeton. In addition, Dr. Kuenne is professor of economics of the United States Army War College, Carlisle, Pa., and consultant Institute for Defense Analyses.

The author of several books on economic theory and military strategy, Dr. Kuenne is a member of the American Economic Association and the Regional Science Association.

TOGETHER

Another day, another month, another year will never come back — never;
the summer passed, and WE are here.
Are we REALLY here as ever?
"How are we going? — is my question,
and may I give a small suggestion:
Let's go like this—
Not left or right
But straight ahead,
Not hate and fight
But head to head,
Not gap, but step
A step — together.
And man with man
And heart to heart
And hand in hand
Through life that's hard.
The war and hate should come to end
Perhaps right now, may be for ever
If only could we comprehend
With our souls — the word TOGETHER!

T.C.B.

LIFE SHADOW

I sit here watching
The people running
Talking and playing
And wonder what
They're all saying
Goin' around not a
Care in their mind
I wonder what
They expect to find
Do they look for
The reason why
people live and die,
Or is it that it just Doesn't cross their mind
One often wonders
If life's worth the pain
Are people real
Or just a bunch of names?
The question arises;
To stay alive or die
It might just be better to Stay around and see why.

by Eric Severance

Things Artistic

by Linda Markey

The cast for Arthur Miller's The Crucible has been announced. Members of the cast are:

Betty Parris — Judi Alson
Rev. Samuel Parris — Chris McFarland
Tituba — Sue Schuldiner
Abigail Williams — Sally Diehm
Susanna Wallcott — Wendy Bills
Mrs. Ann Proctor — Diane Miller
Thomas Putnam — Jeff Wood
Mercy Lewis — Linda Markey
John Proctor — Paul Miller
Rebecca Nurse — Vicki Harris
Giles Corey — Brad Rudy
Rev. John Hale — Dave Herberling
Elizabeth Proctor — Sandy Dolinsky
Frances Nurse — Steven Crowley
Ezekiel Cheever — Craig Manhart
John Willard — Lenny Brooks
Judge Hawthorne — Christopher James Danforth — Terry Tomasetti
Sarah Good — Barb Rice
Hopkins — Ben Brigaman

The play will be given on Thursday, November 5 and Saturday, November 6 in Oller Hall at 8:15 p.m. The production is being directed by Doris Goehring, Assistant Professor of Speech and Theater.

"The Crucible," explains Mrs. Goehring, "is concerned with the Puritan purge of witchcraft in the 17th century New England Salem village. Historical facts provide the background for this thrilling drama and at the same time present parallel issues of our contemporary society. Mass hysteria can still condemn innocent, compassionate and honest men and women. Arthur Miller depicts the individual conscience in conflict with the civil society placing an emphasis upon the terrifying course of intolerance and bigotry." This play should not be missed. Be sure to remember to attend on November 5 and 6 at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall.

by Ann Grote

Amidst the swelter of the 1971 summer re-runs, there were scattered bits of refreshment in the form of dramatic specials. One of the most acclaimed was the British presentation of "The Six Wives of Henry VIII". The period effect of the six hour-long shows was enhanced by the emphasis on a stage-type filming. Movements of the

Continued on page 4

Perspective On Curriculum

by Karl K. Kindig

Transfering Credit from Freshman Year

One of the perennial questions asked by incoming Freshmen is whether they will be able to transfer credit for their work at one institution to another. The seemingly specialized nature of the Freshman Program at Juniata has intensified this concern for many of the members of the Class of 1975. In an age when there appears to be a growing trend toward more locational fluidity at the undergraduate level, this concern is legitimate and ought to be spoken to as intelligently as possible—even in the absence of any "hard" data.

The first point which should be made (and which will be made again) is that a given institution can never guarantee that any credit for work done there can be transferred to another school. Accepting transfer credit is ultimately at the discretion of the receiving school. However, there are some meaningful generalizations which can be made about the probability of successful transfer.

The two principal criteria by which most colleges accept or reject credit transfers are: (1) the degree of equivalence between the material one wishes to transfer and material taught by the receiving school and (2) the level of the student's performance in that work. These two considerations will be discussed separately.

The rationale for the equivalence requirement probably rests on the assumption that the receiving school should only give credit for work it deems academically justifiable, and one way to determine this is by analyzing the material in its own curriculum with respect to that proposed for transfer. At one time many schools demanded a high degree of correspondence between catalog descriptions, or even titles, of material before they would transfer credit. However, in the last few years a more "liberal" policy has been followed, especially among private, liberal arts colleges. (As a general rule it is easier to transfer credit to small, private schools than it is to state universities, one reason being that many private schools depend on transfer students to balance the budget.)

With specific regard to Juniata's Freshman Program, "Human Existence-Historical", "Writing Program", "Modes of Thought", and "Freshman Seminar" will probably be transferred with decreasing ease. "Human Existence-Historical" and the "Writing Program" resemble, fairly closely, the standard "Western Civilization" and "Freshman Composition" courses, at least with respect to their content, if not their objectives. Schools which offer general methodology courses may give credit for "Modes", but this is more uncertain. The "Freshman Seminar" is anybody's guess. The best procedure to follow in this case would be to write a detailed description of the particular seminar and have it signed by the faculty member in charge. Even at that, chances are not overwhelming that credit for this unit can be transferred.

Concerning the second criterion, students wishing to transfer Freshman units will be greatly helped by the grading policy adopted for the new curriculum (see this column in the Sept. 22, 1971 issue of The Juniatian). Most schools require a "C" or better grade on material before they will transfer credit. Under the old grading policy units graded on a "Satisfactory-Unsatisfactory" basis (as are all the units in the Freshman Program) probably could not be transferred to many schools. However, in light of the new policy an explanatory note from the Registrar should overcome this obstacle.

It is obvious that the Freshman Program units were designed as integral parts in the total structure of the new curriculum. However, they were also designed to stand alone on their own academic merits. As I reflect on the planning and implementing stages of the development of the new curriculum, I cannot recall a single instance when thought was given to turning the Freshman Program, or any other part of the new curriculum, into academic flypaper. Although it must be reiterated that nothing can be guaranteed about transferring credit, it is my opinion that given Juniata's academic reputation students should not encounter insurmountable barriers in attempting to transfer credit, if they so wish.

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College
Huntingdon, Pa.

REESTABLISHED September 9, 1971

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891 and

SCOTT K. LEEDY, Managing Editor

PATRICK E. FLEAGLE, Associate Editor — ROBERT A. JONES, Business Manager
DEBI FRAZIER, Assistant Editor — STEWARD A. KAUFFMAN, Jr., Sports Editor
STEVEN S. KIMMEL, Assistant Editor — WILLIAM E. SCARLETT, Circulation Manager
BRIAN T. MAURER, Assistant Editor — WILLIAM M. DAVID, Photography Editor

ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANTS: General Information, Susan Stalker, Jean Thompson, Deborah Walker; Community Relations, Stephen J. Crowley, Jeffrey A. Naugle, Linda Richardson; Feature Columnists, Karl K. Kindig, Linda Markey; Business, Thomas E. Alessi, Jean Jarrow, Nancy Tamburo; Typing and Proofing, Sandra Currier, Nancy Floyd, Sara Frank, Carol Garzillo, Margaret Haines, Anne Holzinger, Donna Lee, Janet Mason, Valerie Priddle, William M. Rea, Cynthia Smith, Stuart C. Treacy, Gayle Trofe, Gretchen Yost; Layout, Janet Bartschat, Roger C. Devonald, Margery Herr, Keith E. Klein, Catherine Real, James S. Reiley, Arthur W. Ritter; Art, Ann Grote, Lawrence R. Stem; Circulation, Ralph P. Casale, Denise Deaner, Susan Dochtermann, Marlyn Hoover, Miriam Smith.

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughtout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students of Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized in Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 1500 — Subscription $5.00 per year

VOL. XLVIII, No. 4 — October 13, 1971

Juniata Campus Pinochle Rules Finalized By Poll

Lately, there has been much confusion over the rules of the game of Pinochle. As a public service, we, certain members of the staff of the Juniatian (Art Ritter, Roger Devonald, Keith Klein) have conducted a telephone poll concerning certain aspects of the rules. We telephoned every residence hall (worth mentioning) on campus and asked the person who answered (provided he played pinochle) questions concerning bidding, value of meld, leading cards, trump, kitties, and game values. The answers we got were varied and in some halls, like second floor North, East Wing, there was no one who knew how to play. From what we got, we did our best to come up with the rules by the majority of the halls and here they are:

1. The bidding is done on an Auction basis; the bidding continues until all but one drops out.

2. The minimum bid is 21, and if the dealer is stuck with the bid, it's 20.

3. The value of double pinochle is 30.

4. The game ends when one set of partners reaches 120 or higher; however, they must take the bid in order to go out.

5. The one who takes the bid can lead any card he wants on the first trick.

6. When a non-trump card is led during the game, it must be beaten if possible, i.e. if a nine is led a jack or higher must be thrown by the second person if he has it.

7. Trump must be beaten in the same way.

8. There is no kitty.

9. There is no negative value at which the game ends.

So these are the rules. If you have any arguments or gripes, write to The Juniatian, P.O. Box 667.

Letters To The Editor

Letters to the editor should be addressed to: Editor, The Juniatian, Box 667, Juniata College, Huntingdon, Pa. 16652. The editors reserve the right to print only non-libelous and responsible contnt and to dit all letters and commentaries submitted to The Juniatian. The staff also reserves the right to publish all full signatures unless the writer can supply valid reason for omitting his name.

This year's Freshman class is starting something new. The class of '75 will be the first class to go three terms a year instead of two semesters. They will also be the first class to be denied credit for "D" grades. Along with these two innovations, be they good or bad, comes a third, which is the dropping of the language requirement. In this policy, if anywhere, the class of '75 is being cheated. The upperclassmen will probably all agree that taking a language, whether French, German, or Spanish, has given them a much broader education. This, in its own worldly way, has made these students better men and women.

Why all the students now in the upper classes were obligated to gain competency in a foreign language is a hard question to answer. The policy probably came about at a time when the people of the Middle Classes were able to send their children to college. Prior to the Second World War, the rich and affluent were the only Americans able to send their children away to school and to distant lands after graduation from college. And, while in college, these students would learn to speak at least one foreign language. Then, after these students grew old and had children of their own, they could assume positions of influence (such as those of wealthy alumni or members of the Board of Trustees) to insure that their own fine children could enjoy the privilege of working hard to attain fluency in a foreign language. This is my own personal theory of how the wonderful tradition of a language requirement came to be today.

While the upperclassmen still benefit from this custom of old, the unlucky freshmen must suffer. He will never know the joy of being laughed at after having blown a French phrase, or being told the correct pronunciation of "Monsieur" by a professor who cannot even pronounce the English version of the same word correctly himself. In addition, Juniata's new students will never experience the satisfaction of writing a truly worthwhile composition about a book lying on a desk.

Probably the most severe loss to the new frosh will arise from being unable to participate in the greatly entertaining and thrillingly esoteric conversations and fellowship-sharing which is experienced at the language department's weekly foreign language dinners. For most students, these meals are the brightest spots during their stay at Juniata, because this is the only place they ever get the chance to use French, Spanish, or German in their lives. And, after slaving for two or three years to learn one of these languages, they enjoy using it on occasion (and these meals are probably the only occasions they will ever have!).

Why should Juniata freshmen, who pay the same tuition as the upperclassmen, be cheated out of a good part of their education? I guess this is merely another case of America's finest institutions and traditions falling apart. Maybe after this first year of experimentation, the administration will see their mistake and amend it.

Craig Goeckel

Dear Editor:

Concerning the football game on Saturday, October 2: I assumed that the non-drinking policy on Juniata College property pertained to visitors and to those over 21 in addition to students and faculty. But much to my amazement as I was watching the game, men lining the fence (not from campus) by South Dorm were drinking Rolling Rock from pony bottles. Also as I was leaving the South Dorm porch a man was picking up his empty Schmidt's cans.

I don't see why these people can't abide by our laws in public if we have to in private. If there's so much fuss on campus about the drinking policy, why isn't the enforcement even all the way around? Nice Example!

A P.O.'d Student, '73

STRAIT'S TROPICAL FISH & PET SUPPLIES

522 WASHINGTON STREET

Telephone 643-5070

G. C. MURPHY CO.

528 Washington Street

The Complete Variety Store

Jones Brass In Residence at P.S.U.

The five members of the Philip Jones Brass Ensemble will be in residence at the Pennsylvania State University from Monday, Oct. 11, through Saturday, Oct. 23, as Visiting Fellows of the Institute for the Arts and Humanistic Studies.

The quintet, whose members are first-chair brass instrumentalists from London orchestras, was founded in 1961 and has pioneered the present day performances of brass chamber music in England.

The members include Philip Jones and Elgar Howarth, trumpets; Ifor James, horn; John Iveson, trombone; and John Fletcher, tuba.

During their stay they will present a concert of British contemporary music at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday, Oct. 13, in the Recital Hall of the Music Building. This is open to the public without charge. On Saturday, Oct. 16, the ensemble will offer a program sponsored by the University Artist Series at 8:30 p.m. in Schwab Auditorium.

Each day, the group will devote its mornings to individual instruction of students. Afternoons, they will coach ensembles, and evenings, the brass sections of the Penn State Symphony, the Penn State Wind Ensemble, and the Penn State Blue Band.

There will be a reception to welcome the ensemble Tuesday, Oct. 12, from 5:30 to 7 p.m. in the Fireside Lounge of the Nittany Lion Inn.

MABLE EMFIELD'S
BEAUTY SALON
306 - 7th STREET
Hair & Wig Styling a Specialty
All Beauty Services
Telephone 643-5440

TEXAS
LUNCH

316 7th STREET

Open 7 Days

We Specialize in Home Cooking

Try Our Texas Hots

Telephone 643-4030

The most Meaningful Semester you'll ever spend... could be the one on World Campus Afloat

Sailing Feb. 1972 to Africa and the Orient

Through a transfer format, more than 5,000 students from 450 campuses have participated for a semester in this unique program in international education.

WCA will broaden your horizons, literally and figuratively . . . and give you a better chance to make it—meaningfully—in this changing world. You'll study at sea with an experienced cosmopolitan faculty, and then during port stops you'll study the world itself. You'll discover that no matter how foreign and far-away, you have a lot in common with people of other lands.

WCA isn't as expensive as you might think; we've done our best to bring it within reach of most college students. Write today for free details.

TEACHERS: Summer travel with credit for teachers and administrators.

Write Today to:
Chapman College,
Box CC28, Orange, California 92666

Juniata

CAMPUS CRIER

October

13	Cross Country: Franklin & Marshall and Bucknell at F&M
	Guy Britton — Ballroom	8 A.M. - 8 P.M
	Planning Committee — Dr. Norris' office	4 P.M.
	Spanish Table — Faculty Lounge	4:45 - 6:15 P.M.
14	Mountain Day Rain Date
	Film — "Hiroshima, Mon Amour" — Oller Hall	8 P.M.
	Special Activities Meeting — Ballroom	9 P.M.
15	Concert Series: "Waverly Consort" — Oller Hall	8:15 P.M.
16	Football — Lycoming	Away
	Films — "Petulia" and "Great Comedies" — Alumni Hall Film Buff's Club	8 P.M.
17	Soap Box Derby — Oneida Street between 17th and 15th Streets	1 P.M.
20	Cross Country — Elizabethtown	Away
	Spanish Table — Faculty Lounge	4:45 - 6:15 P.M.
	Russian Film — "Ballad of a Soldier" — Oller Hall	8 P.M.
21	Chess Club Meeting — Ballroom Annex	7 P.M.
22	Gay Nineties Night
23	Homecoming Weekend
	Football — Wilkes	1:30 P.M. Home
	Cross Country — Saint Francis	Home
	Formal Dance — Maynard Ferguson

"College is a place to learn how to drink."

Pro-Con: J.C. Campus Drinking Policy

Juniata's official drinking policy as stated in "Ye Olde Trusty Student Path Finder" is— "Any child possessing, using, or calling at-used or is using alcoholic beverages shall be subject to disciplinary action."

The unofficial policy is "There sure is a lot of difference between 'shall be sugject to disciplinary action' and the actual discipline."

Well, what do you think about that?

With this question burning in the pits of our stomachs and an extra shot of liquid courage burning in our throats we set sail upon our dry campus.

Immediately our Mayflower came across Harry Klug, our leading spokesman of puritan liberalism. "In over twenty years of teaching I've seen may students ruined because of their inability to handle alcohol. Removal of the ban will lead to some students drinking who did not drink before. With an increase in drinking there will be a greater possibility of students incapable of drinking in moderation. This could result in seriously impaired class performance."

John Fike echoed Mr. Klug's sentiments, "Drinking on campus would detract the student from gaining an education. We must also remember the non-drinker under the new situation. It could detract from his education. I feel there is still a definite need and demand for dry campuses. Juniata could fill that bill. We should not allow ourselves to contribute to the delinquency of minors."

Returning home late one night after doing fired research on our question in the new dorms, dared if we didn't stumble upon Merle Lightner, our campus cop. "I'm for the present drinking policy because one's main purpose at Juniata is an education. The obvious consumption of alcohol draws one's attention from education and places tention from education and places it on less important matters or nothing."

We even talked to some students. One young lady did not want to see a change for fear of periodic raids by state police and other local officials. And one male student wanted to continue the present policy because he felt a change would result in contributions from Juniata's conservative supporters.

Halfway across our sea of controversy, we ran across some hard core middle-of-the-roaders Les Canning and Karl Koval both agreed "there is no need for a policy change when we can drink all we want now". Or in the words of Charles Mowry you have to work to get caught.

Suprisingly, there were people who would like to see a change. Milton Da Silva said "I would like to see Juniata College do away with any official policy of alcoholic beverages, mainly because it is no longer a question of morality. Dave Henrie went him one better. He would not only like to see the college take no stand on the issue, but also would "like to see the drinking age in Pennsylvania lowered to 18." Shooting straight, Philbrook Smith said "College is a place to learn how to drink."

Mike O'Neill, because of his position as hall counselor, felt he must enforce the present school policy. However, personally, he stated "I would like to see an open drinking policy and placing enforcement in the hands of state officials."

Many students envision a scholastic country club where 21 year old students could legally participate in the time-honored tradition of boozin', and underclassmen would take their chances with the powers that be.

We end this week's Pro and Con with one small reminder: 70% of your parents voted against a change in policy on last year's questionnaire — didn't they teach you anything?

Next week: Does Juniata's atmosphere breed apathy in its students?

P.S.—We're open for topic suggestions. Box 667.

MUMS FOR HOMECOMING

Order one for a friend or relative. Orders will be taken October 12, 13, 14, 19 and 20 in Ellis Hall Lounge, or by any Beta Beta Beta member. The price is $1.50 per mum.

+ Album of the Month +

Carole King — "Tapestry"

reg. $5.98 now $3.99

Words and Music Mezzanine

Miller's
A Center for Family Shopping

Frosh Elect Steering Comm.

by Pat Minnick

Tom Cross, Marlyn Hoover, Tom Kurtz, Dana Ono, Eric Severance, Sue Stalker and Bill Walters were elected to the Freshman Steering Committee, Oct. 6.

In the election which was held in the lobby of Ellis Hall during the lunch and dinner hours, each balloter cast one vote for five of the 18 candidates.

The voter turnout was over 300 frosh, which was 75 per cent of the class.

Freshman Women's Judicial Board elections were also held at the same time and place. The winners were Wendy Bills and Denise Hartman.

The following is a list of all candidates and the number of votes that they received:

Freshman Steering Committee—Tom Cross, 144; Marlyn Hoover, 75; Tom Kurtz, 67; Dana Ono, 196; Eric Severance, 70; Sue Stalker, 77; Bill Walters, 74; Wendy Bills, 41; Geoff Clarke, 63; Howie Nathan, 60; Jim Reiley, 59; J. Brian Richardson, 46; Jody Rosenhoover, 44; Rich Savage, 64; Cindy Shore, 45; Judy Swartley, 47; Rich Taddonio, 41; Sarah Young, 59.

Women's Judicial Board—Wendy Bills, 47; Denise Hartman, 71; Barbara Clain, 22; Jayne Keirn, 39; Diane Schaal, 26.

Poetry Contests Offer $1600

Deadline for entering the $1,600 Kansas City Poetry Contests is February 1, 1972.

Top prize in the ninth annual event is the Devins Award, $500 cash and publication of a book-length poetry manuscript by the University of Missouri Press.

Hallmark Honor Prize of $100 each will be awarded to six poets for individual poems. Only full-time undergraduate college students are eligible for the Hallmark prizes.

Kansas City Star Awards of $100 each will go to four poets.

Sharp Memorial Awards of $25 each will go to four high school pupils from Missouri or a bordering state.

Poets with national reputations will judge the contests.

Winners will be announced May 1, 1972 at the final program of the 1971-1972 American Poets' Series conducted by the Kansas City Jewish Community Center.

For contest rules, send a stamped, self-addressed business envelope to Poetry Contests Directors, P.O. Box 5313, Kansas City, Mo. 64131.

RITCHEY'S MARKET

1100 MOORE STREET

Fresh Meats and Groceries

Telephone 643-1400

The Juniata Daily Dose

Have Things Really Changed?

The Juniatian: December 9, 1931

"TO EAT OR NOT TO EAT"

To eat, or not to eat: that is the question;
Whether 'tis nobler in the mind to swallow
The "hash" and horseflesh of past generations,
Or to make war upon the kitchen force,
Demanding food for humans? To taste and eat
No more; for at one bite we start
And wonder at the thousand sickening things
That are contained there. 'tis a consummation
Hardly to be wish'd. To smell, to taste;
To taste: perchance to swallow: ay, there's the rub;
For in the hours that follow what effects may come
When we have shuffled down this awful stuff
Must give us pause. There's the respect
That makes us trot to Skips;
For who would eat the crusts and scraps of time,
The stale, old gingerbread, the eggs at every morn,
That tax us to devour.
When he himself might his own meals prescribe?
But that this economic puzzle from whose bourn
No captive escapes, conquers all hope,
And makes us rather eat those things we have
Than seek for others that we cannot get?
Thus depression does make soldiers of us all.
(With due apologies to Bill Shakespeare.)

Things Artistic

Continued from page 2

actors were the studied, emphatic ones of the theater, creating an atmosphere that would have been lost in a Hollywood extravaganza-type production.

Keith Mitchell was magnificent as Henry. He developed the character of an impressionable, women-crazy, not-too-bright monarch. This approach put a different slant on the history. Whereas the king is commonly portrayed as an iron-willed tyrant, the series pointed Henry up as a sympathy magnet. His various wives, with the exception of Catherine of Aragon and Jane Seymour, were depicted as adventuresses and schemers. The ultimate fate of those four appeared to me, by the direction of the plot, to be no more than each deserved.

The series may not have been too popular with the spoon-fed, soap opera-watching faction of America—the type of television viewer who needs the plot spelled-out, outlined, and typed in capitals for him. A knowledge of the history of that time was almost a prerequisite for some of the episodes, and American viewers are unaccustomed to attempt to fill in the gaps of something as trivial as a television show. It may be hoped that as more shows of Henry's quality are produced and aired, perhaps our country will become newly conditioned. Television could actually become culturally beneficial. It is even plausible that it could be conducive to an intellectual appreciation of the dramatic

Have Things Really Changed?

"Juniata's Band"

Juniata is making another attempt to organize a band. The fact that none of the attempts in past years can be labeled as completely successful heightens the seriousness of the task and at the same time serves as a powerful incentive. We need not go into any argument as to the necessity of a band except to say that its psychological value is a huge reservoir of college spirit as yet untapped at Juniata.

Fifteen people responded to the call made in chapel last week. That is a good start. But half a band (musically speaking) is worse than none at all. Certainly in a student body of five hundred there are at least twenty-five persons who play band instruments. They should consider it an obligation to become members of Juniata's proposed band.

Being a student endeavor, the band needs the moral backing of every student. A band consciousness needs to be aroused. No outside help will be forthcoming until the student body makes manifest its desire to support such an organization. Until a sustained interest becomes evident and shows itself in a desire to participate if possible, a band at Juniata is just so much idle talk. Juniata needs a band and the student body wants one. Let every student lend his support!

WESTBROOK'S
SHOE STORE
Shoes and Boots
since 1813

GROVE'S
FASHION FABRICS
formerly
H & R Egolfs
Full Line of
Dry Goods, Trim, Notions

ENGLISH'S
CARRIAGE HOUSE
Fashions from
John Meyer of Norwich
and
Jonathan Logan
Stop in and Browse

Victory At Last ! !

INDIANS TOP HOYAS

by Stew Kauffman

Juniata put one of their best all-around games together Saturday to beat the Georgetown University Hoyas on College Field. The Indians started to make their own breaks early in the first quarter when Ray Grabiak blocked a Georgetown punt on the Hoyas 17 yd. line. Chuck Kensinger covered the ball and Juniata had control of the ball. Two plays later Joe Lauver scored on a quarterback sneak from 7 yards out. Mike McNeal added the PAT and the Indians led 7-0.

The rest of the first quarter was a battle of the punters. Early in the second quarter, Bob Waggoner intercepted a Hoya pass on the G-town 35 yd. line to give Juniata their second break of the game. This time Greg Kennedy scored on a 30 yd. play for the Indians. The PAT was good giving the home squad a 14-0 edge. Following the Juniata kickoff, G-town put their first real drive of the game together. The drive was capped with a 67 yd. touchdown run by Hoya halfback Ralph Edwards. Because of a bad snap from center, the PAT was no good. The first half ended with the score 14-6.

The third quarter action was a slow, defensive battle until Brian Hoover intercepted a G-town pass on the 50 yd. line. McNeal added to the Indian score this time with a 17 yd. field goal.

The last drive of the game came when Grabiak recovered a G-town fumble on the Juniata 26 yd. line. Don Mastrorocco and Dan Rackavan teamed up on this drive with pass completions of 29 and 22 yards for another Juniata touchdown. McNeal added the PAT. The remainder of the game was of no use for either squad. The game ended with the Indians gaining their first victory of the year by a score of 24 to 6. This gives Juniata an overall record of 1-1-2.

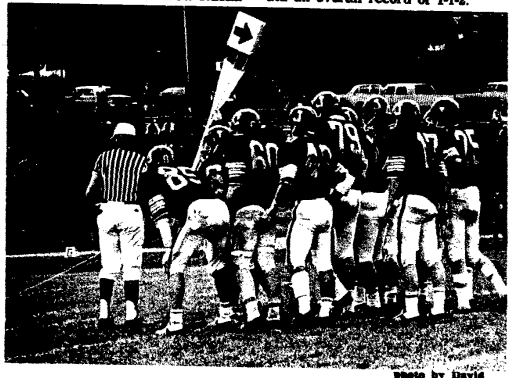

Photo by Davis

The Juniata Defense anxiously awaits the first down marker in the Georgetown game.

Cross Country

by J. Brian Richardson

The J.C. Cross Country team came out on the losing end of a 41-18 score as the Big Indiana completely dominated the contest on their wet and muddy home course. The Indiana harriers were just too much for our guys as 18 out of the first 20 finishers were all Big Indians.

Bill Hampton (26:28) and Don Walters (26:53) finished 1 and 2 for Indiana. Juniata captain Denny Weidler (26:54) was third despite the flu. The next seven finishers were all from Indiana. Brian Maurer finished eleventh for the Indians with a 28:36 clocking.

Savadow's
HUNTINGDON
Lovely Fashions For
Lovely Ladies

UPTOWN CUT-RATE
1229 MIFFLIN STREET
Food — Magazines

Dore's
Home of
Famous Brand Name Shoes
713 WASHINGTON STREET

MO TAYLOR
A Virile Volcano

by Vernne Wetzel

Mo Taylor is a senior football player from Baltimore, Maryland. Last year he won honors on the M.A.C. All-East team for offensive tackle for two consecutive weeks and also on the M.A.C. All-East team for the year for tackle. An ankle injury has kept him out of action for a few weeks this year, but Mo is expecting to get back into action soon.

I asked Mo how he sees this year's team. He compared our team to a volcano. For some time it is dormant, but then it explodes, and when it explodes, nothing can control it. The team definitely has what it takes to win; it is a mystery why the efforts don't show in the final score. One problem is an abundance of penalties—particularly ones that kill drives. Mo thinks that there is good teamwork this year. In past years, there have been teams of outstanding individuals. This year there are some standouts, but the team is working very well as a team. In this respect, Mo thinks there has never been a better team.

The team has outstanding potential. This year has been the hardest one Mo remembers as far as working. The efforts will pay off. There are 24 freshmen on the roster this year; they are helping the team quite a bit. We will be losing 13 seniors. I asked Mo how he feels the loss will be felt. Mo thinks the loss will definitely be felt, but that it will certainly be no worse than in years past. In college football there is always a turnover; there can't be a good team that doesn't allow for the turnover. With the underclassmen and next year's freshmen, Mo thinks the team will be no worse for the loss of the seniors.

In his four years at Juniata, Mo feels that he has learned a lot about football. He credits Coach Bunton for helping him particularly, and, of course, playing experience speaks for itself. Mo thinks somewhere in the back of his mind that he may someday like to coach. With what he has learned he believes that he is adequately equipped to meet the challenge of coaching. Mo obviously tries his best in everything he does. This will be to his advantage in whatever he decides to do.

The competition in our league is of high caliber. There is a wide open chance for an upset in any game. Each team is comparatively alike to the others. This is what makes competition in our league so good. Juniata is as strong a competitor as any.

As a summation, Mo believes that football, along with all other athletics, is a vital part of Juniata. Some people think that there are few things to do here now. Mo thinks that without athletics, things to do would really be scarce. Athletic events provide entertainment for some people, and a source of argument for others. In any case, with people like Mo Taylor participating, there can't help but be a good following.

Montgomery Sales Agency
516 WASHINGTON STREET
Telephone 643-1390

THE JUNIATIAN

VOL. XLVIII, NO. 5 Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 October 20, 1971

'71 Homecoming Court Nominees

THE SENIOR CLASS GIRLS ARE: from left to right: Beth Wagner, Kathy Campbell, Lois Cory, Terri Burson, Linda Grove, and Peggy Plumb.

The girls appearing in these pictures are those who have been chosen as the candidates for this year's Juniata College Homecoming court. Last week men of the Junior class nominated three girls from their class to serve as candidates for the position of Junior Attendant. Only one of these girls will eventually receive that honor. Also, the Senior men similarly chose six girls as their nominees, from which will be selected the Senior Attendant and the Homecoming Queen for this year.

Candidates for Junior Attendant are: from left to right: Debbie Trotter, Marylou Carpenter, and Marsha Saylor.

Tomorrow (Thursday, October 21, 1971) the final elections for those positions will be conducted during the evening meal in the lobby of Ellis Hall. Each student will be asked to choose one Junior for attendant, one Senior for attendant, and one Senior as queen from the nominees.

The traditional coronation will take place during halftime of the Juniata vs. Wilkes College football game this Saturday, October 23. All students are urged to be on hand at half-time Saturday to greet the new queen and her court.

GRASS ROOTS

All In Fun?

by Elaine Persbacker

The panty raid was all in fun and everyone came out to play but somehow the feeling changed and water and mud and bodies flew in every direction with sickening thumps the shaving cream soured my mouth and the ground jumped to meet me with a dark still silence the mud and tears made little streams in the cold wet grass
maybe that's what it took, though, to stop you from your deadly fun you even stopped long enough to look at the limp body that couldn't breathe couldn't do anything but laugh a crazy haunted laugh that echoed through a throbbing sickened skull unfocused eyes searched for something besides the pain that enveloped me someone that cared enough to share my fright and sure enough there you were above me with strengthened yet tender hands thank God I have your love, I'm lucky you know but as I lie here in yesterday's tomorrow
I wonder with misty memories what kind of games you'll learn to play tonight and I ask if I too can come out and play.

Sorry kids, the doctor says I can't but please have fun anyway.

The Waverly Consort, a group of skilled performers, not only entertained their audience, but actually transported them into the era of their songs. Their numbers varied from a song supposedly composed by Ann Bolyne to English madrigals, to songs of battle. Sketch by Ann Grote

Renaissance Sounds of Waverly Consort Echo from Walls of Oller Hall

by Wilfred Norris

Renaissance music can be varied and colorful, as the Waverly Consort demonstrated last Friday evening in Oller Hall. Shawn, krummhorn, rauschpfeife and lute added different timbres to the more familiar sound of recorders and voices. The instrumental music was often polyphonic or, when the Consort played dances, rhythmical with a beat which was syncopated and lively. The songs ran the emotional gamut from sadness and pathos to humor and the pleasures of sex. The audience responded to the variety with enthusiastic applause followed by many verbal accolades after the performance.

It is difficult to pick out high points of the evening when each combination of instruments or voices had its own peculiar appeal. However, I shall try.

The opening number by Henry VIII (a truly competent musician) involved the entire group, but the aspects of the number that I enjoyed were the divisions played alternately by the lute and the sopranino recorder. A division is an embellishment of a tune. At the time of the Renaissance, musicians developed the ability to tale popular tunes and embellish them in this special style.

The "Quid petis o fili" by Richard Pygott was a difficult contrapuntal voice duet which demonstrated the range and power of the tenor and soprano soloists, Constantine Cassolas and Joan Summers. These two were to show repeatedly their special abilities—Cassolas for his tremendous range and Summers for the dramatic interpretations of the music.

The "Gloria from the Mass" by John Taverner struck me because of the repeated figure of the chimes. If one listened carefully, he heard the same musical figure player over and over while the voices and instruments wove intricate melodies above this figure. This technique was also popular with Henry Purcell a hundred years later.

The audience delighted in the humorous songs such as the Thomas Weelkes "Some Men Desire Soouses", Thomas Morley's "And He Ran After" and the anonymous song "What Meat Eats the Spaniard." (Why was everyone turning to look at Dr. Nieto?)

There was hardly any repetition with the instrumentalists from one number to the next in terms of what instruments were used. There was always something new—down to the bagpipe in the penultimate number.

The musicians enjoyed playing for our college audience. They later stated that they do not enjoy high school audiences because the high school students are so strongly subject to peer pressures that they are afraid to show enjoyment of anything but the popularly accepted things. Thank goodness the college student is mature enough to go hear what he likes and to express his pleasure.

The opening of this year's cultural events series thus turned into a happy happening. I'm looking forward to the second event scheduled for November first.

Autumn Poem

Out along the highway road
Together tramp two boys, a dog;
Heading west and up a rise,
Surrounded by the autumn cold.

Then out on the high rock ridge
That runs along the river track;
Turning now to cross the bridge,
Always onward, yet somehow back.

Singing, whistling, laughing gay,
Throwing rocks to reach the sun;
Softly falls the light of day,
As the trio heads toward home.

Ask yourself where we have been,
What we have seen, and done and said.
An afternoon of happy sin—
Sleep tight and dream and wake up dead.

—Brian Maurer

Letters to the Editor

I read with interest the lead article in the September 29, 1971 issue of The Juniatian entitled "Maynard Ferguson Chosen to Please Alumni" written by David Andrews. I agree with Mr. Andrews that if Jody Harpster was available this summer when the choice had to be made that the choice should not have been made solely by non-students. I also agree with Mr. Andrews that dances at Juniata College, including the Homecoming Dance, should be designed for the students and not for the alumni or anyone else. But, Mr. Andrews asks "Who is Homecoming designed for—the alumni or the students?" The day itself is designed generally for the alumni. Why else would it be called Homecoming Day?

However, my concern for Mr. Andrews' article goes considerably deeper than the above superficial comments. The article impliedly assumes an inalienable right of Juniata students to big-name entertainment. Less than a decade ago, Juniata students pleaded with the College for the privilege of raising money to finance the appearance of one big-name entertaining group on the campus. Those not too distant predecessors of yours were delighted at the opportunity to hear one big-name group in four years; the group, "The Lettermen," were big-name in a small way. It is splendid that from such a small beginning has come the opportunity for Juniatians to hear several big-name groups in a year. It is unfortunate, however, that you obviously fail to appreciate this fine privilege. I am sure that you realize that your already high tuition fails to cover the expenses of your basic education, not to mention extras such as this, and that other sources of revenue cover the balance of the cost of your total Juniata experience. Your lack of appreciation is indicative of a "the-world-owes-me-a-living" attitude which pervades and threatens the existence of our society and our nation. Our bulging welfare rolls and the greed of our working populus are evidence of this fact. You have the power to help reverse this dangerous trend. Far greater personal satisfaction comes not from the good things which we have but from the good things which we have done.

Cheer up, Dave! They could have chosen Lawrence Welk!

LeRoy S. Maxwell, Jr. '63

by Rick Mitz

"I don't care who does the electing, just so long as I do the nominating."

"Youth Power at the Polls" — "Young Voters May Change Make-up of Congress in '72" — "Nixon Re-election Threatened by Youth Vote."

These are familiar newspaper headlines. Since the adoption of the 26th Amendment, reporters have been predicting that the future of American politics could be largely determined by the 25 million young people who will be eligible to cast their first ballot in 1972. But the young voters' road to the polling booth is not unencumbered, and their political power cannot be taken for granted.

One serious threat to the youth vote is posed by the election laws of Michigan and North Dakota. In these two states, young people will be able to vote for one of the candidates for President in the 1972 election. However, they will not be able to participate in the nomination of those candidates.

For young people, voting for President in 1972 could prove virtually meaningless unless they have a choice in the nominating process as well. The struggle for the Democratic nomination at the July convention will be the likely focus of youth interest-and it is here that their influence could be vital.

In 1968 young people were credited with making an important difference in the nominating process of the Democratic Party. One presidential campaign even became known as the "Children's Crusade." Nevertheless, the influence of youth was limited. They could ring doorbells, stuff envelopes, write speeches and make posters. But real power— the vote— was generally beyond their reach.

With few exceptions, young people were not given the opportunity of serving as voting delegates to the Democratic National Convention or of helping to select the delegates. Sixteen state delegations at the convention had no voting members under 30 years of age, and another 13 had only one delegate from this age group. (The Republicans have an even more dismal record. Only 1% of the delegates at the 1968 GOP Convention were under 30, while 83% were 40 years of age or older. In 42 states, there were no voting delegates under 30.)

The National Democratic Party has tried to rectify this past discrimination by requiring all state parties to actively encourage the participation of young people in all party affairs and to include 18-30 year olds in the National Convention delegation in "reasonable relationship" to their presence in the state population.

However, despite party reforms and despite the 26th Amendment, young people in Michigan and North Dakota will face severe restrictions on their right to participate in the nomination of a presidential candidate in 1972. Under the election laws of both states, National Convention delegates are chosen at state party conventions. State convention delegates are chosen at county conventions. And county delegates are chosen at a party primary. This primary election represents the only opportunity available to all voters for participation in the presidential nominating process— and it has already been held. In both states, the election occurred in late summer of 1970.

As a result, large numbers of Michigan and North Dakota voters will be prevented from taking part in the selection of their party's presidential nominee. These voters include (1) 18-20 year olds who are newly enfranchised by the 26th Amendment, (2) 21-23 year olds who were ineligible to vote in the 1970 primary, and (3) new residents who have moved into the state since 1970. In Michigan alone, the young people who are thus disenfranchised number over 1,000,000.

Bills have been introduced in the Michigan and North Dakota legislatures that call for a new primary in 1972. The North Dakota legislature adjourned without taking action, and Michigan politicians predict that the reform bill has little chance of passing their state's legislature. Consequently, court action is the only remaining alternative.

The Center for Political Reform has prepared lawsuits to be brought in each state by young voters and new residents who are deprived of their voting rights by state law. The suits are based on the 26th Amendment, the right to travel, the right of political association, the Equal Protection Clause, and the 1970 Voting Rights Act. The courts will be asked to enjoin present delegation selection procedures and to require each state to hold a new primary election.

If these court actions are successful, another barricade in the path of young people's voting rights will have been knocked down .If they fail, the youth of Michigan and North Dakota will have good reason to question the legitimacy of the electoral process. It's a shrewd trick to tell someone that he can now vote for President — but that he can have no say in who the candidates are. As "Boss" Tweed used to put it, "I don't care who does the electing, just so long as I do the nominating."

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College
Huntingdon, Pa.

ASSOCIATED COLLEGIATE PRESS — ACP — 1970 — 1971 — I.I.P. — COLLEGIATE PRESS SERVICE

REESTABLISHED September 9, 1971

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891 and "The Juniation," established November 1924

SCOTT K. LEEDY, Managing Editor

PATRICK E. FLEAGLE, Associate Editor — ROBERT A. JONES, Business Manager
DEBI FRAZIER, Assistant Editor — STEWARD A. KAUFFMAN, Jr., Sports Editor
STEVEN S. KIMMEL, Assistant Editor — WILLIAM E. SCARLETT, Circulation Manager
BRIAN T. MAURER, Assistant Editor — WILLIAM M. DAVID, Photography Editor

ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANTS: General Information, Susan Stalker, Jean Thompson, Deborah Walker; Community Relations, Stephen J. Crowley, Joffrey A. Naugle, Linda Richardson; Feature Columnists, Karl K. Kindig, Linda Markey; Business, Thomas E. Alessi, Joan Jarrow, Nancy Tamburo; Typing and Proofing, Sandra Currier, Nancy Floyd, Sara Frank, Carol Garzillo, Margaret Haines, Anne Holzinger, Donna Lee, Janet Mason, Valorie Priddle, William M. Rea, Cynthia Smith, Stuart C. Treacy, Gayle Trofa, Gretchen Yost; Layout, Janet Bartschat, Roger C. Devonald, Margery Herr, Keith E. Klein, Catharine Reel, James S. Reiley, Arthur W. Ritter; Art, Ann Grote, Lawrence R. Stem; Circulation, Ralph P. Casale, Denise Deaner, Susan Dochtermann, Marlyn Hoover, Miriam Smith.

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughtout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students of Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized in Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 1500 — Subscription $5.00 per year

VOL. XLVIII, NO. 5 — October 20, 1971

Perspective On Curriculum

by Karl Kindig

A committee of faculty and students has been named to study and make recommendations concerning the nature of the academic calender for the remainder of the transition period between the old and new curriculums. Their responsibility concerns the procedure whereby the two-semester calender will be phased out and the three term calender of the new program instituted. This transition procedure has important academic consequences for the students under both systems, and this analysis is intended to look at some of the objectives which may be considered by the committee as it evaluates its alternatives.

Stated simply, the committee has two possible routes to go. It may either phase the new calender in on a year to year basis, thus maintaining the dual system of two calenders, or the committee may recommend that all courses (units) will be taught on the three term calender next year. As will be shown, neither of these choices is without potentially undesirable consequences for some students.

It may be helpful here to look at some of the attributes of a good calender policy.

(1) It should provide for adequate first and second level unit offerings for students under the new program while insuring that the upperclassmen have sufficient courses to complete their majors as well as their distribution requirements.

(2) It should encourage the Faculty not merely to convert their present courses to a new time period but to restructure their courses to maximize the benefits of the ten week terms. This is particularly sequential or cumulative nature. With careful planning between departments the possibility of offering a three unit sequence in one calender year should provide students with far greater flexibility than under the two-semester crucial with respect to courses of a system. However, unless there is extremely careful planning this advantage will not be realized.

(3) There should be a minimization of the number of students taking both term and semester courses. Such mixing of students from both curriculums could cause problems due to the differences in their respective grading policies. Also, if the restructuring mentioned in point Number 2 is successful, many ten week units may be irrelevant to students under the old curriculum and vice versa.

(4) The calendar should promote an economical use of time and resources. With a fixed number of faculty, the duplication of courses, i.e. the same material being in both semester and term courses, means the variety of the available offerings must be reduced.

Looking over this list of objectives, one is reminded of a Jeremy Bentham's "greatest good for the greatest number" philosophy, that it contains one too many "greatests." To be sure, neither of the two calendar alternatives mentioned before can achieve all four objectives. Specifically, it appears that an immediate transformation to the three-term calender would do violence to objectives Number 2 and Number 3, while, on the other hand, maintaining the dual system is not consistent with objectives Number 4 and, consequently Number 1.

Any decision made by the committee will be a compromise, certainly a difficult compromise, and one which will vitally affect every student at Juniata. Those students who have concerns which they feel should be brought to the committee's attention should contact Joe Sollenburger and Diane Miller, who are student members of the committee. At this time the ultimate evaluation of this problem by the committee has not been determined. What it will be depends largely on those who have something to say—and say it!

W.A.A. News

by Vernne Wetzel

With cold weather coming on strong, the powderpuff season is rapidly coming to an end. Technically, all of the games should have been played by now, but cold weather, exams, and players leaving campus early to go home for the weekends are responsible for numerous postponements. As soon as all games are played and results of the season are available, they will be printed in this newspaper.

The intramural field hockey program has dwindled to only those people who are interested in playing outside teams. As of now, the team is slated to play Huntingdon High School at least once in the near future. There is interest in a team, but numerous problems confront anyone interested in organizing a hockey program.

So far, the tennis team has played Grier once. The results of that match are not yet available. A return match with Grier is scheduled. Badminton is the next intramural sport on the schedule. More detailed announcements will be released soon.

RUSSIAN FILM

Tonight, Wednesday, October 20, 1971, there will be a showing of the timely Russian film, "Ballad of a Soldier", in Oller Hall auditorium. Feature time is 7:00 p.m. All persons are invited to attend this special presentation, which promises to be a rewarding and entertaining mid-week break.

STRAIT'S TROPICAL FISH & PET SUPPLIES

522 WASHINGTON STREET

Telephone 643-5070

TEXAS LUNCH

316 7th STREET

Open 7 Days

We Specialize in Home Cooking

Try Our Texas Hots

Telephone 643-4030

MOUNTAIN DAY

by Stuart Treacy

The day dawned as usual — cool and foggy. But before long the fog rose to show what a beautiful day all were in store for at Whipple Dam State Park.

The busses left on schedule from Ellis, and, in about forty minutes, we arrived at our destination. Waiting for us were crates of apples and cookies, which were promptly devoured; however, everyone had something he wanted to do: a hike through the woods, or perhaps throwing a frisbee or football.

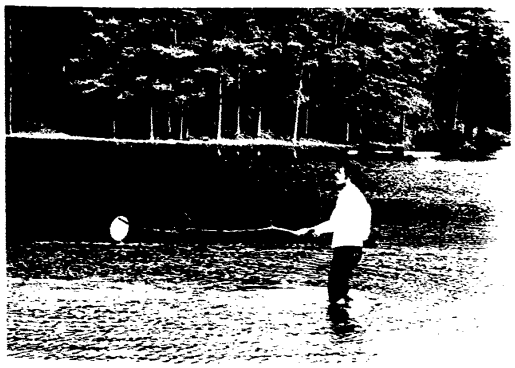
The morning fleeted by, and before long it was time for lunch. Colossal lunch lines and voracious appetites didn't go hand-in-hand; some students made their way to getting prompt service on the food tables, others stuck it out and were finally rewarded with the food they had patiently waited for.

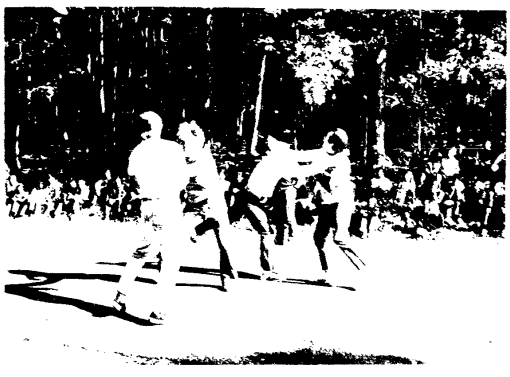
After lunch was over, the freshman-sophomore tug-of-war contest commenced. The freshman team put up a good effort, but the sophomores came out on top. Next in line were the juniors, who also lost to the sophomores. Finally it was seniors' turn and they proved their supremacy by beating the sophomore team. Then, the girls wanted to get into the action, so the junior and senior girls tugged it out. But this time junior girls were the champs.

After the tugs-of-war, the senior men paired opposite the freshman girls for the egg-throwing contest. Some eggs seemed to be hard-boiled, but every one broke or was broken eventually.

Finally, the senior men engaged the faculty in a game of touch football. Both teams battled each other to a frustrating score of 2-2.

As the crowded busses pulled away from Whipple Dam, everyone seemed to agree that Mountain Day had been a worthwhile break from studies.





Things Artistic

by Linda Markey

Mrs. Doris Goehring is hoping her accident-prone "Crucible" cast will be all in one piece for the November 5 and 6 performances. To date two of her actors are hobbling around on crutches. Despite such calamities, the cast's enthusiasm mounts with every rehearsal. Mrs. Goehring predicts a fine performance.

The various stage crews have been as active as the cast. Amidst the dust in Oller Hall, members of the costume crew discovered a sewing machine and several Puritan costumes. The make-up crew has stocked up on grease paint and other tools necessary to convert 1971 college students into 17th century Massachusetts Puritans. With so much student participation, the production should prove to be a great success. Be sure not to miss "The Crucible" on November 5 and 6 in Oller Hall.

MOODY BLUES PERSPECTIVE

One of the finest musical groups of the present rock music scene is the Moody Blues. This British group has, in the course of the past six years, developed a "sound" quite unlike any other. Their music can be described as majestic. As musicians, they are far ahead of most other groups.

They had a quite modest beginning with the advent of their first single "Go Now" in 1965, which turned out to be moderately popular. However, it was the content of their albums which really helped to distinguish the Moody Blues from other groups of the era.

It was the album "Days of Future Passed", which turned out to be their first significant album. This album came out in 1967 under the title of "Nights in White Satin" (the name of one of the cuts on the album). In this album, the Moody Blues "extended the range of pop music, and found the point where it becomes one with the classics" as Hugh Mendl, the executive producer of the album states. By means of impressionistic music (provided by the London Festival Orchestra). the listener gets a vivid picture of a typical person's day. Needless to say, the creativity of this album caught the attention and acclaim of music critics.

In their subsequent albums, "In Search of the Lost Chord," "On the Threshold of a Dream," "To Our Children's, Children's, Children," and "A Question of Balance," their music varies, but always remains on the same relative plane of their music of the past.

In their latest album, "Every Good Boy Deserves Favor," they have once again succeeded in compiling an album of mature and cohesive music. It is indeed a good album, and has been quite popular lately.

I believe that the Moody Blues are one of the best groups around and I believe they will be for a long time.

by S. C. Treacy

Pro . . . Con

Groping through the early morning fog, our staff pondered the question "What about this atmosphere?" Intuitively we developed this profound question into this week's pro & con as "Does Juniata's atmosphere breed apathy among its students?"

A veritable lighthouse of opinion was Jerry Croce, "The know-it-all, have-it-all attitude of some professors, who feel they have the answers, breeds apathy. The attitude is frustating to the student because he feels he has nothing to contribute. This robs students of their identity and integrity. They say, 'What's the use?'"

Barb Rice saw it from another angle: "I think Juniata's apathy is brought on by the gray, rainy weather and dinky little town."

Lesher quad feels that "there is too much (Administrative) red tape. People don't even try to do anything. Student government is out only to please the Trustees."

Charles Dyer senses this administrative haze, "the apathy that prevails is that which breeds further apathy — it's a mirror process where leaders are apathetic and followers are worse. The mechanisms exist, but often aren't utilized.

By mid-morning the fog had cleared and we were meeting people who felt that student attitudes rather than campus atmosphere, lay behind Juniata doldrums.

"These are middle-class students from middle-class environments, doing their best not to rock the boat. It's get through those four years the quickest and easiest ways," were the thoughts of Malvern.

As fine arts chairman, Peter Isenberg runs into "a lot of indifference toward Juniata's cultural arts program. But these people have acquired this apathy before they get here. Juniata does its best to change the mood of the students by offering a varied program of fine arts."

Placing the responsibility for concern directly upon the indivdual, Janet Cummings declared, "I think people should make their own fun!" And so the atmosphere of Juniata College was officially exonerated.

Standing above the fog, "Sunshine" Brandau radiated enthusiam. "Juniata is not an apathetic campus. Students are showing concern in national, community, social and personal activities. Too often we scream apathy when a person is not involved in all these areas simultaneously."

Wilfred Norris agreed, a sizable number of students have different priorities other than activism.

Exploring the question of apathy from another angle, Donna Bailey said — . . .

But who cares? Apathy prevails. Due to lack of interest the rest of this column has been cancelled for this week.

Have you stumbled on any meterorites lately? If so, you find could be a great help to a study at Ohio State University into the nature, composition and origin of the universe, says the October Science Digest. Although only 40 pounds of meteorites have been found in the U.S. in the last ten years, mineralogists believe that three or four specimens of 20 pounds each fall to earth each day.

UPTOWN CUT-RATE
1229 MIFFLIN STREET
Food — Magazines

The Ear of the Needle

by Bob Kraut

In 1967 when organist Al Kooper left The Blues Project to form Blood, Sweat & Tears he set out to "fuse rock music with the big band sound of Maynard Ferguson." Kooper, like many East Coast musicians had been awed by the scope and power of Ferguson's band, and the immense popularity of his effort soon spawned other jazz/rock ensembles like Chicago, Dreams, Lighthouse, and now the most derivative of all, Chase. Fronted by former Woody Herman trumpeter Bill Chase, Chase has unleased the power of an entire jazz trumpet section upon rock. Bill Chase's trumpet flights inhabit a stratosphere so successfully charted by Maynard Ferguson. In the vernacular, the man's a "screamer."

In fact, many of today's rock musicians have backgrounds in jazz; B,S&T's saxophonist-pianist-arranger, Fred Lipsius, and trumpeter Lew Soloff being notable examples, are alumni of Maynard Ferguson's band. Indeed, had Al Kooper not been so enamored with the Maynard Ferguson band, Seatrain (who could have been persuaded to play for a "little" more money) might never have come into existence. Seatrain is what grew from The Blues Project after the departure of Al Kooper. When Kooper split for Blood, Sweat, & Tears he took along guitarist Steve Katz, the group took on replacements and floundered. In fact, their last album "Planned Obsolescence" seemed to sum up the direction their music was taking. Original Blues Project bassist Andy Kulberg and electric violinist Richard Greene took on new members and a new monicker — Seatrain was formed.

For many listeners big bands are dead, or so it would seem. But, no art form so valid and influential ever really dies, which is why we today have a synthesis known as "big band rock." The realization of personal amplification has made it possible for one trumpet to emulate the power of a whole section, or for the electronic saxophone to cover the range once solely occupied by the alto and baritone. In effect, the marriage of rock and horns is the 70's answer to Glenn Miller, Artie Shaw, and Benny Goodman.

All this is an indirect way of defending the selection of trumpeter extraordinaire Maynard Ferguson for this year's Homecoming. From all the feedback resulting from this announcement it seems as if Juniata College is casting "pearls before swine." Few, it seems, realize the effect Maynard Ferguson has had upon the direction of popular music.

In light of the current controversy over the choice of Maynard Ferguson for Homecoming, it would seem that a valiant attempt has been made to rectify the polarity between students and alumni that certainly shouldn't exist. I imagine many alumni will be as equally shocked as the students to find that Maynard '72 is into "Eli's Comin' " and not "One O'Clock Jump;" whereas a rather amusing but somewhat embarrassing spectacle might have ensued had couples attired in evening dress attempted to boogie to Richard Greene and Seatrain's tour de force "Orange Blossom Special." So folks, get your heads back on straight and come to the realization that Maynard Ferguson's music contains a little of something for everyone — if you'll only open your ears, your mind will surely follow.

Juniata Alumni Hall Film Series

Ticket booklets for the film series in Alumni Hall are still available to the college community. According to Will Brandau, Director of the College Center, nine more films will be shown during the first semester with twelve scheduled during the second semester. The cost of the booklets is $1.75 per semester. Individual tickets to each showing are 50¢ per person.

Due to the great response to the booklet sales, Mr. Brandau stated the possibility of several additional films for the entire college community to which those holding booklets will be admitted free.

Tickets are still available at the Information Desk at Ellis Hall, or they may be purchased at the door at any of the showings. All individual tickets are on sale at the door only on the night of the showing.

The titles and dates of the first and second series are:

October
16—Petulia (Also Great Comedies)
29—Rashomon
November
5—400 Blows
12—Tobacco Road
December
10—The Wild Bunch
January
7—The Damned
22—A Chump at Oxford and
March of the Wooden Soldiers
29—Saps at Sea & Two Tars
February
4—Treasure of Sierra Madre
11—Caine Mutiny (Bogart)
12—Knock on Any Door (Bogart)
March
24—Performance and
The Best of Bogart
April
7—Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?
29—Grand Illusion
May
12—The Sea Gull
20—Oliver Twist

Montgomery Sales Agency
516 WASHINGTON STREET
Telephone 643-1390

WESTBROOK'S SHOE STORE
Shoes and Boots since 1813

Astrology Examined

by Dr. Richard E. Hunter

If Fred says, "Only a nut would study biology," we call Fred anti-intellectual; if Fred says, "Only a nut would study psychoanalysis," we say that Fred is afraid of Freud; if Fred says, "Only a nut would study astrology," we call Fred civilized. What makes Fred III so respectable? Fred III has singled out for scorn a subject damned by the western world's intelligentsia for the last 250 years, ever since the atomists lost confidence in the interrelatedness of the universe, so Fred has the automatic approval of all who identify the true with whatever carries the rationalistic imprimatur and the scientific nihil obstat: for "Science tells us" is the contemporary form of an older "Rome has spoken: let the world keep silence." Now Fred may be wrong; the universe may be an interrelated entity, and some pattern of interrelatedness symbolized but not necessarily determined by the stars and the planets) may be discernable, but one thing is sure — Fred and his friends will never know; for, perhaps ironically, they will be too busy being empirical to study the evidence hard-headedly and in detail.

But truth is not often discovered through avoiding the controversial, even through avoiding areas which intellectual (rather than individual) hauteur denominates infra-controversial, so one Freshman Seminar is spending a large swatch of time studying astrology. These "peerers into the beyond" (Abbott, Diehl, Eriksen, Herring, Hevener, Knouse, Lee, McWilliams, Sokel, Staniulis, and Yocum) may decide that what they discover is nectar and ambrosia, or they may find it pure pap, but they are looking. If someone laughs at their wide-eyed interests, they can recall that the gigglers of an earlier day laughed at Robert Fulton, Wilbur and Orville Wright, and Semyon G. Piatovsky.

We have discovered a few interesting — not startling, just interesting — things already. From a charting of birth-signs of Freshmen, faculty members, Sociology majors, and Biology majors, we have noted that (1) in all four groupings there are fewer Earth- than Water-, Air-, or Fire-Signs (would one expect fewer of the "Practical" Earth-Sign people to see the necessity of a college education?); (2) Pisceans (impressionable, dreamy) don't want to major

Continued on page 6, column 1

Used to be when you brought home a report card with low marks you'd get a licking. Nowadays you get drafted.

MABLE EMFIELD'S BEAUTY SALON
306 - 7th STREET
Hair & Wig Styling a Specialty
All Beauty Services
Telephone 643-5440

Dore's
Home of FAMOUS
BRAND NAME
SHOES
713 Washington St.

G. C. MURPHY CO.
528 Washington Street
The Complete Variety Store

Freshmen Select Four to Fill Senatorial Posts

Freshmen Senatorial positions were filled Octobr 13, as four out of twelve candidates received the official blessing of their class. The four new legislators are Dave Baer, Denise Hartman, Jean Pollock, and Henry Siedzikowski.

Election procedures were basically the same as those used in the Steering Committee voting, but turnout for the election was 240 frosh as opposed to approximately 300 in the previous election.

Below is a list of candidates and the number of ballots each received. Dave Baer, 136; Aimee Chiariello, 58; Roger Devonald, 60; Jim Gerek, 59; Denise Hartman, 102; Debbie Kane, 42; John Knouse, 32; Jean Pollock, 169; Faith Shoemaker, 94; Henry Siedzikowski, 121; Si Towler, 53; Mick Vaughn, 43.

New Charlie Brown Specials on the Way

The current crop of animated Charlie Brown television shows, among the most successful in television history, will slowly be phased slowly off the network to make way for five new Charlie Brown animated specials, producer Lee Mendelson announced today.

"Although the ratings keep going up on the repeats each year — we're averaging over 45 million viewers per show— we believe the time has come to create a new series of specials", said Mendelson.

Consequently, Charlie Brown's All Stars; It's The Great Pumpkin; Play It Again, Charlie Brown; and You're In Love Charlie Brown will be "retired" after this season. There will be two more broadcasts of He's Your Dog, Charlie Brown and It Was A Short Summer before their "retirement."

Mendelson stated: "All of the shows could, of course, be brought back five or ten years from now. But only A Charlie Brown Christmas seems destined for an indefinite run on the network during the next five seasons. We—animator Bill Melendez and writer-creator Charles Schulz—thus plan five new specials over the next three years."

Other upcoming Charlie Brown movie projects include: a Snoopy At The Ice Follies special on NBC-TV on October 24; a new feature-length movie, Snoopy, Come Home, for release in June of 1972; and a TV adaptation of the hit Charlie Brown stage play, You're A Good Man, Charlie Brown, for 1973.

Juniata

CAMPUS CRIER

October

Wednesday	20	Spanish Table—Faculty Lounge	4:45 p.m. to 6:15 p.m.
		Women's Student Government — Ballroom Annex	6:30 p.m.
		Russian Film "Ballad of a Soldier" — Oller Hall	7:00 p.m.
		Cross Country — Elizabethtown	Away
		Chess Club — Ballroom Annex	7:00 p.m.
Thursday	21	IVCF Meeting — Faculty Lounge	7:00 p.m.
		Bonfire — by East Houses	8:00 p.m.
Friday	22	Gay Nineties Night
Saturday	23	HOMECOMING
		Football — Wilkes	Home 1:30 p.m.
		Formal Dance — Maynard Ferguson
		Cross Country — Saint Francis	Home
Monday	25	Placement Information Tests — Alumni Hall	6:30 p.m.
Wednesday	27	Cross Country — Lock Haven	Home
		Spanish Table — Faculty Lounge	4:45 p.m. to 6:15 p.m.
		Placement Information Tests — Alumni Hall	6:30 p.m.
		Chess Club — Ballroom Annex	7:00 p.m.
		Annual Huntingdon Halloween Parade	7:00 p.m.
Friday	29	Film — "Rashomon" — Alumni Hall	8:00 p.m.
Saturday	30	Football — Washington and Jefferson	Away
		Dames Square Dance — Diamond Lake	8:15 p.m.
		Coffeehouse — L. A. Murphy	9:00 p.m. to 1:00 a.m.
		(Rain Date for Halloween Parade)

10,000 Draft Call for Remainder of '71

The Selective Service System today announced that Random Sequence Number 125 would be the ceiling for induction into the military for young men in the 1971 first priority selection group—that is, those registrants born in 1951 or who earlier received lottery numbers in 1970 or 1969 and are available for induction during 1971.

The Department of Defense, last week, announced a 10,000 draft call for the remainder of 1971. Draft Director Dr. Curtis W. Tarr said that Selective Service local boards would deliver 6,500 of these men in the period November 1-18 and the remaining 3,500 in the period November 29 - December 9. Tarr said that he has directed local boards to give at least 30 days notice to all registrants facing the induction process in coming months. Current draft regulations require 10 days notice.

Tarr said that the uniform national call provision of the new draft law assures every young man in the 1971 group who is 1-A and qualified with a RSN of 125 and below that he will receive an induction notice in the near future. Tarr pointed out that some of these men will enter the Army in January, February or March of next year because of the extended liability provisions of the Selective Service regulations.

"Equity of treatment for all registrants requires that all men with RSNs of 125 or lower face the induction process," Tarr said. RSN 125 was the ceiling for inductions through June of 1971.

Tarr also said that he has directed local and appeal boards to defer all actions on classifications, personal appearances, and appeals until new regulations containing draft reform provisions are effected. The 1971 amendments to the draft law which were recently passed by Congress require the Selective Service System to publish all regulation changes in the Federal Register at least 30 days before they become effective.

"Because of the many reform provisions in the new law and being instituted by the System, it would be unfair not to extend these forthcoming advantages to registrants now facing classification or appeal actions. Accordingly, I have directed that all local and appeal boards defer action on such cases until the new regulations are formally distributed," Tarr concluded.

International spending has gone a long way toward bearing out the scientists who claimed the world was flat.

+ Album of the Month +

Carole King — "Tapestry"

reg. $5.98 now $3.99

Words and Music Mezzanine

Miller's

A Center for Family Shopping

WJC WEEKLY SCHEDULE

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
Grote 7 - 9	Grote 6:30 - 9	B. Moyer 6:30 - 9	Martuzas 6:30 - 9	Shank 6:30 - 9	Kampmeier 6:30 - 9	A. Hopper 7 - 10
D. Kane 9 - 11	Bromberg 9 - 11	Smith 9 -1	Edelstein 9 - 12	Berkin 9 - 11	Minnick 9 - 11	Herring 10 - 1
Jim Pye 11 - 1	Noonan 11 - 12	Dean 1 - 3	Sosnowski 12 - 2	Meyers 11 - 1	Billfox 11 - 2	Longenecker 1 - 4
S. Crowley 1 - 4	Conti 12 - 2	Porterfield 3 - 5	Carpenter 2 - 5	T. Schaffer 1 - 4	Fisher 2 - 5	Magnin 4 - 7
Reiley 4 - 7	Knouse 2 - 4	Reiff 5-7	S. Towler 5-7	Severance 4 - 7	Kellogg 5-7	B. Bagshan 7 - 10
A. Hopper 7 - 10	Kochin 4 - 7	B. McIntosh 7 - 8:30	C. Elcler 7 - 10	J. Cantwell 7 - 10	M. Martin 7 - 10	T. Clark 10 - 2
D. Heberling 10 - 2	A. DeMario 7 - 10	G. Lammey 10:30 - 1	C. Kamponeier 10 - 1	B. Moyer 10 - 1	Noonan 10 - 2
	R. Kotz 10 - 1

RITCHEY'S MARKET

1100 MOORE STREET

Fresh Meats and Groceries

Telephone 643-1400

$475 Offered in Halloween Parade

by Jeff Naugle

An invitation has been extended to all groups and organizations to enter marching units and floats in the annual Huntingdon Halloween Parade. The parade will be held Wednesday, Oct 27, and will start at 7 p.m. with a formation point deadline of 6:30 p.m. The parade is sponsored by the Huntingdon Retail Merchants Committee of Huntingdon Business and Industry, and staged by the Huntingdon Area Jaycees.

The committee has decided to offer $300 in prize money in the float competition. The first prize winner will receive $100, second $75, third $50, and for fourth place $25. In addition all floats entered in the competition will receive $10 for participating. The mummers this year will be competing for cash prizes totaling $175.

The parade will form on Washington Street starting at Fourteenth Street with the mummers entering the line of march at the Fiberglas parking lot at Twelfth and Washington Streets. The parade will disband at Third Street.

Any mummers interested in particiipating are asked to report to the Fiberglas parking lot by 6:30 p.m. October 27. Float entries and marching units contact Jeff Naugle via P.O. Box 218, or at 308 Miller, 643-5615, for further information. A tentative rain date of Saturday afternoon, October 30 has been set.

Latest figures show that 25% of the men who get married proposed while driving a car, which only goes to show that more accidents happen on the road than anywhere else.

ENGLISH'S CARRIAGE HOUSE

Fashions from

John Meyer of Norwich

and

Jonathan Logan

Stop in and Browse

The Creative World of Stan Kenton

stan kenton and his orchestra in concert

Today's Most Exciting Sound in Music

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 6

8:00 P.M.

Tyrone Area High School

Tickets at J.C. Info. Desk

Creative World, Inc. P.O. Box 35216 Los Angeles, Calif. 90035

The Good Ole Days

How To Kiss A Co-ed

For Guys Only: The following instructions on how to kiss a coed appeared in a Juniatian article by Doctor Pangloss on November 5, 1948.

TAKE IT EASY—LET HER KISS YOU. This method is resorted to by very dominant chaps who, pillowed on some portion of their date's anatomy, attempt to look soulful. The girl thereupon kisses them upon the forehead or on top of the head, depending on whether the chaps have washed their hair recently. It helps somewhat if the man has been reciting poetry, and is carried away by the sound of his own voice.

AH HA—YOU'VE GOT HER CORNERED. Sometimes referred to as "the wall press," this style demands a rigid surface behind the girl. Walls are preferred, but nearly anything will do. This kiss is used most often by disappointed men, or those who fear rebuff. They simply back the girl up to the wall of their choice, and that's that. If she doesn't cooperate, she gets a crack on the skull.

IT'S RIGHT THERE FOR YOU. This procedure is nearly always used by either neophytes or advanced students. The face of the girl is grasped firmly in both hands and the kiss planted upon her. Known also as "the set-up," it eliminates the bobbing and weaving target which is so troublesome to the beginner. The past master, adjusting the co-ed by her ear lobes, knows what he wants from experience, and usually has it made to measure by his method.

LOOK! NO HANDS. In this circumstance, the male is on the defense until the last, but finally submits to biological motives. He nevertheless does not become the agressor. He simply stands there and lets her kiss him (see first method) without the slightest response. Splendid self-control is here evident. He does no work—just so much velvet.

WRESTLE YOUR WAY TO HAPPINESS. When the girl straightens up from this one, you can hear the vertebrae crack. This is very dangerous because sometimes the male comes up for air in a permanently bent condition. It is also risky when the man leans a little too far forward, and loses his balance. The trick of the whole thing is to see how far the girl can be bent without snapping something.

YOU WON'T MISS A THING. Social awareness plays a big part in the execution of this particular style. The man is usually out with the wrong girl. Maybe his roommate's, or someone else's. He is constantly on the lookout, and glances around the room during the kiss. Potency of the kiss is registered by the rapidity with which the eyes revolve.

TAG, YOU'RE IT. This is only for the very patient man, and involves a great deal of maneuvering. Finally the girl lets him kiss her—but not for long. Just as he is beginning to light up on the forehead and say "tilt," she discontinues the action, and turns away. It is considered good form for the girl to giggle at this point. Sometimes she buries her face in the lapels of his coat to avoid kissing. This though, is apt to be rather tough on the lapels. Lipstick is hard to get off tweeds.

THE PICK-ME-UP. This technique seems to be ridiculous waste of power, which might otherwise be used in the kiss. The man, carried away by the emotional consequences of kissing, tightens his grip on the girl and starts to straighten up. If the girl is much shorter than he, she soon finds herself a few inches off the floor. She then kicks him in the shins until he lets go. If the man is shorter than the girl, and she yanks him off the floor, it is considered unmannerly to kick her. He just waits until she gets out of breath.

Indians Get No. 2

Juniata Stops Lycoming Cold

by Tony Martuzas

The Juniata Indians completely man-handled the Warriors of Lycoming last Saturday in Williamsport as the Blue and Gold of Lycoming were frustrated by good coverage in the Juniata defensive secondary, a stingy Indian defensive line, as well as their own inadequate passing game, (7 for 19 with 5 interceptions).

After an exchange of punts in the opening quarter, the Indians capped a fifty-four yard drive with a 31 yard field goal by Mike McNeal. During that drive, quarterback Don Mastrorocco mixed many pass plays, option plays, and slants through the line.

On the ensuing kickoff, freshman Tom Charles grabbed the ball for the Warriors on their own 15 yard line and returned it to just short to direct any kind of sufficient offense as the Indian defense held aided by good tackles by Ray Grabiak and Larry Cerny. The Warriors were forced to punt and give up the ball.

Late in the second quarter, Lycoming punt returner Vince Joy signaled for a fair catch and dropped it. Lou Eckerl pounced on the ball for the Indians with 4:40 left in the half. The drive came to an abrupt halt for the Indians as Bob Zimmerman, on the halfback option pass, threw the ball right into the hands of Warrior defensive back Ed Biggio. Lycoming couldn't get anything going and the half ended 3-0.

Halfway into the third period, Lycoming seemed to come alive in mid-field. Lycoming quarterback Gunther Nellen was again unable. Nellen, executing a play-action pass hit Pete Onoret over the middle. The defender on the play slipped and Onoret raced to the Indian 35 yard line. The drive was ended when Chuck Kensinger intercepted 2 Nellen passes on the 12 yard line.

Juniata was not able to stimulate a drive and they were forced to punt. The Warriors got a big break on this series of plays when Brian Hoover fumbled his intercepted pass and it was recovered by Lycoming halfback Tim Rinaldi. The Warriors' luck didn't hold. On the next play, the ball was intercepted by Keith Colonna. On the first play from scrimmage following the interception, Joe Coradetti broke through the line on a slant play, sped past a defender, and galloped 63 yards for an Indian touchdown. The PAT was good by McNeal. Juniata 10: Lycoming 0.

Following a Warrior punt out of their own end zone, Mastrorocco began mixing his plays. With Sparks and Zimmerman sweeping the ends and flips to Rackovan, Mastrorocco kept the drive going. The drive ended in a touchdown when Mastrorccco pitched to Coradetti who went in for the score. McNeal's PAT was good.

Lycoming could do no better with their new quarterback Bob Mesaros. Linebacker Bob Waggoner officially ended the game as he intercepted another Lycoming pass. The win was an important one for Juniata to enable them to stay in the race in the MAC. For the Lycoming Parents Day crowd it was a very gloomy afternoon.

Joe Coradetti, No. 13, crashes through the Lycoming line for another long gainer. photo by Chas Albright

Faces in Sports — Denny Carli's Career

by Stew Kauffman

Football is a sport which builds many heroes. The players who score, throw good blocks, intercept passes, and complete long passes, are standouts in any game. Even players who give the bench the depth it needs to have a good team are important to any victory. For some players, however, things in the end do not always end the way they are intended. Case in point: Denny Karli, a senior this year, has had a rather different experience with football. Denny is a sociology major with hopes of becoming a teacher and coach. He has been active in IM sports, J club, and is a Men's House representative.

Karli started his football career at Lebanon Catholic High School. He was the starting quarterback. In his first season at Juniata, it looked as though he was in for more success as a quarterback until he had to sit out the season with a shoulder injury. The next year Denny started two games but was back-up quarterback to Terry Turnbaugh. His break came the next year. The starting call had been given to him for the first game. Again injury hit. This time Denny had to sit out the season with a bad knee. Karli started out again this year but the knee seemed to win out. The season was lost again. On a recent examination of the knee, he was told that he has cartilage and ligament damage and that if he ever desires to participate in any strenuous activity, the knee will have to be totally rebuilt. Even with these many disappointments, Denny has been serving the team in the capacity of scout against other teams and as an aid in work with the freshmen team.

Denny still feels that he has gained much by sticking with the game. The team has aided him very much in gaining experience which will prove to be very valuable to him in his future.

When asked about this year's squad, Karli said that the team has a strong nucleus for one of the best seasons in history. From his scouting experiences, there has been no team that the team can't beat, if they play the game they are capable of. He feels that up to this point bad breaks and penalties have been the difference in the games. Denny feels that as soon as the team picks up in consistancy the outcomes of the games will be for the better.

As far as the quarterback situation is concerned on this year's team, Denny has always played on a team where there was a regular starter. He says that the consistency of the offense could pick up with a regular quarterback but there is no guarantee. Coaching is a funny thing in that no matter how you run a team, you could always have done something different. Karli thinks the coaching staff is doing a good job with the players that they have. They have the team together and they have very good placement of manpower.

As Denny puts it, his side of football has not been the same as many of the other players who have gone before him, but the personal reward and satisfaction from the game can (and has been in Denny's case) be gained in many ways other than in the glory of being a star.

Cross Country

by J. Brian Richardson

The Juniata College cross country team absorbed a double defeat on Wednesday, October 13 as they met two strong teams from Bucknell and Franklin & Marshall Colleges at the F&M field in Lancaster, Pa.

The home harriers were just plain outclassed against the two larger schools. The scores were Bucknell 15; Juniata 49 and F&M 19; Juniata 42. Bucknell emerged the winner of the tri-meet by beating F&M by a 15-47 tally.

The first five runners to break the tape were all from Bucknell. S. Bartron led the way with a 23:54 clocking. First for F&M was J. Hargreaves who finished sixth in 24:36. The 1-2 punch for Juniata was Denny Weidler (24:46) and Brian Maurer (26:50) who finished eighth and eighteenth respectively.

The cross country team matches times with Elizabethtown College on Wednesday, October 20 at the Elizabethtown course.

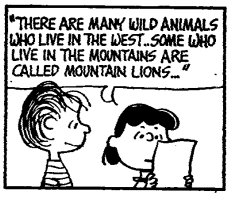
Astrology

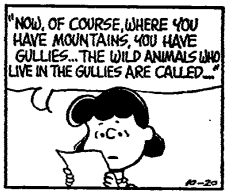
continued from page 4, column 5

in Sociology while Aries-natives (executive, fiery) love the field: out of sixty-nine Soc. majors one is a Pisces, while thirteen are Aries; (3) Mutable (reflective) signs are heavily represented in the faculty, much more lightly represented in the student body. Is there anything important here? We're reserving judgment. An amusing point is that in the Biology-group Water-signs dominate (47, to 36 for Fire, 36 for Air, and 31 for Earth), suggesting an echo of the remark made by Thales (B.C. 600) and confirmed by Darwin that "All life crawls up from the sea." A little touch of ontogeny recapitulating phylogeny there?

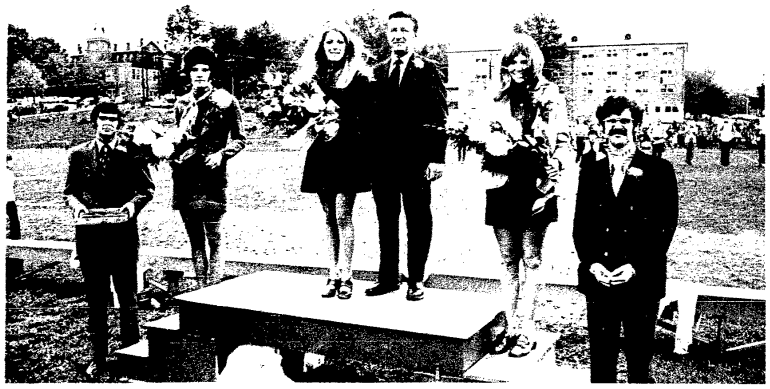
We are onto another situation that can be examined with precision (I was going to say "scientifically" but choose to spare the feelings of a certain lady of the faculty born on January 24). In our seminar we have two members born within fifteen minutes of each other on the same day of the same year. (Such people, not genetic-twins, are called in astrology, astral twins.) Their life-experiences and tastes as measured against those of the rest of the seminar, show similarities beyond random-chance level. Now, among the Freshmen, the Bio. majors, and the Soc. majors we have studied (only to find their birthdates), there are quite a few — maybe 200 — who share birthdates with at least one other student. Some of you have already found in your campus mailbox a short information form; if it should turn out that you were born within a few minutes of another student, you'll hear from us again, perhaps even be asked to visit a seminar-session.

Talking to some of you may show us that "astrological wisdom" is pyrite. But there may be intellectual gold to be mined. Take your pick.





Alumni Treated to Eventful Weekend



1971 Homecoming Queen and her court, l. to r. Rick Pfeffer; Peggy Plumb, senior attendant; Terri Burson, Homecoming queen; Mr. Burson, Terri's father; Marsha Saylor, junior attendant; and Chris McFarland.

THE JUNIATIAN

VOL. XLVIII, NO. 6 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | October 27, 1971

Homecoming '71 Features Traditional JC Events

by Tom Cross

With the game action stopped for half time, Homecoming offically commenced. The pep band played such selections as El Capitan, Bill Bailey and My Fair Lady. The musical entertainment was supplemented with Pompom girls and twilers with batons of fire. After this mood was set the Homecoming Court was announced. Terri Burson was elected Homecoming queen of 1971 with Marsha Saylor as her junior attendant. It was during this moment that blue and gold ballons were set loose across the field with kids trying to catch them before their flight.

A surprise ceremony followed next as Wilkes supporters were given an opportunity to recognize their school sign. The float carrying the sign also had with it a coffin and was driven around the track. It received mixed reactions from the crowd, as the Juniata crowd cheered the activity, Wilkes supporters laid silent. Only fun was meant by the float and the sign was returned after the game. So ended the Homecoming Commencements and the second half began with balloons still in sight.

In their first official function, the class of '75 held a Bonfire—Pep Rally on Thursday, Oct. 21 in the Athletic Field Parking lot.

At 8 p.m. the Bonfire was ceremoniously started by a Freshman who, dressed in Indian garb, dashed from a teepee constructed at the Bonfire site, with a flaming torch, danced around the fire before bringing it to life by hurling his torch into the deadwood. The cheerleaders and pep band went through several cheers and songs before the captains of the football team and Coach Nadzak said a few words about the upcoming game with Wilkes.

The program then progressed into several numerous skits, performed by various members of the class of '75, the climax of which was an actual tar-and-feathering of a certain "far-out" Frosh. With the attendence estimated at approximately 400, the leaders of the Freshman class termed the Bonfire "successful."

The class of '75 would like to extend its appreciation to those who helped make the Bonfire a memorable event for all.

Maynard Ferguson Creates Rapport With Audience in Homecoming Performance

by Bob Kraut

Some things never change. A truly exquisite gem is still beautiful despite its setting. These two sentences sum up my feelings toward the Maynard Ferguson Homecoming Concert-cum-Dance, that took place in the Memorial Gym on Saturday night. For those hearing Ferguson for the first time, they were no doubt impressed by the man's rapport with an audience, the quality of his musicians, and certainly his masterful technique with the horn. Having seen him perform some ten years earlier, his Saturday concert only reaffirmed my earlier affection. Now his hair's longer (and greyer), his clothes are hip, his band is young and British, and his book has been updated to accommodate the young composers. But otherwise his music is surprisingly unchanged.

For those fortunate enough to catch the Buddy Rich concert as well as Maynard, Ferguson will undoubtedly suffer in the overall comparison, unless one can objectively separate the bands from their respective arenas. Despite Rich's scathing remarks, the acoustics and facilities of Oller Hall were far superior to the setting provided for Maynard. I don't know, you could paint and paper the gym, fumigate, and take down the baskets, but the vision of sweat socks dancing in my head would somehow remain. Intimacy was sacrificed for mobility by presenting Maynard in the gym, and unfortunately the trumpeter prestige suffered as well. If concerts are to be held they should be presented as concerts and not disguised as dances. The overall confusion of whether one could watch or dance obviously kept people away in droves.

Maynard Ferguson, Homecoming '71's main attraction, blares forth with another masterful number.

Nonetheless, the Ferguson trumpet blew into the night with much the same beauty as before. Apparently his personal problems are things of the past, and his lip is still very much intact. The hair on the back of my neck stood at attention most the evening from his high-note forays. However, after the second set, having reached my fill of plastic punch, folding chairs and paper table cloths, I retired to my lair and put the Soft Machine and Weather Report on the stero. Some things, indeed, never change, but maybe they should.

Attention All Seniors:

Meetings for seniors interested in registering with the placement service will be Monday, October 25 and Wednesday, October 27. Meetings to be held in Alumni Hall at 6:30 p.m. Monday is for seniors A-K of the alphabet and Wednesday is for L-Z. Any persons with a conflict can interchange evenings.

ANNOUNCEMENT

NOTICE TO ALL JUNIATIANS

The efficiency of the intercollege postal service at Juniata has been decreasing due to a lack of consideration on the part of students and faculty alike. According to Francis Hess, postmaster, users of the intercollege postal service have been sending messages, announcements, reminders and whatnot on small slips of paper. Because of their size, these mailings are often misplaced or lost in the process of transferring mail from the deposit bags to the individual post office boxes. He is therefore requesting that persons corresponding through the intercollege postal service use paper a minimum of three by five inches (the size of an ordinary index filing card) in the future. This will increase postal efficiency and insure the delivery of mailed correspondence.

GRASS ROOTS

Compiled by Kim Hershberger and Donna Trelease

by James Hutchison

Perhaps one of the most prominent contributers to the sequence of events which we call history has been language. Language allows man to communicate intellectual knowledge, dispositions (attitudes, beliefs, and feelings), or does it? I know that many times I find myself without the adequate word, phrase, or sentence which will communicate my feelings or thoughts. And, from examples such as this, man finds himself in the dilemma of an uncommunication gap.

Yes, wars begin and end, people fight and die, and years pass on without ever resolving the issue of communication. This same un-communication is not alien to the Juniata campus.

It seems rather obvious that there is a communication dilemma between the people directly associated with campus activities and those who have only an indirect or occasional confrontation with campus life. This may suggest that the problem goes beyond communication to the perspective of the communicator, or perhaps the problem centers around the inability or unwillingness to listen to what is being said. A short time ago, in a letter to the editor, a concerned student seemed to interpret an understanding relationship as one in which students should be given major control of decisions affecting campus activities. This is not an understanding relationship. The understanding must be mutual. In all due respect to everyone concerned we must, as the prophet Isaiah suggests, come and reason together.

The communication issue has its intracampus implications as well. Professors occasionally fail to say things that they thought they had said and students are often guilty of inilaterally changing the conditions of an established agreement. Students and professors confuse what has been explicitly stated with what has been implicitly suggested or thought. On tests professors use the term "define" when they actually mean "explain." So communication breakdowns are all around us; but it's nothing new.

These types of communication dilemmas are not alien to contemporary issues. It seems, though, that lately we as people often forget that we are faced with such communication difficulties or we refuse to recognize them. The fact that bothers me most is that we are not conscious of our inability to communicate, and that someone else may suffer in some devastating way as a result of our being inconsiderate. It is time forus to admit to our limitations as communicators.

ATTENTION

Don't forget YOUR MOM on Parent's Day!

Order her a mum today or tomorrow.

Show her that you remember her.

Orders taken in Ellis Hall Lounge from 5:00 to 6:00 P.M. Price only $1.50; sponsored by Tri-Beta.

One of the best ways to save face is to keep the lower half of it shut.

Letters To The Editor

Letters to the editor should be addressed to: Editor, The Juniatian, Box 667, Juniata College, Huntingdon, Pa. 16652. The editors reserve the right to print only non-libelous and responsible content and to edit all letters and commentaries submitted to The Juniatan. The staff also reserves the right to publish all full signatures unless the writer can supply valid reason for omitting his name.

Tom Alessi

In his article "Perspective On Curriculum," October 13th edition, Mr. Kindig, as a member of the Task Force Committee, furtively confronts the question of transferring credit from the Freshman Program. To say he is vague would be an understatement, but the vagueness can, of course, be attributed to the absence of "hard data." Isn't it comforting to know how much research was done before the program was affected? How many organizations alter their system completely without possession of and study of "hard data" on every aspect? Is this thorough member of the committee a true representative? Were the other members as diligent in their investigation?

The apex of Mr. Kindig's research appears to be an interview with our registrar to determine the criteria from acceptance of transfer credits. This is truly the only valuable paragraph in both columns.

He states in the following paragraph that, in general, it is easier to transfer credit to private schools than public schools because private schools depend on transfer students to "balance the budget." If the phrase "balance the budget" is interpreted to mean "try to get out of financial trouble," which would be true in Juniata's case, then private schools are in financial difficulties. (I have "hard data" to back this up.) If, like Juniata, the other private colleges turn to new and individual curricula, then there will be no common ground for transfer. If course transfer cannot be guarateed at present, what are the chances going to be in the future?

Public schools are not merely harder to transfer credit to, but nearly impossible. It is a simple fact that public institutions are overcrowded. From personal experience I know that they don't care if a student attends or not. In some cases they even try to discourage by not giving credits for courses like Great Epochs. Isn't it strange how these backward institutions with out-moded curricula have an overabundant supply of applicants?

Following his past performance of not considering all aspects of a problem, Mr. Kindig fails to account for the two most controversial factors of the Freshman Program; the unit and pass/fail grading. I challenge any Task Force Committee member to come up with a list of one percent of the colleges and universities in the country that accept courses under either of these conditions. (My P.O. Box is 1746. Please include location of each institution.)

The concluding statement of the article is that Juniata's academic reputation is reason for students not encountering insurmountable barriers in attempting to transfer credit. Horse ! What is academic reputation built on if not on the curriculum? Our good reputation, if we have one, is a product of the old curriculum. Why did it need to be changed? Mr. Kindig, how can you expect a school to accept our new curriculum courses on the basis of our old curriculum reputation? Because you say so?

Perhaps there is a question as to why I did not speak up at the Task Force discussions last year. I did, only to be misled by an uninformed discussion leader. Since, at the time, no one even knew what a unit was, the ambiguity of the proposal fostered confusion and misinformation with no source for clarification.

Miring in this disarray, we, the upperclassmen, voted to make our voice heard—ha! If anyone thinks there was any concern for the upperclassmen in making this decision, I point to our curriculum this year. Biology majors, how do you like your course offering? Philosophy majors? Religion majors? And that goes for every other department. The Task Force Committee acted under a cloud of uncertainty and misinformation, without regard to the effect on upperclassmen. They already had our money. Mr. Kindig asserts that the new curriculum was never intended to be "academic flypaper." and I would dispute this point, but it is not important. What is important is that it is "academic flypaper."

The students of this school are getting academically tromped upon. If people don't speak up, it is going to get worse. Think about it.

The acute problem of securing medical attention for the students of Juniata College has recently come to my attention. A few davs ago, a student encountered a medical emergency, and to my absolute shock, it was revealed to me that he could not obtain a trained individual to aid him for several hours. This, to me, poses serious threats to the students of Juniata College. It must always be the strict rule that an individual receive medical attention when it is required (i.e., in an emergency). If an individual knows that he may not receive prompt medical attention, then dire consequences may result. What we need to do is to open the eyes of those medical officials who do not stick to this most basic of medical principles.

Health is one of the most important aspects of an individual's well-being. If he should require attention in some emergency he must be assured that he will receive not only immediate but competent medical assistance. When it comes to a person's health, we must anticipate and be able to act on the principles that humans are not completely resistant to forms of accidents, and that those resulting accidents may be serious. Therefore I strongly urge that the individuals involved with medicine realize that everyone is important.

S. C. Treacy

MABLE EMFIELD'S
BEAUTY SALON
306 - 7th STREET
Hair & Wig Styling a Specialty
All Beauty Services
Telephone 643-5440

by Rick Mitz

Sense and Cents

I had the good fortune to recently spend a day with Willie "The Actor" Sutton, an infamous bank robber left over from the 30's who had the bad fortune of stealing others' fortunes and getting caught. Thirty-seven years worth.

Called "The Actor" for his many disguises that got him in and out of prison, Willie, aging in at 70, is now on parole and spends his time exploiting his appeal to former Gangbusters listeners by doing publicity for various banks around the country.

But more than his profitable career in banking, I was interested in Willie's views on today's young people. Having been released from prison only a year and a half ago, Willie is young in the sense that his life is just beginning, and old in the sense that he now values sense and not cents.

Holt, Friendenberg, Kozol — step aside. This Brooklyn-born bank robber, suddenly turned educational critic, has plenty to say about students and education.

"The student revolution? There's adequate cause for young people to be doing what they're doing. But instead of leaving the universities, they should be trying to change the school system, which is very detrimental. Teachers' ideas are very old and they're only interested in the pay check. "Years ago," Willie said, possibly reminiscing about his own bank-busting career, "people took pride in their work."

Willie feels that students should band together and decide themselves what should be taught in their schools. "Older people feel that students should be seen and not heard — but who's responsible for these terrible conditions in the world today? The older people are. Now it's up to young people to change these injustices. The older people didn't give us the world we want to live in."

And Willie talked about his own newly-discovered "youth." "What do I want to be when I grow up? The plans I make are for the here and the now. I once wanted to get into law," said the man who instead went outside of it. "Now I would like to contribute to solving the serious problems we have. But," said the bank robber who stole millions, "evrybody today is so busy making money."

STRAIT'S TROPICAL FISH & PET SUPPLIES

522 WASHINGTON STREET

Telephone 643-5070

Perspective on Curriculum

by Karl Kindig

When I wrote last week's column, I had no idea that the final sentence would be so prohetic. I stated at that time that the decisions of which calendar alternative to be followed next year would be made by "those who have something to say — and say it." This statement was made with the intent of stimulating student input to the Committee on Calendar. As it turned out, however, on September 12, the department chairmen met and, in effect, decided to implement a three-term calendar for next year. It seems they had something to say and said it.

In discussing this action with Dean Norris, it was learned that he was under pressure from the faculty to announce a decision on calendar immediately. "The faculty," he said, "desired to have a definite commitment to a given calendar before proceeding to develop courses and units for next year." Although he seemed genuinely concerned about providing opportunities for student input, he felt that the announcement of the calendar decision could be put off only a few days after the publication of last week's article. Because effective opinion on such a complicated issue needs time to develop, student input under these circumstances could have been little more than a formality. The utter reality of the situation is that the decision on calendar was made, de facto, in the absence of student input and perhaps that of a large part of the faculty as well. It is with the reality of the situation, i.e. a three-term calendar for all students next year, that we should now concern ourselves.

Although much of the policy detail concerning this calendar is not yet available, it is possible to look at some basic considerations. In spite of the fact that all courses and units will be taught in the same time period, the distinction between them will remain. Students under the new program will be permitted to enrole in only those units which are designated as such by the Academic Standards Committee. (It is expected that the mere conversion of existing courses to the new time period will not constitute grounds for approval as units.) Old program students will be permitted to enroll in courses, not approved as units, as well as units; however, the latter situation will not be encouraged. Therefore, there will be next year, in effect, a dual system run on one time period in contrast to this year where there is a dual system run on two time periods.

It is the upper class students attempting to complete their graduation requirements who will probably experience the most difficulty next year. Theoretically, there should be approximately as many course (and unit) offerings available to them as there was in the past. However, while the numerical reduction of offerings may not seem significant, there is some question as to the overall usefulness of these offerings to the student's program. Many of the newly created units, although technically available to upperclassmen, may be structured differently to the extent of impairing their usefulness. This may be especially true with respect to sequential courses. For example, a junior or senior economics major attempting to fulfill his collateral requirement in mathematics could experience difficulty in taking a "Calculus of One Variable" unit after having taken an "Introduction to Calculus" course. Because of possible restructuring of the unit the material covered in the two may not mesh.

This is only a hypothetical example, but it is not inconceivable that such problems may arise. This point is made not as criticism of the calendar change — to be sure there would be many problems in retaining the dual time period systm. It is made, rather, to alert upperclassmen to some of the potential difficulties they may encounter. Upperclassmen when registering in the spring should be very certain of the exact nature of the material to be covered in a course or unit offering. If after consultation with the appropriate faculty personnel, it appears that the material a student desires to make is not available in a standard offering, the possibility of a tutorial or independent study should be explored. Most of the faculty recognize their responsibility to provide a meaningful education for the remaining classes under the old curriculum and should be more than happy to cooperate.

It is not possible to report with more detail other effects of the transition period on upperclassmen at this time. It is a problem to be taken seriously, and information will be reported as it is available.

Dental patients ten or twenty years from now will be treated with drugs, not drills, according to the October SCIENCE DIGEST. Captain Seymour Hoffman of the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology predicts that electron microscopy will allow dentists to pinpoint an area in which decay is starting long before it is visible by any other means. Early detection will permit treatment by drugs, and the drill will become obsolete.

+ Album of the Month +

Carole King — "Tapestry"

reg. $5.98 now $3.99

Words and Music Mezzanine

Miller's
A Center for Family Shopping

The Creative World of Stan Kenton

stan kenton and his orchestra

in concert

Today's Most Exciting Sound in Music

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 6

8:00 P.M.

Tyrone Area High School

Tickets at J.C. Info. Desk

Creative World, Inc. P.O. Box 35216
Los Angeles, Calif. 90035

Book Review:—
The Future of Law in A Multicultural World

Dr. Kihl's article is a review of the following book: Bozeman, Adda B. THE FUTURE OF LAW IN A MULTICULTURAL WORLD, Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1971.

International law has largely been discredited as the norm of conduct and behavior of nation states because of its idealistic and normative assumptions. Of course, since the days of Hugo Grotius, there have been skeptics of the scholarship of international law who point out the gap in the affairs of the national conduct and policies, between the promise and action, rhetoric and true intentions, and who question, therefore, the possibility of ascertaining the normative standards in the conduct of state policies. The harsh criticism of international law as a discipline has been directed most severely in recent years by students who begin to reassess the fundamental assumptions and rationale of the scholarship in the name of political realism and methodological reflection.

What makes our time and the days ahead unique and difficult, Professor Adda Bozeman seems to argue in her book, is that we are increasingly faced with the reality of a multicultural world as a result of the expansion of the geographic horizon and the globalization of the world environment. The concept of law itself is the product of the Western mind. No other world cultures, including Islamic Middle East, Indianized Asia, Africa South of Sahara or classical China, have acquired a deep appreciation and respect for law, to the extent that the Judeo-Christian heritage of the West has done historically.

The author deplores the fact that the Western institution of international law is losing its efficacy in the face of the onrush of the multicultural world system and the emergence of the non-Western culture systems. In claiming this, she seems to overlook, by implication, the important fact that the traditional "higher law" of the civilized nations also gave rise to colonialism, unequal treaties, sphere of influences, etc. If the non-Western world is demanding equal status and sovereign rights, no matter how contentious and empty such a claim might seem, this situation is precisely the consequence of the Western impact and interaction of the non-west with the West. One cannot turn the clock back.

In support of her essentially pessimistic perception of the possibility of transnational norm setting, she digs into the record of the study of various world cultures and presents an impressive body of written evidence gathered and reflected upon by various authorities on the subjects. Her footnoting is a testimony to her thorough scholarship. The book is worthy of serious attention by those enthusiasts and pessimists alike who are concerned about the possibility of restoring a measure of order and controlling the situation of conflict in the arena of international behavior and diplomacy.

Yet, I am not sure whether Bozeman tells the whole story. She engages in the analysis of the past record and argues from the standpoint of a cultural ethnologist. In spite of her use of political science concepts like POLITICAL SYSTEM, she is essentially non-scientific and trapped by the logic of historicism. She exaggerates the uniqueness of events and cultural experiences and overlooks the fact that science (for that matter the systematic inquiry of any subject matter) requires generalization from the particular rather than particularization of the ideas. I therefore find some methodological flaws in the approach she adopts in writing the book which is otherwise scholarly and thorough.

Her reference to certain philosophical precepts, for instance, the gap of ideas and action as the source of difficulty as well as the importance of linguistic-semantic domain of human experience, is resourceful and rewarding. However, she also impresses this reviewer as exercising a kind of "sentimental imperialism" characteristic of some American thinking and a naive approach to world problems. In this case her reference is not to the native America but to the so-called Judeo-Christian cultural heritage, i.e., the respect of law and order. Her view of law seems essentially static in that the dynamic and dialectic quality of change, as a result of the intercultural contact and interaction, is not accounted for. Despite these qualifications her book, which tries to reassess the limits and possibility of law in a multicultural world, is a welcome addition to the literature of the field.

Department of Political Science
Juniata College
Young W. Kihl

This review article will appear in the Winter Issue of THE ANNALS of the American Academy of Political and Social Science in 1971.

Peoples Awarded Bank Scholarship

Stephen J. Peoples, a junior at Juniata College, has been awarded the Union National Bank and Trust Company Scholarship for the 1971-72 academic year.

A graduate of the Huntingdon Area High School, Peoples is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul J. Peoples, 708 Portland Avenue, Huntingdon.

The Union National Bank and Trust Company Scholarship was first presented to Juniata College in 1966 to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of the firm. The annual award is given to a student from Huntingdon County in recognition of the close relationship which has existed through the years between the Union National Bank and Trust Company and Juniata College.

EDITORIAL

When it is pertinent, "Juniatian" staff members take pen in hand and editorialize on issues they feel to be of prime interest and consideration. Each Editorial reflects the personal opinion of its author. What follows is this week's expostulation:

The Building and Grounds Committee met in the Blue Room of Ellis Hall at 3:00 p.m., October 8. What exactly happened at this meeting I won't really concern myself with, but rather I will give a personal opinion (and criticism) of the Board's activities.

I feel that placing students on the Board as "advisors" was a very good idea. This policy was adopted quickly by Juniata after the various national turmoils over lack of student policy influence in college affairs. This shows that Juniata can be flexible towards national moods. Trustees themselves have supported (or even sponsored) various regulation changes. Some criticism has been leveled at the trustees for being conservative, but they must balance not only the student, faculty, and administration viewpoints, but also those of the alumni and financial supporters. Students must realize the conflict of interests the trustees face since they are the final guardians of the College and its reputation.

All the trustees were very well informed as to campus affairs and appeared interested and competent. I must compliment the trustees, especially Buildings and Grounds, for the exemplary facilities and buildings they have provided in light of the endowment problem this college faces. Over half the campus buildings are less than 12 years old and Juniata, as a result, compares well with other Pennsylvania school of the same size.

From a personal viewpoint, I would point out two problems this particular committee faced. First, the administration has "control" of the information that the trustees receive. All the information presented comes from administration sources, not directly from the various deans and coaches. Thus various items didn't come up (perhaps by oversight), such as the change in maintenance personnel and/or an evaluation of this new policy. Various proposals by other deans and coaches were not mentioned, such as lighted tennis courts, various pavings, remodelings, etc., that even I was aware of but the trustees were not. I realize there are regular channels for such proposals to be heard by the administration, but this seems to be a bottleneck when the trustees must act upon "relayed" information. Any politician knows the value of having a sympathetic ear at the top when the administration is unable (or unwilling) to act. I must admit I'm in no position to judge, but not the trustees. I would suggest that the trustees be presented a list of all proposals and changes made simply as a point of information. I don't wish to burden the Board with petty details, but more complete information, in my opinion, is a necessity.

A second problem concerns the method of proposals. Dr. Stauffer was quite reasonable and highly cooperative with the students. However, he requested that all proposals be referred to him and then to the trustees. Dr. Stauffer was quite considerate in this respect, but this procedural item could be inhibiting, perhaps with some future recommendation. Both the student government and the faculty are only too familiar with having submitted proposals and then having no action. I realize that the administration and (eventually) the trustees are responsible for policies and actions, but at least both concerned parties should be able to react. Assurance that everything receives consideration is much better than the frustration of no response, no matter what obstacles prevent action.

I firmly believe that students can play a very worthwhile part in the trustee board meetings and make substantial contributions. The Board itself must have agreed, as it voted, to have students added as a liason between themselves and the students. Students already have had influence on the administration's workings (or lack of them). I hope students will be able to further participate and have extended privilges in the near future. Students become alumni all too quickly, and they remember well the difficulties of their undergraduate experiences. Student-trustee relations have just begun, but they must grow and mature so that the entire college community can benefit.

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College
Huntingdon, Pa.

ASSOCIATED COLLEGIATE PRESS — ACP — I.P. COLLEGIATE PRESS

REESTABLISHED September 9, 1971

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891 and "The Juniatian," established November 1924

SCOTT K. LEEDY, Managing Editor

PATRICK E. FLEAGLE, Associate Editor — ROBERT A. JONES, Business Manager
DEBI FRAZIER, Assistant Editor — STEWARD A. KAUFFMAN, Jr., Sports Editor
STEVEN S. KIMMEL, Assistant Editor — WILLIAM E. SCARLETT, Circulation Manager
BRIAN T. MAURER, Assistant Editor — WILLIAM M. DAVID, Photography Editor

ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANTS: General Information, Susan Stalker, Jean Thompson, Deborah Walker; Community Relations, Stephen J. Crowley, Jeffrey A. Naugle, Linda Richardson; Feature Columnists, Karl K. Kindig, Linda Markey; Business, Thomas E. Alessi, Jean Jarrow, Nancy Tamburo; Typing and Proofing, Sandra Currier, Nancy Floyd, Sara Frank, Carol Garzillo, Margaret Haines, Anne Holzinger, Donna Lee, Janet Mason, Valorie Priddle, William M. Rea, Cynthia Smith, Stuart C. Treacy, Gayle Trofe, Gretchen Yost; Layout, Janet Bartschat, Roger C. Davonald, Margery Herr, Keith E. Klein, Catharine Real, James S. Reiley, Arthur W. Ritter; Art, Ann Grote, Lawrence R. Stem; Circulation, Ralph P. Casale, Denise Deaner, Susan Dochtermann, Marlyn Hoover, Miriam Smith.

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughtout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students of Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized in Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 1500 — Subscription $5.00 per year

VOL. XLVIII, NO. 6 — October 27, 1971

Ear of the Needle

Continued from page 3

self to sleep with it. And for those of us who can't get enough of it, it reappears on Side 3 as "Visit to Mother Nature Land." It evokes perfectly the beautiful cover painting by Gauguin: palm trees, majectic mountains, cool ocena breezes—God how I love it! Erotic music of this order should come wrapped in plain brown paper covers. The fantastic thing about this music is that it swings, sometimes ferociously, as in "Love Letter" where (get this groupies) Felix professes his secret love for Odetta, and "Love Me," or ever-so-subtly, as in "Little Dove." This song surely qualifies as a rock masterpiece due to the inclusion of Alice Coltrane, the widow of saxophonist John Coltrane, on harp. It literally "takes off," and 6½ minutes later touches down in one of the most ethereal moments ever heard in rock music. Felix obviously has been spiritually inspired by the music of John Coltrane; "Sky Trane" is included here in homage, and for most rock listeners this album provides a chance to discover one of the delicate beauty, shading and nuance so flagrantly absent from the majority of today's music. The title cut "Peaceful World" takes in all of Side 4 and is truly the essence of the album. It's a billowy white cloud, and softly cushions just about any experience you may have in mind from yoga to the Nature of Man, or woman.

"Peaceful World" is then an infinite trip, from early Rascals' nostalgia "Happy Song" to "Mother Nature Land," where the group is surely headed. So if you dig not just good music, but superlative music, this one's for you. And praise be to the gods on Mt. Columbia, it's 2 discs for the price of 1. Pick it up before they decide to jack the price. Felix and I will love you for it.

RITCHEY'S MARKET
1100 MOORE STREET
Fresh Meats and Groceries
Telephone 643-1400

UPTOWN CUT-RATE
1229 MIFFLIN STREET
Food — Magazines

Montgomery Sales Agency
516 WASHINGTON STREET
Telephone 643-1390

G. C. MURPHY CO.
528 Washington Street
The Complete Variety Store

Duality on Crime and Punishment

by Michael Kamins

Fyodor Dostoyevsky began Crime and Punishment in 1865 and completed the first of his great novels in 1866. This tumultuous period in Russian history is in numerous ways analogous to our own troubled times. It was a period of transition and uncertainty which few philosophical tenets could claim universal approbation. Advocates of almost every conceivable dogma could be found in the Moscow-Petersburg area, but the two main camps were the Slavophiles and the Westernites. These postions are antithetical in nature, the former resisting the encroahment of Western ideas on the Russian culture, the latter vehemently progagating the advantages of the new Western liberalism. This argument was personified on the literary circuit in the personages of Dostoyevsky and Iven Turgenev. The author of Fathers and Sons ascribed to the Western beliefs while Dostoyevsky was stringent in his support of the Slavophils. In work rightfully reflects the tremendous ambivalence and ambiguity of the period.

The cultural ambivalence is reflected in the spiritual duality of the hero, Rodion Romanovich Raskolnikov. From the first mention of his name the reader is made aware of the duality of his soul. (raskol=schism, split). Crime and Punishment is divided in six books (parts); the first book describes Raskolnikov's murder of an old female pawn broker, the following five books are devoted to Raskolnikov's discovery of self which was actuated by the murder and the circumstances surrounding it. There is a vicissitude in tone following Book I which the author does to emphasize the essence of the novel. The heart of the novel is Raskolnikov's spiritual conflict and eventual denouement which is made explicit by the switch from narrative to dramatic tone following Book I. The spiritual dilemma that the hero must elucidate is the motivation behind his crime. The duality is a monumental one: is he the utilitarian munificent killer or the Napoleonic killer. The altruistic murderer is one who perpetrates a "crime" for the greater good of society. In other wards, in seeking retribution he will repay his crime many times over. Along this line of thought, the hero would repay his violation by doing numerous good deeds—he would save his sister from self effacement by an odious marriage by supporting her and his mother, thus bringing some happiness into an otherwise dismal existence. Such motives might be considered laudable if there is any veracity to them. The Napoleonic killer, on the other hand, would murder to see if he was capable of transcending all moral restrictions—to see if he was a superman (Frederick Nietzsche explicates a similiar idea in Thus Spake Zarathustra). If this is the real motivation the murder becomes a mere experiment. Raskolnikov would be attempting to decide whether he was "a man or a louse." The altruistic killer could be a good Christian trying to vindicate himself, the Napoleonic killer becomes an antiChrist.

One of the main characteristics of Dostoyevsky's art is centralization. Raskolnikov's personality appears as the axis of composition. Dostoyevsky seeks to define and emphasize the conflicts of his hero by shawing shades or mirror images of Raskolnikov in other characters. In Crime and Punishment is one main plot and two collateral plots. The main plot concerns itself exclusively with the exploits of Raskolnikov. One of the collateral plots deals with the Raskolnikov family. From this collateral plot emerges Svidrigaylov, the demonic double of the hero. It is important to recall the Svidri-

Continued on page 6

The Ear of the Needle

by Bob Kraut

The Rascals Peaceful World Columbia G30462 (2-record set)

The Rascals should need no introduction to the astute or casual observer of the Rock Scene. But these are not the same Young Rascals who opened the expressway to your heart with "Good Lovin'," "Groovin'," and "People Gotta Be Free." Gone are cute little Eddie Brigati, he of the unsure tambourine and the pinched falsetto, and guitarist Gene Corn? ish, who always looked to straight for this bunch. Even before playing an album you knew Gene's one compositional contribution was guaranteed to bring down the quality of the entire effort. Fortunately, Dino Danelli, a rock drummer of the highest order, if somewhat overtly showy (2-tone sticks! C'mon Dino!) and maestro Felix Cavaliere remain. Enough superlatives cannot be found for the patriarchal-looking Felix to presently categorize the state of his art; however, given the space, who knows? One gets the impression that Felix is the Rascals: at the top overseeing all, running from one instrument to another, arranging this, conducting that. He blatantly is quite the shining light of the album, and at last have provided himself with a supporting cast of musicians capable of transferring his ideas into beautiful vibrations.

New guitarist Buzz Feiten has Jimi Hendrix's guitar sound down pat. Cry "Thief!" if you wish, but this is the first time I've heard anyone emulate that cosmic style so authentically, and in the context of the "new" Rascals it works perfectly. But the wisest additions are culminated in the persons of vocalists Molly Holt and Ann Sutton. Not only do they look a helluva lot better than Eddie (I never found him to be cute) but they've also born falsettos and beautiful ones too.

My favorite track from the album, and I'm sure yours will be too, is "Mother Nature Land." Ever since I first heard it I haven't been able to get it out of my mind. I wake up singing it, and sing my-

Continued on page 4

W&J ANNOUNCEMENT

Once again the Washington and Jefferson Literary Journal is soliciting students for material to be used in this annual literary magazine. Interested persons may send prose, poetry, drama, music, graphics, and photography to:

The Journal
Washington and Jefferson College
Washington, Pennsylvania 15301

All manuscripts must be received not later than December 17, 1971.

All material to be returned should include a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Things Artistic

by Linda Markey

On Monday evening, November 1, in Oller Hall, the Huntingdon Concert Association and Juniata College will present the Vanguard Theater. They will be performing Eugene O'Neil's autobiographical play "A Long Day's Journey Into Night". Campus theater goers will remember favorably last year's performance of Ionesco's "Chairs," Patrick's "Camera Obscura," and Albee's "Zoo Story."

This impressive theater group started as the Vanguard Theater Project under the direction of Miriam Cherin and Marcelle Fisher. In years since, they have successfully accomplished their goal of bringing theater to college and high school students in Pittsburgh and surrounding areas. In all, 14 productions have been performed at various institutions of learning. The crew of Vanguard Theater consists of the cast: Tom Dennis, Milton Earl Forrest, David Bray and Onita Bray; the directors, Miriam Cherin and Marcelle Fisher; the technical director, Thomas P. Struthers; and the costume director, Gordon Micunis.

This year's play, "Long Day's Journey Into Night," should be one of the most ambitious dramatic productions brought to this area in recent years according to Bruce Davis who is co-ordinator of the series. In this play, which O'Neill did not wish to have performed or published until twenty-five years after his death, he describes the sufferings and failure of his family. Among the characters are his father, a confused and lonely old-time actor; his mother, an innocent woman, who, because of her self-imposed isolation, turns to drugs for comfort; and O'Neill himself, a hypersensitive, tubercular boy searching for God. Critics have proclaimed this play as one of the most significant and eloquent of the American theater.

Be sure not to miss this exciting performance. Students and members of the faculty can pick up their free tickets at the Ellis Hall information desk.

Do the Trustees Have A Moral Conviction?

SG and SAC Study Issues in Drinking Policy

This article was generated from a sort of disappointment fervor created by the Pro-Con columns of October 13 and 20. I hope it can become a semi-regular series geared at informing the campus community of where the Students Executive Council is at in their thinking, actions and proposals. This first article deals with two subjects generated by the Pro-Con columns: the drinking policy and the relationship of the Students Executive Council to the Board of Trustees.

The drinking policy at Juniata has been almost as good an issue as food quality if you want to get students to gripe about something. For about six or seven months now, the Students Activity Council and the Students Executive Council have been involved in trying to do constructive work towards the re-evaluation of the policy. There are some very important issues involved in the question which go far beyond all but one of the statements contained in the October 13 Pro Con. Should all students be allowed to drink in the dorms? State law prohibits all but about 25% of Juniata's students from drinking anyway. Also, if the Trustees, who, by the way, own the college, have a moral conviction regarding the issue are not they obliged to reflect that in the policy of the College? Isn't there, as Dr. Klug has pointed out, the real chance of an open drinking policy affecting the academic attitudes and effectiveness of students? What effect would a change in policy have on the reputation of the College? Isn't there the real possibility that a change would alienate many of the supporters of the College and, thereby, endanger its existence? If those students who are of legal drinking age aren't prohibited from patronizing the local bars, what good reason is there for allowing them to drink on campus? To me, the attitudes expressed in the Pro-Con column are pretty much devoid of any logical arguments against keeping the policy as it is. If you really want the policy changed, why can't you sit down and look at the problem and come up with better reasons than "I want it-give it to me?"

The Students Activities Council and the leaders of the Students Executive Council have been dealing with the real issues involved and have come up with some tentative answers. We've tried to draw up some defensible positions that we could use to balance the question of change. First of all, the proposal that was sent to the trustees asked for a change in policy only for students 21 or older. We have yet to find a reason for going against State law. As unlikely as it may seem, I think students have managed to raise some pro-change arguments that make some sense. The question of academic freedom charges to the front immediately. If students have the right and maturity to be responsible for their own education, then why are they not mature enough to be able to make their own decision on alcohol? If we can so nobly recognize the student's right to control his future via his education and, concurrent with this recognition, design a curriculum to make the student responsible for himself, why can't he be responsible for his personal life outside of the classroom? If the Board says to the Churchof the Brethren that we will not bar military recruiters from campus because students must be allowed to choose among all possible alternatives, why can't a student decide for himself whether or not to drink? If students are to be told, along with their parents, that now that they are at Juniata they are expected to act like mature adults, why aren't they treated like adults?

As mentioned above, the Students Activities Council took these questions to task and decided there existed a justifiable position for change and have requested the Board of Trustees to re-evaluate the drinking policy. The Board has agreed to do so and a panel of Trustees is being set up to hold hearings on the matter. The questions are now out in the open and are to be dealt with in a responsible manner.

Some have said, why raise the issue? We can get away with drinking now, why not just let the Board think the policy is working and go ahead and run down to the distributor and pick up a keg? Why not? Because you just as well lead them down a dark alley and roll them. Call it "expediency" if you will, it is no better than theft.

This raises the further issue of the relationship between the Students Executive Council and the Board. The "Lesher squad" feels we spend too much time trying to "please" the Board. True, we have been working to improve the understanding between the Board and students and we are trying to present the request for change in such a manner that it will at least get consideration. Are we trying to "please" them? I suppose that is true, in a why. What we are trying to do is tell them the truth about what students are like, about what students think, about the issues of the drinking policy. We hope these things "please" them but we are not going out of our way to try to see that they do. We are going out of our way to try to make today's students real to them and in turn make them real to the students.

Continued on page 5

JC Government in Action

by Kim Hershberger

Membership in the National Student Lobby, a drinking policy statement to the trustees, and the procedure for approval of clubs were the main issues discussed at last Tuesday's Student Government meeting.

Several legislators felt there was no need to consult the students concerning Juniata's membership in the N.S.L. They asserted that most of the students are apathetic. Therefore, the decision for membership in the N.S.L. was passed without visiting the dorms to get student opinion.

At the meeting, it was reported that a policy statement on on-campus student drinking had been presented to the trustees. The board agreed to appoint a study committee, which would consider a change in the drinking regulations for 21 year-olds.

President Jon Hunter revealed the fact that clubs on campus cannot exist until they are approved by Student Government. A statement will be released by the government explaining what procedure clubs must follow for approval. Also, Hunter said that any soliciting of students or concession selling must be endorsed by the Senate.

Two legislators, one Sophomore and one Junior, were then selected to attend a week-end leadership training seminar at Duquesne University.

The Executive Council of Women's Student Government, that body which guides activities and proposes policies for women students on campus, met on Wednesday October 20.

During the meeting, several committees were established: a publicity committee chaired by Cindy loquy or speakers committee headed by Sue Schultheis and Lidian Pow to promote better communications; and a policy committee, consisting of the president and vice president of each dorm and of WSG to write up policies in clear, precise terms.

A discussion of the pros and cons of frosh hours resulted in the proposal that on weekdays women must sign out or have someone else sign them out before midnight for overnight absences. If legitimate Carlson to advertise events; a colexcuses detain them past twelve, the hall counselors may be called to open the door.

An evaluation of Guy Britton's craft sale, a finalization of Parents' Day plans and a discussion of students' reactions to the pet and bicycle policies constituted the remainder of the agenda.

Bill Introduced to Lower Senator Age

A bill to lower the minimum age requirment for State Senators from 25 to 21 years has been introduced into the State Senate by Senator Robert A. Rovner (R-6th District).

"I feel that America needs the dissent, the vision, the constructive action of youth in the years ahead. One of the best ways to provide this needed influx of ideas is to give our young adults the right to hold public office," Rovner said.

"Although the 18 year old now has the right to vote, many of these young people feel frustrated by the lack of communication with the "power structure." We must give these young people the right to seek and hold office and to participate in a responsible manner in the government of state and nation," Rovner noted.

The minimum age for State Representative in the Commonwealth is presently 21 years. The passage of this bill would make the minimum age 21 years for all positions in the State Legislature.

Rovner, 27, is the youngest Republican State Senator in the history of the Commonwealth.

"Today's young people are a much better educated generation. They are deeply interested in the future of our country and they are living in a world that, although they inherited it from the former generation, they have the power to change," Rovner said.

I urge my fellow legislators to consider this bill and to act in a swift manner for its enactment. We must give young people the right to become responsible leaders," Rovner concluded.

Juniata

CAMPUS CRIER

October

Wednesday	27	Cross Country — Lock Haven	Home
		Spanish Table — Faculty Lounge	4:45 to 6:15 p.m.
		Placement Information Meeting — Alumni Hall	6:30 p.m.
		Chess Club — Ballroom Annex	7:00 p.m.
		Annual Huntingdon Halloween Parade	7:00 p.m.
		IVCF Prayer Meeting — Gold Room	5:00 p.m.
Thursday	28	South Hall Talent Show — Old Faculty Club	6:00 to 10:00 p.m.
		IVCF Hoagie Sale in dorms beginning	9:00 p.m.
Friday	29	Film — "Rashomon" — Alumni Hall	8:00 p.m.
Saturday	30	IVCF Prayer Meeting — Gold Room	11:30 a.m.
		Football — Washington and Jefferson	Away
		Dames Square Dance — Diamond Lake	8:15 p.m.
		Coffee House: L. A. Murphy	9:00 p.m. to 1:00 a.m.
		(Rain date for Halloween Parade)
Monday	1	Text Book Display — Ballroom Annex	9:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.
Wednesday	27	Cross Country — Lock Haven	Home
		Concert Series: Vanguard Players — Oller Hall	8:15 p.m.
Wednesday	3	Reading hour — Shoemaker Gallery	8:15 to 9:30 p.m.
		Cross Country — Shippensburg	Home
		Spanish Table — Faculty Lounge	4:45 to 6:15 p.m.
		Chess Club — Ballroom Annex	7:00 p.m.
Friday	5	"The Crucible" — Oller Hall	8:15 p.m.
		Film — "400 Blows" — Alumni Hall	8:00 p.m.
Saturday	6	Parents' Day
		Football — Western Maryland — Home	1:30 p.m.
		Parents, Students and President Reception — Ballroom Annex	4:00 to 5:00 p.m.
		Parents' Seminar on Student Life — Shoemaker Gallery	10:00 to 11:00 a.m.
		Parents' Association — Shoemaker Gallery	All day
		"The Crucible" — Oller Hall	8:15 p.m.
		Coffee House: Landscape With Cows	9:00 p.m. to 1:00 a.m.

Drinking Policy

Continued from page 3

What else are we to do? Let the misunderstanding reach the point where the Board exists merely to give money? Or maybe we should run into the Board meeting, half drunk, yell and scream at them about being old fuddies and tell them to hell with the fact that they are peopple too. It's just that we happen to believe that change is made by working with people rather than against them. We also believe that we can do two things: we can work slowly and carefully to justify change and win a little bit at a time, or we can push so hard that the roof falls in and change stops dead in its tracks for a long time to come. We believe we should do things right the first time. If it works—great, if it doesn't we'll start over and try again. At least now we have a real chance. We are determined to use it for the best. That is our responsibility to the students.

For now, that's where we're at. .

Penn State Plans New Film Series

University Park, Pa., Oct. — A new production of the classical French "Masquerade" will make its debut next month at The Pennsylvania State University.

Moliere's costumed comedy, "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme," will be presented by the University's Department of French through the auspices of the French Government and the cultural counselors to the French Embassy in Washington, D.C.

Moliere used his creative genius to transform the standard court "Masquerade" into a subtle and profound comedy that reflected the customs of late Seventeenth Century France. He created the characters of M. Jourdain, Mme. Jourdain, the maid Nicole and the others which are now world famous in "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme."

The new 1971 production of "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme," in French, will be performed throughout North America by Le Treteau de Paris and Les Comediens des Champs Elysees, directed by Maurice Jacquemont with sets and costumes designed by Jose Quiroga.

The groups will portray Moliere's characters that include the French bourgeoisie who were overwhelmed by mingling with the "gentilhommes," and the impoverished nobleman of the story who recovered his birthright fortune only by becoming a knave. Moliere had only to draw his characters from his own experiences.

This year marks the fourteenth season for North America University touring for Le Treteau de Paris. Their previous performances of "Caligula," "Les Chaises," and "La Lecon" in the 1969-1970 season were well received by American university audiences.

"Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme" will be presented at the University on Tuesday, Nov. 16, at 8:00 p.m. in the Schwab Auditorium. Tickets are available on or after Nov. 8 at the Hetzel Union Building desk daily and at the box office on Nov. 16 only.

Pro—Con: The New Juniata Comps

Last week each member of the Pittsburgh Pirates took home a check for 20,000, their winner's share of the World Championship Series. Immediately we were struck with the irony of the situation — did any of the Buccos ever take a comp? On the other hand, each of us Juniata students must pay $13,000 just to take one.

Granted, comprehensive exams are a recognized component of Juniata's integrated liberal arts education. The question is: have we gotten ourselves in hot water with the revisions of last year's Task Force?

Up until last year comps were something the Pirates could understand — you walked the plank and it was either sink or swim (P.S. only one student in JC's history sank, though more than a few floundered.) But now we have a brand new ballgame. You can't drown, but the water is so hot you sure can be burned. For now your transcript carries the evaluating professors' resume of your performance. Therefore, Pro and Con: Should Comps follow thee for the rest of thy days?

"Yes, I'm looking forward to them," confessed Chris Peterson. "I go along with the system as it stands now. Comps are a very good thing, forcing you to integrate your knowledge after four years. The new system makes it the student's initiative as to whether comps are going to mean something or not."

Bill Zamer doesn't think the water is so hot either, for "to get into a grad school or a medical school, one needs written evaluations and recommendations. Also the experience of taking comprehensives may prove useful in later life from the standpoint of practice under fire. However I think comprehensives should be optional."

Not being here last year, when the changes were made, Wilfred Fagot didn't have a chance to get his feet wet. Now that he's back, he likes the swimming conditions. "Non-contingency sounds reasonable. A person needs reasons to do well, but how do you motivate someone? A comp should be a self-stimulating test. As far as the evaluation on the transcript, often in the past a comp grade has needed an explanation. The new system gives us this opportunity."

Although he likes comps, Ray Pfrogner feels uncomfortable with the changes. "We've developed a more revealing and dangerous situation where a student can no longer afford to goof off. You can no longer get a low grade Pass. I'm prejudiced towards the old system of generalized comps. I went through them and know that they are a good learning experience."

Amazingly, a few students couldn't even see the relevance of walking the plank. "They should be abolished," spouted June Cramer. "The comps serve no useful purpose. If the courses are good enough, there is no need for comps."

Tim Herman doesn't gain any comfort from the new situation. "Now comps aren't threatening graduation from Juniata, but what one does afterwards."

And in the same vein, Steve Peoples feels that, "The new comprehensive program gives the professors an avenue to play favorites. They are only human."

Ah, but aren't we all. And human existence is filled with it's little ups and downs. What do you think? Are comps an educational experience or a personal disaster?

(NEXT WEEK: JUNIATA'S HALL COUNSELORS: PRO & CON)

Village Dress Shop

Announces

Juniata College Days

OCTOBER 23

NOVEMBER 6

All merchandise 15% off to students of Juniata. Please bring I.D. cards.

The first store in the area to honor the college exclusively.

Charges welcome.

729 Washington St.

643 - 1961

Good Luck Indians Against Western Maryland

BLACK MOUNTAIN EXPRESS

C&W and Easy Rock For All Occasions

Phone 542 - 9879

Logan's

CARPETING FURNITURE and DRAPERIES

CALL 643-0390 OR COME IN

705 WASHINGTON STREET HUNTINGDON

ENGLISH'S CARRIAGE HOUSE

Fashions from John Meyer of Norwich and Jonathan Logan

Stop in and Browse

For a complete Shoe and Boot wardrobe buy at

WESTBROOK'S SHOE STORE

The Good Ole Days

From the Juniatian of Feb. 18, 1928

Clothes may not make the man, but at least they contributed greatly to the defeat of the Girls' Basketball team on Friday night. Clothes—workable, appropriate, beautiful—give one at least a feeling of equality and security which cannot be realized in any other way.

The Thiel team showed a great advance in college athletics for co-eds over anything ever seen at Juniata before. The team wore regulation uniforms for women and during the entire time the girls were on the floor they showed as much modesty and decorum as our own team with its obsolete awkward, scare-crow bloomers and middies. The uniforms of the Thiel team left the girls absolutely free to move as swiftly and as gracefully as they were able, while the uniforms of the Indians are cumbersom and tiring.

The Thielensians are an exemplification of the change in collegiate attitude toward women's athletics. In years gone by it was thought out of the question for women to appear in public in uniform like those worn by our co-ed visitors of last week. Such action was thought immodest, unmaidenly—partly because it was unusual and partly because of the prevailing prudery of the crowd several decades ago and has not been completely dispelled even in this age of enlightenment when a spade is usually called a spade.

There are far too few types of athletics at Juniata which are open to women. We are not far behind most of the co-educational colleges of our size, but Thiel is ahead. She was able to place a better team on the floor than Juniata because of her advanced program in regards to women's athletics in general. Thiel exemplifies the spirit of the new era which must open for women in athletics if we are to have a consistent, rounded athletic policy.

Duality (continued)

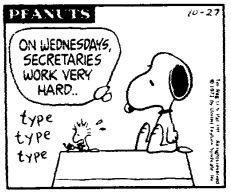
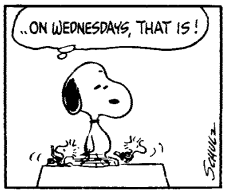
gaylov represents only one possible denouncement to Raskolnikov's duality — namely the Napoleonic or superman solution. He is a character in which "good" and "evil" have merged into one inextricable quantity. For this character there exists no moral standards of deportment. The first meeting of Raskolnikov and Svidrigaylov is very helpful in deciphering the spiritual make-up of both men. The hero awakes from a horrible nightmare concerning his crime and finds Svidrigaylov sitting in his room. They talk for awhile and Svidrigaylov remarks, "We are alike my dear Rodion, we are taken from the same stock." I believe this whole scene taken together develops t' unique relationship betwen the two men. Svidrigaylov is born out of Raskolnikov's nightmare and is the double of Raskolnikov's superman side. Another possible remedy is suggested by a character who emerges from the other collateral plot. Sonia, a member of the Marmeladov family, becomes a mother-earth symbol. She urges the hero to promulgate his crime and expiate his sins. Thus Raskolnikov's duality is seen in two other characters who emerge from the two collateral plots. We also discern the ambivalence of Raskolnikov in the description of St. Petersburg, the setting of the novel. It has same grandeur and the same coldness that we find in Raskolnikov. There is the beautiful Weva and the magnificence of many of the buildings in Petersburg, but there is also Hay Street, a shabby market district, with its narrow streets and lugubrious atmosphere. Just as the main character's soul is permeated with tragic duality, so is the city which he inhabits. This manifests the true power of the novel, there is an organic unity between all characters and all things, everything becomes important.

* This was by no means an attempt to work with the whole novel, but merely examine one idea expressed in the novel.

Palace Confectionery
5th & Washington Sts.
lunches — sundaes





Indians Lose With One Minute to Play

Juniata Loss Disappoints Alumni

by Tony Martuzas

It was a very disappointing Homecoming. The Wilkes wide receiver left "crack-backing" below the waist. The Indians' best kicker was ejected from the game over a controversial "fighting" infraction; and a holding infraction by the Indians around the Colonels' goal line prevented an eminent touchdown. And let me clarify one point to Juniata fans concerning the pass-interference infraction in the last minute — it was!

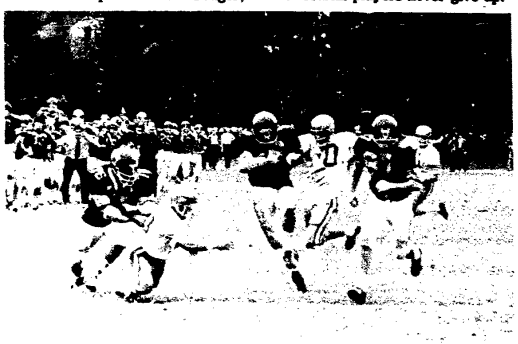
Recapping the last minutes of the game; Joe Lauver replacing Mastrorocco, initiated a drive back at the Indian 30-yard line to the Wilkes' 27. After a Coradetti reverse to the 24-yard line, Lauver looked for Rackovan at the goal line and overshot his target. The Wilkes safety, Garf Jones, easily picked the pass off in the endzone to kill another J.C. drive.

The ball was then brought out to the Colonel 20-yard line, and the Jeff Giberson pass was knocked down by Dee Adcock. However, Colonel end, John Marion, was found wide open, and Gibberson connected with him at the Wilkes' 46. Here's where the roof caved in!

Bill Horan, a freshman for the Colonels, was speeding down the right side line and it looked as though the Gibberson pass bounced off Horan's shoulder pads. The official was right on top of the play, as he saw the Indian defender shield Horan's vision with his hands, thus, inciting the infraction.

Colonel captian Ted Yeager, from the Indian 11, legged out six more yards. With 5 seconds left to play in the game, Terry Blaum's 20-yard field goal decided the contest — Wilkes 3: Juniata 0.

The Indians outplayed the Colonels, but, somehow, Wilkes came out on top! The Indians now stand 2-2-2, and, apparently, out of the race. But its a matter of pride; and true football players never give up.



Juniata's offensive machine connects on this touchdown run which was later called back on a penalty. photo by Rick Replogle

Harriers Nab H-coming Win

by Stew Kauffman

The Juniata cross country team picked up a big win on Saturday over St. Francis before a Homecoming crowd at College Field. Captain Denny Weidler finished first for the Indians with a time of 25:10. Brian Maurer (25:47) finished second. Third and fourth finishing spots were landed by St. Francis runners. Juniata then wrapped up the meet with Mark Edgecomb finishing fifth, Jim Bowen finishing sixth, and Tom Hefner finishing seventh.

The final score was Juniata 21; St. Francis 35. This victory precedes a rough contest with Lock Haven on Wednesday, October 27 at 3:00 P.M. here at the Indian home course.

Wrestling Team Has Balanced Line-up

The Juniata College wrestling team will count heavily on freshmen to fill the gaps in its lineup as it sets its sights on a winning season. The Indian grapplers began practice on October 18.

The three freshmen who should help the team are Barry Fry of Tyrone, Phil Kimmel of Shelocta, and heavyweight Keith Jones of Warren, N.J.

Juniata has six returning lettermen from the 1970-71 team which did not win a match. Returning seniors are Dan Greening, Seattle, Wash., (167); Dallas Fisher, Denver, (158); Clay Moyer, Souderton, (134); and George Dunn, Sparta, N.J. (167). Sophomore Myron Zimmerman, (134), from Ephrata and junior Jim McCartney, (126), from Corning, N.Y., complete the list of lettermen who will provide the nucleus of the team.

Berrier made the following assessment of the team a week before practice: "As of right now, we are trying to come up with a balanced lineup, which is something we haven't had in the past."

WRESTLING SCHEDULE

Dec.	4 *Delaware Valley	H
Dec.	8 St. Francis	A
Dec.	11 *Lycoming	A
Dec.	15 *Susquehanna	H
Jan.	29 *Gettysburg	H
Feb.	2 *Dickinson	A
Feb.	8 *Bucknell	A
Feb.	12 *Scranton	H
Feb.	15 *Elizabethtown	H
Feb.	19 *Muhlenberg,	A

Lebanon V. at Muhlenberg

Feb. 25-26 M.A.C.'s at Elizabethtown

E-TOWN TOPS J.C.HARRIERS

by Stew Kauffman

The Juniata cross country team lost a close meet to the Blue Jays of Elizabethtown last Wednesday at the Blue Jays' 5 mile home course. The final tally was E-town 26; Juniata 29. Juniata finished first and second with senior Denny Weidler and freshman Brian Maurer tied at the finish with a time of 27:06. The next four finishers in the meet were from E-town with Jack Mader, Charles Brown, and Dave Walsh all coming in at 29:02. Mark Edgecomb finished next for Juniata holding down seventh spot at 29:44. E-town took eighth position followed by the last two scorers for Juniata. Jim Bowen finished ninth at 30:04 and Ken Skelly finished tenth at 31:05.

Coach Swinderman says that the team was hurt by Grant Brewin being out of the line-up. Grant has been out with a torn ligament for the past few meets. He is a steady finisher and may have made the difference in this particular meet.

The cross country team meets Lock Haven at home on Wednesday, October, at 3:00 p.m.

Some people are psychologically prone to having auto accidents according to Dr. Frederick McGuire, Professor of Medical Psychiatry at California College of Medicine, reporting in the October issue of SCIENCE DIGEST. Depression, anxiety, anger or fear, says Dr. McGuire, cause people to be less attentive behind the wheel — and therefore more likely to be involved in an accident.

Field Hockey Action

by Verune L. Wetzel

On Tuesday, October 19, the W.A.A. sponsored a field hockey game with the Huntingdon High School team. The game was played on the high school field. Huntingdon scored four goals in the first half, but in the second half LuAnn Steiner scored twice for Juniata while our defense held Huntingdon to one score in that half.

There was a noticeable improvement in our team in the second half. It was actually the first time the eleven players for our team had played as a team. It was also a first for Pat Lichty as our goalie. In spite of the score, she did a good job for it being a last minute appointment.

The improvement shown in just one game with an outside team proves to me that Juniata could indeed have a powerful hockey team if an interscholastic schedule could be arranged. The only question is who will take on the responsibility to raise funds (it would have to be sponsored through W.A.A.) and to set up a schedule. It would be a big job, but it has been done for basketball. An intramural hockey program for the last two years has failed, in my opinion, to generate much interest. If an interscholastic program could be arranged, I am sure there would be alot more interest. There is a rematch game with Huntingdon scheduled for Tuesday, November 2.

photo by Cindy Shore
J.C.'s offense came ever so close but could't muster a T.D.

THE JUNIATIAN

VOL. XLVIII, NO. 7 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | November 3, 1971

Geologists Participate in New England Rock Festival

by Erik H. Erikson

Fourteen geology majors lead by Robert Washburn and myself returned from a seven day camping trip throughout New England during the peak of the fall foliage season. The purpose of our semi-annual field excursion was to study the one billion year geologic evolution of the Appalachian Mountain chain. We systematically visited key outcrops in six states from which the geologic history of this region could be deciphered. With our 100 page field guidebook in hand, the interpretations of previous geologists were scrutinized. Minerals and rocks were collected by the students from a variety of igneous, sedimentary, and metamorphic terrains. Four-inch garnets, tourmaline crystals and dinosaur tracks were among the more glamorous finds.

We studied outcrops in the Delaware Water Gap area, the Catskills and Adirondack Mountains of New York, west-central Vermont, central New Hampshire, and the Connecticut Valley in Massachusetts and Connecticut. Since the Earth is our laboratory we find that students enhance their grasp of geological phenomena by field studies. Last spring we visited southern Ontario and next May we will probably study the copper and iron deposits and bedrock of Michigan and Minnesota.

Students participating in this field trip were Sue Bradley, Randy Fahs, Steve Glass, Jim Heffner, Gene Lammey, Geo. Magruder, Steve McEwen, Kurt Oelschlager, Charles Patterson, Doug Peck, Bill Schock, Shirley Strock, Bob Schuler and Al Williams. Randy Fahn was able to complete his LaSalle Home Study Course in pitching tents.

Washburn tells the "Truth" in the Catskills.

Randy to Charlie — "personally I like Salem's for dinner."

Hunting — Where to Find Game in the Area

by Tom Snyder

What! Hunted all day and didn't see any game! This is certainly a familiar statement to anyone who has hunted enough to be dry behind the ears, or for that matter, worn out a pair of hunting shoes. The Huntingdon area is also a good area to experience hours of tramping with little or no shooting. This need not be, as one would have to look hard to find an area with finer turkey and deer hunting, and possessing good small game hunting in general. The following are a few ideas of what to hunt where within easy driving distance of our campus.

For those who like to hunt pheasants and rabbits my suggestion is to hunt the three limestone valleys of the area. The best of these is Shavers Creek Valley in the area above Petersburg. To find this go west on 22 to Alexandria and follow the signs for Petersburg. The valley broadens on the far side of P-burg, and many farms are available for hunting IF one asks permission.

Woodcock Valley is also a good pheasant area. This valley is located south on Route 26 and extends from McConnellstown to Saxton. Rabbit hunting is better in this valley than most, but the rabbit population has been down for a year or so, so don't expect too much.

The third valley, and this one is smaller by far than the other two, is Hartslog Valley. To get there turn right on the far side of McConnellstown or go west on 22 and turn left about one half way up Warriors Ridge at the sign for

continued on page 4

ATTENTION

The Charlie Byrd Quintet will perform a program featuring jazz and classical guitar next Tuesday, November 9, 1971, in Oller Hall auditorium. Their format will include jazz performed by the quintet (consisting of a flute, horn, drums, and bass, behind Charlie) and classical guitar music performed in solo by Charlie himself.

Free tickets are available to students and faculty for the asking at the Ellis Hall Information Desk.

Concert time is 8:15 p.m.

APPEARING NEXT WEEK:

A report in detail on all the programs of the Freshman Year

Peace Corps Reps To Visit Campus

On November 4 and 5, represent-Peace Corps and Vista Representatives from the Peace Corps and Vista will be on the campus for the purpose of recruiting candidates to serve in these organizations. Richard Krausz, a 1969 graduate of Juniata, will represent the Vista program in which he has served for two years at Long Island. Mary Bell will be the Peace Corps representative. Both representatives have expressed particular interest in meeting with students with students with mathematics, science, business, agricultural or educational backgrounds, or students who are skilled in a trade. Interested student should plan to discuss possible future opportunities in these agencies with these representatives at that time. These representatives will be located on the top floor of Founders Hall during their stay at Juniata.

For further information, contact the Placement Office.

Open Letter: Rugs in the Library

SG Discusses Books, Student Volunteerism

by Valorie Priddle

Last Tuesday, a short business meeting of the Student Government Executive Council was held before visiting the dorms.

Jon Hunter informed the group that an audit had been started to straighten out the books and that during the year the government could expect an average income of $3,500.

Secondly, the President explained the conference on Student Volunteerism scheduled for November 12-14 at the University of Pittsburgh. Students representing different areas of voluntary service are on the agenda to speak on programs such as ecology, tutoring, the movement to end the war, aid to the aged, etc. An approval was given to finance the weekend for two to three Juniata representatives.

During the remainder of the meeting Chas Albright was appointed as Commissioner of Student Services. The two appointments that must be made for the Academic Standards Commission were delayed one week.

Dorms were then visited to get opinions from students on such topics as the frosh program, the transfer from semesters to terms, WJC, and the Juniatian.

An Open Letter

On Wednesday, October 27, I received the following note via intra-college mail: "Dear Jon, I would like to make a suggestion concerning the library. Last year I thought it was decided that rugs were to be installed in Beeghley Library. What happened? The noise level certainly hasn't decreased. Please get this matter on the agenda soon. I had faith in student government but now I am becoming like everyone, else-apathetic." Sincerely, a disappointed student.

First of all, how the hell am I supposed to answer your questions if I don't know who you are? If you would have been kind enough to give me your name I could have been kind enough to give you a response before noon on the same day I got your letter. As it is, I have to hope you read The Juniatian so you can get your answer a week later.

Secondly, I checked into the rug problem with Mrs. Catlin, Director of Libraries for the College. She confirmed that it had been decided to attempt getting at least the open areas carpeted. The reason that nothing was done is that no money could be found. Her suggestion to the disappointed student was that if he, or she could find a donor the College would be more than happy to put carpets in the Library. She too thinks it would be a great idea.

On the matter of noise, obviously it is students who are causing the problem and it is students who must solve it. Student Government can hardly send someone over every night to slap hands. It would be nice if students had a little more respect, not only for themselves but for others. If you have any ideas as to what I or any of the senators can do to instill a change in attitude in students we would be more than happy to discuss them with you.

Finally, thank you for coming forward with your concern. We appreciate students who come forward with suggestions and problems and we are more than willing to try to help you as best we can. In the last couple of weeks we have had several students come forward and we are doing all we can to help them find solutions to the problems they see. In at least one instance, we have managed to get the faculty working on an issue raised by a student in a senate meeting. We have also started going to dorms to talk personally with students to bring their problems into the open. Solutions can be found to many of these concerns if we know what these concerns are. Unfortunately not many of these concerns will be raised if you wait for us to have visions in our dreams. Part of the responsibility is also yours and you must fill that. The student executive council is here for you to use; if you use it, it will work; if you don't useit , it won't work. I am in the office (ground floor of Ellis Hall) Monday through Friday from 10 - 11 a.m. Jody Harpster will be there most evenings from 7:30 - 8:30 p.m. Come see us! We'll try to find ways to work together to solve our many mutual problems.

Thank you for writing!

Sincerely, Jonathan Hunter.

GRASS ROOTS

Compiled by Kim Hershberger and Donna Trelease

Modes of Thought

by Bob Trigiano

The first Modes of Thought assignment was the science fiction short story, then it was the Black Box experiment. Following close behind came the third grade project of drawing a coat of arms. Now that we've had all the preliminaries, we have started college level work.

The illustrious M.T.I. staff expects and demands that each and every freshman student, 400 in all, do a ten page project in ten days on the same or related topics. With full knowledge of what Juniata's library has to offer, a lot of material, but not enough for 400 students at one time, they assign it any way. I have gone through the library and located 15-20 references in the reader's guides and the card catalogue. Thinking it would be easy to find the sources, I went to find them. Much to my surprise. I found that people had borrowed or were using most of the references I needed. So what am I to do? Most Profs would probably give one of two answers: "That's your problem," or "Do your best."

I do not condemn the freshman program since it is in its first year. I think the people in charge should have foreseen the difficulties of 400 students using a library with limited materials. I offer this solution to them for the years that follow: have 100 students or less do it at one time. This solution would enable each student to do a better job, and would eliminate the frustration that the freshmen are experiencing now.

Letters to the Editor

Letters to the editor should be addressed to: Editor, The Juniatian, Box 667, Juniata College, Huntingdon, Pa. 16652. The editors reserve the right to print only non-libelous and responsible content and to edit all letters and commentaries submitted to The Juniatan. The staff also reserves the right to publish all full signatures unless the writer can supply valid reason for omitting his name.

This is not a bona-fide "Letter to the Editor;" I am not sure to whom it should be addressed. I have noticed that you print interesting facts, from time, to fill in the blanks. Try this one for size: the drippy water faucet in the cafeteria (next to one dishroom window on Mary Taylor's side) drips at a rate of 8 ounces evedy 20 minutes, give or take a few splashes. That's 135 gallons in a 30 day month! That's something to think about. But for both ecological and economical reasons, I think something ought to be done. Please don't say I ought to do it, 'cause I've made quite enough waves this semester and don't want to get fired. (I'm a waitress.)

Back to statistics: the data was collected on the evening of Monday, October 25, and the drip appears more and more insistent every week . . .

If you do dicide to take action, please don't implicate me! You can say "two students" discovered the water loss rate (for, verily it is so: we are students). I've gotten into enough trouble already. (Is it really so wrong to correct things that are wrong, or that could be better? Any little thing to make the human lot better, I always say. . .)

So sign me Carnation.

In his letter to the Editor last week, Mr. Alessi implies that curhiculum specialization in private colleges, particularly Juniata College, is a conspiracy to entrap unsuspecting students into programs from which there is no escape. This kind of paranoia would have done Joe McCarthy credit. While it is difficult to refute logically such an irrational premise, let me state that the programs of the new curriculum were justified on grounds other than their effect on the College's financial situation. If Mr. Alessi has evidence to the contrary, he ought to publish it. There are many of us who would be very interested to see it.

The assumption which underlies Mr. Alessi's implication is that ease of transfer is a basic attribute of a good academic curriculum. Horsefeathers! If this were the case, then all of the colleges in the country ought to institute the same curriculum, thus insuring perfect freedom to transfer. This, however, raises the interesting question of what use is it to be perfectly free to choose among identical alternatives. Perhaps I'm idealistic, but I would like to really choose the kind of curriculum I want, even in the face of possibly losing credit if I change my mind.

by Karl K. Kindig

Ear of the Needle

by Bob Kraut

"The guitar is like a miniature orchestra," mused Andres Segovia, the acknowledged world master of the classical guitar. In the capable hands of Charlie Byrd the guitar is, very often, a miniature jazz band. I say, very often, because Byrd is also one of the world's premier classical guitarists and is equally at home with either idiom.

To American audiences Charlie Byrd is best known as the principle popularizer of the Brazilian "Bossa Nova." His album "Jazz Samba," cut with tenor saxophonist Stan Getz, and numerous albums on the now-defunct Riverside label introduced this beautiful foreign visitor to our shores in the early '60's. Today Byrd's repertoire still borrows heavily from Brazilian popular composers as well as Brazilian classical composer Hector Villa-Lobos, but he has augmented it to embrace all forms of music, rock and country included.

In an age when the word "guitar" evokes images of a solid-bodied, instrument, replete with numerous knobs, pickups and other electronic gadgetry, Mr. Byrd eschews all this for the "pure" acoustical sound of the classical guitar. Having met the legendary Gypsy-jazzman Django Reinhardt, studied with classicist Sophocles Papas, and later with the master himself, Andres Segovia, Byrd has adapted the traditional sounds of these giants into his own distinctive

continued on page 3

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College
Huntingdon, Pa.

ASSOCIATED COLLEGIATE PRESS — I.P. COLLEGIATE PRESS

REESTABLISHED September 9, 1971

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891 and "The Juniatian," established November 1924

SCOTT K. LEEDY, Managing Editor

PATRICK E. FLEAGLE, Associate Editor — ROBERT A. JONES, Business Manager
DEBI FRAZIER, Assistant Editor — STEWARD A. KAUFFMAN, Jr., Sports Editor
STEVEN S. KIMMEL, Assistant Editor — WILLIAM E. SCARLETT, Circulation Manager
BRIAN T. MAURER, Assistant Editor — WILLIAM M. DAVID, Photography Editor

ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANTS: General Information, Susan Stalker, Jean Thompson, Deborah Walker; Community Relations, Stephen J. Crowley, Jeffrey A. Naugle, Linda Richardson; Feature Columnists, Karl K. Kindig, Robert E. Kraut; Business, Thomas E. Alessi, Jean Jarrow, Nancy Tamburo; Typing and Proofing, Sandra Currier, Prof. Jerry Croce, Nancy Floyd, Sara Frank, Carol Garzillo, Margaret Haines, Anne Holzinger, Donna Lee, Janet Mason, Valorie Priddle, William B. Rea, Stuart C Treacy, Gayle Trofe; Layout, Janet Bartschat, Rodger C. Devonald, Margery Herr, Keith E. Klein, James S. Reiley, Arthur W. Ritter; Art, Luci Bromberg, Lawrence R. Stem; Sports, Anthony C. Martuzas, Jr., Patricia Monahen, J. Brian Richardson, Susan Snyder, Vernne Wetzel; Good Ole Days, Gary E. Gillen, Janice Nolan, Jean Pollock, Karen White, Gretchen Yost; Grass Roots, Kimber Hershberger, Donna Trelease; Pro/Con, William S. Dick, Nancy Diehl, Michael J. Finkle, Jean Pollock, William H. Robison; Advertising Consultant, Roberta Earle; Circulation, Ralph P. Casale, Dennise Deaner, Susan Dochtermann, Marlyn Hoover, Miriam Smith.

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughtout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students of Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized in Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 1500

Subscription $5.00 per year

VOL. XLVIII, NO. 7 — November 3, 1971

by Rick Mitz

Howdy, Howdy Doody

As older people revert to their pasts through No, No, Nannette; Maybe, Maybe, Mae; Sure, Sure, Shirley, and the rest of thise vintage camp-side memories, we've been left without a nostalgia to call our own. Until now, we've had to live vicariously through our parents' pasts, as they try to bring it all back home again.

But now we can go back to those long weekend hours in front of the TV shouting tee hee at Howdy Doody, Buffalo Bob, Phineas T. Bluster, Clarabel, Dilly Dally and the rest of our 1950 family figures.

Because now Buffalo Bob, the Doody-Gang ringmaster, is making a come back. We have our very own nostalgia. With old films of Hoody Doody Shows that were last seen on the screen more than ten years ago, 53-year old Bob Smith is making the rounds of college campuses with a two-hour presentation that has long-hairs longing to retreat to their days of innocence. It all began last year When University of Pennsylvania students wrote to Uncle Bob asking to borrow a Howdy Doody kinescope. Since then, Mr. Smith — Howdy in tow — has toured more than 60 colleges and has played full-house gigs at places like the recently-demised Fillmore East.

It was an innocent nostalgia — where we lived in a Wonder Bread world, building strong bodies 12 ways, drinking Ovaltine and searching for the cream filling in our Hostess Twinkie lives.

But, like the rest of us, Howdy — the dummy with brains enough to mutter only an occasional Gosh, Golly Gee and Right You Are — has grown up. At 24-years old, Mr. Doody still has his freckles intact, his ears outturned and, with all strings attached, is ready to lead us on to a new nostalgia.

Gee Whiz.

Perspective on Curriculum

by Karl K. Kindig

The question of "Why Modes?" has been on the tips of a good many Freshmen tongues ever since the first day of classes. Many have had, and continue to have, serious doubts about the validity of being required to take a unit which at times seems so unrelated to the real educational reason they came to Juniata. The fact that many students have serious doubts about a unit which requires two-thirds of their first term, nearly one-fourth of their entire freshman year, is, indeed, a serious issue.

While it is not the general intention of this column to play the role of apologist for the New Curriculum, in whole or part, I would like to offer a common sense defense of offering, and requiring, a unit called "Modes of Thought." It should be understood that this will be a defense of the principle behind the "Modes" unit, not of the specific way it is being taught.

As I see it, there is one basic distinction between the justification necessary for any unit and a required unit. While it is imperative that they both have some intrinsic academic value, the required unit must also have an extrinsic value with respect to the overall academic program: the required unit must not only benefit the student with respect to the material presented, but must also make other units more educationally meaningful as well. A required unit derives its justification from its relationship to the entire program.

Let us assume that the first criterion is satisfied. I have heard very little objection to "Modes" on the grounds of its intrinsic value, and given the reputations of the faculty involved, there are no grounds to doubt its educational validity with no evidence to the contrary. It is with respect to the second criterion, the one which justifies its being required, that the unit has beeen questioned.

The stereotypical argument against the "Modes" requirement is usually embodied in the hypothetical "pre-med" student. (Before I continue, in the words of a onetime president of the U.S., let me make one thig perfectly clear. I do not mean to imply that the actual "pre-med student is some educational mvone who can see no further than the objective lens of his microscope. It is just a well-understood convention used here for the sake of argument.) This student is usually seen coming to college with one thing in mind—to take the most rigorous (usually defined as "narrow"), intensive pre-profession program he can. Anything other than that is merely an obstacle.

A unit such as "Modes" can be defended to such a student on two grounds. First, human infallibility being what it is these days, the student may only think he knows what he wants to do. Many students come to college with some pretty blatant misconceotions about what the various disciplines are all about. (Believe me, I know. I came to college with more misconcentions than you could shake a stick at. Please excuse the Northcentral Pennsylvania colloquialism.) One of the objectives of "Modes" is to introduce the student to the underlying methodological assumptions of the various disciplines. This type of introduction given the freedom of the "Program of Emphasis," could save a student who only thinks he knows what he wants to do a lot of time and trouble later on.

For the student who really does know what he wants to do, the "Modes" course should help him choose the units he wishes with more understanding. The unit should provide him with a philisophical basis on which to make his choices, rather than relying solely on descriptions of content. It is possible to think of many instances where a student might wish to take a unit in spite of its content in order to be exposed to the methodology used in that unit. Having taken the "Modes" unit makes it more likely, rather than less likely (as a professor I know is fond of saving), that this kind of choice will be made. In sum mation it seems obvious that the student who is aware of some basic methodological assumptions should be better able to construct the type of program he really desires.

This has not been a philosophically rigorous justification of "Modes of Thought and methods of Inquiry"; it wasn't intended to be so. It is hoped that this common sense type defense will make some freshmen more appreciative of the unit.

TEXAS LUNCH
316 7th STREET
Open 7 Days
We Specialize in Home Cooking
Try Our Texas Hots
Telephone 643-4030

SKIPPER'S STYLE SHOP
304 7th St. Phone 643-4646
I personally pick out all my styles each month from Manhattan and Brooklyn, N.Y.

BLACK MOUNTAIN EXPRESS
C&W and Easy Rock For All Occasions
Phone 542 - 9879

Savadow's
HUNTINGDON
Lovely Fashions For Lovely Ladies

Dore's
Home of FAMOUS BRAND NAME SHOES
713 Washington St.

G. C. MURPHY CO.
528 Washington Street
The Complete Variety Store

IVC Aids Pakistani Refugees

by Dick Breiner

We talk about social problems, social issues, and social action, but what do we do? We hear a lot about people in need, but do we really care?

One of the worst disasters of history is being played out today in East Pakistan and Northern India. Up to 8 million Bangla Dish refugees have deluged the Calcutta area, fleeing first a tidal wave, a brutal war and a new famine which has followed them to India.

We, Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship, care for those Pakistani refugees, and are undertaking a project of giving. We feel it is our responsibility to God to help the refugees as individuals, each a separate person, and each person as important to God as one of us. Just as God cared and loved us enough to send Christ Jesus as a sacrifice in order that we might have an external purpose. So out of love to our Gracious Creator, we are undertaking this project. God wants us to love our fellow men more than ourselves.

Christians of India are already aware of the meaning of poverty and hunger, giving sacrificially. Are we? I feel there is no way we can say we care, with all that we have, and not give, for that would be hypocritical. The only way to LOVE and CARE is by GIVING, this giving done in a humble spirit before God.

We will be giving to the Evangelical Fellowship of India's Committee on Relief by Thanksgiving. If you would like to help, your contributions will be welcome.

Juniata

CAMPUS CRIER

November

Wednesday	3	Cross Country — Shippensburg	Home
		Spanish Table — Faculty Lounge	4:45-6:15 p.m.
		Chess Club — Ballroom Annex	7:00 p.m.
		IVCF — Gold Room	7:00 p.m.-8:30 p.m.
		Reading Festival — Shoemaker Gallery	8:15 - 9.30 p.m.
		Professors Church, Doyle, Hochberg, and Troy
Thursday	4	Scuba Club — Gold Room	7:00 p.m.
		Vista and Peace Corps Recruiters — Placement Office (All interviews in Founders Hall — anyone can sign up for interview in Placement Office)
Friday	5	Film — "400 Blows" — Alumni Hall	8:00 p.m.
		"The Crucible" — Oller Hall	8:15 p.m.
		Vista and Peace Corps Recruiters — Placement Office
Saturday	6	Parents' Day
		Parents Seminar on Student Life — Shoemaker Gallery —	10:00-11:00 a.m.
		Football — Western Maryland — Home	1:30 p.m.
		Parents, Students and President	4:00-5:00 p.m.
		Reception — Ballroom Annex
		Parents Association — Shoemaker Gallery	All day
		"The Crucible" — Oller Hall	8:15 p.m.
		Coffee House: Landscape with Cows	9 p.m.-1:00 a.m.
Sunday	7	Worship Service — Oller Hall	10:30 a.m.
		"The Crucible" — Oller Hall	3:00 p.m.
Tuesday	9	IVCF — Jackson Conference Room	6:30-7:30 p.m.
		Freshman Evaluation — Faculty Club	7:00 p.m.
		Concert Series — Charlie Byrd — Oller Hall	8:15 p.m.
Wednesday	10	Spanish Table — Faculty Lounge	4:45-6:15 p.m.
		Chess Club — Ballroom Annex	7:00 p.m.
		Reading Festival — Shoemakers Gallery	8:15-9:15 p.m.
		Professors Croce, Davis, Hofelt and Hunter
		Boy Scouts of America Recruiters — Placement Office
Friday	12	Film — "Tobacco Road" — Alumni Hall	8:00 p.m.
		Football — Moravian	Away
		Cross Country — Gettysburg and Delaware Valley	Away
		Dance — "Wicked Truth" — Ballroom	9:00 p.m.

Are they really needed ?

Pro - Con : Hall Counselors

"Students that are selected have outstanding cum's, they are mature in their actions, and they are to set an example for others to follow." Exactly who is Bill Berrier talking about? Could it be (A) the wrestling team; (B) the pom-pom girls; (C) Pro and Con columnists; or (D) perhaps even panty-raid par, in reality, Bill was referring to Juniata's hall counselors. Seeing the potential controversy, the Pro and Con staff decided to investigate further. We were out for the truth. Is the hall counseling program being used to Juniata's best advantage?

Silas Towler looked like an honest man. "Yes, there is a need for a person between Berrier and the students in the dorms to spread information to them. In a freshman dorm it would be more necessary to have a student advisor because they aren't settled as yet. It's an overall decent program, if you know what it means."

With such truisms in our ears, we continued upon our way. Who should we meet but Gretchen Yost. She feels that "Even if it's only necessary to take advantage of the hall counselors' duties occasionally, it's good to have them there for security's sake."

Speaking from a counselor's point of view, Beth Coughenour feels there is a definite need for counselors in women's residence halls. "There's a real difference between girls and guys. Often times a girl will go to a counselor in a situation where a guy wouldn't."

Seeing hall counselors as a necessary evil, Tom Alessi exposed us to another phase of the truth. "Hall councelors unfortunately are needed at Juniata. It's the best way to maintain discipline within the dorms. However, it's not really counseling, for there is no counseling involved; it's simply police work."

Realizing that the truth is in the eye of the beholder, who should we be beholding but Bill Berrier, who confronted us with the opposite opinion. "The program is not being used to its best advantage because students aren't taking advantage of what is being offered. Students feel that counselors are nothing more than agents for the dean's office. Hall counselors are part of the establishment by the fact that they are getting paid."

Chuck Schoenherr held a similar viewpoint. "Our program needs to be improved a great deal. Counselors are still thought of as policemen. This destroys what they could do. I really lean toward making the residence halls self-regulatory and using counselors as helpers only. One change that I'd like to see right now is counselors taking a course in psychology, for credit, using their halls as lab experience. This would make them more effective, better counselors, and would be a greater learning experience."

Lauren Ernst would like that idea. "Right now the hall counselors are not trained for personal and psychological type problems. Perhaps they are good for administrative problems and advice pertaining to curriculum;" but he feels that their lack of professional training and the connotation of enforcer that goes along with the job prevents students from taking advantage of them.

Closing our circle of truth, Paul Miller really laid it on the line. "Counselors don't do any counseling. Sure, it may be a two-way street, but if the students don't use them, what good are they?"

So our column has run the gamut of truths concerning our hallowed institution of hall "procters." Thirty-four people — $23,800. You paid for it; are you using it?

NEXT WEEK: CO-ED HALLS AT J.C.: PRO AND CON

Ear of the Needle

continued from page 2

style.

For those unfamiliar with playing the guitar, most musicians plunk the strings individually or strum them in unison, producing consecutively either a single-note or a chordal sound. Byrd plays in the classical "finger-style" tradition. This means that all five fingers of the right hand are used to produce whatever the dexterity of the player will allow. Instead of using one device (the pick) he uses all five devices (the fingers), multiplying the complexity of technique, but enhancing the overall possibilities of the instrument as well.

The music of this master musician has enthralled and captivated audiences from Saudi Arabia, where he played with the Woody Herman band, to his self-styled emporium the "Byrd Cage" in Silver Springs, Maryland. At a time when the guitar has become inundated with fuzz tone, wah-wah pedals, Leslie speakers, and Moog synthesizers, it's truly refreshing to experience the sound of the Byrd guitar. It's a sound that's always been down to the basics with regard to timbre, but far removed with regard to versatility and musicianship. When speaking of the guitar, Byrd has always been the last word.

FRANK'S
CLEANING, TAILORING and PRESSING
Same Day Service
Across from the A&P

wolf FURNITURE
7th & Mifflin
HUNTINGDON
Your home deserves T. L. C. as much as you do
TOTAL LIVING CONCEPT

Montgnmery Ward Sales Agency
516 WASHINGTON STREET
Telephone 643-1390

UPTOWN CUT-RATE
1229 MIFFLIN STREET
Food — Magazines

For a complete Shoe and Boot wardrobe buy at
WESTBROOK'S SHOE STORE

Western Auto
701 WASHINGTON ST.
8 TRACK STEREO TAPES
REG. $4.99
30 Day Guarantee
Complete Line of Stereo Equipment

Nell's Beauty Salon
718 WASHINGTON ST.
Phone 643-1180

Vogue Shop
Women's and Misses' Wearing Apparel
Huntingdon, Pa. 16652

STRAIT'S TROPICAL FISH & PET SUPPLIES
522 WASHINGTON STREET
Telephone 643-5070

RITCHEY'S MARKET
1100 MOORE STREET
Fresh Meats and Groceries
Telephone 643-1400

The Good Ole Days

A Most Timely Statement from The Juniatian, October 26, 1938

Six weeks have passed since we first entered the portals of Juniata College for the current school year. Six weeks—a comparatively short but sufficient period of time to uermit us to do some introspection and to determine which way our "sails are set."

"Just listen to this—," said a freshman, reading a letter from her girl-friend. "I can tell by your letters that you are changing." Change—the one word which, perhaps better than all others, is the proper connotation for the activities of a college student. It is as one of th eprofessors said to his class the other day, "If you were to met your freshman self, you would be ashamed to introduce him to your friends."

Students cannot escape the reality—there has to be a change. An individual doesn't adapt himself to a new enviroment without making some change. Such a change can mean the choice of only two alternatives—either amelioration or degradation. It hardly seems possible that anyone could imply that an individual could spend four years in college and be the worse for it, but it is true. A student who attends classes only because he feels that it is compulsory, performs the minimum requisites, and spends his time carelessly, is certainly not the type of student one can classify as deserving or worthwhile. Having been released from parental restraint, he has failed to make the most of the individual virtues of energy, prudence, and self-control. Education is vitally important— a fact no one would hesitate to admit, but there is no educational institution existing with its only aim in instruction. Life is something more than the knowledge one reads in text books.

How trite it is to say that the four years of college are the best years in a person's life, but reflection tells us that it is so. The opportunities are here. The student must develop them.

Yes, change is inevitable. It simply has to come. Nothing in life gives the same satisfaction as the harmonious development of an individual. The humanist has something when he says that the ideal life is characterized by moderation, independence of mind, preference for higher pleasures, and harmonious development of capacities. Add to this, belief in a higher Being, and you have the basis for worthwhile change.

ENGLISH'S CARRIAGE HOUSE

Fashions from

John Meyer of Norwich

and

Jonathan Logan

Stop in and Browse

The most Meaningful Semester you'll ever spend... could be the one on World Campus Afloat

Sailing Feb. 1972 to Africa and the Orient

Through a transfer format, more than 5,000 students from 450 campuses have participated for a semester in this unique program in international education.

WCA will broaden your horizons, literally and figuratively . . . and give you a better chance to make it—meaningfully—in this changing world. You'll study at sea with an experienced cosmopolitan faculty, and then during port stops you'll study the world itself. You'll discover that no matter how foreign and far-away, you have a lot in common with people of other lands.

WCA isn't as expensive as you might think; we've done our best to bring it within reach of most college students. Write today for free details.

TEACHERS: Summer travel with credit for teachers and administrators.

Write Today to:
Chapman College,
Box CC28, Orange, California 92666

Hunting

continued from page 1

Williamsburg.

All three of these valleys are farming areas characterized by rolling hills and an ideal hunting terrain, and while many farms are posted it never hurts to ask permission to hunt.

For those who like squirrel and grouse hunting, the ridges and hills bordering the above areas are as good as is Warriors Ridge behind Taylor Highlands, within easy walking distance of campus. The squirrel and grouse populations both seem to be good this year and with a little looking and some lucky shooting, limits of these animals should be easy to obtain.

The biggest, and to my mind most exciting to hunt, of our small game is the turkey. Hunting for these birds is excellent in this area. My suggestion for the best possible chance of getting a turkey is State Game Land No. 121. This is a mountainous, forested area at the foot of Stone Mountain, northeast of Huntingdon. The best way to get there is to turn left on the far side of Stone Creek (Huntingdon's swimming pool) at the east end of Penn Street, and proceed to the top of Stone Creek Ridge. Stay on that road for approximately eight miles until one sees the signs for the Game Lands and Mill Creek. This road bears to the right and goes toward the foot of the mountain. One will find that lots of patience after a short hike to the mountain should pay off as this is a good natural habitat that has been propagated extensively. Warriors Ridge also turns out a flock or two of turkeys, so those who use shoe leather for transportation need not feel discouraged if they can't find a ride to the Game Lands.

Deer abound in the Huntingdon area and any and all of the above places are good. The farmers usually get a little more "uptight" in deer season so unless permission to hunt has been granted before the first day, one would again do well to hunt the Game Lands or Warrior Ridge. I might add that the biggest buck I ever saw was taken on the Ridge within walking distance of the campus.

Good luck and you'll find that if you act like sportsmen and women, the local farmers will treat you all right.

GROVE'S FASHION FABRICS

formerly

H & R Egolfs

Full Line of

Dry Goods, Trim, Notions

JC MOVIE NIGHT AT THE KALOS CLIFTON THEATRE

Tues. Nov. 9, 1971 7:30 P.M.

Luis Buneul's TRISTANA

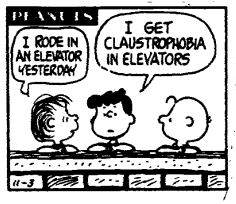
BUCKY'S ARCO

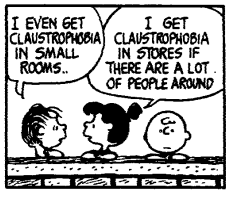
935 MOORE STREET

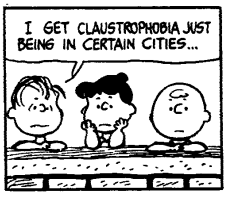
COMPLETE SERVICE

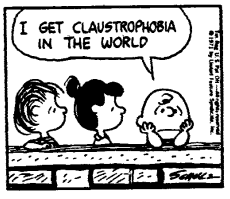
and STATE INSPECTION

Phone 643-4185









W&J Downed by Tribe

Indians Get Win; Sparks Sets Record

by Tony Martuzas

—And I've written a bum article last week. The films turned up nothing close to pass interference, that's what I get for listening to those eight kids on the other side of the field. Sometimes the officials miss some important calls, well, it's now part of the game.

Getting away from the past and up to the present, the Indians turned the game around in the second half, defeating Washington and Jefferson 16-7. Dave Sparks surpassed Bill Berrier's career rushing mark by two yards, making the record 1877 yards. Sparks needed 22 going into Saturday's game, and ground out 24 yards in 14 carries. The President's defensive line left little penetration by the Indian's offense. For the President's quarterback Don Kasperik surpassed 5000 yards in career passing late in the second quarter.

Late in the opening quarter, on the President's own 28 yard line Don Kasperik hit Bob Barone who eluded Brian Hoover as he tried to intercept the ball. Hoover caught up with Barone and dragged him down on the Indian on foot line. Halfback Rick Pocock layed over for the score, and the pat made it W&J7: Juniata 0.

The Indians only mustered 3 first downs (compared to the President's 5) in the first half, but they broke lose in the second.

Starting on his own 27, Mastronocco began operating, sending McNeel crashing into the line, sending Sparks outside and with 6:30 left in the third, Sparks began running, a hit Bergstresser with a pass up to the President's 39. Nine plays later, Mastrorocco put Rackovan in the end zone and connected for the score. Gambling for the two points Joe Corafetti was layed up on the one yard line. W&J 7: Juniata 6.

The President's were forced to punt on their next series of downs. On his second pass to Rackoven, Mastrorocco fired and connected with Dan between President's Mike McPherson and Don Copeland. The pass was good for 23 yards. A play action pass to the tight and Bergstresser brought the ball up to the 17. Rackoven's catch brought the ball down to the 10 and after Sparks was unable to turn the corner McNeel came in to attempt a 26-yd. field-goal. The kick went up and was good for three. W&J 7: Juniata 9.

There was a little problem when Lou Ekerl scored; the whole line threw their arms up signifying a touchdown, however the officials didn't. The scorekeeper gave the Indians the score, the timekeeper stopped the clock, but after a few minutes of discussion and fixing the clock (:20 left in the game), play resumed. This time Lou slasked in, and the officials verified the score by throwing their arms up. McNeel's put was good. Final: W&J 7: Juniata 16.

Next week's game with Western Maryland just may turn out to be a very heated contact. It seems that Western ball-players have a tendency to hit a little late. If the officials can control the game, all is promising for the Indians. If they can't, well—it'll be the Juniata vs Wilkes all over again.

A Defensive Analysis

by Vernne Wetzel

Brain Hoover is a defensive safety on the football team. He is a sophomore and a returning letterman. Brian played as a quarterback in high school, but he has made an excellent adjustment to playing defense. He and Joe Cordetti have received honorable mentions on the All-East team for the M.A.C. Sal Mercadante has been named on the All-East team for two consecutive weeks.

The defense is now working as an experienced unit. It consists of players from all classes. Keith Colonna, Mike Reiter, and Larry Cerny are freshmen contributing a lot to the defensive efforts. Brian gives Keith credit as being one of the best, if not the best, freshman defensive ends in the league. Coach Bunton, head defensive line coach, has said that this is the best defensive team he has ever worked with.

There are many statistics that do show our defensive strength. The defensive unit has allowed an allowed an average of only 8 points per game scored against us. The defensive secondary has not allowed a touchdown pass since the Western Maryland game last season. This year our team has intercepted 17 passes. Brian has made 6; Chuck Kensinger and Bob Waggoner 3 each. Several other defense men have one. Keith Colonna stands out among them as a freshman.

The offense is also starting to function well as a unit. Don Mastrorocco has taken the call as quarterback, and is moving the offense. Brian agreed that penalties have been the biggest problem for the team, both offensively and defensively. There have also been numerous injuries. All in all, Brian says that the outlook for the team will improve still. With all the talent the coaches have to work with, and with their own excellent qualifications, our team will manifest its own power.

Brian Hoover, J.C. defensive halfback, is within three catches of the J.C. interception record.

APOLOGY

ATTENTION:

"JUNIATIAN" READERS

"The Juniatian" staff wishes to attempt to rectify certain errors which appeared in last week's issue (Vol. XLVIII, No. 6). Please note the following:

The Editorial which appeared on page 4 was written by William M. Rea, a member of the staff.

The article review of Crime and Punishment by Michael Kamins on page 3 was to be titled "Duality in Crime and Punishment."

Also on page 3, "SG and SAC Study Issues in Drinking Policy" was written by Jonathan C. Hunter.

And in Karl Kindig's "Perspective on Curriculum" page 2, Dean Norris was shown inaccurately as quoted when actually he was paraphrased.

The staff apologizes for these errors.

THE JUNIATIAN

VOL. XLVIII, NO. 8 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | November 10, 1971

S.G. Discusses Finances and National Student Lobby

by Valorie Priddle

Five items comprised the agenda for the Student Government Executive meeting last week.

First Jon Hunter gave a progress report on the audit now being conducted. The $2,000. deficit from last year's government will be paid, and arounl Christmas, appropiations to groups already financially stable will be re-allocated. Averaging $100./week, the income from the cigarette machines and other concessions will be put to good use. Inall, the Student Government has $2800. designated for its operating expenditures.

Turning to the appointmente for the Academic Standards Committee, the President asked that the vote be taken next week. Personal interviewsand resumes are required of each of the eight freshman candidiates.

The third area of discussion centered around the Student Government's involvement with the National Student Lobby. As one of the first twenty-four schools in the country to join, Juniata has already received the first questionnaire. A random sample of students will be polled within the next few weeks.

Dave Andrews and Bruce Moyer attended a conference on National Leadership Methods over the Halloween ween weekend. Reporting on their experiences with the group dynamics there, they related several effective practices which could be put into use by the Student Government.

Frank Pote from the Center Board stressed the importance of the POCO concert December 4. If response is poor, big name entertainment will never be featured here again.

During the remainder of the meeting, a critique session of Student Government was held. Examining how the group functions, what should be done, and by whom, revealed areas for improvement. (Students talk to your representatives—make them work!) Definite plans will be formulated next week.

Women's Student Government

Last Wednesday, the Executive Council of Women's Student Government met briefly.

First, each existing committee gave a progress report on their activities. Plans for freshman room judging last Saturday were then finalized, and a committee for the Christmas banquet was formed. President Sue Dobson and Treasurer Eileen Flieg relayed to the Council insights, ideas, and suggestions for projects from other WSG representatives who attended a district convention two weeks ago. The procedure for dorm councils obtaining funds from the WSG Treasurer was also discussed. (Student Directories may be purchased from each hall representative.)

GRASS ROOTS

Compiled by Kim Hershberger and Donna Trelease

Each week, the Grass Roots staff selects, at random, the name of a Juniata student, and ask him to contribute an article, impromptu, concerning anvthing he chooses. What follows is the result of this week's chance soliciting:

by Jean Thompson

It's raining today in Huntingdon at Juniata College—like a lot of days have been in the past three years; and just like on those other days I'm bored. Here I am a senior. I came to college for the usual reasons: to enhance my employment opportunities in the future, because it was expected of me by my family and by myself, and last but not least, to learn. I have come to expect very little of the last. A person learns at college only about 25% from the books which he could have read anywhere if he'd wanted to. Most people, however, don't want to, so they go to college where they have to, if they want to get a degree. The other 75% comes from outside the books. At Juniata and perhaps at any college, this 75% can be learned in a year or two. I'm in my fourth year.

A new professor, who has never taught before, has expressed amazement at the students' attitudes in the college situation. He sees it as the "Just enough to get by" attitude coupled with the "I'll get it done when it's done" attitude. But why not? If only 25% of learning at college comes from the books and if education is largely irrelevant anyway, why not? As an English major who doesn't want to teach or go to graduate school, I'll probably be trained for a job a high school graduate could have done except for one thing—the employer has a degree hang-up. He wants the person to have a meaningless degree to show. All the degree says is that the student successfully learned to play the academic game of credits, requirements, and averages.

So I'm bored and it's raining and I got this article in four hours after the deadline and I have "the attitude" just like most people. At least next year, if I'm employed, I'll have a productive life instead of this boring, unproductive, frustrating one. College is in a sad state: it bores people for at least two out of four years. Oh well, it will soon be behind me. I hope it's better for the frosh.

Do you often find yourself getting caught with your pants up on Saturday nights? Do you have any other outstanding problems or gripes which need the expert advice of a worldly woman such as Luci?

LETTERS TO LUCI is a new feature to appear in "The Juniation" every week. Feel free to write to Luci for solutions to all your problems.

Address your letters to:

LETTERS TO LUCI
c/o "The Juniatian"
Box 667 Juniata College
Huntingdon, Pa. 16652

NAVY ANNOUNCEMENT

The Navy Officer Information Team will be on campus at Founders Hall (Administrative Building) on November 15th to discuss, with any interested student, male or female, all Officer Programs (Active and Reserve; Aviation; Surface; Sub Surface; and other program).

Witchcraft Trials Brought To Life in A. Miller Play

by Nancy Davis

Arthur Miller's The Crucible, staged by Juniata students under the direction of Mrs. Doris Goehring this past weekend, was at times an effective, even vivid production, but also, at times, awkward and overemotional. An emotional peak—especially a loud one— cannot be sustained successfully for a long time without the danger of turning off the audience—they detach themselves rather than empathize. The danger, a common one in theater, was a flaw in the otherwise excellent production of Long Day's Journey into Night. It was the major flaw of The Crucible, a production which revealed that there is plenty of dramatic potential at Juniata, and that we should look forward to bigger and better things.

The staging of the production was a definite asset to the play: the props and sets properly severe and Puritan, the lighting an effective complement to the moods of the scenes, and the costumes a striking contrast to the black backdrop. The black/white contrast nicely paralleled the kinds of judgments being made in the play itself. The blocking of the play was vigorous, crisp and visually pleasing at all times. The use of the scrim in two scenes was effective, and in the second case, added to perhaps the most touching and dramatically successful scene in the production. The makeup was realistic for most characters, except Paul Miller as John Proctor, who lookd unnaturally orange until after he'd spent some time in prison.

Although I appreciated the crisp pace of the lialogue (certainlv a necessitv in such a long play), much of the time the lines were shouted rather than spoken. This was noticeable even as early as the first scene when Rebecca Nurse entered. I welcomed her underplayed delivery of the lines; the contrast was a pleasureable one and a relief to the audience, and her characterization no less strong for it. Chris McFarland's Rev. Samuel Parris was developed more by the lines themselves than by his own characterization—I was too aware of his acting. I feared the same when Paul Miller as John Proctor entered, rather woodenly, for his first scene, but he loosened up as the play went on, and by the second scene of the first act was most convincing as the repentent husband: and he was just plain good in the scene behind the scrim with Abigail Williams.

Manv of the performers did commendable jobs. Diane Miller as the distraught Mrs. Putnam and Jane Lee Kuvkendall as the hysterical Mary Warren were both convincing in their roles as was Dave Heberling as Rev. Hale. Dave's early scenes were especially good and his characterization a round one. Unfortunately he had to overplay the courtroom scene in order to rise above the volume of the rest of the cast at that point. Although the judges were visually convincing, it is unfortunate that Terry Tomassetti felt it necessary to deliver all his lines at the top of his lungs. Beginning the scene with such volume left little room for emotional peaks as the action unfolded. It was damaging to what was an effectively staged and acted scene when the girls had their visions and ran around the stage with ear-splitting screams. The moment was good as it was, but it would have been a real shocker if the earlier dialogue had been more low-key.

Sally Diehm as Abigail Williams was quite good. She established the revenge element of the play very convincingly and was powerful enough so that her control over the other girls was believable. Historically, according to Marion L. Starkey's Devil in Massachusetts, Abigail Williams was a powerful and sinister person once the opportunity came for her to ignore the restraint of the society of Salem. It was Sally's role more than any other that revealed the kind of Freudian repression and its hysterical release that occurred in that oppressed Puritan lifestyle.

continued on page 3

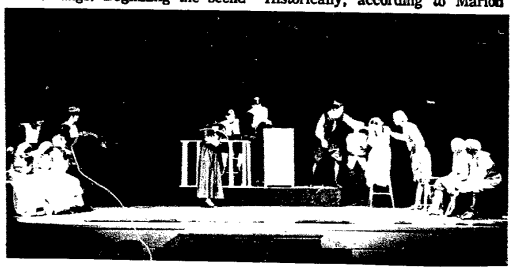


photo by Bruce Bordner

Initial Reaction to Fall Reading Festival

by Faye Brigaman

"Rejoice!" said the old man at the railroad crossing. The audience rejoiced at the initiation of the Fall reading Festival at 8:15 on Wednesday evening, November 3, at the Shoemaker Galleries. A potpourri of performers—Jack Troy, Mark Hochberg, Esther Doyle, and Ralph Church—read from an equally mixed bak of authors.

The aforementioned old man was the main character in a William Maxwell short story, "The Old Man at the Railroad Crossing," read by Jack Troy. Mr. Troy's selections also included "Ocean 1212 W," a poem by Sylvia Plath, whose current bestseller is The Bell Jar. Juxtaposed to the haunting poem was a hilarious selection from Car and Driver magazine, concerning a test driver of the Rover 2000 sedan who took a friend for an off-hours drive which resulted in a Keystone Kops-style accident covering 748 feet.

Mark Hochberg's performance followed Mr. Troy's with a chilling short story by Franz Kafka, "Jackals and Arabs." Hochberg's lowkey reading of the selection suited the ironic tone of the parable about carrion-eating, foul-breathed jackals who are unutterablv disgusted by Arabs.

The subtle menace of the Kafka tale was maintained in the old English ballad, "Edward," read by Esther Doyle. "The Generation Gap," Dr. Doyle's theme, was illuminated further by her presentation of the Romeo and Juliet scene in which young Juliet, so hot for news of her lover, is teased by her roguish old nurse. John Crowe Ransom's "Dead Boy," and e.e. cumming's "my father moved through dooms of love," completed Dr. Doyle's quartet of generation gap selections.

Another gap, the gulf between "self" and "other" was the theme of a Robert Heinlein short story, "All You Zombies," read by Ralph B. Church. Heinlein's Stranger in a Strange Land is a science-fiction novel well loved by the Underground. Mr. Church prefaced his reading of this ambiguous tale by cautioning the audience to note the forward backward movement of time in the story of a man who wrote for a True Confessions—type magazine and had undergone a Caesarean section.

The feast for the mind offered on November 3 will be followed by another cerebral repast on Wednesday, November 10, at 8:15 in Shoemaker Galleries, featuring Richard Hunter, William Hofelt, Gerald Croce and Bruce Davis. Dr. Hunter and Mr. Hofelt will read from Othello the dramatic confrontation between the villainous Iago and tortured Othello. Mr. Croce will air the Selected Poems of James B. Elmore. The Bard of Alamo, and Mr. Davis will provide selections from William Butler Yeats.

Modes: continued

freshmen are rejecting the curriculum is that it is so completely removed from the way we have been taught in high school. Many of us have been taught in high school, that everything is answered in terms of black and white, right or wrong. While in the Modes course, we are instructed that most things are actually gray, not black and white. The reason for this type of instruction, is that most facts and most knowledge can always be stated in probabilities, but almost never in certainties.

Dr. Rockwell points out that another reason why some students are rejecting Modes is because they came to Juniata convinced that they would have to work very hard. Actually this course is harder than most courses we have taken in high school. It is much more difficult to think—to search for the underlying meaning in something —than to memorize facts. This search for the difference between the surface meaning and the underlying meaning is what we as students are attempting to accomplish in Modes of Thought.

Some faculty members feel that student response to Modes is better than they ever had in any previous course. Mr. Croce says that his students come to class interested and prepared. If the Modes atmosphere is to continue in our future courses, we will have to continue to respond in class and to break the barrier between us, the students, and the instructor. Our future courses should be interesting and exciting if we can carry over these aspects of Modes of Thought to them.

(Most of the information in this article was taken from an interview with Mrs. Cherry, Mr. Croce, and Dr. Rockwell.)

Lime

continued from page 2

ing, crying, heartbreaking laughter, and the unavoidable self-identification with the situation. One of those people up there wrenching the emotional scenery apart is you. Mr. O'Neill trots out our weaknesses, hits them over the head with a hammer, and says "If that hurt, you can save yourself a lot of wasted life by recognizing your limitations and potentials and keeping within the safety zone."

Now! Take a cold shower, turn off the record player and concentrate.

Juniata CAMPUS CRIER

November

Wednesday	10	Spanish Table — Faculty Lounge	4:45 to 6:15 p.m.
		Chess Club — Ballroom Annex	7:00 p.m.
		Reading Festival — Shoemaker Gallery	8:15 to 9:15 p.m.
		Professors Croce, Davis, Hofelt, and Hunter
		Boy Scouts of America Recruiters — Placement Office	9:00 to Noon
		Prayer Meeting — Gold Room	5:00 to 5:30 p.m.
		Speaker: Mrs. Harriet Richardson, R.N. — A201	7:00 p.m.
		"Family Planning" — Tri Beta
Thursday	11	IVCF — Large Group Meeting — Faculty Lounge	7:00 to 8:00 p.m.
		Camera Club Guest Speaker — Jack Troy of the Art Department
Friday	12	Film — "Tobacco Road" — Alumni Hall	8:00 p.m.
Saturday	13	Prayer Meeting — ICVF — Gold Room	11:30 to Noon
		Football — Moravian	Away
		Cross Country — Delaware Valley and Gettysburg at Gettysburg
		Dance — "Wicked Truth" — Ballroom	9:00 p.m.
Monday	15	U.S. Navy — Placement Office
Wednesday	17	Chess Club — Blue Room	7:00 p.m.
		Spanish Table — Faculty Lounge	4:45 to 6:15 p.m.
		Prayer Meeting — Gold Room	5:00 to 5:30 p.m.
		Tri Beta Speaker — Dr. James Raub — "Birth Control" — Alumni Hall
Thursday	18	Reading Festival — Siobhan McKenna — Oller Hall	8:15 p.m.
Friday	19	Upper Classmen Thanksgiving Vacation
		Freshmen Classes End
		Cross Country Middle Atlantic Championships at Temple
Saturday	20	W. Eugene Smith, Photograph Display — Shoemaker Gallery
		(to December 20)

Juniata College has a good reputation now

Pro - Con: Should J.C. Try Coed Dorms?

Should Juniata experiment with Coed halls? ?

February, 1933: The Twenty-First amendment repealed prohibition of alcohol, thus marking another step forward for social freedom in our country. A quarter of a century later, Elvis Presley ushered in a completely new era in the sphere of entertainment.

September, 1971: Juniata College initiated more liberalized coed visitation policies, and in the process achieved another major victory in the struggle for personal quality and individualism.

Where do we go from here?

A logical conclusion might well be the advent of coed residence halls in the truest sense of the word coed. What this week's column attempts is to question the sentiment that exists for this somewhat radical change.

Among those who feel that Juniata is ready for coed halls are Doug Marshka: "Our society has no legitimate means for growing up socially, only academically. A student coming to college, who feels that he hasn't grown up socially, or would like an experience other than academic, should have the opportunity to experience the sharing of a hall with a member of the opposite sex."

Sharing a similar viewpoint was Don Hasenmyer who states: "I like it because it would be an opportunity for guys and girls just to meet as friends and really have a coed experience. There doesn't have to be anything sexual, and perhaps a floor or two like that at Juniata would be nice."

Klaus Kipphan accepts the concept of coed halls with some reservation: "As long as students are mature adults there is no handicap, but with immature people it may be a consequence. European style dorms have coed halls with no distinction between students. Dorms are considered a place to live and study, and students think in terms of the adult world." However, Klaus asks, "Are the people at Juniata ready for it?"

Other people also question the readiness and maturity of the typical Juniata student — some to the point of outright opposition. For instance, Jim Bowen sees "A hell of a lot of problems would be brought about with the introduction of coed dorms. It would inhibit the actions and speech of dorm life. I just can't see why, since we have the option of 24 hour open dorms."

One anonymous female was somewhat more pessimistic in that she felt that "the majority of college students have not matured enough to accept the responsibilities of a completely coed living situation. I would not advocate this set-up, for there are no set standards to tell the student when he is capable of handling such a situation."

Seeing coed halls as a pragmatic problem, though not a moral issue, was Donald Martman. "It is not obvious that because people live in a coed situation, that there is a decline in morality. . .if you are evil, hours mean nothing. Coed halls would be a conflict of interests and resources (i.e. materials and conesus of opinion)."

The subject of coed halls is not immediate, to be sure. However, it is noteworthy to observe the development of student opinion, for the issue will eventually become more pertinent with the passing of time.

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College
Huntingdon, Pa.

ASSOCIATED COLLEGIATE PRESS ACP — INTERCOLLEGIATE PRESS I.P.

REESTABLISHED September 9, 1971

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891 and "The Juniatian," established November 1924

SCOTT K. LEEDY, Managing Editor

PATRICK E. FLEAGLE, Associate Editor — ROBERT A. JONES, Business Manager
DEBI FRAZIER, Assistant Editor — STEWARD A. KAUFFMAN, Jr., Sports Editor
STEVEN S. KIMMEL, Assistant Editor — WILLIAM E. SCARLETT, Circulation Manager
BRIAN T. MAURER, Assistant Editor — WILLIAM M. DAVID, Photography Editor

ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANTS: General Information, Susan Stalker, Jean Thompson, Deborah Walker; Community Relations, Stephen J. Crowley, Jeffrey A. Naugle, Linda Richardson; Feature Columnists, Karl K. Kindig, Robert E. Kraut; Business, Thomas E. Alessi, Jean Jarrow, Nancy Tamburo; Typing and Proofing, Sandra Currier, Prof. Jerry Croce, Nancy Floyd, Sara Frank, Carol Garzillo, Margaret Haines, Anne Holzinger, Donna Lee, Janet Mason, Valorie Priddle, William B. Rea, Stuart C Treacy, Gayle Trofe; Laycut, Janet Bartschat, Rodger C. Devonald, Margery Herr, Keith E. Klein, James S. Reiley, Arthur W. Ritter; Art, Luci Bromberg, Lawrence R. Item; Sports, Anthony C. Martuzas, Jr., Patricia Monahan, J. Brian Richardson, Susan Snyder, Vernne Wetzel; Good Ole Days, Gary E. Gillen, Janice Nolan, Jean Pollock, Karen White, Gretchen Yost; Grass Roots, Kimber Hershberger, Donna Trelease; Pro/Con, William S. Dick, Nancy Diehl, Michael J. Finkle, Jean Pollock, William H. Robison; Advertising Consultant, Roberta Earle; Circulation, Ralph P. Casale, Dennise Deaner, Susan Dochtermann, Marlyn Hoover, Miriam Smith.

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughtout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students of Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized in Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Circulation 1500 — Subscription $5.00 per year

VOL. XLVIII, NO. 8 — November 10, 1971

Writing Program

continued from page 3

to grips with the problems of writing. Reports from my staff and my colleagues have also been good. Let me say, too, that while this speaks well of the program, it says something about the Freshman class. I am impressed by the enthusiasm of our Freshman class and if the program succeeds it will be as much a tribute to them as it will be to us.

Q: In conclusion, can you sum up for me just what in essence the Writing Program is asking of the student?

A: Yes, the Writing Program is asking that each student make writing "his own thing," that his writing be sufficiently universal to communicate clearly, but at the same time be sufficiently individual to express himself. Most important, however, is that the student use the writing tools at his command to further his quest for knowledge, knowledge which it is hoped he will use for the betterment of the world. One of my staff, Mary Kunz, really put it so much better than I. In the first part of the Task Force Proposal dealing with writing she said:

> If we are to actively participate in the world, putting our humanity to use, communication is basic because it is the only way to create meaning and extend it beyond ourselves. It might be fairly argued that it is precisely through the written word that the academic world influences society. This is to say, after cultivating the habits of reflection, interpretation and decision making among the students, the liberal arts college equips these students to go out into the world and be understood. The impact and effect of the educated man, the self discovered man, are in direct proportion to his ability to communicate with the written word. Moreover, this ability will be the yardstick by which others will measure the quality of his education.

I'd like to have every student be aware of the importance of that statement, in fact, make it a part of him, if possible.

Montgomery Ward
Sales Agency
516 WASHINGTON STREET
Telephone 643-1390

BLACK MOUNTAIN EXPRESS
C&W and Easy Rock
For All Occasions
Phone 542 - 9879

ENGLISH'S CARRIAGE HOUSE
Fashions from
John Meyer of Norwich
and
Jonathan Logan
Stop in and Browse

Logan's
CARPETING FURNITURE and DRAPERIES
CALL 643-0390 OR COME IN
705 WASHINGTON STREET
HUNTINGDON

New Freshman Program: Reflections

What is the Freshman Writing Program? This is a question that many upperclassmen, faculty members and freshmen have been asking. So, we took the question to the Director of the Writing Program, Prof. Gerald J. Croce.

He explained that the Freshman Writing Program, which is in some ways comparable to the former English Conference program, is a course which runs for 20 weeks. It differs from English Conference in a number of ways. First, it offers one unit of credit. English Conference offered no credit at all. Second, it meets more often. English Conference met ½ hour once every other week. Writing Program takes 1½ hours a week of a student's classtime. The students meet once a week in a workshop in groups of ten where they deal generally with one another's papers or published articles. The general format of most workshops involves a critical discussion of the structure and interest of a piece of writing. The students also meet individually with their advisors in ½ hour tutorials. These tutorials meet once a week also, and the function of these meetings is to deal with a student's particular writing problems as they become manifest in the work he's been doing in the discussion groups or outside class. Advisors, for the most part, have been avoiding dealing with work done for Modes of Thought or Freshman Seminar simply because there are too many basic attitudes toward writing that must be established first, and these attitudes can be best developed by sticking to writing assignments conceived in terms of the purpose of the program. "We will handle work done for Modes and Human Existence Historical later on in the 20 weeks."

". . . communication is basic because it is the only way to create meaning and extend it beyond ourselves." photo by Rick Replogle

The course has a basic aim, which is to enable the student to produce organized papers, to criticize them, and if necessary to revise them. "These papers, should illustrate a facility in exposition, argumentation, and also an ability on the student's part to do some research. We are stressing the tools of exposition, argumentation, and research because these are the kinds of papers the student will be asked to produce later on in his college career."

There are two other aims in the course: the development in the student of critical reading ability and clear thinking. Since there is a direct correlation between how well a student knows his subject and how well he writes about it, getting a student to write well involves first getting him to read sensitively and then getting him to think clearly about what he's read so that he can master his subject.

Prof. Croce went on to explain the basis for the methodology employed in the course:

"We hope to achieve the above aim by employing a methodology that rests solidly on two basic assumptions about writing:

a) that Writing communicates,

b) that Writing is a creative process, and one basic assumption about the writer: that knowledge is power, which when viewed specifically in terms of the student becomes: that expert knowledge of writing tools gives him the power to communicate what he wants, and to gain the desired effect upon his audience that he wants.

All three assumptions are at work simultaneously, that an approach that begins with the first assumption leads to dealing with the other two as well. For instance, in an attempt to get the student to realize that writing communicates — that in the hands of an unskilled writer, it often communicates in spite of the author's intention — we begin in workshops by having the students criticize each other's writing so that this aspect of writing is illustrated. A seemingly poorly organized paper can be shown to communicate, if nothing else, the writer's confusion; an ungrammatical sentence — the writer's insensitivity or ignorance of the conventions of the English language. The approach is not solely negative, however; in fact, the aim of this approach is to stress the positive — that students can organize, that each paper contains if only implicitly at first, an attempt to order, that there is at work within each paper an organizing principle. The problem for the student is not to Learn how to organize, but to discover with guidance what kind or organizations are available to him, and once he's done this to consciously choose the organizing principle most appropriate to his intent. Writing then becomes a creative endeavor in the conscious selection of an organizing principle, and knowledge then becomes for the student a source of power because of his awareness of what means bring about what desired ends.

Besides organization where dealing with the first assumption leads to the subsequent two, another area arises in the use of specific devices. For example, the split infinitive. The traditional, prescriptive approach would rule the split infinitive as 'wrong.' The present methodology of the Writing Program does not assume that anything is 'wrong' in any absolute sense, only inappropriate for the successful achievement of specific effects. Therefore, in deciding whether to split the infinitives, the questions the writer asks of himself should be: Why might I split an infinitive? What is the effect of a split infinitive on the reader? What are the dangers in splitting an infinitive? How can one be effective? The general answers to these questions are then applied to the specific context that the writer is concerned with, and they determine his decision to either use or not use a split infinitive."

The course tries repeatedly throughout its 20 week period to get the student to see these basic principles at work successfully or unsuccessfully in his writing and in the writing of others. It culminates in a research project in which the student deals with one aspect of an issue decided upon and debated in his class. The issue, chosen by the class and advisor as a cooperative venture, will be debated in an informal pro team vs con team debate in class before each student writes his paper, in which he will develop in detail an aspect of that issue. The issues, in all probability, will come from the text the Writing Program is using this term, Juxtaposition; but each class, and there are 40 of them, will be free to choose its own issue.

Prof. Croce replied to the following specific questions that have the special interest of freshmen in the program.

Q: Is it possible to opt out of the Writing Program before the twenty week period is up?

A: In the proposal which I wrote for Task Force last year I stated that it was possible for the student to opt out any time after six weeks. We begin the ninth week today and I have published the following policy statement regarding exemptions from the program:

> No student shall be considered eligible for exemption from the rest of the program unless he shows competence in writing, competence in reading, and competence in handling research. If an advisor feels that a student has shown competence in these three areas, he should recommend that student to the Director for competence, and also furnish evidence of the student's competence in those areas. On the basis of the advisor's recommendation and the evidence supplied, the Director will then decide if the student is competent.

May I add, and I'm not being overly cynical or pessimistic here, that I don't see many students being competent at this point in the term. Writing Program offers one unit of credit, which means that unlike English Conference, its purpose is not remedial. It involves itself with what an overwhelming majority of colleges and universities throughout the country consider a legitimate endeavor in the college curriculum. Therefore, I would assume no mass exodus from Writing Program for much the same reason that I would assume no mass exodus from Modes of Thought or Freshman Seminar, evn if these courses had provisions for "opting out."

Q: How will competency be decided, when, and by whom?

A: The specific mechanism for measuring competency has yet to be decided upon. My staff and I are hard at work on this problem right now. The only definite statement I can make is that we've decided that no one thing, like an exam, will be used to measure a student's reading, writing and research abilities. To arrive at an adequate measuring device, more than one student endeavor will be taken into account.

Competency will be decided for most students at the end of the Winter term. The criterion that will be used is posted outside my office door in a notice entitled "A Statement on Competency."

Competency will be decided upon by me and my staff. The decision ultimately is mine, but certainly not solely mine, nor even mostly mine. Again the question is difficult to answer because so much depends upon the device we use to measure.

Q: What if a student should fail to write competently at the end of 20 weeks?

A: There will be a no credit Writing Clinic that will be remedial in function and which will operate for the Spring Term. The student must gain competency by then, or face suspension from the college.

Q: How do you think the program is going so far?

A: I'm very pleased with the way things have been going. My own Workshop has been a stimulating exciting experience in which I feel students are really coming

continued on page 5

Anonymous Letter

Is the Freshman program good, or bad? Should it be revised, or left as it is? These are a few of the questions the administration has been asking themselves. They rack their brains trying to answer their questions, but can't come up with a suitable answer. So they say let the students tell us if the program is good or not. The students are asked, but again there is no answer. The students are either confused by the question and can't really give a good answer, or cautious because they wonder if it will affect them to speak out against it. Such is the dilemma we are faced with. Should we keep going with the present plan of action and forget what faults it may have? Should we veer off the road, check ourselves and continue on a slightly different course? Or should we reverse our direction now and go back to the old way of teaching? These are hard questions to answer.

My opinion of the program is both a good one, and an optimistic one. I feel the program itself is both well-planned and developed. But it does have its faults. The basic criterion for the program is to make the student think. That is a very good idea, but the present way of doing it tends more to confuse the student than cause him to think. Being a student myself, I know the feeling. You sit in class and you begin to discuss things; that's fine, but sometimes there isn't a format placed down to get a person thinking along certain lines. Without a format to at least begin your train of thought, you get a little confused in trying to associate what is being said with what you are supposed to be talking about, especially if you don't know much, if anything, about the subject.

That brings up fault number two, subject matter. Although I realize the subjects must cover a variety of areas, I feel at the same time the subject matter could be much more interesting. The easiest way to turn a person off while trying to teach him is to require him to read books that are so boring they could cure the worst case of insomnia in history. I am referring of course to books such as Symbols and Civilizations by Ralph Ross. Books like that soon make a person feel it isn't worth wanting to take the course at all, but they are required, so he must fight his way through it. What really gets riding me is when the discussion leaders themselves condemn the reading matter as "a lot of junk", "unworthy of the time put into it", etc. Why even have it then?

I have no complaint about the writing assignments with the exception of the term paper. I feel because the class covers such a diverse area of subjects, why not be able to do a term paper on them? Why assign everybody basically the same paper due in two weeks? It is too much of a hassle. There is just not enough material in the library to do such a thing, at least not for a whole class.

In spite of these faults, though, the class is good, and once you start to get the hang of things, you do in actuality think for yourself. Iron out the wrinkles and the class will be a good one.

Witchcraft

After the performance, I was remarking to some students that I thought the play had gained somehow by cooling for twenty years. When it was first performed in the early 1950's, the dramatic strengths of the play were largely thrust aside in the rush to point out Miller's backhanded swipes at the then-current anti-communist hysteria of the McCarthy era. The students made me feel horribly antique by asking who Joe McCarthy was. If there are many of you around who have never heard of our century's greatest witch-hunter, you can remedy the situation on December 7, when the Center Board and the History Department are going to bring us ol' Joe himself, in the film Point of Order. It may give you a whole new perspective on The Crucible.

Vogue Shop
Women's and Misses' Wearing Apparel
Huntingdon, Pa. 16652

Central, Pa.
IMPORTED CAR PARTS
2615 - 6 Ave., Altoona
Phone 942-0576
Carrying a full line of parts, tires, and accessories for all imports.
BOSCH - LUCAS - AMCO
EMPI - SEMPERIT - ETC.

Strickler's
Milk and Ice Cream
Plant Phone — 643-2770
Enjoy a Sunday, Milk Shake or Ice Cream Cone
at
The Strickler Shop
14th & Mifflin Streets

For a complete Shoe and Boot wardrobe buy at
WESTBROOK'S SHOE STORE

Modes: Freshman Explanation

by Patrick Minnick
Kim Hershberger

After going through twelve years of "penitentiary life" in high school, we as Juniata Freshmen are now confronted with a much freer futuristic educational form in Modes of Thought. Why! ? Why are we taking Modes of Thought and Methods of Inquiry, instead of English, Math, History, Biology, Chemistry, or some other "normal" course?

According to the faculty, the primary goal of Modes is to teach students how to think. It is imperative for every college student to grasp what the statement "to think" means. Mrs. Cherry asserts that "the reason for the existence of the Modes course is to help the student gain a grasp of the essential methods behind which knowledge is acquired and to call his attention to the assumptions upon which each of these methods is based." These methods are taught with the hope that we, the students, will begin to see why something is done instead of just the fact that it is.

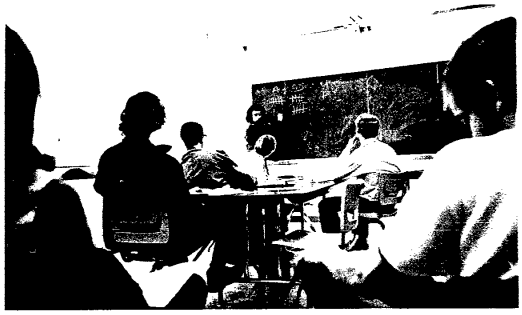

photo by Rick Replogle

"This search for the difference between the surface meaning and the underlying meaning is what we. . . are attempting to accomplish. . ."

In the past, there was so much stress placed on "the grade," that the Methodologies were forgotten. Within the Modes course, we are taught that the process is far more important than the product. Symbols and Civilization by Ralph Ross, one important book that Freshmen have read, states that if you have to choose between the method of science and the product of science, and you choose the product, then you're stuck; you have no where to go. This idea is one of the basic concepts that we have discussed in the beginning weeks of Modes.

One reason for teaching these methods and processes is that in this world of accelerating scientific, technological, and social change, facts and truths are not as stable as they once were. New discoveries are always superseding old facts. A student whose education is based totally on accumulated facts is bound for obsolescence in his life's work as surely as the buggy whipmakers once were. By teaching students the process, we will be able to examine any type of material for the rest of our lives.

There has been a tendency in the past to think that the person who works in the arts is a different kind of "being" — that the way he arrives at his ideas is completely different from the scientist. This is another element that the Modes course is attempting to clarify, that the method used by the scientist, historian, sociologist, philosopher, psychologist is basically the same. We have been taught that in all these we use both imagination and logic, i.e., empiricism and reason.

One speculation as to why some

continued on page 5

Freshman Seminar

by Henry Siedzikowski

"The principal asset of a college like Juniata is in the potential for faculty-student contact but too often that potential is underdeveloped in the Freshmen Year because of the size of introductory courses. We feel it is desirable that students experience early the importance of this kind of personal contact. Consequently, we are proposing the establishment of First Term Seminars for all entering students. The goal of these seminars is explicitly contact rather than content, although they would certainly be oriented around topics."

These are the reasons for the Freshmen Seminar as stated in the "Report of the Task Force on the Juniata College Program." In practice, however, the seminar has created a number of questions and differing opinions among both the students and faculty.

The student opinions run the gamut from, "I'm getting a chance at independent study" to "having a great time and learning a little" to "it stinks," "it shits."

The students differ on many aspects of the course: on whether the course should run ten weeks or twenty; on how much content should be included in the course, on whether they are getting to know their profs, is the course really worthwhile?

Profs are approaching the seminars in different ways, making each individual seminar unique.

"The principal asset of a college like Juniata is in the potential for faculty-student contact. . ." photo by Rick Replogle

Subjects include everything from "Mine Acid Drainage" to "Astrology, Numbers, Symbolism and Literature," to "Local Politics."

Because of the many differing opinions, a way to look at the seminars is by consensus. Here is a sampling of Freshmen and faculty views of the main points of the Seminar Program.

HOW LONG SHOULD THE SEMINAR RUN?

The vast majority felt that twenty weeks was preferable to ten weeks. Most students felt they were just getting started now and to cut off the seminar after only 10 weeks would be to waste what already has been accomplished. One prof said, "Students are just getting used to this new type of learning experience, and it will be the second ten weeks from which they will actually benefit." Another professor suggested that the only way the seminar could be shortened to ten weeks would be to make the course more concentrated so it would be "more justifiable in academic terms." In support of changing the seminar to ten weeks one student said, "the course isn't supposed to be pointed towards content, but that extra ten weeks can only add content to the course."

WHAT ARE THE OBJECTIVES OF THE COURSE?

Opinions on the objectives of the course are widely different; the one pointed out most is becoming familiar with a faculty member. When the Task Force planned The Freshmen Seminar, they had the idea that the student would get to know a faculty member in a situation other than a formal classroom. They wanted the student to know that the profs are human too. None of the faculty members questioned felt they could really judge how well they were doing in this area, but all felt that they were making a sincere effort to have a personal encounter with the students. Most of the students seemed to feel that they were becoming familiar with their profs. "Fantastic," said one, "Got to know the leader well," said another. However, there were some who complained that they didn't see their prof enough. "No personal contact with the leader yet" was a comment shared by many.

Another frequently mentioned objective was acquainting the student with methods of investigation. One student's reaction was, "You can't investigate the subject without

continued on page 6

JUNIATA COLLEGE PRESENTS:

Second Semester Film Series

Jan. 29, 1972 — Duck Soup and Horse Feathers

Feb. 4, 1972 — King Kong

Feb. 11, 1972 — Caine Mutiny

Feb. 12, 1972 — Knock on any Door

Mar. 24, 1972 — Performance and Bogart Short

Apr. 7, 1972 — Who's Afraid of Virginia Wolfe

Apr. 29, 1972 — Grand Illusion

May. 17, 1972 — The Sea Gull

May. 20, 1972 — Beauty and the Beast

Perspective on Curriculum

by Kari Kindig

"Evaluation" is a word with which most people in academia are familiar, even if that familiarity often consists of only realizing what an overworked and confusing word it is. One reason this word is confusing is that it is used to denote a number of different concepts and processes. In this article an attempt will be made to clarify at least one of its meanings—the one considered relevant to the task of the Evaluation Sub-Committee.

The Evaluation Sub-Committee, an offspring of the Academic Planning Committee, is charged with providing an ongoing evaluation of the New Curriculum's Freshman Program. The crucial point here is "ongoing evaluation." Because of a real need for evaluation of the New Curriculum as it is being instituted (so that needed changes can take place sooner rather than later), an attempt is being made to evaluate the Freshman Program as it is in progress. This type of evaluation, however, has some inherent difficulties.

When attempting to evaluate some process it is always simpler to wait until the process has been completed and then compare what has been produced with what was intended or expected. By way of a crude analogy, this kind of evaluation can be seen as the type used to evaluate an assembly line. All you need to do is count up the produced units. With respect to the Freshman Program this kind of evaluation could take several years in that the "product" is supposed to be a more meaningful undergraduate education. Given the extreme importance of the Freshman Program this time lag between institution and evaluation is undesirable.

A more difficult, less definite, and more immediately applicable type of evaluation is the one which has been undertaken by the Sub-Committee. Here the method can't be quite as simple as counting up the products; they haven't yet been produced. With this type of analysis two conditions are necessary: 1) a clear, unbiased understanding of what is happening; 2) some means of interpolation between currrent process and final product. At the present, the Sub-Committee is attempting to satisfy the first condition.

One of the problems it is having with this first condition may be summarized as follows: one of the most interesting things I remember from high school was the way classes reacted to student teachers. Nine-tenths of the time these classes were in absolute chaos, except when the student teacher's evaluator arrived. On these days the same classes were paragons of academic efficiency and order. Unfortunately, some of these same phenomena seem to be occurring in the units which the Sub-Committee is attempting to evaluate. Not that students are deliberately trying to mislead anyone, but they often seem hesitant to be completely frank about their units with outside parties. This does not do anyone any good.

As I see it, there are three levels at which a curriculum can be evaluated: 1) the ends to which the various programs are theoretically directed, 2) the effectiveness of specific units to meet those ends, 3) the ability of a given person or block of material to contribute to the effectiveness in (2). The Evaluation Sub-Committee is concerned, exclusively, at the second level. It is not the Sub-Committee's intention to determine whether the basic ends of the program are justified or whether a particular faculty member or other resource is effective in a given unit. It is concerned with whether the overall structures of the units are conducive to meeting the designated ends of the New Curriculum. To meet this concern on an ongoing basis requres objective data— the type of data which is available only if students are willing to provide it.

Lime

by Edward Kinchley Evans

If there are moments in your mind when you thoughts stray from the immediate goals of accomplishing prescribed work and you are lulled into procrastinating by relaxing with another smoke or another drink, then a play to shock you into self-awareness is Eugene O'Neill's "A Long Day's Journey Into night" which was presented Monday night at Oller Hall by the Vanguard Theatre from Pittsburgh.

For the record, should you be unfamiliar with Mr. O'Neill or his work, he is not a happy playwright nor does he concern himself with comedic themes. Considered by many to be America's greatest playwright, Eugene O'Neill wrestled constantly with universal problems which plague all of us. In this particular play he used his family to set the scene for presenting his revalations of character deterioration. How subtle is the serpent of suggestion, how weak we are in rationalizing our own destruction, how easy for our self-control to slip from our grasp and be lost forever, and how quickly we dig a moat of excuses to protect the fortrese of our dreams and illusions once the grasp is lost.

The mother lives constantly on the edge of sanity having become addicted through carelessness to morphine. Given in innocence to kill pain after the birth of her third child, her mind latches onto the marvelous freedom it gives her to escape the nightmare that she has allowed her life to become. She can now live safely in her past only having to resort to dies and intrigue and recriminations when she needs a "fix." The father, once an actor of merit and promise, has sold himself for quick fame and fortune, only to be unable to spend his money, haunted by a childhood of poverty. Viewing the catastrophe that is his family: a wife who is a drug addict, one son who is a consumptive (tubercular), and another who is a n'er-do-well actor, he cries out at one point in self-condemnation for the decision made, "What was I so anxious to buy?"

What makes any O'Neill play worth attending (run don't walk when the next opportunity is affered) is that he daggers your attention from the moment the curtain goes up until it crashes downyears later. There is a lot of shouting, ranting, raging, breast beat-

continued on page 5

THE BIG HOUSE

directed by Alfred McGuffin

What newspaper do ya read? If you read Variety you know that the profits turned by a series of low-budget, high grossing movies have created a whole new crop of young millionaires. If you read the Hollywood trade papers you know that almost everybody is out of work and the industry is on the verge of collapse. Box Office, the tout sheet for theater owners, gloomily records the body count as one by one the downtown Picture Palaces are forced to close their doors. Yet the Sunday Times, and almost any magazine you pick up, will tell you that young people have seized the flicks as the only art form that can really speak powerfully to their generation, and are attending movies in record numbers.

The situation at Juniata seems equally ambiguous. On the one hand, we have developed, just in the last few years, a fairly hip film audience on campus, although how large it is is difficult to estimate. Prof. Briggs' courses in film techniques and film making attract a steady enrollment, and this semester's experimental course on Ingmar Bergman's career, which had a class limit of sixty, had to beat students away with a club. On the other hand, there seem to be lots of students around who don't go to movies at all, or who are mightily put out at being asked to carry their brains into a theater with them. The college center board, for example, which has tried this year to rise above the Born Free and Sound of Music level, is already running into complaints that the films aren't "entertaining" enough (which is the philistine's way of saying he feels more comfortable mindlessly watching John Wayne hit somebody, or Dennis Hopper hop somebody, than he does being asked to participate emotionally or intellectually in an attempt to create art). The idea that art and entertainment cannot exist simultaneously is one that seems particularly to plague rural Pennsylvania campuses. It also plagues rural Pennsylvania commercial theaters, and that situation has brought about this column.

The Big House will tell you every week what films are playing at the movie house downtown, and will try to give you some idea of why you might want to see those pictures. The Clifton provides a vital service for the college and the community, and there are very few weeks—while the college students are in town anyway—when there isn't at least one film that deserves a thirteen-block walk. The movies at the Clifton are not interrupted for commercials, nor have they been cropped to fit a net work's idea of proper running time or proper deportment. The image on the screen is the size the director wanted it to be, and it isn't scalloped at the bottom edge with the shadows of heads. Finally, mirabile dictu, the price at the Clifton is something like a third of what most urban theaters are gouging customers for.

I won't have seen all the films beforehand, so the information you find here will often have been coaxed from acquaintances who paid big-city prices to see the picture, or it may simply be a digested version of the most interesting reviews. In any case, if the newspaper ya read is the Juniatian, you'll have some idea of what is going on downtown.

And so to work. This week's job is a snap: one movie, all week long, and everybody on campus would hustle down to see it, even if I said not to. The reason is that, much as its makers have tried to conceal the fact by their title, Carnal Knowledge is about sex.

This is the fourth film Mike Nichols has directed. All three of the others—Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf, The Graduate, and Catch-22—made money, and two of them made a lot of money, which, to Hollywood's way of thinking, makes him something like a genius. We'll see.

Anyway, Carnal Knowledge examines (yet again) the sexual failings of the American male by following two characters from their college days in the 1940's to dreary middle age. Lots of fleshly delights, but we are to notice that the relations, other than sexual, that our heroes have with women are less than satisfactory. The film has been attacked by Millet & Co. as being hostile to and frightened of women, hence degrading to them. Possibly so, yet it seems equally possible that a major point is being missed here. What is carnal knowledge, if I may risk the etymological fallacy (no fooling around, now, Typesetter), but a knowledge of meat? The film never pretends that the buddies learn anything about women.

The cast includes Jack Nicholson, Art Garfunkel (who has become, apparently, something of a Nichols protege), Candy Bergen and Rita Moreno. The performance that has knocked everybody out, however, is that of Ann-Margret, who, after years of stupifvingly bad pictures, suddenly demonstrates that she has a lot more going for her than that awesome cantilever system.

If I've made the film sound gloomy, let me correct that impression. Nichols and the script-writer, cartoonist Jules Feiffer, are serious about their subject, but not stodgy. These are two of the sharpest comic talents we have in this country, and they find occasion again and again in Carnal Knowledge to remind us of that fact.

TEXAS LUNCH

316 7th STREET

Open 7 Days

We Specialize in Home Cooking

Try Our Texas Hots

Telephone 643-4030

SKIPPER'S STYLE SHOP
304 7th St. Phone 643-4646
I personally pick out all my styles each month from Manhattan and Brooklyn, N.Y.

+ Album of the Month +
Freddie Hart
"Easy Loving"
reg. $5.98 — only $3.99
Words and Music Mezzanine
Miller's
A Center for Family Shopping

BUCKY'S ARCO
935 MOORE STREET
COMPLETE SERVICE
and STATE INSPECTION
Phone 643-4185

WHAT THE HECK IS A QUALITY WATER BED?
ANSWER — QUALITY WATEBEDS HAVE
1. Lapped Seams —
2. Box-like Construction
3. Builtin Hose — No Leaks
4. 20 mil Vinyl
5. 5 Year Guaranttee
6. All Sizes Available
7. Separate Air Valve
8. Acti Fresh — (no smelly water)
9. King Kuss Brand ! !

What's it used for? — CENSORED
Price $45
Package Price — $55.00 includes, Mattress, Liner, Foam Pad
Free Frame Instructions
Call 643-5615

Vogue Shop
Women's and Misses' Wearing Apparel
Huntingdon, Pa. 16652

SURPRISE

November 16, 1932

"Uh, where's that alarm clock? Holy cow, it's only five-thirty! The person who set the alarm for that unearthly hour should be cremated and then some!"

"Good morning, roommate, what's all the fuss and why? 'Smatter?"

"Did you set the alarm for five-thirty? I'm telling you, if you did, you can just order your funeral wreath yourself right now! Just when I'm really enjoying my well-earned rest, someone sets the alarm clock for five-thirty. It'll be midnight next! What's the use of going to bed if you have to get up at five-thirty?"

"No, I didn't set the alarm for five-thirty! You know who always sets the alarm for this company of inmates. You probably set it and then forgot all about it."

"I didn't set the alarm for five-thirty. I guess I'm not quite such a sap. You're the one who set it and forgot about it. You know I never forget anything, and I'd surely remember if I'd set the alarm six or seven hours previously."

"Ah, cool off, or I'll get some water and cool you off. It won't do any good to fuss and fume about it anymore. If you don't remember why you set it, then forget about it and go to sleep again."

The two roommates joined the rest of the blissfully sleeping inhabitants of the as yet unnamed new dorms in slumberland. Came the earthly and reasonable hour of seven forty-five. There was a stir from one of the sleepers, a tense silence, and then an outburst—

"Jimmy, Pats! It's almost eight o'clock, and I've an early class! Where are my clothes, where's my other sock? Shoerusalem! And I was just beginning to get on the good side of that prof, too. Where in thunder did that sock get to? If I go strollin' in late—"

Now I know why I set the alarm for five-thirty! We're having a quiz today and I wanted to study! Surprise! I think-maybe- I'd better-cut class—, Didn't you? OooH!"

From A Petersburg Garret

by Dr. Richard Hunter

Michael asked me to do a short article on Satire. He wanted me to differentiate between Juvenalian and Horation satire: very well—Juvenalian satire bludgeons and Heration satire tickles. But what I really want to do is defend the position that satire is a subtle moral defense of permanent values while attacking the canard that satire represents the senseless and inchoate thrashings of sempiternal metamorphosis by superannuated savants. I hope this turns out OK. I'm feeling epistemologically disoriented. But you try working in a garret here in Petersburg.

It's not so much the going without. It's knowing that my mother and sister are sacrificing to keep me here at the University, while I haven't attended class ever since I got to Paradise Lost, Paradise Regained (it's better than Babylon Revisited), Parzival, Peter Rabbit, and Piers Plowman. If I am to learn everything I must know most of it by the end of this year. Zossimov is no help: he just keeps telling me to take two aspirin and call him in the morning. O the Weltschmerz! O the Heimweh!

The big thing is seriousness. WAFFLE! Nothing has ever been accomplished by the dilettante or the amateurish afficianade, Hemingway to the contrary. If man really is what he eats, my fears are justified. I am a McDonald's hamburger, with french fries and a large coke, easy on the ice. You perhaps think I cannot be a McDonald's hamburger here in Petersburg, WAFFLE! but here on the Gulf of Finland we serve down by the surf, our serf a surfeit of munchable morsels. And what we become used to, we become. There is no confusion here, only the lapping of the frozen northern seas on that swampy and brackish coast that surrounds our Window to the West.

clink clink clink clink clink

The Fourth Law of WAFFLE WAFFLE Thermodynamics ("when you're hot, you're hot; when you're not, you're not") states that "when you're hot, you're hot, while when you're not, you're not." Nothing could be further from the truth. And that's another one I've proved to your satisfaction. If I can only get these bloody socks stuffed into this hole in the wall.

The bourgeois waffle clinks in the halfanotion while ghaghgh you arehurtingmythroat. Excuse me while I pour a little ketchup inside my head. Too much ice again. Hear it clink. Look, Alice. Look, look, Jerry. See the waffle. Satire is the moral defense of permanent values. So I should kiss the earth, Sonya? Me?

G. C. MURPHY CO.

528 Washington Street

The Complete Variety Store

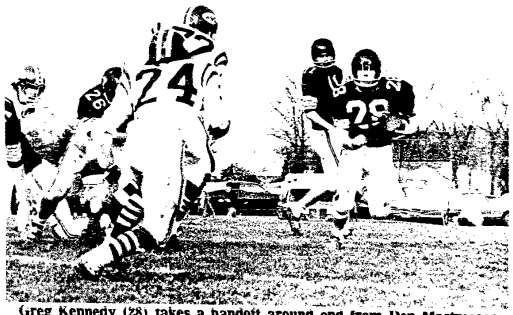
J.C. Lacks Big Play

Indians Lose Last Home Stand

by Rich Sipple

Week after week Juniata plays superb defense and nearly every week the offense moves the ball well between the 20 yard lines but repeatedly fails to execute the big scoring play. This past Saturday before a large Parents' Day crowd JC again followed the same pattern as Western Maryland (3-5) upended Juniata (3-3-2) by a score of 13-3.

Western Maryland scored first on a 37 yd. field goal in the second quarter. Meanwhile, JC showed a strong inside running attack. But once JC moved inside the W.M. 20 yd. line, they were stopped cold. In the first half alone JC penetrated to the W.M. 8, 10, and 11 yard lines but were held scoreless.



Greg Kennedy (28) takes a handoff around end from Don Mastrorocco (11) with help from the blocking Karl Bergstresser (26) in last Saturday's dissappointing loss. photo by Rick Replogle

The Indians managed to tie the score 3-3 on a third quarter field goal of 29 yards by Mike McNeil. Then, on the ensuing kickoff, W.M. returned the ball to the Juniata 40 yard line. W.M. capitalized on the excellent field position with a long pass and a 1 yd. touchdown run. Later W.M. added a final field goal to complete the scoring.

The game was marred by mistakes on both teams. Brian Hoover, JC safety man, intercepted 2 passes while freshman Dave Amidon recovered a fumbled punt for JC. W.M. recovered 2 fumbles and intercepted 2 Juniata passes. The one interception at the W.M. 2 yard line shut off one of the Indian's deep penetrations.

This was an especially disheartening loss for the many seniors who played their last home game. But the game exemplified their career-long style of aggressive, hard nose play with desire that persisted to the final whistle. There are too many outstanding seniors to name individually; rather the school thanks the group of seniors for four years of sacrifice and dedication.

J.C. Harriers Lose Two

CROSS COUNTRY OCT 27

by Stew Kauffman

On Wednesday, October 27, the Juniata cross country team hosted a well-balanced Lock Haven team in what turned out to be a one-sided contest. Denny Weidler finished first for the Indians in third place with Brian Maurer coming in sixth. After those two finishers, it was a long wait until another Juniata runner crossed the finish line. Grant Brewin finished tenth, Mark Edgecomb finished eleventh, and Jim Bowen finished twelfth to end the scoring for Juniata. The strong showing of the opposing team gave them the win by a score of 19 to 42.

CROSS COUNTRY Nov. 3

The dual meet with the Shippensburg cross country team on Wednesday, November 3, was disappointing to the Juniata team in it's outcome, but it did set a first for Juniata cross country. Juniata finished first, third, sixth, tenth, and eleventh. Denny Weidler again captured first for Juniata. The other finishers for the Indians were Brian Maurer, Grant Brewin, Jim Bowen, and Scott Williams. The final score was Shippensburg 26, Juniata 31.

The meet was the first time that all Juniata runners, whether in scoring places or not, finished the home course in less than 30 minutes. Coach Swinderman is pleased with the team's efforts this season with respect to improved times over the regular meet schedule. He feels that the MAC meet at Temple on November 19 should be one of the best showings for a Juniata cross country team.

W..A.A. Winds Up Tennis Program

Believe it or not, the W.A.A. has sponsored a tennis program this fall. A total of eight women participated in three matches. A fourth match was cancelled. The first match was played at the Grier School on October 8. Three single and two double matches were played. In singles, Mary Ann Repman won her match after splitting the first two sets. Sue Stalker, a freshman, won her match in two straight sets. Judy Swartley, also a freshman, lost her match. In doubles, both pairs lost to Grier players. The teams were Kathy Conroy and Phyllis Lamont, and Ilona Walters and Sandy Currier.

A second match was played with St. Francis on October 11 at home. Again three singles and two doubles were played. Sue Stalker won again in singles, and Mary Ann Repman and Judy Swartley both lost their matches. In doubles, Sue and Mary Ann teamed up to defeat the team from St. Francis. Susan Joecks and Phyllis Lamont lost their match. A second match with Grier for October 14 was cancelled.

The second match with St. Francis was played at that school on October 29. Due to an apparent lack of interest and concern, only two players from Juniata were on hand to go to the match. In singles, Mary Ann won and Judy lost. These two teamed up to play a doubles match which was called because of darkness after two sets. Each team had one set. A tennis program is centatively being considered for this spring, but only if sufficient interest is shown.

Freshman Seminar

continued from page 4

knowing its fundamentals." Another student had a different reaction. He said, "It's good, because we design our own work." A third student, commenting on his seminar, said, "Outside reading is good, and the field trips are interesting." The profs felt that they could expand the number of sources of information that a student could use. One pointed out that in high school, the library is about the only source of information that the student really learns to use, and this limits the scope of his research. He wants to give students an idea on the vast number of other sources open to them, including talking to profs or having interviews with public officials.

Other objectives mentioned included a "new learning experience for the students," and "getting acquainted with an unfamiliar topic."

Many students felt they should be getting more out of the seminar. One said, "Seminar is not challenging." "I feel like I'm doing absolutely nothing," was a common comment.

On the question of the grading system the prof and students generally agree that the present system is the only way to grade the unsatisfactory, to grade how well a student gets to know the faculty member, and that is one of the main objectives of the course.

So even the consensus comes to no solid conclusion. But after the first ten weeks are up, there will be a freshman meeting, so that all freshmen can discuss with faculty, upperclassmen and among themselves the pertinent aspects of Freshmen Seminar. Hopefully, students will express what they feel is right and wrong with the seminar, and come up with some suggestions for changes that might improve it.

THE JUNIATIAN

VOL. XLVIII, NO. 9 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | November 17, 1971

Guitarist Charlie Byrd Presents Multiplicity of Styles In Concert

by Bob Kraut

It should have been immediately apparent to all that witnessed the Charlie Byrd concert that the gentleman knows his way around the fingerboard of the classical guitar as well as anyone in the world. By working his way through a multiplicity of styles, the guitarist produced a diversified program that included just about everything, save some old Russian balalaika and Japanese koto pieces. However, the only genuinely satisfying moments of the entire evening came when, minus his quartet, Byrd picked on the classics of Pagannini, Vivalde and Villi-Lobos. With the exeception of Vivaldi, both Pagannini and Villa-Lobos have contributed extensviely to the literature of the classical guitar, and their latticework-like melodies certainly proved more amenable to the guitarist's artistry than "The heavy" of Carole King or Rice & Webber.

Charlie Byrd plays another one of his numbers which ran the gamut of guitar music. photo by Bill David

It continues to amaze me how people with the instrumental expertise of this man can reduce themselves to playing popular melodies in order to pirate the public's pocketbook. From lesser artists I expect it; from Charlie Byrd . . . certainly not! A quick look through the racks of Byrd's latest Columbia releases will soon convince one that perhaps Charlie has fallen victim to that malaise often identified as "The Ransey Lewis Syndrome." If the public liked the original, they'll just love my version. I'm sure Byrd rationalizes that in order to draw the audiences you've got to serve the desserts before you get to the entree. As for myself, the sweets only spoil my musical appetite, and I'd just as soon do without them.

Another viable criticism of Byrd's music must be leveled toward the quintet itself. I found the more musicians that were stripped away, the better the program become. Someday, perhaps, the guitarist will recognize that he's capable of standing alone, as are few others. Until then . . . this? ? The resultant blending of fluegelhorn, electric piano, electric bass and drums never meshed, and consequently I kept anticipating when, if indeed at all, the Byrd quintet would get off the ground. It almost materialized on the guitarist's composition "Something Like the Blues." With Byrd displaying a showcase of guitar styles, from the octave playing of Wes Montgomery to the flashy lines of Kenny Burrell, the fivesome had just started to cook when trumpeter Hal Posey picked up his plunger and Charlie launched into a raunchy vocal of Bessie Smith's. It was evidently more than some fied as "The Ramsey Lewis Synstand, and when I saw Aunt Minnie get up to leave I knew he had lost them.

Perhaps I expected to much. Charlie Byrd was such a giant in the sixties when the Bossa Nova was in vogue, it appears he is vainly trying to recover some of that stature, this time via Venezuelan music. But if Tuesday night's concert is any indication of the musical direction his group is taking I'm afraid I'll have to be content to occasionally dust off my old "Jazz Samba" album as a reminder of a time when Charlie Byrd was a vanguard influence upon the tastes of American Popular music.

Student Life Discussed in Student Government

by Kim Hershberger

"I feel that we have really accomplished something tonight," was the comment made by President Jon Hunter at the close of last Wednesday's Student Government meeting. The legislators divided into committees to work on some very significant issues concerning student life.

The publishing of a student handbook is what one committee was designated to discuss. It was generally felt that the Pathfinder doesn't describe the true characteristics of Juniata life. A seperate handbook published by the student government would attempt to "tell it like it is" and describe the manner in which students can best cope with college life. One item suggested for the handbook would be a list of businesses in Huntingdon with their respective price ranges, products, and attitude toward the college students.

Another committee was set up to deliberate upon the creation of pre-registration counseling. This counseling would be similar to Freshman Day in Ellis, except that instead of talking to professors, freshman would discuss their problems with upperclassmen. The upperclassmen would be representative of all divisions and disciplines. They could assist the frosh in choosing courses and professors.

Three other committees were appointed to investigate and labor upon: 1) the distribution of information to the students concerning the National Student Lobby; 2) a guide to upperclassmen, which would describe the new academic program— the courses offered next term, etc.; 3) the purchase of a bus for the college to use for such things as field trips.

Other business items included a decision to hold a special election for a Junior and a Sophomore legislator, because two previous members of the government have resigned. Two freshman, Roger Devonald and Terry Tomassetti, were appointed to the faculty's Academic Standards Committee. Mike Rish and Peg Smeal were appointed to the Disciplinary Committee, which meets with Dean Schoenherr to decide on the disciplinary measures for individual students.

Faculty Meeting

by Karen White

Among the main issues under discussion at this month's faculty meeting were aspects of the new curriculum. It was voted that the college will definitely operate under a three-term year for 1972-73, with fifteen week course offerings discouraged. It was suggested that fifteen week courses be offered only if absolutely necessary or if no exam would be given. This is because of the problems that will arise in registration, semester billing, overload, and interference of exams if upperclassmen mix

continued on page 7

NOTICE

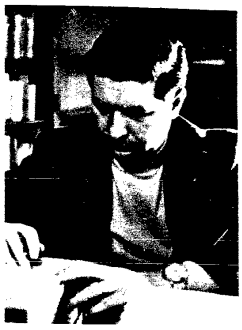
Juniatian Readers

"The Juniatian" will not be published on November 24 or December 1, 1971, in keeping with stated staff policy which allows for the discontinuance of publishing during vacation and examination periods.

The next "Juniatian", Volume XLVIII, No. 10, will appear on December 8.

Nieto Receives Acclaim For Valdes Research

Dr. Jose C. Nieto, chairman of the department of religion at Juniata College, is receiving praise from American and European scholars for his recent book "Juan de Valdes and the Origin of the Spanish and Italian Reformation." The work is described as a major contribution to an understanding of the early Reformation period.



Dr. Nieto doing research on his work which received critical acclaim.

Two historians, one American and the other French, have described Nieto's work as a new synthesis of secondary and primary materials about Juan Valdes that all scholars will have to consider. Valdes, a Spanish humanist and intellectual, published his first theological work in 1529, but was forced to leave Spain in fear of the Inquisition. He went to Italy and remained there the rest of his life. Valdes held views similar to those that led to the Protestant Reformation, but never identified himself with that movement, although he was charged with heresy by the Roman Catholic Church.

Paul Steward of Southern Connecticut State College, writing in the American Historical Review, declared that Nieto must now be considered in any study of Valdes. "In Spain and Italy," he wrote, "in the Valdes period, readers will continue to turn to the books of Marcel Bataillon and Frank Church, but they will have to take account of Nieto's discoveries. On Valdes himself one must begin with Nieto."

Bataillon, the noted French scholar and Dean of the College de France, acknowledged in an article published in Brussels that his own authoritative work on Valdes had been corrected by the Juniata professor.

The previous view, as presented by Bataillon, argued that Valdes was influenced by Erasmus. Instead, Dr. Nieto, drawing upon unpublished records of the Inquisition and other documents, states that the Spanish theologian developed his own position, and, in fact, the main influence was Pedro Ruiz de Alcaraz and not the Northern

continued on page 4

GRASS ROOTS

Compiled by Kim Hershberger and Donna Trelease

Each week, the Grass Roots staff selects, at random, the name of a Juniata student, and ask him to contribute an article, impromptu, concerning anything he chooses. What follows is the result of this week's chance soliciting:

Juniata College
Huntingdon, Penna. 16652
October 20, 1971

Board of Trustees
Juniata College
Huntingdon, Penna. 16652

Dear sirs:

The remembrance fo youth stimulates an increasing concern as people accumulate years. Memories are always special and enjoyable to look back on, but they also serve another purpose: as years go by, the fresher and more abundant your memories, the younger your attitudes and consequently you remain.

This inevitable progression, from the abstract mind to a visible manifestation, is an important one to nurture as Juniata College is undergoing this period of extraordinary transition. Why is this factor, youthfulness, of such import to people of all ages? Because youth is usually afforded a margin of error in its daily problems and confrontations: youth finds a refuge, a salvation, in its own youngness and inexperience. This refuge is an essential component for all ages, as is also the attitude that one is never too old to enjoy simple, honest fun.

My intense feeling for the significance of youth stirs within me a dissatisfaction with the activities, or lack thereof, on campus. I strongly contend that if the Board of Trustees was to digress its persistent attention away from the drinking policy and open dorms, and onto the campus social lfe, t would be aiming at a prime source for the students' restlessness, especially on weekends. As the situation exists now, there is nothing to hold students here on weekends; anything they can do here, they can do at home, so why not enjoy the home comfort to boot? Obviously, the students who drink regularly are going to do so regardless of any policy; lack of more inspiring, diversified and frequent week-end activities relentlessly sucks larger numbers into the Friday-Saturday night bash routine. Similarly, open or closed dorms pose no obstacles to those intent on "shacking up" over the weekends, or any other time for that matter. All students with whom I have come in contact seem to respect and appreciate the freedom of the present dorm situations; many, however, confess their disenchantment with the system, as it becomes routine and mundane due to the absence of stimulating breaks in the study grind.

Granted, the students have various committees and organizations which are surely doing their utmost, but sometimes a little encour-

continued on page 7

Letters to the Editor

Letters to the editor should be addressed to: Editor, The Juniatian, Box 667, Juniata College, Huntingdon, Pa. 16652. The editors reserve the right to print only non-libelous and responsible content and to edit all letters and commentaries submitted to The Juniatan. The staff also reserves the right to publish all full signatures unless the writer can supply valid reason for omitting his name.

Mr. Kindig's reply to my letter is disappointing despite being consistent with his prior endeavors. Perhaps I expected too much when I questioned the elusive issue of extrication of freshman courses. Was an informative, comprehensive and straight-forward answer beyond the capacity of a member of the group which designed the illustrious new curriculum? Isn't it obvious that this area is unexplored? Why does Mr. Kindig continue writing undocumented, opinionated, pointless articles in the name of authority? If he can not say something worthwhile, his articles should be replaced by something more meritorious — like a blank space.

In his letter Mr. Kindig attacks me for my want of the same qualities he lacks. It is sometimes said that a good offense is a good defense but, in this case, his poor offense is an attempted substitute for no defense. But why should Mr. Kindig waste his time answering the inquiries of a paranoid? Is it better to be a paranoid, who poses questions hoping for logical and explicit rebuttals, or to be an imbecile lost in a cloud of idealism and naivety?

Refusing to ignore Mr. Kindig's challenge to my grounds for argument, I admit to this shortcoming. My facts are scant. I was not a member of the Task Committee and I do not write an article in the newspaper. I do, however, have as much claim to the title of "authority" as Mr. Kindig has.

Research in the area of transfer of freshman credits is, without a doubt, a virgin field. The existence of serious dubiety is present in Mr. Kindig's own statement: "I would like to really choose the kind of curriculum I want even in the face of possibly losing credit if I change my mind." Was this curriculum designed for Mr. Kindig or for real people?

Ease of credit may not be a basic attribute of all curricula. I detect an awesome dissimulation. The keynote of the new curriculum is hailed to be "freedom," which is defined as a student's right to choose his own field of concentration. Hand in hand with this is the assumption that freshmen do not know what course of study they wish to pursue, thus Modes of Thought. The incoming freshman therefore, will take Modes of Thought, choose a field of concentration, and then pursue said area. Isn't this limited to the offerings of this school? What if a freshman decides to undertake architecture, audio visual communications, deaf education, journalism, forestry, accounting or city planning? Is this limited freedom? Will he have the freedom to proceed to an institution, offering the necessary courses, without remaining a freshman for another year? The idea of "freedom" in the new curriculum appears to be perverted. To sink to Mr. Kindig's level of historical analogy, this kind of freedom is dangerously similar to that extant in East Berlin since 1961. The student has freedom within the system but, while attempting to escape, is shot down. I am not against change. Infinite changes are necessary here. I refuse to watch, however, while Juniata becomes a whirlpool in this "age of locational fluidity at the undergraduate level," as Mr. Kindig calls it. Would it have taken too much time to study the question? Why wasn't it done? Was it because the faculty doesn't care about freedom, because they wanted to develop the ultimate student trap, or because they are incompetent? Why was this program railroaded through?

The most disappointing omission of Mr. Kindig's letter concerns the effect upon and means of informing the upperclassmen. No effort was made to explain the tactics used by the Task Force Committee last year to keep the students in the dark. How could anyone who knew what the new curriculum was, not foresee the dilemma which now faces the upperclassmen? Didn't anyone care? How many upperclassmen had freedom to choose between their present curriculum and the freshman-type curriculum we will be under next year? What is Freedom? Where is justice? Not at Juniata, to be sure.

I vehemently present these points to be refuted and, if possible, explained with facts. If this simple request is beyond Mr. Kindig, and I believe it is, I sincerely hope someone who knows something will get him off the hook.

Tom Alessi

Thanksgiving Recess for all students begins at the conclusion of classes, Friday, November 19, 1971. Those students who must remain on campus after 4:00 p.m., Saturday, November 20, 1971, should notify the Dean of Students Office in writing. Please give dormitory and room number and date you expect to leave the campus. These notices should be received prior to Friday, November 19th.

All residence halls will be vacated and secured after 7:00 p.m., Tuesday, November 23, 1971, and will reopen 3:00 p.m., November 28, 1971. If there are students who must remain on campus throughout the entire holiday, please see Dean Comming.

A number of students have inquired about the Winter Recess which begins at he conclusion of classes, February 22, 1972. Since many students will be required to remain on campus (practice teachers, business internes, athletes and others) the dorms will remain open during the winter break. Announcements will be made later as to what procedures will be followed.

14th St. ESSO Servicenter
E. D. "Bunn" Fleck, Prop.
Lubrication—Washing
Minor Repairs
Free Pick-up & Delivery
phone 643-9890

KELLER'S STATIONERY
417 PENN STREET
OFFICE & SCHOOL
SUPPLIES
GREETING CARDS
GIFT WRAP & RIBBON

Will J.C. Comps Help You Get A Job?

by H. Veatch Klug

Some say they will; some say they won't. The question is important—even if you think the intellectual justification for comps is more important than the economic justification. During the fall semester of 1970 I asked "What companies hire most of our graduates and where do most of them go to graduate school?"

A list was provided. It was augmented by additional names and addresses offered by people interested in the question. The final list included some of the giants: Ford, DuPont, GMC, etc., and some non-giants.

All were sent a questionnaire designed to find out what they thought of comps—and whether they might be more likely to hire graduates from comp-colleges than those from non-comp-colleges. The results are summarized below:

QUESTION I: "All other things being equal, would you be inclined to feel that a degree from a college which requires written and oral comprehensives of its undergraduates is worth more than a degree from a college which does not?"

ANSWER: Yes - 35. Equivocal - 4. NO - 10.

QUESTION II: "All other things equal, do you feel that a student who has been required, through comps, to demonstrate his understanding of his discipline (and who has studied for three years knowing that—as a senior—he would be required to do this) is likely to be better educated than a student who has not?"

ANSWER: Yes - 35. Equivocal - 12. NO - 7

QUESTION III: "All other things being equal, would you be more likely to hire (grant a license to—or award a fellowship or assistantship to) a student whose education has been comprehensive oriented than to one whose education has not?"

ANSWER: Yes - 26. Equivocal - 8. No - 15.

A few years ago the question of eliminating comps caused considerable disruption. There were mass meetings, a scare campaign directed at the freshmen, speeches, cabals, and long caucuses of students, faculty, and administration. The first few faculty meetings were devoted to this issue as was much time and energy.

When I was asked how I stood on the issue I answered that I did not know; that I had only heard the negative side; that I was waiting for the arguments in favor of comps. A student said "That's your job."

I think he was right; it is the job of the faculty and the administration to explain the purpose of comprehensives. . . and to recognize that some justification is called for when the student is told that, after completing all the normal requirements for a college degree, it may still be denied him (a few years ago, it could have been) unless he survives a super—and, in his eyes, gratuitous—set of exams called comprehensives.

I believe we have an obligation to explain the purpose of comprehensives. I also believe that, unless we do so, we will be distracted by an uproar over abolishing comps.

In the thinking of most, the justification for comps seems to be threefold:

1. THE INTELLECTNAL JUSTIFICATION

   Comps are a summation and an integration of the four years of classwork, lectures, text assignments, written assignments, field trips, etc. The intellectual justification is based on the assumption that the student needs—after his fact-gathering, concept-gathering, and training-in-how-to-think — an opportunity to step back, look at the whole thing in perspective, and ask himself, "What does it all mean and how are the parts related?"

   The review through which he puts himself as he prepares for comps should enable him to see new relationships, to gain new insight material which he only partly understood two or three years before, and to emerge with a clearer understanding of what his four years at Juniata have given him and how the experience should equip him to go it alone as he continues his education after graduation. This intellectual justification in my judgment, is the most important of the three.

2. THE PRESTIGE-OF-THE-DEGREE JUSTIFICATION

   The second justification is based on the fact that only a relatively few colleges in the United States require comprehensives of their undergraduates, and the ones which do have acquired status and reputation not accorded to those that do not. This is, admittedly, a difficult thing to quantify. There is no statistical study, so far as I know, of this difference in status. But, the difference does exist.

   Before I came to Juniata, I discussed the new job prospect with many colleagues and some non-teaching friends. I was favorably of it—in considerable

continued on page 7

Dr. Isaac Asimov Lecture at Juniata

This year's Will Judy Lecturer will be the noted science and science fiction writer, Dr. Issac Asimov. Dr. Isaac Asimov has been described as having a flair for telling an exciting story and an ability to translate comp'ex academic jargon into simple prose without sacrificing accuracy.

He began writing science fiction in 1938, later turned to science fact and now has some 100 books behind him, ranging beyond science into the fields of Greek, Roman and Biblical history.

TIME magazine has said of him: "No emissary to the nonscientific world has been more successful."

Issac Asimov was born in Petrovichi, U.S.S.R. in 1920, came to the United States in 1923 and grew up in Brooklyn, N.Y. He became an American Citizen in 1928. After attending public schools in Brooklyn Dr. Asimov received his B.S. in 1939, his M.S. in 1941 and his Ph.D. in 1948, all in chemistry and all from Columbia University. He did postdoctoral research in nucleic acids for a year before accepting a teaching position at the Boston University School of Medicine. He became an Assistant Professor there in 1951, and since 1955 has been Associate Professor.

"I had been reading science fiction since 1929 and I gradually developed the desire to write my own. So I did." He sold his first science fiction story in 1938 to AMAZING STORIES, and during the next decade, his stories appeared in nearly every science fiction magazine and several collections of them have been published.

His first science fiction book, "Pebble in the Sky," was published in 1950 and many others followed in quick succession. He also wrote a series of juvenile science fiction novels under the pseudonym Paul French. In addition to being one of the finest science fiction novelists living, he is also the author of a number of textbooks and popular works on scientific subjects, and many magazine articles and stories.

Co-authorship with two colleagues of a textbook, "Biochemistry and Human Metabolism," introduced him to the world of nonfiction and started him on a long list of books aimed at making science understandable to the layman. Some of these are: "The Chemistry of Life: Enzymes, Vitamins, Hormones;" "Inside the Atom;" "The World of Carbon;" "The Living River;" "The Bloodstream:The River of Life;" and "The Search for the Elements."

He received an American Chemical Society Award for science writing in 1965, and in 1966, the World Science Fiction Convention presented its Hugo Award to his "Foundation" trilogy (about empire-building in the Universe of the future, written in the 1940's), recongizing it as the best all-time eries.

A few of his recent books include: The Human Brain, Fantastic Voyage, The Dark Ages, Words From History, The Near East, and Opus 100.

The Will Judy Lecture is open to the public. All interested students, faculty, and friends are invited to hear Dr. Asimov speak in Oller Hall at 8:15 p.m. on Thursday, December 2, 1971.

Black's Jewelry
421 Penn Street
Class Rings — Charms
Pierced Earrings
417 Penn Street

SEE THE JOHNNY CARSON
WARDROBE
AT
DOLLINGER'S Shop for Men
711 Washinghon Street
Huntingdon, Pa.

RITCHEY'S MARKET
1100 MOORE STREET
Fresh Meats and Groceries
Telephone 643-1400

Perspective on Curriculum

by Karl K. Kindig

In my opinion, one of the conspicuous failings of the Faculty as a legislative body has been its inability to come to grips with the question of what will be the limits on material approved for programs of emphasis. This question resolves itself into two subsidiary issues. (1) What class of material falls outside the definition of "academic"? (2) Of the material which is considered to be of an academic nature, to what degree can such material be taken elsewhere and still be included in a program of emphasis?

With respect to the first point the problem is this. A program of emphasis can be eliminated from possibility by declaring the material that would be studied in its respective units as non- academic. A unit, by definition of the Standards Committee, is concerned with only "academic" material. However, the Faculty has failed to adopt any definition of this word. Thus, there is no effective policy to guide (or limit, as the case may be) faculty or administrators in determining what units will be offered. To make matters more ambiguous, the Faculty deleted, by amendment, an important sentence from the policy recommendations of the Program Committee last September. The sentence said, in effect, that programs of emphasis could be taken in "all existing departments." The removal of this sentence and the lack of any replacement for it combined with the lack of any definition of the word "academic" means that there is no Faculty policy on what can be justified for inclusion in a program of emphasis. Until these fundamental propositions are settled whatever else is said about the program of emphasis is largely superfluous.

Things being what they are, decisions will be made whether there is policy to support those decisions or not. Case in point: It has been administratively decided that only one unit credit in Physical Education may be taken by a student. This effectively means that Juniata will not offer programs of emphasis in P.E. Whether this decision in itself is right or wrong is a secondary issue. What is important is that this decision was made in the absence of any legislated policy criterion. I submit that this is not the way to run things. There is no excuse forcing administrators to make decisions of this importance on an individualized basis rather than in conformity with carefully constructed policy.

As I see it, the second issue mentioned before, while intriguing, depends on what is decided about the first issue. It is hard to believe that the College would allow material taken elsewhere to be included in the program of emphasis, if it isn't considered academically justifiable. Of course, the possibility exists, indeed it seems desirable that Juniata would allow units taken elsewhere to be included in the program of emphasis, even though comparable units (with respect to subject matter, not quality) were not listed in our catalog. This would expand the possible programs of emphasis to the breadth intended. However, it is difficult to discuss this possibility in a meaningful way until it is known what is considered to be academically justifiable. It is realized that establishing a workable definition for "academic" is not an easy task. However, in that so much seems to depend on it this issue ought to be resolved as soon as possible.

SKIPPER'S STYLE SHOP
304 7th St. Phone 643-4646
I personally pick out all my styles each month from Manhattan and Brooklyn, N.Y.

FOR CHARMING POSTERS AND UNIQUE GIFTS COME TO
The Colonial Gift Shop
Enjoy browsing in a relaxed and friendly atmosphere

Logan's
CARPETING FURNITURE and DRAPERIES
CALL 643-0390 OR COME IN
705 WASHINGTON STREET
HUNTINGDON

Beauty

Outside is an autumn day.
The trees are changin' their fiery coats
In bursts of many colors,
While the cloudless sky beams down
With approving jewel-like eyes.
And the mild sun flickers accord.
The warmth embraces the yet green grass.
With homage blades bow 'fore the breeze.
Look 'round and see the magic
As you glide to thoughts on high;
And you smile, all teeth a' glimmerin'.
All on an autumn day.
So look beyond the open space
To sights steaming with splendor;
With knowledge scan the open arms
As the beauty reaches toward you.
It's over there, and there, and there. . .
Oh! my god
It's inside, too.

by Barry Spector

GSFLT to be Given Nationally

The Graduate Record Examinations Board has announced that the Graduate School Foreign Language Tests (GSFLT) in French, German, Russian, and Spanish will again be administered nationally at centers established by Educational Testing Service. The GSFLT, which are constructed and administered by Educational Testing Service under policies set by the Graduate Record Examinations Board, provide a means through which graduate schools may evaluate foreign language reading proficiency as a part of their advanced degree requirements.

Candidates must submit registration forms and fees directly to Educational Testing Service in Princeton, New Jersey, for one of the four administrations each year. Before registering, they should determine the requirements of the school(s) to which they wish to submit GSFLT scores. Registration must be received at ETS by the closing dates noted in the GSFLT Bulletin of Information to have registration guaranteed.

The examination dates established for the 1971-72 academic year are: February 5, April 15, and July 22, 1972. The tests will be offered at approximately 200 test centers in the United States and Canada. Various deadline dates are from three to six weeks prior to the testing dates. Deadline dates are based on dates of receipt at ETS — not postmark dates.

Educational Testing Service will report scores, within two to four weeks after the test date, directly to the candidate and to those institutions he designates. The test fee is $10. Transcripts of scores are available for a period of five years for a fee of $2 for each request. A penalty fee of $3.50 is charged for registrations received at ETS after the dates cited in the Bulletin for each test administration.

Information about the examinations and a list of test centers are contained in the GSFLT Bulletin of Information 1971-72. Bulletins with Registration Forms may be obtained from the Graduate School Foreign Language Tests, Educational Testing Service, Box 519, Princeton, New Jersey 08540.

Penn State U. is the closest testing center for Juniata students. Seniors who desire to take the test should speak to their respective professors or check with Dr. Evelyn Guss, G. 214.

Western Auto
701 WASHINGTON ST.
8 TRACK STEREO TAPES
REG. $4.99
30 Day Guarantee
Complete Line of Stereo Equipment

Strickler's
Milk and Ice Cream
Plant Phone — 643-2770
Enjoy a Sunday, Milk Shake or Ice Cream Cone
at
The Strickler Shop
14th & Mifflin Streets

POINT BLANK

"Rebels in Chains"

by William Kunstler

For anyone with the slightest degree of sensibility, Attica will forever symbolize the ultimate in human tragedy — the controlled catastrophe that could so easily have been avoided.

I wish to address myself exclusively to the citizens of Cell Block D, because I was honored among men to be named their attorney. And I will confine myself to what I saw, heard and felt during my dozen or so hours in what I choose to regard as a sublimely liberated zone.

When I initially passed from official to inmate control, deep in my white middle-class subconscious, I half expected to see a replica of every prison movie I had ever witnessed. I was reasonably sure that power would be wielded by a few psychopathic killers with little or nothing to lose, who had terrorized their fellow convicts into seizing the cellblock and committing unspeakable crimes of violence along the way. It would hardly have surprised me if the yard had been the scene of impromptu executions, medieval torture, and brutal and bloody struggles for suzerainty.

Instead, I was to have every such ugly stereotype swiftly and totally shattered. The rebels were superbly organized; inmates inclined to violence were quickly subdued and incarcerated; and an acceptance of all shades of opinion was promoted and encouraged. With much sophistication and even some genius, the leadership speedily established an Athenian democracy freed from the racism and class lines of the outside world, which could and did survive everything—but bullets and buckshot.

From the moment the members of our observers' committee first entered the yard, we were aware that we were in the middle of an ongoing community. There was a command post, complete with conference table, loudspeakers system, floodlights, and typing pool. Even the most critical of us could easily see that everyone had been assigned a task—whether it was to dig a defense trench, guard the hostages, man the perimeter, or stand impassively in the long lines of marshals protecting the entrances and exits to the compound.

Even the occasional flurries of panic that, every once in awhile, rippled insidiously through the yard did not seriously disrupt communal organization. Sensible precautions were taken at once; rumors tracked down to their sources; and their spreaders sternly admonished.

Once, when it was feared that an attack was imminent, lights were quickly extinguished, visitors escorted to a relatively safe and out-of-the-way spot, and everyone cautioned to act only when ordered to do so.

I am a veteran of hundreds of endless movement meetings, and I marvelled that these men—given their socioeconomic backgounds and the tension and uncertainty that pervaded their newly found freedom—could have so quickly learned to rule themselves with efficiency, dispatch, and bedrock wariness. Their essential politeness toward each other and their visitors, and their easy tolerance of all points of view, however strange or unorthodox, made me realize that necessity is as much the mother of accomodation as she is of invention.

Our negotiation sessions were reasonably businesslike and, with rare exceptions, rhetoric was kept to an irreducible minimum. Although we were asked for our opinions, it was obvious to us from the beginning that they would be advisory only. All final decisions were to be made, not by outsiders or those in leadership capacities, but by the entire constituency.

The fabled New England town meeting had at long last suffered a latter-day revival in, of all places, a cluttered prison yard.

Most of the observers were startled to find how versed our hosts were in the art of practical politics. They understood full well how power is gained and utilized in contemporary society and never lost sight for a moment of the fact that their only leverage lay with the blindfolded hostages, who were on the ground within a demarking circle of wooden benches.

But of even more importance, the inmates, despite the uncertainty of their collective survival, relied heavily on the basic humaneness of the world without, and were genuinely and deeply shocked when they began to sense it was as illusory as everything else in their lives had been.

In the end, it was they and not their oppressors who yielded to the pressures of harsh reality. Of their two "nonnegotiable" preconditions—total amnesty and the removal of Superintendant Mancusi —they were prepared to drop the latter if assured of the former.

"We are ready to give up the Mancusi thing," Brother Richard Clark told us as we left the yard for the last time on Sunday night, "if we are guaranteed amnesty."

In the last analysis, they failed because they, as well as most of the observers, so tragically misjudged their society's devotion to its own expressed values. From the beginning they were truly convinced that, given a choice between life and death, the high and the mighty would always opt for life.

Even up to the awful moment of truth on Monday morning, most of them simply refused to believe that their fellow countrymen could so easily forsake even their most cherished shibboleth—the myth of

continued on page 4

Vogue Shop
Women's and Misses' Wearing Apparel
Huntingdon, Pa. 16652

+ Album of the Month +
Freddie Hart
"Easy Loving"
reg. $5.98 — only $3.99
Words and Music Mezzanine
Miller's
A Center for Family Shopping

Hollywood Shop
517 WASHINGTON ST.
Misses — Jrs. — Jr. Petites
Phone 643-4701

Ear of the Needle

by Bob Kraut

If you've jumped the track of Grand Funk Railroad and are looking for rock music that's anything but the boring and banal fare served in their dining car, may I suggest you get on board with Lee Michaels. No Edith, a "5th" of Lee Michaels is not a bottle of Kentucky bourbon, but it's intoxicating brew just the same.

All this is a ludicrous way of introducing a gentleman who's proven to be a better cure for the blahs than Alka - Seltzer. Lee Michaels is an exponent of the post-cerebral school of rock music, and this album, quite obviously his 5th, contains some of the most infectious music laid upon these ears in a long time. And if you've heard "Do You Know What I Mean" pounding forth from your AM radio, well, you'll know what I mean.

Lee Michaels is a grossly talented keyboard artist and singer who has been knocking around the West Coast for four or five years, and although he's enjoyed a fanatic legion of supporters, his fantastically successful hit has been the vehicle that's introduced him to the rest of the listening world. The album is very similar in essence to that single and on this, like his previous releases, he's relied basically upon himself, (he overdubs on organ, piano, and electric harpsichord) and percussionist Joel Larson. The result is an undisguised attempt to take rock music back to its old "kick 'em in the —" roots. In this respect, it is consumately successful.

The inclusion of such rock classics as B.B. King's bluesy "Rock Me Baby," Marvin Gaye's churchy "Can I Get A Witness," Lee Dorsey's inane "Ya Ya" and my personal favorite, Johnny Otis' "Willie & the Hand Jive," should send rock-ologists scurrying back through their collections to attempt the inevitable comparisons. Forget it guys! Lee makes no attempt to mimic the masters, he's into his own thing, and merely borrowed these great old tunes (and written a few great new ones as well) in an exercise of synthesizing an up-from-the-old-comes-the-new rock style. I'm attracted to his singing because it emphasizes a debt to Black Music, yet results in a kind of tongue-in-cheek performance that would come off poorly in the hands of a lesser artist (Mick Jagger, for instance). In fact, Lee sounds a bit like a bastardization of Wilson Pickett and John Sebastian. Say, who's putting on who? It goes without saying, it's a fine line that he treads.

My only complaints concerning "5th" are that the A&M people have shortchanged us with regard to actual minutes of music. The five cuts on each side amount to less than 30 minutes overall; not a lot considering the price of plastic. Also, I would have liked to hear more solo instrumental work from Michaels. Lee obviously has a way with the ivory, and provides here only flashes of what he can do. He's concocted an organ sound that's a blend of Ray Charles and Brother Jack McDuff, with perhaps a dash of Virgil Fox. It's a very full sound and would have satisfied me had it filled more of the record's unused space.

But this disc has got so many gems it seems fruitless to pick the nits. "Keep the Circle Turning," the opening selection, sets the frantic pace. It's a gospel tune, and Lee gets it on with background help from friend Merry Clayton. "Willie & the Hand Jive" has the funky sax of Jackie Kelso to make it authentic, but really this song needs nothing much besides that boppin' Bo Diddley beat to keep it going. The tune's a monster, but it takes Lee Michaels to pull it off. Speaking of pulling things off, the inclusion of a ballad? "Oak Fire" is only believable when Michaels does it. It's all about a coke ('caine not a cola) snorter. And when he keeps repeating:

> But it just doesn't matter,
> long as there's laughter
> Oh. . . .I know, my nose it > goin' to go

By God, you believe him. He's an everyman's Arthur Brown —crazy!

To see Lee Michaels perform must be a fun thing. If he's every bit as insane as he comes across on this record, and there's every reason to believe he is, his concerts must be pure dynamite. But in the absence of his person, this recording is the next best thing. Try it out sometime if you don't particularly enjoy being bluesy. The only hangover from this "5th" will probably be the regret that you hadn't heard his four other albums at all.

This album compliments of Miller's Department Store

Surf's Up — The Beach Boys Brother/Reprise RS 6453

Wax down your boards and pile in the woody! The Beach Bovs' fans are planning another assault. After all the accolades bestowed upon this album I felt that I owed it to myself to give if a listen. As a fan of the Boys since "Surfin' U.S. A." I was anxious to find out where their heads were in 1971. Having seen them on the tube this summer, during their "Live" concert in Central Park, I was immediately impressed with their act and by the songs from their previous release "Sunflower."

"Surf's Up" redeems them, for me, from their past fixations with rods and surfer girls and recalls sunnier moments that their past achievements have radiated. The major difference between Then and Now is that the oceans are polluted, and I submit — who's better qualified to sing of the condition of the surf? Be aware that the Beach Boys have grown up. While their music has remained basically unchanged, delicate tunes, slick harmonies and elaborate production still prevail; most importantly, the lyrics have final-

continued on page 5

For a complete Shoe and Boot wardrobe buy at

WESTBROOK'S
SHOE STORE

POINT BLANK

continued from page 3

our common humanity—in the face of political expediency.

It is perhaps more ironic than we yet realize that the men of Cell Block D, convicted felons all, yearned so fervently, out of the depths of their own desperate need, for an up-to-date certification of our national credo, while those most publicly committed to its sustenance rushed to nullify it. Men who may have once taken life, molested children or cracked safes understood more about shining ideals and elemental truths than those who professed to judge and condemn them.

Men died at Attica, to be sure, but innocence itself lay unnoticed among the victims.

Dig Up England's Past Summer '72

Students are urgently invited to help in archaeological excavations in England next summer. Deadline for applications is February 1.

City center redevelopment, new road-building programs and rapidly changing land use are threatening the disappearance of prehistoric graves, Iron-age settlements, Roman villas, fascinating relics of Medieval towns, all over Britain.

American students free from mid-May, and with previous archaeological experience, are invited to join an international team on a dig of the important Roman and Medieval city of Exeter in Devon when the 1972 excavation hopes to find a Roman temple under the site of an Anglo-Saxon Church. Experienced helpers will receive free board for helping in this important work.

Other students without experience are invited to join the British Archaeology Seminar at Lincoln College, Oxford, organized by the Association for Cultural Exchange. Six academic credits can be earned from participating in this low-cost program which ends by three weeks' participation on digs in different parts of England and Scotland.

These include the Association's own mesolithic dig on the island of Oronsay in the Hebrides which this summer was visited by Queen Elizabeth, Prince Charles and Princess Anne. Cost, inclusive of Trans-Atlantic travel by scheduled jet, is $750.

Write now for further details to Ian Lowson, 539 West 112 Street, New York, N.Y. 10025.

FRANK'S
CLEANING, TAILORING
and PRESSING
Same Day Service
Across from the A&P

G. C. MURPHY CO.

528 Washington Street

The Complete Variety Store

McKenna to Present Selections from Irish Works

The great lady of Irish theater, Siobhan McKenna, will appear here on Thursday, November 18 at Oller Hall at 8:15 p.m. performing "A Gallery of Ladies" chosen from the works of Irish writers—among them O'Casey, Beckett, Shaw, Synge, Yeats, and Joyce.

Miss McKenna is no stranger to campus life. She was born in Belfast, where her father lectured at Queen's University. When she was five, they moved to Galway, where her father had an appointment as Professor of Mathematical Physics.

At Galway University, Siobhan studied English, French and Gaelic literature. As a student she joined the all-Gaelic theater "An Taibhdherac," one of whose founders was Michael MacLiammoir. In Gaelic ing. "Yet to me, they all had 'star thors as O'Casey, O'Neill, Barrie, Shakespeare and Moliere.

Having got her B.A., she went to Dublin to study for a Master's, and at that point, was invited a second time to join the Abbey Theater.

The company she joined in 1944 was superb, says Miss McKenna. F. J. McCormick, Cyril Cusak and Denis O'Dea, whom she later married, were among its members. The Abbey Theater believed in serving the author faithfully and unselfishly, and thus they inevitably served themselves, developing a wonderful style of honest teamwork. No actor received billing. "Yet to me, they all had 'star quality,'" says McKenna, "even when they were carrying in a tray."

Today, when she returns to the Abbey for guest appearances, she still remains unbilled.

In her first year with the Abbey, she was offered a lead in a film. Naturally excited, she told F. J. McCormick about it. He told her, "You are a natural, but if you want to be a real actress, and I think you can be, stay with us for at least three years and I'll teach you everything I know." Much to everyone's astonishment, she turned down the film offer and has had no regrets about it. Her salary at the Abbey was less than $10 a week when she was performing, and approximately half that when rehearsing. She was half starved, she recalls, but extremely happy.

Siobhan McKenna came to New York after London had seen her in "Fading Mansions" by Anouilh (directed by Laurence Olivier), "Abelard and Heloise" by James Forsyth, G. B. Shaw's "Saint Joan" (for which she received the Evening Standard Award), "Playboy of the Western World" (in which she starred when it was filmed), "Play With a Tiger" by Doris Lessing, and a second Anouilh play, "The Cavern," among many others.

New York audiences acclaimed her as Miss Madrigal in "The Chalk Garden," a role she created, "Saint Joan," "The Rope Dancers", and many television performances including Barrie's "What Every Woman Knows," Sister Joanna in "Cradle Song" and Somerset Maugham's "The Letter."

A fellow actor, world famous Laurence Harvey, along with Wolf Mankowitz, novelist-playwright, persuaded Miss McKenna to create "Here Are Ladies," which she first performed in London at the Criterion Theater.

Her Gallery of Ladies from Irish playwrights, novelists and poets—including Molly Bloom's lusty soliloquy from "Ulysses," was then brought to New York's Public Theater by Joseph Papp, co-producer of her present tour with Theater Now, Inc.

Free tickets are available at the Information Desk in Ellis Hall.

Do you often find yourself getting caught with your pants up on Saturday nights? Do you have any other outstanding problems or gripes which need the expert advice of a worldly woman such as Luci?

LETTERS TO LUCI is a new feature to appear in "The Juniation" every week. Feel free to write to Luci for solutions to all your problems.

Address your letters to:

LETTERS TO LUCI
c/o "The Juniatian"
Box 667 Juniata College
Huntingdon, Pa. 16652

Montgomery Ward
Sales Agency
516 WASHINGTON STREET
Telephone 643-1390

ENGLISH'S
CARRIAGE HOUSE

Fashions from
John Meyer of Norwich
and
Jonathan Logan

Stop in and Browse

Complete Line of Jewelry and Gifts
at MUR'S JEWELRY
625 Washington St.

BUCKY'S ARCO
935 MOORE STREET
COMPLETE SERVICE
and STATE INSPECTION
Phone 643-4185

BLACK MOUNTAIN EXPRESS

C&W and Easy Rock
For All Occasions
Phone 542 - 9879

Ear of the Needle

continued from page 4

ly managed to keep pace.

"Don't Go Near the Water," the album's initial cut, states their message quite clearly:

Don't go near the water
Don't you think it's sad
What's happening to the water
Our water's going bad

Replete with effective off-key music and frothy, bubbly-sounding vocals the statement is very clear. The Beach Boys are concerned about the ecology.

Al Jardine, the elfin-looking guitarist who co-authored "Don't Go Near," displays his sense of humor, but woefully a disdain for imaginative melodies in two other contributions, "Take a Load of off Your Feet" and "Looking at Tomorrow (A Welfare Song)." It's a shame these last two couldn't have stayed tucked away in the vault because their inclusion tends to drown the overall quality of the album. Every other selection manages to surface buoyantly.

Carl, the youngest Wilson, makes his compositional debut with a song that nearly surpasses everything else on the album. "Long Promised Road" is one of those songs, it seems, that only a Wilson is capable of writing. Gently caressing Jack Rieley's exquisite lyrics, it starts softly on electric piano, builds, and explodes into a depth-charged chorus backed by a barrage of electronic horns. "Feel Flows," another gem from Carl, opens Side Two and captures some more of that spacey, studio-contrived quality that now pervades much of the Boys' music. Jazzman Charles Lloyd's flute is used here to great effect, and he takes a lovely "Forest Flower"-ish solo that opens the track to new dimensions.

Compositionally speaking, Mike Love has opted for a different style. By adding new lyrics to the old Coasters' hit "Riot in Cell Block No. 9" he has produced an updated political statement with wave-like horns that'll knock you off your board. "Student Demonstration Time" warns of the futility of the riot:

The pen is mightier than the sword, but no match for a gun Stay away when there's a riot going on

It all works rather well, and should prove a real crowd pleaser for those fortunate enough to catch the group in person.

While looking over this album on the racks I was sure "Disney Girls (1957)" had to be a put-on; however, it's nothing of the sort. Bruce Johnston has provided us a nostalgia trip pure and simple. It's all about a return to the tranquility of the adolescent '50's and sentimentalists be forewarned, it's liable to leave your white bucks spotty and your chinos soggy. The song's not without its lighter moments though, and by alluding to Ozzie and Harriet

Hi Rick and Dave
Hi Pop. . .Well good morning
Mom

takes the edge off all that sweet emotion. Alas, Annette Funicello is never mentioned. Vocally, "Disney Girls" gets a romantic treatment with emphasis upon the group's harmony, albeit to the accompaniment of gurgly guitar, and is evidence that their rock choir style remains perfectly intact.

But the album's outstanding track is the title tune "Surf's Up." It's a fragile Brian Wilson melody on top of some very ornate lyrics by Van Dyke Parks. I understand the song has become a minor legend; it was first performed on a Leonard Bernstein TV Special in 1967, and has been withheld until the present. The production has polished it to the point of brilliance, and it all comes off as a "Good Vibrations" trip, but certainly more beautiful. I'm glad they waited to release it; otherwise, it might possibly have been lost in the crowd of great music that emerged in 1967. Now its subsequent release, in a time of comparable famine, has proven to be a real coup.

So, if you're a latent Beach Boys admirer, and I'm sure there are many, you know those millions of records weren't all bought by little old ladies from Pasadena. You can play this album for your friends without the fear of seeing smirks and suppressed smiles appear on their unscrupulous faces. The Brothers possess a distinctive style, and their uniqueness now promises to improve even more with the passage of time. This album is far from perfect, but it offers much more than many would have expected. The rock groups come and go, but it seems as if the Beach Boys have found that eternal wave. "Surf's Up!" Welcome back America.

Sometimes in life
you lose things . . .
keys and money,
books and marbles,
and races
and friends . . .
and parts of yourself, too.

And somehow, with each loss,
the road you trudge becomes more narrow until finally, only one person at a time can pass.

What I lost when I lost you
I may never find again.
And not even sure what it was,
I keep on looking just the same.

—Brian Maurer

The World Awaits You! Freshmen Plan Your Junior Year Abroad Now

by David Heberling

The names are familiar: Marseille, Barcelona, London, Zurich, Acapulco, Tokyo, Venice, Bogota, Cologne, Thames, Seine, Rhine, Black Forest, Chartres, Buckingham Palace, El Escorial, Alps, Andes, Pyrenees, Francais, English, Deutsch, Espanol, Italiano. . .

. . . American. He goes to American schools, hears American words, spends American dollars, eats American foods, sings American songs, plays American games, dreams American dreams, lives an American life . . .

What's it like in lands beyond the sea? What's it like to walk through the Christmas flakes of a deep Swiss snow, to ski on the slopes of a magic mountain, to catch the silence of the stars? How does it sound to count the somber, hollow strokes from the bells hidden high in a London fog? How does it feel to breathe the first faint breeze of a Parisian spring and to walk barefoot in the dawn? What's it like in a foreign town, in a foreign land, in the land beyond your dreams?

It need not be a dream or a wish never come true. Living, traveling studying abroad can be as real as the ink in Miss Nathan's pen. In fact, a year spent at a university in almost any foreign country costs a good deal less than the same year spent here at Juniata. Twenty-five hundred dollars or less is rather typical for the yearly cost of many European, Latin American, Asian, and African universities, and "five dollars a day" has become the common phrase of foreign travel. To help matters more, Juniata and state scholarships are often applicable to foreign study and all types of financial aid are in the realm of possibility.

Now is the time to think seriously about the possibilities of foreign experience. Ideally, you should now be a freshman in order to plan for a junior year abroad, but there are countless opportunities for everyone— sophomores, juniors, seniors, and graduates. There is a program to meet any hope, a school to spark any interest, a land to challenge any ambition. There are structured academic programs like BCA (Brethren Colleges Abroad) in which admissions are made through the program director and in turn to Strasbourg, France; Marburg, Germany; and Barcelona, Spain. There are independent systems in which you apply directly to the desired university and are entirely on your own at the school. There are yearly tours, summer programs, semester programs, seminars, world tours, Shakespeare workshops, archeology programs, language conferences, experiments in international living . . . The list is almost endless. Begin now; the world awaits.

There are two popular student myths that keep sprouting up on campus and need to be eradicated. First: it is not true that credit is lost by studying abroad. On the contrary, Juniata will grant full academic credit for most courses taken at a foreign university. This is a matter to be discussed between a student and his advisor, but most foreign schools will ask if the student wishes his credits to be sent to his home college, and Juniata will be happy to accept them. Second: to study abroad you do not have to be a language major; in fact, many countries do not require an American student to know a second language at all. This applies especially to schools in such countries as Colombia, Japan, Ethiopia, Sweden, and, of course, Great Britain. I need not say, though, that it is handy to be at least somewhat familiar with the language of the country in which you'll be living or traveling. It always helps to be able to ask where the bathroom is or to say "Doctor, my left foot seems to be missing." Language study should be a primary consideration in your plans, especially if you've planning on Spain, France, or Germany, but don't let a lack of language skill keep you from the world.

There is now a study abroad office on the top floor of Founders Hall, room 400. If you have specific questions, need general information and advice, or simply wish to browse through the literature about various programs and countries, feel free to stop in the office or see one of the study abroad committee members. They are Dr. Klaus Kipphan, Prof. Irene Engle, Prof. Claudine Lerch, Adele Aboutok, and David Heberling.

If your dream is to spend time abroad, begin now to make concrete plans. If you never have had this dream, perhaps your sleep tonight will locate a path and send you on your way into the future.

Fallout

by Stephen Wesley

The great professor, Dr. Emeritus, gave a signal. Irving, his faithful assistant, walked from his seat to the professor's desk. He picked up a bell that was on the desk and rang it.

"Now that the bell has rung it is time for me to start today's lecture dealing with fall out," said the professor standing behind his desk. "But first, are there any questions on the last lecture?"

"Professor Emeritus, at the last lecture why did you say that it is a horrible thing to have the colly-wobbles?"

"To quote a well-known Irishman, James Joyce, it is 'a horrible thing to have the colly-wobbles.' "

The professor took a deep breath and turned toward Irving.

"It is a little stuffy in here, Master Irving, please open the windows," commanded the professor.

Irving arose from his chair and opened all the windows. The drone of an airplane came into the room. It sounded normal at first, then it seemed that the plane was rapidly losing altitude. Crash.

"There are two kinds of fallout, microscopic fallout, and macroscopic fallout," started the professor. "We will cover both types in today's lecture."

"Macroscopic fall out is that which is easily seen with the, pardon the expression, naked eye. The size of the effects due to macroscopic fallout are usually directly proportional to their size. When a drop of rain, an apple, or a baseball fall out of the sky the effects are not devastating. When an airplane falls out of the sky, it is a frightful thing. Someday the sky will be filled with too many planes, and too many planes will fall out. This fallout can kill many people, both those in the planes and on the ground. Areas around airports will suffer most due to the heavy saturation of air above them with planes. This heavier saturation will increase the probability of collisions. Part 707 of this week's laboratory deals with this problem of saturation. Be sure to bring to laboratory plenty of paper for the construction of paper airplanes."

Some commotion could be heard from outside through the windows. The professor paid no attention to it as he continued.

"Microscopic fallout is that which usually cannot be seen with the naked eye unless it is in a high concentration. Dust particles are one of the few types of microscopic fallout that can be seen."

Smoke from a burning building next door blew into the room. It circulated around but was more concentrated by the windows. Sitting next to the windows, Irving violently sneezed. Students throughout the room coughed.

"This heterogenous mixture of microscopic fallout, known as smoke is now showing us its adverse effects," said the professor.

The professor then accidently demonstrated the effects himself

continued on page 6

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College
Huntingdon, Pa.

ASSOCIATED COLLEGIATE PRESS ACP — COLLEGIATE PRESS CP

REESTABLISHED September 9, 1971

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891 and "The Juniatian," established November 1924

SCOTT K. LEEDY, Managing Editor

PATRICK E. FLEAGLE, Associate Editor — ROBERT A. JONES, Business Manager
DEBI FRAZIER, Assistant Editor — STEWARD A. KAUFFMAN, Jr., Sports Editor
STEVEN S. KIMMEL, Assistant Editor — WILLIAM E. SCARLETT, Circulation Manager
BRIAN T. MAURER, Assistant Editor — WILLIAM M. DAVID, Photography Editor

ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANTS: General Information, Susan Stelker, Jean Thompson, Deborah Walker; Community Relations, Stephen J. Crowley, Jeffrey A. Naugle, Linda Richardson; Feature Columnists, Karl K. Kindig, Robert E. Kraut; Business, Thomas E. Alessi, Jean Jarrow, Nancy Tamburo; Typing and Proofing, Sandra Currier, Prof. Jerry Croce, Nancy Floyd, Sara Frank, Carol Garzillo, Margaret Haines, Anne Holzinger, Donna Lee, Janet Mason, Valorie Priddle, William B. Rea, Stuart C. Treacy, Gayle Trofe; Layout, Janet Bartschat, Rodger C. Devonald, Margery Herr, Keith E. Klein, James S. Reiley, Arthur W. Ritter; Art, Luci Bromberg, Lawrence R. Stem; Sports, Anthony C. Martuzas, Jr., Patricia Monahan, J. Brian Richardson, Susan Snyder, Verne Wetzel; Good Ole Days, Gary E. Gillen, Janice Nolan, Jean Pollock, Karen White, Gretchen Yost; Grass Roots, Kimber Hershberger, Donna Trelease; Pro/Con, William S. Dick, Nancy Diehl, Michael J. Finkle, Jean Pollock, William H. Robison; Advertising Consultant, Roberta Earle; Circulation, Ralph P. Casale, Dennise Deaner, Susan Dochtermann, Marlyn Hoover, Miriam Smith.

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughtout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students of Juniata College. No article printed William H. Robison; Advert. Consultants, Roberta Earle, Edythe Corum; Circulation, Ralph P. Casale, Dennise Deaner, Susan Dochtermann, Marlyn Hoover, Meriam Smith Pa. 16652.

Circulation 1500 — Subscription $5.00 per year

VOL. XLVIII, NO. 9 — November 17, 1971

THE BIG HOUSE

Directed by Alfred McGuffin

Is the double feature, like wax lips, Ipana toothpaste and the Washington Senators, a vanishing American institution? In one sense, yes. The days when you could see two first-run A pictures for the price of one are long gone, if they ever really existed. There is always a faintly apologetic air about a double feature these days, because the knowledgeable movie-going public knows that pictures only get stacked two deep when they have failed to make money in the big city or when they have been around the circuit before.

Who cares? Lots of pictures that lose money in New York are better than the schmaltz that keeps the Radio City turnstiles spinning and clicking, and revivals are the staff of life for movie people.

The Clifton is running a pair of double features this week: Pinocchio and King of the Grizzlies Wednesday through Saturday, and The Lawman and What's the Matter with Helen Sunday (the 21st) through Tuesday.

I saw Pinocchio when it was first released, but I was four or five then, and I admit my memories of it are a little hazy. It's a Disney film, so going back to Carle Collodi's book is no help. As I remember it the movie is about this wooden kid who runs away because his father wants to manipulate him all the time. He has all sorts of far-out (and some downright asinine) adventures, including getting swallowed by the biggest damn whale you ever saw. There's a moral angle, too: the length of his nose is inversely proportional to the truth content of his statements —something like that, anyway. The film is also notable as the screen debut of Jimmy Cricket.

Colleges with large film departments are beginning to spawn animation freaks—people who know everything there is to know about the history and techniques of animation in motion pictures. Disney's name leads all the rest, of course, with these types, and they will tell you that Pinocchio is genuinely interesting as an example of his studio's early decadant period. If you're embarrassed about going to see it at your age, just grab a street urchin as you pass 15th and Moore, and try to look like his parent.

What's the Matter with Helen? is the latest installment in a curious cinematic fad that began in 1962 with What Ever Happened to Baby Jane? The idea is to sign up two well-weathered actresses and set them to doing the creepiest things you can think of to each other. Our job, of course, is to decide if the one who seems to be the most psychopathic really is.

This movie stars Shelley Winters and Debbie Reynolds, who don't like each other much in real life. Such off-screen enmity is another convention of this genre. We are supposed to be titillated, I think, with the hope that the line between the illusion and reality may become blurred and one of the old girls, one day, might really lay into the other with an axe, ala Torn-Mailer.

(Miss Reynolds, incidentally, has been announcing recently that she is expanding her creative horizons. What she means, I guess, is that she will accept all kinds of shlocky roles now, whereas she used to specialize in just one kind.)

And if Helen doesn't satisfy your bloodlust, stay in your seat for The Lawman. Michael Winner's directorial career has been filled with losers, but the actors in this one are Burt Lancaster, Robert Ryan and Lee J. Cobb, and they've all done this sort of thing so many times before that they probably don't even need him.

Dr. Nieto Receives Praise

continued from page 1

European theology of Erasmus or of Luther.

Nieto has sharpened the view of the religious differences during the Reformation which until now historians had lumped under the term Erasmianism. Bataillon, commenting on this. warned against the use of general images and historical influences that we "accepted without question."

Steward called Nieto's book an important one because it establishes a Southern base of origin for the Reformation, and "not only provides a new understanding of the whole new theology as a product of Europe-wide influences, but also helps to clarify the role and impact of the Northern reformers."

The 400 page illustrated volume, published in the spring of 1970 by Editions Droz in Geneva, Switzerland, is the first major English language work on Valdes and the first in any language to utilize unpublished records of the Spanish Inquisition as background for a study of the great Spanish reformer.

Nieto has been a member of the Juniata College faculty since 1967. His book is based on the research he did for his doctoral dissertation while a graduate student at Princeton Theological Seminary. He has described his work as "an attempt to explore the foundations of the Reformation movement in Spain and Italy."

Born in El Ferrol, Spain, Dr. Nieto served in the Spanish Navy from 1949 to 1951. He attended the Colegio Raparaiz and the Institute de Esenanza Media in El Ferrol, and earned the equivalent of a bachelor's degree at the University of Santiago de Compostela in 1949. Nieto came to the U.S. in 1961 and became a naturalized American citizen in 1968.

Dr. Nieto's studies in theology were begun at the United Evangelical Seminary in Madrid. He later studied at the Presbyterian College in Belfast, Ireland. In 1962 he received his master of theology degree, and in 1967 his doctor of theology, both magna cum laude, from Princeton Theological Seminary.

Lime

by Edward Kinchley Evans

Did you wake up this morning feeling oppressed? Is there some little grotesque creature running around coldfooted in your mind piling up little stones of undone work into pyramids of great weight over the lifeless bodies of all your good intentions? Does this beastie in your mind symbolize all the injustices of the world to which you are falling heir? Take heart, there has recently been provided for you a road map of understanding to lead you out of the bitterness of your ways. Of course, no one is going to take the bottle out of your mouth (it tends to obstruct the view) nor wheel the perambulator with you in it down this highway of enlightenment.

You, dear heart, will have to stand and walk.

The road, the weekend of November 5, 6, and 7, led to Oller Hall and Arthur Miller's "The Crucible." Kick yourself if you missed it. Arthur Miller, like Eugene O'Neill, is a wrestler with life as we live it, day by day, hour by hour. His play "The Crucible" deals with a weakness you might be familiar with, blaming someone else for one's owns misfortunes.

Into a Salem rich with idleness and an abundance of Harvestable wealth, comes foolish dalliance with Island witchcraft. Young girls dance naked in the forest and play at conjuring up spirits with a Barbados slave. An avaricious Minister burdened with voyeuristic guilt surprised them, and is dismayed to find his daughter and niece among those exposed. Suddenly every ill that has beset the community for the past several years is charged to witchcraft. Caught in the quagmire of vindictive accusations are the town's innocent.

The point of this beautiful play is how the innocent act as human beings when deserted by their loved ones and the security of the very laws they alone have upheld.

As Life itself is at best a temporary gift, are we not accountable only to ourselves for our every action? We may make excuses for our neglect and ill behavior to anyone who will listen, but how do we lay the doubt to rest in our own hearts? If we will our Good name to the seducers who offer us salvation, what then have we left to take with us to our grave?

"The Crucible" is a play that does not allow us to avoid the responsibility for our actions.

Mrs. Goehring should be commended for choosing such a challenging and obviously rewarding vehicle for student involvement. We are all the richer for her choice.

postscript: In a day of Ten Years After and The Family Stone, does not the thought occur that Organ music is not the thunder of Angel's wings but rather the forboding presence of Organized Pomp and Circumstance?

Fallout

continued from page 5

by coughing. He ordered Irving to close the windows. The students were spellbound by the lecture. Who but Professor Emeritus could conduct a 6:30 a.m. class and always have a one hundred percent attendance? After the windows were closed and the air became clear Professor Emeritus delivered his "coup de grace".

"And may I say in conclusion that I have always smoked Cheese and Sandbag Coffee."

Recruiters from Peace Corps and Vista Inform Students of Opportunities Available

On November 4 and 5, ACTION personnel, Richard Krause and Mary Bell, visited Juniata campus as representatives for VISTA and the Peace Corps respectively. Both Dick and Mary are two year veterans of their programs and are presently serving as field representatives and recruitees for the Peace Corp and VISTA.

The Peace Corp is a two year voluntary program sending volunteers to countries in Asia, Africa, and Latin America. Its program in these countries is education, English, science, home economics, and agriculture, with agriculture issuing the greatest demand for Peace Corp volunteers. The Peace Corp is becoming more specialized all the time and is seeking people with very specialized skills and/or degrees in certain areas. They also offer a health program for doctors and nurses or people with a general medical background. There is a big use for people of skilled trades such as plumbing, electricity, and mechanics, which requires no degree, just possession of the skills. Specialists in city planning, architecture, and engineering are also needed. The countries and communities set the pace for the need and they decide and dictate what they need and desire.

Mary Bell, graduated from Jackson State College, Jackson, Mississippi, with a degree in mathematics. She served two years as a volunteer in the Philippines and was the first Peace Corp representative in her town. During the first three months, she lived with a village family, which is unusual, and taught the village children math. After this period, she moved into a teacher-trainee program, in order to perpetuate the learning. Forty to fifty teachers attended the workshop and were instructed on the latest teaching techniques. Finally, Mary served as observer-supervisor for the teachers by visiting each of the teachers' school and classes. Miss Bell was also involved in many community activities and functions, both as a participant and demonstratee, i.e. American dance styles. When Mary left there was a working math program in the area coordinated by Filipinos.

VISTA, Volunteer In Service To America, is a one year volunteer program carried out in all states of the U.S. and its territories, with the exception of Mississippi, where it has not been permitted to enter. VISTA must be invited to provide its services by some agency of the community or area under the approval of the state and with the signature of the Governor. The programs offered by VISTA are mainly education in nature. They include programs in English, elementary education for day care and pre-school children, work with school dropouts at any level, health, and medical. There is a special need for nurses, doctors, and business people. The opportunities in VISTA are really numerous. The volunteers are payed a subsistance allowance which allows them to exist at the same level as the people the volunteer serves. The communities establish the presidence for the program.

Richard Krause, a graduate of Juniata College with a degree in history education, is a two year veteran with VISTA. He has served as a volunteer in Tuffolk County, Long Island, New York in a rural position of the suburban of Long Island. He's spent his first year in a Spanish community and the second year in a black community. Dick served as a community organizer, trying to find potential leaders in the welfare community. He was mainly involved in activities which one would become involved in being in such a community, such as, fund raising, food survey, sanitation studies, etc. The idea was to try to find out the community's problems ,solve them, and provide future leadership to prevent a reoccurance of the situation. The training program involved a six week orientation program encountering all of Tuffolk County while living with a community family. After this, Dick went right to work and provided his own housing.

VISTA and the Peace Corp are very similar in organization and serve the same basic purposes. The Peace Corp is a foreign service while VISTA is a national service. The volunteer receives the subsistance pay plus an amount which is kept back for the volunteer until the termination of service. Both Dick and Mary feel that these programs have a positive effect in the areas they serve and that the programs over-all are achieving their goals. The Peace Corp and VISTA are a very worthwhile way to further one's practical and educational experiences. The Peace Corp and VISTA want and need you! For further information write ACTION, Peace Corp/VISTA, 1421 Cherry Street, Philadelphia, Pa 19102 or phone 215 - 597-9695.

In spite of losing the football game, of having to wait three hours to get fed, and a "slight" parking problem, Parents' Day Weekend nevertheless turned out to be a big success. All the perverts signs in 3rd Sherwood were removed for the three days.

BIRTH CONTROL

by Donna Knupp

Do you know what a Lippes Loop is? How does an IUD work? What about the side effects of taking "the pill?" Could you tell how effective a diaphragm is?

Now is the time to learn about sex and contraception before it's too late! Dr. James Raub is coming back! He will speak Wednesday, November 17, at 7 p.m. in Alumni Hall. Dr. Raub is the gynecologist who was here two years ago. According to upperclassmen who attended, the doctor has a unique way of presenting the whole topic of sex, reproduction and contraception that makes his audience feel at ease.

Following the presentation will be a question and answer period. Dr. Raub is being sponsored by the Lambda Epsilon Chapter of Beta Beta Beta (Tri-Beta). This honorary club is composed of upperclass biology majors who maintain high scholastic averages. Because the club members thought that the general campus community would be interested in these speakers, all are welcome.

Andy's Tire Sales
4th & Washington Sts.
TEXACO PRODUCTS

Will Juniata Comps ?

continued from page 2

part because "that is the college in central Pennsylvania where students have to take comprehensive exams before they can graduate."

I don't think there is any doubt that eliminating comps would cheapen the Juniata degree and decrease its value in the eyes of many who now hold it in high esteem.

3. THE JOB-PREPARATION JUSTIFICATION

When the student said "That's your job," I began to search for someone who could tell me something of the circumstances which gave rise, in the 1930's, to the comp requirement.

I was lucky in that one of the people I talked to was Dr. Homer Will, Professor Emeritus of Biology. He was a member of the committee of three which set up the comp requirement. He informed me that the main reason was so that Juniata graduates would have some preliminary experience in answering the type of questions which are asked when graduates in quest of licenses, fellowships, assistantships, etc., face examining boards empowered to grant (or withhold) these prerequisites for earning a living.

Most of our graduates, sooner or later, will have to undergo a grilling — sometimes verbal, sometimes written, sometimes both — before they can be licensed to practice law medicine, or dentistry. Many other professions conduct rigorous inquiries into the candidates understanding of his discipline before they will admit him. This is also true in many graduate schools.

The admission exams are a form of comps. Obviously, students from Juniata who have been called on, as undergraduates, to take comps have a substantial advantage over students from other colleges who have not.

I don't think they realized it, but if the anti-comp students had succeeded they would have thrown away this advantage — for all future Juniata students — as well as for themselves.

Faculty Meeting

continued from page 1

courses and units. This year's freshmen will continue taking only units, except in special situations. It is under consideration whether or not a student could create a Program of Emphasis in physical education. Also being determined is what type of stipulations should be made, such as only allowing physical education units to be included in the Program of Emphasis if this is what the student will be majoring in. The problem of conflicting, overlapping courses in freshman writing programs and seminars with courses offered for the second term was attributed to two things. The entire year's schedule was not available to incoming freshmen, preventing them from planning what courses they would want. Also, freshmen had their classes pre-scheduled, instead of being able to register for preferred times.

It was stated that unit proposals by instructors and students, academic merit and appropriateness to the college, and feasibility of the course be according to staff availibility and facilities.

The Advanced Placement Policy was the other main item discussed. This differs from credit by examination because it is not restricted to standardized tests. Freshmen in their first term are eligible to request to a department head to prove competence in a course offered at the college by either a standard test or a specially designed examination. After the first term, a student would have to apply for credit by examination. The Advanced Placement Policy will allow students to go on to more advanced courses if they have learned the information contained in a particular course before coming to Juniata. This year's freshmen will be eligible to apply for Advanced Placement for an extended deadline until the end of the second term.

Juniata CAMPUS CRIER

November

Wednesday	17	Chess Club — Blue Room	7:00 P.M.
		Spanish Table — Faculty Lounge	4:45 to 6:15 P.M.
		Prayer Meeting — Gold Room	5:00 to 5:30 P.M.
		Tri Beta Speaker — Alumni Hall	7:00 P.M.
		Dr. James Raub — "Birth Control"
		State Civil Service Exam. — 271 Willard Blg.	2:30 P.M.
		Pre registration 9:30, 11:00 and 1:00 P.M.
Thursday	18	Barristers Club — Gold Room	7:00 P.M.
		All Campus Worship Service — Ballroom Annex	8:00 P.M.
		Reading F estival — Siobhan McKenna — Oller Hall	8:15 P.M.
Friday	19	Upper Classmen Thanksgiving Vacation
		Freshmen Exam
		Freshmen Thanksgiving vacation begins
Monday	29	Upper Classmen — Classes Resume
		Freshmen registration for second term
		Freshmen seminar evaluation — Dining Room	8:00 P.M.
Tuesday	30	Freshmen classes begin

December

Wednesday	1	Spanish Table — Faculty Lounge	4:45 to 6:15 P.M.
		Chess Club — Blue Room	7:00 P.M.
		Basketball — Indiana — Home	8:00 P.M.
		Reading Festival — Martin Russ — Shoemaker Gallery	8:15 P.M.

Junies vs Townies

Pro-Con : Town-College Relations

Let us hark back to 1876 when our founding fathers looked down upon the fine community of Huntingdon. And they saw the lowlands beside the river cradling the sleepy hamlet with the barren highlands looking over it all. And they said, "Let us bless their burg with a college. And the highlands shall be called 'Junies' and the lowlands shall be called 'townies'. And there shall be fine town-grown relationships." Now, nearly a hunnert years later we still got highlands and lowlands and Junies and townies, and a new ingredient! Who else — Pro and Con. So, we ran around the hill this past week asking Junies about those Huntingdon-college relationships.

"From my personal experience I've met all friendly people from Huntingdon," said Chuck Bater, euphorically. (?) "I don't have any significant gripes and do have an especially good relationship with the business people."

Surprisingly, there were more people who liked our scene. Sue Stalker thought "the people are really friendly and the overall characteristics of the town are friendliness and hospitality."

Ron Cherry added to that. "There's no particular conflict. The townspeople and students have different values, but other than that there's no problem."

The middle-of-the waders were led by Denny Pielmeyer with a very similar statement. "The people are conservative and we are relatively liberal. So, we don't need any relationships."

Or, even if there are relationships, they are mixed. Jan Nolan "really doesn't understand the situation completely yet. I haven't been here long enough. Some people in town mistreat the college kids and other people really go out of their way for us. I guess it depends on the people you meet and the impression you make on them."

Mike Beck pulled sociology into his middle-of-the road stand. "My relationship has not been with the people downtown but just friends of the college. These people have the same ideals and interests because of their higher education and their knowledge of what college is about. But I realize that there are people in the town that don't know what college is about because of their social standing and education."

"Outside of business interaction with the townspeople there is no 'significant' town-college relationship." John Bradly was middle, but led us into con with, "The only trouble stems from the young —— greasers."

"Yeah, I don't like those little kids abusing the facilities in Ellis," agreed Tom Heffner. "Did you ever try using the TV in the early morning or the pin ball machines at 3:30 or 4:00 P.M.? And I really hate going up to Tote lounge and seeing those kids slouched all over, dripping their ashes on everything."

Pat Snyder felt a little antagonism. "The town doesn't want us to get too involved in their community affairs. We can see this in the way the voting situation was handled. This county was one of few that didn't extend the voting registration deadline."

Jani Dunbar was almost bitter. "From what I've seen as a freshman the situation stinks. They only put up with us because we're their money source. Their whole attitude is one of suppressed hostility."

We must end our column with a "far out" quote. Think about it. We wandered into a visitor to the hill and it was good to hear the voice of moderation. Mark, from who knows where, said, "I think you should stop calling them 'townies'. We're all one and we all have to live together. The school's in the town. From what I've seen, the college isn't that much better than the town. Want a cookie?"

NEXT WEEK: BLACK STUDIES AND PROFESSORS

Othello and Poems Featured in Fall Reading Festival

by Dr. Mark R. Hochberg

On Wednesday evening, November 10, the second edition of the Fall Reading Festival was presented in Shoemaker Gallery. The selections read varied in tone from humorous to tragic and elegiac, and all were displayed to good advantage by the readers. The performances of Messers Croce, Davis, Hofelt, and Hunter, which gave evidence of the close relationship that exists between teaching and acting, were a pleasure to listen to.

The evening began with Gerald Croce reading selections from the work of James B. Elmore, a poet of awesome incompetence. Mr. Croce did more than read the poems: he appeared in the persona of a humorless and pedantic English professor. The contrast between his pompous, Dickensian role and the badness of Elmore's poetry accentuated the ludicrousness of the selections, and provided the audience with a most enjoyable presentation.

In a quick change of tone, Mr. Croce was followed by William Hofelt and Richard Hunter reading from Othello. With the assistance of Dr. Esther Doyle, who read transitional narrative passages, Hofelt and Hunter performed the tense, emotionally charged scene (Act III, scene iii) in which Iago's poisonous innuendoes finally convince Othello that Desdemona has been unfaithful to him. Hunter convincingly portraved the moorish general as powerful, impetuous, but fatally naive. Hofelt's Iago was wonderful: a subtle and delicate intelligence fired by almost supernatural malevolence. The interplay between the two characters created a taut and compelling dramatic experience.

The final performance of the evening was that of Bruce Davis, reading from the poetry of William Butler Yeats. Davis's selections emphasized the elegiac in Yeats, the controlled and deeply felt lament for the essential tragedy of all things human. Mr. Davis's performance was characterized by a fine restraint, sensitive to the profound emotion of the poetry, but fully aware of the hard earned dignity of Yeats's lines.

The next program in the series will be a performance by the great Irish actress Siobhan McKenna on Thursday, November 18, in Oller Hall. Miss McKenna will be followed on Wednesday, December 1, by Juniata's writer-in-residence, Mr. Martin Russ, reading from his own work.

GRASS ROOTS continued from page 1

agement or even assistance can make the difference between a mediocre smattering of single events, and an energetic, coherent college life.

In this appeal to you, a most influential group of individuals who are essentially still young and eager to learn, I consider the words of David S Jordan relevant and inspiring. "So long as enthusiasm lasts, so long is youth still with us." Yes, if we can find something to pour our enthusiasm into, we, Mankind, will always remain young; another way of looking at the same statement is that so long as you, who have mererly accumulated years, remain enthusiastic about your lives as well as ours, we as youth (with fewer of Time's lessons behind us) will stand behind you buoying up your own youthful hopes and desires. Let none of us forget our mutual obligation in the realm

Sincerely yours,

Linda

The Good Ole Days

THE JUNIATIAN

November 21, 1945

Let Us Humble Ourselves
And Give Thanks This

The first real Thanksgiving since the Fall of 1941! In this interim people around the earth have known the meaning of being destitute and at the mercy of material force initiated by those who thought only of advancing their own interests. Today we stand at the close of a period when Thanksgiving means as much as it did over three hundred years ago when the first settlers felt a definite awareness of Divine Providence.

Homes once torn asunder by the ravages of war are now being slowly reunited and rebuilt. Men are returning from the armed services, women have given up their wartime posts, and American life once more shows signs of becoming normal.

Atomic energy, first released in its shocking reality by American scientists, has opened an entirely new era, the havoc or progress to be derived from there will be determined only by the future moves made by the world's leaders.

No longer do women and children throughout the world need to become petrified with fear at the sound of air raid sirens or the thundering detonation of dropping bombs. For the present they have been freed of destruction from the air.

Kindled enthusiasm bursts forth as men once again turn their minds to creative activities, and look forward to richer and fuller lives.

Inherent in all these changes is the vision of a more perfect world order, the keynote of which is cooperation among nations. Only by joining sincerely in plans for the future we can be assured of a lasting peace. Not by words written down on paper as a few fleeting promises, but by actual deeds can we expect action.

We have struggled vainly in previous years, unless we give thanks for all past blessings, humbling ourselves before God and the thought of all that has been lost but determined that our newly found energy will, through Him, be harnessed to the creation of a better world.

Indians Finish With 3-4-2 Mark

Juniata Defeated At Moravian

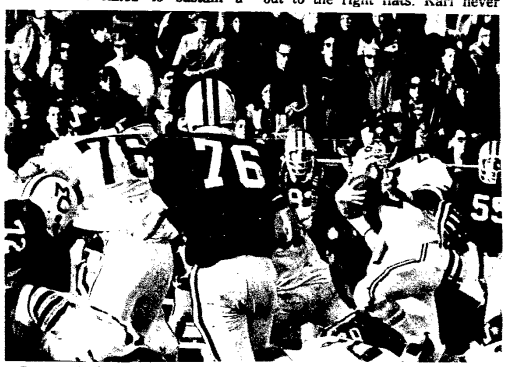
by Tony Martuzas

Juniata finished its season away at Moravian, losing to the Greyhounds 14-7 on a sunny and chilly day. The Indians finished with a 3-4-2 mark, compared with last year's 2-6-1 record. Bright spots were freshmen Larry Cerny and Keith Colonna, offensive performances by Alex Zubritsky and Jack Gallie and also a new discovery at quarterback, Jim Rossi.

The Indians took the opening kickoff but failed to sustain a drive. They were forced to punt, and Moravian quarterback Joe Dowling went to work.

Bob Gratz, on the second play from scrimmage, got the call, but fumbled as he was hit at the line. The Indian defense came up with the ball.

Juniata was in good field position at midfield. From the first play at scrimmage, quarterback Don Mastrorocco flipped the ball to tight end Bergstresser slipping out to the right flats. Karl never saw the ball coming as the Hound tri-captain Stan Zavilla gathered in the floating pass and sped 55 yards into the endzone. Wayne Marish's PAT kick was good.



Carmen Defrancesco breaks through the Moravian line as J.C. came out on the losing end of their last game of 1971. photo by Chas Albright

Lou Eckerl took the ensuing kickoff and broke to the right sidelines before Bill Gastmeyer and Bill Ruff knocked him out of bounds at about the 35 yard line. A penalty brought the ball back to the twenty. Mastrorocco went to work sending Greg Kennedy and Dave Sparks to the outside and Mike McNeal crashing up the middle. The Indians got another break as punter McNeal was roughed. Juniata could not retain the ball and Moravian took over. They moved to their own 35 and were forced to punt.

The Greyhounds could advance the ball no further than their own 35 and were forced to give up the ball.

From the Indians twenty-five, McNeal and Sparks combined to advance the ball to their own forty-eight. Greg Kennedy, on the option play, took Mastrorocco's flip and broke to the left sidelines where he avoided a tackle at the thirty, ran back to the middle, and zipped into the endzone. McNeal's PAT was good. Score: Juniata 7; Moravian 7.

Later in the second quarter, Gary Martell signaled for a fair catch on the fifteen. Bob Gratz and Wayne Marish combined for the first down that brought the ball up to the 26. After a few more plays, Moravian quarterback Joe Dowling connected with Dan Joseph on a pass that went to the Juniata 17 yard line. In four plays, Wayne Marish swept left and scored. The PAT was good. Score: Moravian 14; Juniata 7.

Coach Nadzak came up with a new quarterback to work the final period, freshman Jim Rossi. Rossi was looking impressive on the option, as he carried the ball himself for good yardage. Rossi advanced the ball himself to the three yard line of Moravian, but all to be called back because of a penalty. The McNeal field goal went wide.

Juniata could not penetrate Moravian territory again. The game ended with a futile drive in a hard fought game.

WANTED:

Ecological Concern

Take One, Scene One: Information

Last year at Juniata, the Juniata Environmental Action Committee existed. This year, it hasn't. Therefore, I propose to boost ecological concern here at Juniata in combination with the town of Huntingdon. Scene Two: Persuasion.

Concern with our environment needs to be one of the most important concerns now and in the coming era. We all must cooperate to reverse the trend of environmental destruction. The responsibility to ecology cannot be neglected, nor relegated to other people. And now that most college students can wield their voting rights they have more of an opportunity to influence national trends. With cooperation between area residents and the college, we can work both to make Huntingdon County cleaner and more protected against destruction, and wield a force in national issues.

Scene Three: Scope

A local environmental organization could try to promote more local and national investigation, information, and action, and sponsor field and laboratory research and educational programs. Furthermore, the organization could coordinate its efforts with other concerned groups such as the League of Women Voters.

Scene Four: Meeting

An organizational meeting will be held Wednesday, November 17, at 7:00 p.m. in room A202, which is one of the pie-shaped lecture rooms behind the science library.

I.M. SPORTS CHAMPIONS

Kneeling: Craig Nishiyama, Jeff Ziegler, John Culler. Standing: Mark Mann, Ron McAlpine, Chris Pavlou, George Dunne. Absent: Chris Huber, Tom Hollinger, Dave Desmond, Rich Sipple, Gregg Matis, Jack Stewart, Mike Rish, Bill Kauffman, Phil Woodworth. photo by Rick Replogle

Football

The championship football team finished up their season with a record of 10-0. Their personal statistics wound up to be an average of 33 points a game for their offense and only gave up an average of 14 points on defense. The team was made up of members who had played together for the past three years. Such experience paid off in the season's outcome and their only close games were against Laputca (25-24 and 13-12). The highest score the team got together was 44 points. Such playing gave their team the I.M. Football Championship title.

Soccer

The I.M. championship team ended with a 7-1 record. Their defeat was against Steve Dunkle's team which they later defeated. The league is made up of six teams.

The team feels that Juniata College is ready for a varsity soccer team. If such enthusiasm is held onto, maybe some beginnings for a varsity team can be made.

Pictured: Ed Kohn, Jim Platt, Yeprem Mehranian, Andy Vonderheyde, Absent: George Benigni, Scott Gustafson, Bill Whitehouse, Jeff Hanson, Terry Smith, Terry Brian, Eric Crouch, Fred Murphy, Jack Stewart, Mick McVey, Jim Charonka, Wright Saylor. photo by Rick Replogle

Women's Basketball Program Started

After an organizational meeting Monday, Nov. 1, the women's basketball team began practice Wednesday, Nov. 3. This year Mo Taylor and Scott Gustafson are serving as coaches. Six of the players that were on last year's team have come out again. Well over half of the team that have come out this year are freshmen. A total of 18 to 20 girls have been practicing four nights a week in Memorial Gymnasium.

From a preliminary look at the team now, if things continue to improve as they have been, I think we can look forward to a much better seasonal record this year than last year; the record was one win and about seven losses. Several freshmen are showing a lot of talent in practice. The freshmen players' interest in the team will be a big factor in determining the outcome of our season. To date, there are nine games on the schedule, the first being here Dec. 16 at 4:00 p.m. with Messiah College. Some details of the schedule are not fully worked out. A complete and detailed schedule will be printed when it is available.

THE JUNIATIAN

VOL. XLVIII, NO. 10 Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 December 8, 1971

Not Everyone Likes Isaac Asimov

by Edward Kinchley Evans

Has 1984 arrived? Is the world that was predicted only a handful of years ago by Orwell slipped a time sequence and is now the one we live in? In that world Yes was No; Truth was Lies; and almost everyone was robotomized to Not Think. Television was an ever present watchful eve and what books there were had been created by machines. In essence a world without feeling.

Isaac Asimov, a standup comedian and an author of one hundred and seventeen books (count them, one whole hundred and seventeen published books on science, science fiction, and assorted and related subjects), the final sausage being titled (comedically, of course) The Sensuous Dirty Old Man, has been sent to us (or called, if you prefer) to tell us as the Will Judy Lecturer for the season that God has been captured by the Giants of Science, successfully reduced to a tape, and placed in the innards of some International Computer. The powers that diagram our Good have sent Isaac forth, exposed him for a couple of hours ("try out your routine in the Boon Docks") and as quietly withdrawn him back to their electric bosom.

Having wintered several dozen seasons of discontent in what vast Egomopolis referred to as the Center of the Nerve World (and I came to the mountainside pure in thought to hear this prophet, my knowledge of science and science fiction being limited to the principle that if you flick a switch often one gets a bulb full of light. . . . but I digress), Mr. Asimov's performance stirred within my heart Great Fear . . . I have heard that voice before . . . the rhythm of jokes . . . it's some comedian . . . heard that voice before . . . the rhythm of jokes . . . it's some comedian . . . that style . . .what comedian? . . . on Johnny Carson's? . . . Merv's? . . . Dick Cavett's? . the face is all wrong but the voice and material are the same . . . I calmed myself by rationalizing about what obviously confronted some Booking Agency that had a hot property on it's many fingered hands and didn't know what to do with it. Asimov is Internationally known (people recognize his name); students, hundreds of thousands of students read him (when they won't touch Jacqueline Susann) . . . but there is one small inconsequential irritation. It's easier to write science or science fiction than talk it. "No problem . . . what we do is . . . we have that comedian . . . what's his face? . . . Asimov sounds like him . . . sort of A B C . . . nothing deep . . . let's get his comedy writer to write a sketch . . . and This Asimov person . . . can memorize it . . . Look . . . he can write 117 books . . . he can memorize a few bits . . . and then we send him out for a LITTLE EXPOSURE . . . AND WHEN he has the material down pat, we'll book him into Vegas . . . the people could use a little info about this science stuff . . . look how many people buy ovens that clean themselves . . . that's science, isn't it?" And so, another STAR was born or . . . at best . . . a Comet . . . "cometically" speaking of course.

Did you ever try writing 115 bad books? phote by Rick Replogle

Dr. Isaac Asimov gave a lecture on Science at Oller Hall, December 2. at 8:15 P.M. under the auspices of the Will Judy Lecture series. If I have seemed "facetious" in my attitude it is only because I do not believe that man came from the apes, but still cling to the rather forlorn and abandoned belief that man came from God. I believe that man has a Soul. I believe apes come from God . . . But only man is held accountable for his actions under Universal Law. I believe that when man, in the role of scientists, forgets his inheritance and claims credit for Universal Laws of Creativity, that a Crack forms in the floor of his understanding and the World suffers for the misuse rather than use of this knowledge.

Dr. Asimov ended his lecture with the thought that One Day man would create the perfect machine which would do away with the necessity for man. At that point I think he abandoned his comedy writers and started freelancing his thoughts in the field for which he is best known.

The evening made you appreciate, in retrospect, the little known scientific fact that cold weather clears the head.

Postscript: At the close of the lecture, Dr. Asimov accepted questions from the audience. This was a mistake.

Summer Job Information

The U.S. Civil Service Commission has recently announced test dates for 1972 summer jobs in Federal agencies.

Test dates will be January 8, 1972, and March 11, 1972. The application for testing must be submitted about one month in advance of the testing date.

More information and test application forms are available in the Placement Office. Anyone who is interested should plan to make the exam as early as possible.

Troy To Exhibit in Leading Craft Gallery in USA

Jack Troy, assistant professor of art, continues to build his reputation in the field of ceramics with exhibitions, lectures and demonstrations. He is currently represented in the Delaware Art Museum's annual juried crafts exhibit with five entries. Also in Wilmington, he is one of several craftsmen invited to submit 12 pieces to the Bank of Delaware's Downtown Gallery from November 12 to December 1. On November 9 Troy gave a lecture-demonstration at the University of Delaware.

Troy has had work accepted for a national exhibition of salt-glased ceramics at the Museum of Contemporary Crafts, New York City, to be held in January. The Museum is located across the street from the Modern Museum, and is the leading museum in the country for crafts.

Finally, on January 3, Troy will be one of three ceramists participating in a week-long commerence involving lectures, exhibitions and demonstrations at Chatham College in Pittsburgh.

JC Biology Prof Receives Grant

Dr. James L. Gooch, Assistant Professor of Biology at Juniata, has received a grant from the National Science Foundation to study the genetics of marine animals. Dr. Thomas J. M. Schopf of the University of Chicago is the co-recipient of the $47,000 grant which runs for two years.

Dr. Gooch explained that most of the work will be done in the summer at Marine Biology center along the Atlantic coast, especially Woods Hole, Massachusetts, and Beaufort, South Carolina.

Two students will be used as research assistants during the summer. Juniata College students will be given the first opportunity to apply for these awards.

This fall in preparation for their research, Drs. Gooch and Schopf visited Scripps Institute, San Diego, California, where they studied the genetics of certain deep-sea animals. This is the first time that research has been done on these particular animals.

A native of Parkersburg, W. Va., Dr. Gooch received his B.S. and M.S. degrees from West Virginia University. He received his doctorate from the University of Delaware in 1968. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Sigma Xi, the Professional Genetics Society of Americ, the American Institute of Biological Sciences, and the Society for the Study of Evolution.

The recipient of a three-year predoctoral fellowship from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration in 1965-67, Dr. Gooch has written three papers on genetics, and he has collaborated with Dr. Schopf on four similar studies.

Very Clever Those Creative Artists – And Very Good Too

by Gerald Croce

I have always been a bit surprised and disappointed by how badly creative artists "perform," their own works. Invariably the performances are lifeless, lacklustre and wooden. Stravinsky's conducting of Sacre du Printemps, Mascagni's of Cavalleria Rusticana, and Paderefski's playing of the Minuet in G all rank at the nether end of barely scintillating performances, as does Wallace Stevens' meandering through Sunday Morning, or Eliot's reading of Prufrock. Creators create; performers perfom; and the two vocations seem mutually exclusive. Therefore, it was with some apprehension that I went to hear Martin Russ, Division I's artist-in-residence, and the English Department's visiting creative writer, read selections from his works last Wednesday evening in the Shoemaker Galleries.

As Mr. Russ began reading from his first published work, The Last Parallel, I began to fear the worst. His dull monotonous hoarse rasp placed him in the long tradition of creative artists in performance. I gritted my teeth and submitted in silence as long explanations and a narrative ensued; and then, suddenly, Mr. Russ disappeared, Shoemaker disappeared and I was in Korea, in the 50's, listening to a dialogue and witnessing a scene involving a wounded dying man thrashing out his last moments, writhing in torment on the ground, shot painfully and mistakenly in the gut by his fellow Americans. The rest of the evening was a repeat of what happened during the first reading. Mr. Russ's steady, strong (the rasp had disappeared), but barely expressive voice, at the start of each selection, began churning out words; then his voice receded, disappeared, and a scene emerged in its place. The gory incident of the mistaken killing was followed by a vivid humorous one —the visit of Lt. Brother Tim to Yellow Fang. Then came a selection from Happy Huntinggound, an epistolary novel. A high point in the evening followed when Joe Shasta, a character from War Memorial, combination American Indian, war veteran and L'il Abner, gets a lesson from his boss on how to sell a sewing machine—a Truestitch—to a reluctant buyer. In this hilariously funny scene Mr. Russ did play perfomer, creating a separation between characters and using appropriate facial expressions; however, I'm certain the scene would have been as great without them. The immediacy of the situation and the absurdity and bravado of Joe's boss tickled delightfully everyone in the audience.

Mr. Russ returned to the horrors of the battlefield in his final selection—one from his most recently completed work, "The Diehard." In this work, Russ attempts to "render battle as experience" (in this instance the Battle of Tarawa). The scene, which like the earlier war moments in the program, rendered vividly the hamburger flesh and charred lips of the wounded and dying; but, in addition, it showed Russ as more than a skillful technician, capab'e of powerful dialogue and vivid description. The writer here managed to capture quite poetically the essence of what death must have symbolized to many war wounded men in terrible pain. By shifting our attention from the

Continued on page 6

GRASS ROOTS

Compiled by Kim Hershberger and Donna Trelease

Each week, the Grass Roots staff selects, at random, the name of a Juniata student, and ask him to contribute an article, impromptu, concerning anything he chooses. What follows is the result of this week's chance soliciting:

by Janice Hepp

LIFE WITH 2nd LESHER

I think Juniata College has finally pushed ten innocent "young ladies?" past the breaking point. It all started when two of us, the "fairest of the all," decided very calmly to take our showers and then work a little while on our Modes papers. Well, nobody thought it very strange when we began singing "Winter Wonderland," for Jersey girls tend to get in the Christmas spirit rather early. Suddenly, buckets of ice-cold water appeared from nowhere and added to the chilly, wintry atmosphere we had created with our musical abilities. It was at that moment that we both were transformed into some kind of wild creature. With the rage boiling in our frozen blood, we reached for our towels, and after attempting to dry off (this was made difficult by our extreme fits of hysteria), we realized that neither of us was in the possession of a robe, a nightgown, an "anything." We became aware of wicked, sadistic giggles from a troop of fellow Lesherites. Left with no real choice, my co-victim and I decided to go out and face the maddening crowd in all our splendor (and our dinky little towels). I then began a frantic search for our belongings, and my condition developed into one of blind fury (alas, I had lost my glasses!). Recognizing the fact that this search was futile, we plodded down the long, endless hall to our rooms, finally discovering our belongings piled on the bed of one of the conspirators. Having gained a relative amount of composure, we dressed, said "goodnight" to a few early quitters, and began plotting our revenge. Somehow, we managed to turn a toothbrushing exhibition (a common occurrence on our floor) into a "drown-the-nearest-enemy" type party. After giving up this method of retaliation, we zoomed down the hall once more. We very skillfully planned an attack on "one of them," with a small paper cup filled with water as our trusty weapon. Eventually coaxing her to open the door, the water was "expertly" aimed at the target, promptly causing her roommate's bed (which no one was near) to be soaked. It was at that moment that we were all brought back to reality, partially aware that our Modes assignments were still waiting to be done.

MAY OUR SANITIES REST IN PEACE!

Class Cutters Jeopardise Jobs

by H. Veatch Klug

Recent J. C. research has revealed that most corporations, grad. schools, med. schools, law schools, etc. are strongly opposed to hiring or admitting graduates who were chronic class cutters. The questions and responses were as follows:

(1) DO YOU FEEL THAT PUNCTUALITY AND ATTENDANCE HABITS ACQUIRED IN COLLEGE ARE LIKELY TO CARRY OVER INTO JOB SITUATION?

Yes - 43 Equivocal - 13 No - 2

(2) IF SO, WOULD YOU BE MORE LIKELY, ALL OTHER THINGS BEING EQUAL, TO HIRE (AND, LATER, TO PROMOTE) STUDENTS WITH RECORDS FOR PUNCTUALITY AND REGULAR CLASS ATTENDANCE THAN YOU WOULD STUDENTS WHO ARE NOT PUNCTUAL AND WHOSE CLASS ATTENDANCE IS IRREGULAR?

Yes - 37 Equivocal - 9 No - 6

The two-part study was designed to measure attitudes regarding comprehensives as well as class cutting, and punctuality. The results on the comp. questions were published in the Nov. 17 JUNIATIAN. The most revealing part of the study was the intensity of feeling demonstrated by the respondants. Some wrote lengthy letters to explain their answers, and the depth of their conviction emrged in the letters. For example:

". . . the comprehensive exam serves to crystallize all the specific thinking which has gone into his career training. If the student is going to shrink from every experience which he regards before hand as being nerve-racking . . . he is, by no means, prepared to face life."

"I have difficulty in understanding how a student is going to acquire maximum benefit from his college experience if he does not expose himself to the teachings and philosophies of his professors." (re. class cutting).

". . . If one is to be a worthwhile member of the business and social community, he cannot look upon attendance obligations as nonbinding, as something to be indulged in simply as a matter of personal convenience. There are many talented individuals . . . who never make their mark . . . because of lack of attention to these important personal attributes."

"Dependability would very definitely play a significant role in employment and promotion."

"Yes, (re. comps.) and I am pleased to know that Juniata has this system. I was not aware of it, having recently moved in from out of state. You can be sure that I am impressed!"

"Yes, (re. hiring and promoting those who don't cut class) I can not imagine any employer answering in the negative. I would suspect his motives!"

"Yes, the requirement for the comp is an indication of accumulated knowledge, and is a most fitting culmination to the student's educational experience."

Insofar as questions concerning punctuality, attendance habits, and, in general, casual behavior, these are totally indusputable to me. We, too, in the business world have the privilege of coming late or not at all as we choose. We also have a privilege of being out of work if we make that election."

"Yes (re. graduates of comp. colleges being better educated) Too many graduates enter the business world and receive a real jolt to discover 'fun & games' are not part of their new 'way of life' in industry. Serious preparation and personal challenge must start within the college period."

"I firmly believe this. (re. a degree from a comp. college being worth more than one from a non-comp. college). Further, I look at all facets of the college requirements when doing recruting."

"Absolutely. (re. attendance habits carring over into job situations). Our college trained people enter into middle management and progress up-ward. If they can not comply with a few basic and progress up-ward. If they can not comply with a few basic concepts of management — what kind of an example do they set for those they manage."

"YES! The requirement of a comp. in any discipline carries the advantage of forcing a student to acquire a command of a subject he would not otherwise achieve."

"Yes. I would consider students with records of punctuality much more favorably and tend to hire them even if scholastic records were a little lower."

". . . we never hire students with a poor record of attendance or punctuality regardless of their academic record."

'As an employer we would need, want and demand punctuality and regularity of attendance. Management cannot plan its daily activities without being secure in the knowledge that employees will report promptly and regularly. . . ."

"Requiring punctuality and class attendance is a must unless we want to make our educational system a mockery."

"No! I do not feel that a student such as myself with an education from Susquehanna Univ. is less qualified to perform my duties . . . than Mr. ___ or Mr. ___, both graduates of Juniata."

"NO! (re. value of a degree from a camp, college) Again, I feel that a degree from Susquehana is not worth less than a degree from Juniata!"

"Yes! I feel a student who goes to college to get an education can get it, for the most part, only if he is in the classroom to hear what is said. Students should be expected to be in class on time . . . Decisions to come to work each day cannot be controlled by whim. You are expected to be at work on time each day!"

"You might point out to your students that Personnel people in both govt. and private industry take into consideration the college an applicant has graduated from — its reputation, its academic standards, etc. — in evaluating that person's potential as a prospective employee. By taking what they might feel is the easy route in obtaining a degree, they may find they have taken the hard route toward obtaining the type of position they desire after they graduate. Most of the employees in our Dept. for example, had to pass a very tough Civil Service Exam beforehand. . . ."

"The candidate who can state that he has undergone a . . . regorous and comprehensive exam . . . has a clear advantage over the one who can not . . ."

"In some clinical courses exams are oral which requires thinking on one's feet. The National Board Exams . . . are certainly comprehensive, as are the Medical College Admin. tests."

"Yes. (re. a degree from a comp. college being better) We probably would stop recruiting at universities that lower their academic requirements . . ."

"The business world is a dog-eat-dog . . . society. Anything that gives a man an edge is worthwhile developing. Poor habits eliminate you immediately. . ." (re. all the questions).

Continued on page 5

The Juniatian

Student Weekly at Juniata College
Huntingdon, Pa.

ASSOCIATED COLLEGIATE PRESS ACP — I.P. INTERCOLLEGIATE PRESS

REESTABLISHED September 9, 1971

Continuation of "The Echo," established January 1891 and "The Juniatian," established November 1924

SCOTT K. LEEDY, Managing Editor

PATRICK E. FLEAGLE, Associate Editor — ROBERT A. JONES, Business Manager
DEBI FRAZIER, Assistant Editor — STEWARD A. KAUFFMAN, Jr., Sports Editor
STEVEN S. KIMMEL, Assistant Editor — WILLIAM E. SCARLETT, Circulation Manager
BRIAN T. MAURER, Assistant Editor — WILLIAM M. DAVID, Photography Editor

ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANTS: General Information, Susan Stalker, Jean Thompson, Deborah Walker; Community Relations, Stephen J. Crowley, Jeffrey A. Naugle, Linda Richardson; Feature Columnists, Karl K. Kindig, Robert E. Kraut; Business, Thomas E. Alessi, Jean Jarrow, Nancy Tamburo; Typing and Proofing, Sandra Currier, Prof. Jerry Croce, Nancy Floyd, Sara Frank, Carol Garzillo, Margaret Haines, Anne Holzinger, Donna Lee, Janet Mason, Valorie Priddle, William B. Rea, Stuart C Treacy, Gayle Trofe; Layout, Janet Bartschat, Rodger C. Devonald, Margery Herr, Keith E. Klein, James S. Reiley, Arthur W. Ritter; Art, Luci Bromberg, Lawrence R. Stem; Sports, Anthony C. Martuzas, Jr., Patricia Monahen, J. Brian Richardson, Susan Snyder, Vernne Wetzel; Good Ole Days, Gary E. Gillen, Janice Nolan, Jean Pollock, Karen White, Gretchen Yost; Grass Roots, Kimber Hershberger, Donna Trelease; Pro/Con, William S. Dick, Nancy Diehl, Michael J. Finkle, Jean Pollock, William H. Robison; Advert. Consultants, Roberta Earle, Edythe Corum; Circulation, Ralph P. Casale, Dennise Deaner, Susan Dochtermann, Marlyn Hoover Miriam Smith

The JUNIATIAN, published weekly throughtout the college year except during vacation and examination periods by students of Juniata College. No article printed within necessarily represents the collective opinion of either the administration, faculty, or student body. Second class mail privileges authorized in Huntingdon, Pa. 16652

Circulation 1500 — Subscription $5.00 per year

VOL. XLVIII, NO. 10 — December 8, 1971

Montgomery Ward
Sales Agency
516 WASHINGTON STREET
Telephone 643-1390

FOR UNUSUAL GIFTS
COME TO
Turner Jones
504 Washington Street
Huntingdon

Letters to the Editor

Letters to the editor should be addressed to: Editor, The Juniatian, Box 667, Juniata College, Huntingdon, Pa. 16652. The editors reserve the right to print only non-libelous and responsible content and to edit all letters and commentaries submitted to The Juniatan. The staff also reserves the right to publish all full signatures unless the writer can supply valid reason for omitting his name.

AN OPEN LETTER TO
TOM ALESSI:

I have followed with interest your running disagreement with Karl Kindig in recent issues of The Juniatian. I am afraid, however, that I can find little in your letters that appeals to me; I don't even enjoy slander very much. I am prompted to reply to your letters, not to get Mr. Kindig off the hook, but to put your foot in the mouth you have so ingloriously opened. I certainly do not object to your opening it, I find that rather nice. I merely find that it is YOU and not Mr. Kindig who is arguing from ignorance.

First of all, WHERE THE HELL WERE YOU LAST YEAR? Where the hell were you when classes were cancelled two different times and upperclassmen were begged to get involved in the discussion of the proposed curriculum? You say no thought was given to upperclassmen? Where were you when we were invited to help with the decision making? Where were you when a body of upperclassmen published an evaluation of the Task Force Proposal? You said it was a hasty decision that was railroaded through. BULL! Where were you during the almost TWO YEAR process that it took to put the Task Force Proposal together and during the rather agonizing six months that the faculty took to tear the thing apart word-by-word? You say the Task Force "tried to keep the students in the dark?" You have GOT to be kidding! If you really meant that statement I'm afraid that I must conclude that you are either a new student or you were hiding under your blankets last year or maybe you just didn't care enough to really get involved in what was going on around you. Well, it's nice you want to get involved now but please don't offhand condemn something that you obviously know nothing about!

Secondly, your point about transferring units and/or credits. You seem to believe that ease of transfer is a rather important attribute of any new or old curriculum. It seems that the curriculum is to be changed or originally designed to meet this prerequisite. Tell me Mr. Alessi, who should we design the curriculum for, those who want to leave or those who want to stay? Should we build a curriclum that we think is valid and then change it so that those who don't like it can get out of it as easy as possible? You are right when you say the question of transfer did not get an awful lot of study and there was not a lot of "hard data" gathered (whatever the hell that is). The reason for that is found in the above question. The job of the Task Force was to design a curriculum that it felt was suitable for JUNIATA, not Penn State. The faculty is here to offer an education that they feel is valid at this time, at this institution, and not to design one that the registrar at Haverford likes. Obviously, the answer to your problem would be for every college to offer the same courses and use the same material, as Mr. Kindig pointed out. So then why have a place like Juniata where you get the same thing you can get at Penn State when it costs twice as much here. In my opinion, the only right a college such as Juniata has to exist is if it can offer a rather unique educational experience. If someone comes and doesn't like it, fine, let him leave. But what kind of "justice" is it that penalizes the person who wants to stay and use the curriculum here just to let someone who wants to leave get out without any scratches. Your analogy with East Berlin is just another pile of tears.

You ask what academic reputation is built on besides curriculum. I'll tell you: 1) professors, who they are, what recognition do they have in their field, what kind of advance work have they done and where, 2) alumni, how many go on to further education, how many make significant advances in their fields, how many are engaged in significant professions, 3) over-all stability of the college, economically, and in number of students that apply, 4) caliber of incoming students and ratings on their advancement while here,5) administration, is it stable, how well does it deal with the problems of running an academic institution. . . want more? I might also add that one very important ingredient in reputation is the willingness of the institution to critically evaluate itself and its efforts in designing new and creative curriculum offerings which keep up with the advances in education and our society.

You ask, "Is freedom limited at Juniata?" I can answer that one for you too. Yes. Go discuss with Dr. Cherry what "freedom" is and when you get it figured out see if you can find a place where it isn't limited and then come see me; and if it sounds nice I'll buy us both a one-way ticket.

Well enough for now. I guess my suggestion for you, Mr. Alessi, is to go find a copy of the Task Force Report on Curriculum (ask Dean Norris), sit down and read it calmly, sit down and talk with one of the student members of the faculty committees, and see what the faculty is doing to implement the new curriculum, and see if maybe that doesn't answer a lot of your problems as most of them seem to be mis-information.

Sincerely,

Jonathan Hunter

Dec. 1, 1971

Dear Students,

SUFFER — once again, "little children" of Juniata College, for it appears that someone feels Ellis Hall should be locked up like Houdini's box! My fellow classmates living in East House planning on using the southeast side entrance to Ellis before 8:30 a.m. on these bitter cold mornings may now look forward to a detour via the ice skating rink(which could be cause for a broken neck at one end and wet feet at the other) and the misplaced steps. Then, if you are lucky, you'll find the one out of the three front doors that will be open. Oh, and if anyone writes a letter late at night, don't plan on mailing it before your 8:00 class or in time for the early mail, because U.S. Post Office

Continued on page 4, Col 5

POINT BLANK

Copyright 1971 by Leon Friedman

"THE NEW SUPREME COURT: 6 TO 3 CONSERVATIVE MAJORITY PREDICTED"

What is the United States Supreme Court likely to do in the coming year? The appointment of Lewis R. Powell, Jr. and William H. Rehnquist to the Court would add two more law-and order Justices to the previous Nixon selections (Burger and Blackmun). With the continued presence of Justices Stewart and White—two more or less conservative holdovers from the Warren Era—it appears that the nation will be faced with a six-to-three conservative majority for the foreseeable future.

With only three liberal members left (Douglas, Marshall and Brennan) how much of a retreat from the landmark decisions of the Warren Court are we likely to see? The answer is: not too much.

The most important decisions of the Warren Court—in reapportionment, the granting of the right to counsel in the courtroom (the Gideon case) and at the police station (Miranda), the application of stricter safeguards on the police, and the great civil rights advances —are not likely to be disturbed. They have become institutionalized, woven into the fabric of government or criminal procedure by state laws, lower court decisions, administrative rulings, and the expectations of millions of affected citizens. Judges who would try to reverse the important rulings of the Warren Court would be the radical revolutionaries at this point, and it is unlikely that any severe reversal would be acceptable to such moderates as Stewart and White.

But the momentum of the liberalizing decisions of the Warren Court will probably be stopped. The important Court rulings of the last ten years created pressure to carry these decisions to the limits of their logic: If counsel is necessary in a felony case, why not in misdemeanor cases or where petty offenses are involved?

If warrants are necessary before wiretaps can be installed in criminal cases, why not also in national security cases?

If state residency requirements are unconstitutional in welfare cases, why not in election cases also?

If the state cannot punish the private possession of obscene material, shouldn't private citizens be free to import such material from abroad?

The Warren Court would undoubtedly have extended its landmark rulings to a host of new situations, rounding out the contours of the decisions and giving them a more rational shape and structure. But the new Justices are not likely to extend the cases one whit beyond their minimal holdings and may well chip them away at the edges wherever possible.

In fact, the Court has already handed down an important case during the last term eroding the Miranda principle — the Supreme Court permitted the prosecution to use inconsistent statements made by a defendant to the police to impeach his credibility at trial, even though he had not been given a proper Miranda warning by the police.

In the new Court term, certain decisions are likely in cases pending before the Court:

Death Penalty — The Court will probably uphold the constitutionality of the death penalty against a claim that it is a "cruel and unusual punishment" forbidden by the Eighth Amendment.

Abortions — The Court will probably permit states to continue to punish abortions.

Prisoner Rights — The Court will probably permit wardens and other prison officials to impose summary punishment (such as solitary confinement) on prisoners without any type of due process hearing. However, restrictions on a prisoner's access to reading and legal materials will most likely be struck down.

Appointment of Counsel — The Court will probably not require counsel to be appointed in misdemeanor cases; however, the Court will probably require counsel to be appointed at important preliminary hearings but not for identification line-ups.

Immunity — The question of whether full Fifth Amendment immunity is required when any witness appears before a grand jury will be heard by the Court. Justices Stewart and White have voted at various times for wide protection against self-incrimination, and the question is a close one.

Wiretaps — Whether the federal government can tap the phones of suspected subversives in national security cases is another close question before the Court. Justice Stewart has been a strong advocate of the need for securing judicial warrants in all cases. William Rehnquist, however, has been intimately involved in the present Justice Department policy of not securing warrants; he may have to excuse himself from these cases, and a more liberal rule may, then, emerge.

Leon Friedman, a New York attorney, is author of The Wise Minority (Dial Press 1971). He is Associate Director of a bar association Special Committee on Courtroom Conduct. Distributed by ACCESS — The Communications Corporation.

Lime

by Edward Kinchley Evans

If the delicious but immodest thought has ever violated your brain patterns as to why some ladies grow mustaches, Molly Bloom provided one possible answer during a thirty minute monologue which ended Siobhan McKenna's program "Here Are Ladies" presented at Oller Hall Thursday evening, November 18.

Molly was just one of an assortment of delicate Irish women the gifted actress chewed up and spat out at us.

I am sure in your memory bank under things to be listened through and endured, is a small card on which is printed. . . "I saw, in person, giving a memorable performance the great (Caruso, Bernhardt, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, the Barrymores etc.) . . unforgetable . . truly a moment of theatrical history. . ." and signed by some bore in your immediate family. Now, here, snug away in Central Pennsylvania was your opportunity to start building up your very own personal collection of GREAT NAMES to parry with your betters. As actuality fades to memory, Siobhan McKenna will be in that hallowed company. Her ragings on stage are similar to the id footprints around that space ship which landed on "The Forbidden Planet" back in 1956. Always you were aware that something greater was happening than what was being seen and heard. Amongst her thrashings, selected women of several Irish writers — O'Casey, Yeats, Synge, Joyce, and Beckett— to name a few, were laid to waste.

Such concentrated misery threw me temporarily back to the early Pleistocene Period when I was attending college. In those dim days, The New Yorker magazine was considered to be the freshman "bible." One waited impatiently for it to appear on the news-stand and as the wires were snapped, releasing it from the publisher's bondage, you slapped your twenty cents into the palm of the Blind Man and hurried off with your precious copy to read it from cover to cover, not once, but several times, as you do old love letters from a lost but requited summer love.

At this time, in this particular rag of a magazine, almost all of the fiction and a major part of the non-fictional articles were penned by Irish writers. Why, the thought would scurry guiltily across the icy wasteland of my mind, why Irish writers? To extend the query, why in the world of literature and theater do Irish writers hold such a unique and accepted place? The question still plagues but, at long last, I think part of this enigma was solved for me Thursday evening.

I believe GOD has a lot to do with it.

See, they're Irish and they write about Irish people. At best, a handful of earth, some rocks, and a few potatoes shipwrecked off the coast of England. Though the writ-

Continued on page 5

Ear of the Needle

by Bob Kraut

"One Fine Morning" Lighthouse — Evolution S3007

Lighthouse has become a veritable beacon among jazz-rock ventures. They're not as tight an aggregation as Blood, Sweat & Tears or Chicago, but then this present edition of Lighthouse has only been together for a comparatively short time. However, if "One Fine Morning" is any indication of what we can expect from them in the future, the B, S & T — Chicago hierarchy may be forced to accept a new member.

Lighthouse is a Canadian band formed by drummer Skip Prokop and pianist Paul Hoffert. While "One Fine Morning" is not their first outing, it is certainly their best. First formed around the 1968 rush that produced a melange of big bands, and largely because of their association with RCA, they spawned three albums that failed to ignite any musical spark. The 1971 version of Lighthouse boasts six new members, and has pared down its numbers from 13 to 11. As far as I can recall, Lighthouse is the only rock troupe other than James Brown's to carry its own string section. But when the band re-grouped, sadly, something had to give . . . So now the string section retains just a viola and a cello from that previous foursome. The strings give them unusual latitude, and allow them to explore, in concert, that soaring string sound that fills so much of recorded rock. Their horn section is different than most as well. Trumpet, trombone, flute, alto, tenor and baritone saxes are all employed from time to time, and give the band a characteristic deeper-throated sound. The addition of singer Bob McBride though, was probably the thing that best shored up the leaky ship. At last we have a vocalist who doesn't affect blackface and still manages to sound funky. He's particularly refreshing after uncovering an endless string of David Clayton-Thomas imitators, one of whom has become Clayton-Thomas himself.

The album's title tune is probably as good as any song yet produced by their competitors. McBride's vocal is startling, the horns are crisp, the strings are soulful, and the entire song definitely leaves one wanting for more. And fortunately, there is a lot more music on this album (almost 50 minutes worth The writing team of Skip Prokop and Paul Hoffert has finally arrived, and their arrangements not only allow the band's soloists room to display their wares, but manage to successfully integrate all eleven members into every song. Hoffert is probably the band's outstanding soloist. On "Old Man" he takes an effervescent vibraharp solo that one would expect from a man who formerly wrote soft drink commercials (for 7-Up I'm sure). He also gets off a fine piano solo on "One Fine Morning" that was spliced out of the single (time being of the essence on AM radio you know). Not far behind him are trumpeter Peter Pantaluk, piercing the air on "Love of a Woman" and on piccolo trumpet in "Sweet Lullabye", and trombonist Larry Smith who displays a mellow vibrato to go with his J.J. Johnson technique.

Lighthouse has put together here a collection of songs that are not only eminently listenable but stylistically varied as well. My personal favorites consist of "Love of a Woman" (another up-tempo rocker), "1849" (A tale about greed for gold in the Old West), "Old Man" (Hoffert's splendid showcase), and "Sweet Lullabye" (it's exactly that!) Evolution Records, a Canadian Company I persume, has finally shown to them the confidence that breeds uniformly fine albums like this. Although the sound is of rather uneven quality, I imagine this record is exactly what you can expect from them in person. There are no over-dubs, and those outstanding group vocals are something you don't expect from a new big band. If you're a big-band-rock freak like I am, you'll be more interested with what's on the reon "One Fine Morning" Lighthouse cord than how it all got there. And has put it all down in vinyl for us. Happily, the Un-Cola's loss is rock music's gain. As Teen-Angel might have put it, "Lighthouse is like nowsville, man!"

Lucky's Discount Shoes Inc.
715 WASHINGDON STREET

ENGLISH'S CARRIAGE HOUSE
Fashions from
John Meyer of Norwich
and
Jonathan Logan
Stop in and Browse

KELLER'S STATIONERY
417 PENN STREET
OFFICE & SCHOOL
SUPPLIES
GREETING CARDS
GIFT WRAP & RIBBON

SEE THE
JOHNNY CARSON
WARDROBE
AT
DOLLINGER'S Shop for Men
711 Washinghon Street
Huntingdon, Pa.

Savadow's
HUNTINGDON
Lovely Fashions For
Lovely Ladies

Black's Jewelry
421 Penn Street
Class Rings — Charms
Pierced Earrings
417 Penn Street

Nell's Beauty Salon
718 WASHINGTON ST.
Phone 643-1180

Complete Line of Jewelry and Gifts
at MUR'S JEWELRY
625 Washington St.

Strickler's
Milk and Ice Cream
Plant Phone — 643-2770
Enjoy a Sunday, Milk Shake or Ice Cream Cone
at
The Strickler Shop
14th & Mifflin Streets

FRANK'S
CLEANING, TAILORING
and PRESSING
Same Day Service
Across from the A&P

14th St. ESSO Servicenter
E. D. "Bunn" Fleck, Prop.
Lubrication—Washing
Minor Repairs
Free Pick-up & Delivery
phone 643-9890

Perspective on Curriculum

by Karl K. Kindig

I would like to consider on a somewhat philosophical level the role of the formal curriculum in an educational system. As I listen to comments about the new curriculum, particularly about the advisability of any curriculum change, I hear little agreement as to what the function of a curriculum is. Although I do not speak as a recognized authority, I would like to offer my analysis for consideration.

If we think of an educational community (Juniata College, for example) as being an organization of people interacting for the purpose of transmitting knowledge, then one function of the formal curriculum can be understood as attempting to provide a basic degree of order to that interaction. This is what might be called the negative function of a curriculum. Generally speaking, the curriculum tends to reduce the uncertainty of purely personal interaction by providing institutionally determined expectations which are seen to be comparatively stable. At this level it defines basic roles of the community's members with respect to their particular interaction within that community. (Community is used here in the restricted sense which relates only to the explicit educational function.) Moreover, it delineates minimal expectations which must be met in order to satisfy the institutional requirements, eg. it gives the minimal graduation requirements and also obligates the administration to provide adequate means of fulfilling those requirements. Hence, the formal curriculum plays much the same role, with respect to the educatonal community, as does the law with respect to the large society. It is a rational mechanism for social contact which provides a basic level of stability in that it is seen to be above purely personal manipulation.

Beyond the negative function we may identify another role for the formal curriculum. Let us call this the positive function. In this sense the curriculum is used instrumentally by the community in order to ally by the community in order to provide some particular kind of educational experience beyond, hopefully, the insured minimum. The differentiation between the positive and negative functions can be seen, by analogy, in the comparison of the two extreme functions of law—preventing Hobbsian anarchy on one hand and affecting social engineering on the other. (See Roscoe Pound's Introduction to the Philosophy of Law for an interesting discussion of this point.)

I believe that much of the current argument can be found between these two perspectives on curriculum. There are those who feel that the new curriculum has been so loosly structured that it does not maintain order within the community. The resulting disorder, they argue, is destructive to efficient education. Others find that traditional curriculums attempt to explicitly structure more than they can really control. Their viewpoint is that so much education actually takes place independant of the formal curriculum that attempts to structure the system too tightly only produces inflexibility and cannot insure better education.

As a matter of personal opinion, I am inclined to agree with the latter position. Although there is a need for students to structure at some level, it has been my experience that learning is more of a personal than institutional phenomenon. Like the man said, you can't legislate morality. (Although you might fine him for discrimination.) A curriculum must be prescriptive, true. But is should be prescriptive on the level of form rather then content. This does not mean that an educational community cannot use the curriculum to help actualize a particular philosophy. It does mean, however, that it is very difficult to insure that this philosophy will be adopted by all the members through the curriculum alone.

wolf FURNITURE

7th & Mifflin
HUNTINGDON

Your home deserves T. L. C. as much as you do

TOTAL LIVING CONCEPT

Logan's

CARPETING FURNITURE and DRAPERIES

CALL 643-0390 OR COME IN

705 WASHINGTON STREET
HUNTINGDON

BUCKY'S ARCO

935 MOORE STREET

COMPLETE SERVICE

and STATE INSPECTION

Phone 643-4185

THE BIG HOUSE

directed by Alfred MacGuffin

It's going to be a fairly grim week down at the Clifton, and it's all our fault.

As much as he might want to be a bestower of beauty and wisdom on his community—and he often does want to be that—the movie house operator must remember that he is first of all a businessman, and as such is subject to some chilly economic realities. One goes like this: if the fans ain't buying canard a l'orange sweetheart, you'd better lay some burgers on the proles real fast or the next dead duck is you.

In the past few months Jim Kalos, manager of the Clifton, has booked a number of good films and has taken a financial pasting on virtually every one. Who Is Harry Kellerman and Why Is He Saying Those Terrible Things About Me? was an intelligently made and ingeniously shot film, with Dustin Hoffman, the closest thing we've got these days to a matinee idol. The night I saw it there were two other people in the theater, and that was one of the big nights of its Huntingdon run. McCabe and Mrs. Miller was another film that died here. It was directed by Robert Altman, who had scored big with M.A.S.H., it starred Julie Christie and Warren Beatty, it was a western, and it had been extravagantly admired by Pauline Kael and by one of the Times critics. But hardly anybody went.

Those two films have had almost inexplicable box office problems even in some urban areas, so maybe we shouldn't be too astonished that they wouldn't float here. But what about a picture that is grossing well in the cities—how does the small town exhibitor make out with it? Carnal Knowledge ran here for a week, and for the first few nights, at least, crowds were fairly heavy. So did the Clifton make money?

Precious little, if any. In the first place the distributors charge the exhibitors a stiff preliminary fee for the privilege of booking pictures that are likely to make money. Then they force the house to play them for at least a week, and finally they grab so much off the ticket sales that the exhibitor may find that the only money he makes is on his popcorn. Seventy percent of everything Kalos took in on Carnal Knowledge went back to the distributor. If he had kept it a second week he could have had a 60-40 split, and if he could play it for six months he would eventually get to the point where only five percent of each ticket sale went back to the source. That's great for a big-city house, but in a town the size of Huntingdon almost everyone who intends to see any movie will see it in the first three days, and for any other days it plays you could play handball off the screen and not bother anybody.

All of this is the beginning of an explanation of why so many theaters all over the country are showing so many cheap skin flicks, and why the Clifton is running The Toy Box from Wednesday until Monday. If the movie is sufficiently sleazy, the theater owner can pick it up for very little, can play it as long as it suits him, and what's more his house will be packed with damp-palmed art lovers every night.

The Toy Box (heh-heh) will be tacky enough for even the most degenerate sensibilities. It was made by the outfit that brought us Tobbacco Roody and Trader Horny, not to mention the incredibly lucrative Southern Comforts ("She made him a slave to the magic in her jugs.") Very classy stuff.

I went to see that last little hummer when it was in town last August, and I found myself wondering why we aren't navel-deep in this sort of thing. All you need to make one is a Bolex, some color stock (not a hell of a lot; the shooting ratio on these things has to be around 1.5 to 1—I don't guess they throw anything away unless it gets torn), a couple of men, at least one of whom should have at least some primitive acting ability, and as many dirty ladies as you can find.

These pictures are shot in one day (the characters take off their clothes a lot, but they never change them), and the one I saw had maybe a three-page script. When they ran past that, it was every man for himself. The plot disappeared, the rudimentary sorts of characterization that had been developed in the first ten minutes vanished, and the continuity broke down completely. The picture didn't have an ending, it just stopped after a while.

The most interesting aspect of Comforts was the bizarre double sexual standard. For the woman, full frontal nudity (as they say) was the rule, often spread-eagled, but for the men it was a very different story. They dropped trow a lot, and some of them performed prodigious feats of endurance, but they seemed to have no sexual equipment; they were smooth underneath, like Victorian sculpture. I found it all very mysterious, though it did go a long way to explain the lesbian proclivities of most of the ladies.

Tuesday the 14th is J.C. Movie night. The show hasn't been definitely set yet, but it is to be one of the recent Ingmar Bergman films, probably The Passion of Anna or Hour of the Wolf. Either of these will show you one of the great moviemakers in the world at what seems to be the most astonishingly creative period of his career. It is the final film that the students taking the course in Bergman's films will see, but even if you're not in the course you ought to go see it, if only to restore Mr. Kalos's faith in human nature.

SKIPPER'S STYLE SHOP
304 7th St. Phone 643-4646
I personally pick out all my styles each month from Manhattan and Brooklyn, N.Y.

LETTERS

Continued from page 2

Station No. 1 is safely locked away from midnight until around 8:30 a.m. Perhaps if we wouldn't leave a considerably large sum of money in desk drawers, but rather place it in banks where it is insured, all these beautiful locks wouldn't be necessary. Friends, I for one am fed up with this school's priorities lately! I hope this letter stimulates some action, because it is about time we the students get a greater amount of consideration. My sincere condolences to the underclassmen! !

Jeffrey A. Naugle

Class of 1972

In recent months the people of East Pakistan have suffered through a tragic chain of events; some of these were natural disasters, and some were man-made.

Last winter a cyclone swept across the countryside and its winds and flood waters claimed thousands of lives and destroyed many thousands of acres of farmland.

The people had no sooner finished counting their dead and had gotten back to work when they were caught in the middle of a bloody civil war. At times it seemed as though this civil war was more than a question of loyalties — a question of a people's right to existance.

Thousands of people left their homes and they were pursued by soldiers, cholera, and hunger.

As many as six million refugees are established in camps on India's border, while several million more may be wandering the countryside and the streets of Calcutta.

The terror continues for the people of East Pakistan and 30,000 new refugees arrive every day from the interior.

Try to imagine a group of people as large as the population of Chicago or New York living in camps with no shelter, a minimum of food, and little medicine.

Each day the numbers increase by the size of one of our largest universities.

India, which strives to feed all of her own hungry people and to battle her own floods, is now burdened with the devastating problems these newcomers have brought with them.

The cost of this vast undertaking is estimated to be over $4 million a day. India does not have these funds and money is not coming in fast enough to avoid an even greater disaster.

The United States government is pledged to help, but even this aid will not be enough. Nine million people need your help, and if India is faced with this burden alone, there is a serious danger of war.

Your school can undertake a campaign on behalf of the refugees. You can begin by organizing a fast, presenting speakers, collecting funds at a benifit program and informing as many others as you can about this tragic situation.

A massive fund-rasing drive is now underway.

Won't you help us?

Sincerely,

Mark Nelson

Michigan State University
East Pakistan
Emergency Refugee Fund

Class Cutters

Continued from page 2

"I must apologize for taking so long to answer; however, your correspondance stirred such a reaction here . . . that it took some time to get everyone's opinion. Everyone who was consulted supported (comps. attendance & punctuality)."

". . . it is silly to have to justify to students such good sense things as attending class, being on time, and measuring . . .knowledge . . . if Juniata students cannot accept Juniata standards, let them transfer to schools with lower standards."

"It would appear that currently at many schools there is a downgrading of the quality of education they offer. Recruiters are very much aware of this trend and are seeking ways to combat it. In some cases, schools or specific depts. within a school have been deleted from recruiting schedules."

"For the past 40 yrs we have recognized a remarkable corre lation between success in college as measured by grades, and success in our company measured in terms of both creative staff work and managerial progress."

". . . I would feel that the standards of your college would be weakened by eliminating the requirement for comp. exams."

"We always solicit the guidance of faculty members in the appraisal of students, primarily to obtain background information about the study habits of the student and the way he organizes his affairs." (re. cutting class and punctuality)

"Many young people in the past have passed their college courses, obtained a degree & then failed on licensing exams. I would feel that students would welcome a comp. for experience."

"I would not knowingly hire a student who was frequently late or cut classes."

"The very process of review — which the comps mandate — most surely will cause the stutent to hit upon relationships that did not occur at the time the material was first presented."

"I would be more likely to hire the person who had been comp. oriented. The concentrated study requirements of the comp. . . . should be developed and practiced, because there are many job requirements that mandate a similar concentration of effort."

"Juniata has always been known for its high standards. This fact has helped to maintain faith in its graduates. It is one reason why we recruit at Juniata . . ."

Juniata

CAMPUS CRIER

December

Wednesday	8	Guy Britton — Ballroom Annex	10:00 A.M. - 7:00 P.M.
		Chess Club — Blue Room	7:00 P.M.
		Spanish Table — Faculty Lounge	4:45 - 6:15 P.M.
		Reading Festival — Warren Kliewer -- Shoemaker Gallery "The Seven Ages of an American"	8:15 P.M
		Wrestling — St. Francis	Away
		Basketball — Federal City	Away
		IVCF Prayer Meeting — Gold Room	5:00 - 5:30 P.M.
Thursday	9	Senior formal photographs — Gold Room
		Hoagie Sale — IVCF in Lesher Kitchen 7:00 P.M..	in dorms 9:00 P.M.
Friday	10	Film — The Wild Bunch — Alumni Hall	8:00 P.M.
		Coffee House — Drew Signor	9:00 P.M.
Saturday	11	IVCF Prayer Meeting — Gold Room	11:30 A.M. - noon
		Wrestling — Lycoming	Away
		Basketball — Lycoming	Away
Sunday	12	Choir Concert — Oller Hall	8:15 P.M.
Tuesday	14	French Table — Faculty Lounge	5:00 - 6:30 P.M.
		Madrigal Dinner — Dining Room	6:00 P.M.
		IVCF meeting — Jackson Conference Room	6:30 P.M.
Wednesday	15	Chess Club — Blue Room	7:00 P.M.
		Spanish Table — Faculty Lounge	4:45 - 6:15 P.M.
		IVCF Prayer Meeting — Gold Room	5:00 - 5:30 P.M.
		Wrestling — Susquehanna	Home
		Reading Festival — Glass Menagerie — Shoemaker Gallery Scenes from The Daughter of the Late Colonel	8:15 P.M.
Thursday	16	Basketball —Lenanon Valley	Away
		Women's Basketball — Mesiah	Home
Friday	17	Christmas Vacation begins

PRO - CON: Black Studies and Black Professors

Is Juniata College degrading itself by not offering black studies or having black professors? This was Pro and Con's question for the week. We must admit we were somewhat taken with the enthusiasm of the responses generated by our topic. It seems that everyone was quite certain about his stand. So, this week we're going to do the column a little differently and just let the people speak for themselves.

"In an educational atmosphere, anything that is different is of some value for education. You learn about things you don't know about and any knowledge which you acquire from a new experience is educational." — Mo Taylor.

"I find it commendable that Juniata has not succumbed to hypocritical social pressures. I don't consider the interest on this campus widespread enough to merit offering of Black studies." — Gary Maclay.

"Black studies are of some value even though it is only an academic exercise. As far as a black professor, he would have to be strong enough to maintain his identity. He would have to be a black man, not a 'colored white man.' A white professor could acquire an extensive knowledge of black history but would lack the important black perspective." — Mo Taylor.

Jeff Koppel — "Juniata, being an independent small liberal arts college, tucked away in the mountains, can easily be isolated from social change. An extra effort is needed to overcome the natural barriers. As far as black studies are concerned, there should be a much wider selection."

Wilfred Norris — "We are too homogeneous; I've kept my eyes open, but there just haven't been opportunities to hire black people. The supply is limited and we can't compete with larger universities."

Dick Shanks — "Black studies would be pertinent because of the civil rights issue. Of course, maybe they could be incorporated into a larger area of study, maybe civil liberties."

"The school is not any less of an academic institution, but because we must be educated in a manner in which we are going to live, a black viewpoint on the faculty could only help us grow." — Courtnaye Rhone.

"I don't think we are degrading ourselves and I don't see any magic in having a few token people on our staff or campus." — Dale Wright.

Sal Azzaro — "There is so much lacking, like brass lessons in the music department, that pointing out one thing is silly. What do we have after black studies—Italian studies?"

Tony Brown — "Juniata has a very good curriculum. I really don't see where a black study program is necessary."

Lenny Brooks — "The fact that Juniata had no black studies or professors didn't sway my decision to come here. I came here for an education. That's more of a social type thing."

There is a larger issue at hand. "It is more fundamental to have a campus where blacks are accepted openly and genuinely. Then the question of black studies and black professors will arrive naturally later. We have a superficial acceptance of black students, but the subtle ways of discrimination have turned blacks off to Juniata.

In past years we've had black students leave this campus because they felt they've been discriminated against, and at the present time some of our black students are thinking of leaving. The basic thing is to have blacks accepted." — Charles Schoenherr.

An interesting thought. . .

NEXT WEEK: L. A. Beeghly Library — Pro and Con.

AARDVARK FANCIERS

AND ALL OTHERS IN NEED OF

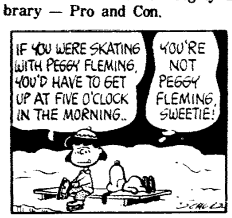
CUSTOM PHOTOGRAPHY

WRITE TO:

BRUCE BORDNER

Box 1224 Phone 643-3683

"What You See Is What You Get"



Student Government Hears Comm. Reports from Board of Trustees

by Valorie Priddle

After approving solicitation for Save The Children Foundation the Student Government at their meeting last week heard committee reports from the Board of Trustees Committees and Faculty Committees.

During the weekend of October 8, 9, and 10, the Board of Trustees descended on the Juniata campus for fall conferences and committee meetings: academic affairs, budget, long range planning, audit, building and grounds, and nominating. At each meeting a student was allowed to be present to give student opinions and to act as a student representative. These students summarized then at the S.G. meeting the decisions made, the improvements that could be made in such a student-government-board relationship, and their overall impressions.

Following the Board of Trustees' reports, other reports, this time on the various faculty committees, were given. The Academic Standards Committee is working on an entire course format for both upperclassmen and frosh, and the Academic Progam Committee is presently wrestling with the question—Can a value centered unit become a part of a freshman's program of emphasis? At the Planning Committee meetings, the subject of tenure is being studied. The evaluation of profs in regard to tenure and periodic appraisals constitute the main concern for the Personnel Committee. Generally, all committees are working on problems and issues which concrn each student in either a direct or indirect way.

In concluding this meeting of resumes, Jon Hunter promised to uncover the Task Force on Governance from the reams of plans and proposals submitted by the Task Force on Curriculum.

LIME

Continued from page 3

ing is sometimes humorous (wry like marmalade), it usually is depressing and terribly ordinary. Sort of, you can appreciate it without actually enjoying it. I think their acceptance and popularity is due in large part by God insisting in our hearts that we attend and take note. For here is what LIFE is all about, and perhaps, we should learn how to enjoy our personal Edens and not carp so much about the Infinite's justice. The Irish people have to wrestle daily with the angels of Poverty and Desolation.

Samuel Beckett's Winnie wakes up in her pit of sand and brightly starts her morning with the optimistic. . ."another Heavenly day" . . . How, then do we start our days, with both feet movable into a world of Plenty and with a healthy Appetite?. . . .or yawning and grumbling in Life's face because we have the ability to move about?

The programs being presented at Oller Hall are chosen for you. Seize these golden opportunities to enlarge your heart and your mind. They only cost you a few minutes of your time but their rewards will skimmer across the river of your experiences forever.

postscript: This program was posthumously rated X; definitely not for childish minds.

JC Edged Out in First Three

Hoopsters Still Seeking First Win

by Stew Kauffman

The Juniata Indians opened their 1971-1972 basketball season on Wednesday, December 1 in Memorial Gymnasium by playing host to Indiana University of Pennsylvania. The Indiana team, although not as big as some of their teams in the past, had little trouble with the Juniata squad. The game ran out of hand for the Indians as Indiana posted an 83 to 49 victory. For the Juniata team, Tom Griffin and Ron Straley turned in very good performances with Straley scoring the first ten points. Tom Rinaldi, the only starter remaining from last year's squad, was not up to par. He has been bothered by a sickness which he contracted in the summer. Paul Valasek and Kevin King showed themselves to be much improved players since last season and will undoubtedly contribute much to this year's efforts.

On Friday evening, Juniata dropped their second game by a score of 78 to 64 to their opponents from Wagoner. Tom Rinaldi, Ron Straley, and Tom Griffin were high scorers for the Indians.

The Indians lost their third in a row on Saturday evening to Delaware Valley. The score was 56 to 49. This game saw injury strike Junior Tom Rinaldi and may keep him out of action for a while.

The Indiana Squad shows their shooting prowess. photo by Rick Replogle

The J.C. squad shows some shot-blocking prowess.

Philosophy Notice

The Department of Philosophy is considering offering a unit (course) in the philosophy of mathematics (not probability theory) next year — 1972-3. One determining factor will be whether there is any demand for such a unit. If you are interested, please contact Prof. Hartman, 416 Founders.

The unit will be open to both mathematics and non-mathematics majors, but will be aimed specifically toward those who use mathematical techniques in their disciplines. In the beginning, the unit will introduce the basic factual material needed (e.g. naive set theory, first-order predicate calculus, some axiomatic set theory). The main work will thereafter consist in readings, research, and discussion in the philosophy of mathematics, the writing of one or two short papers, and a longish (12-20 pp.) term paper.

JC Photo Course

Many people have asked Mr. McBride about the nature of the photography course being offered next semester. It is to be a basic course introducing the student to the use of the camera and the light meter and to developing and printing. The "Zone System" will be used to aid the student in previsualizing his finished print.

The photograph will be considered as an extension of printmaking; i.e. as a fine art medium. A prerequisite is indicated on the registration information sheet but permission of the instructor is readily given. Also, the class meeting period has been changed from 8:00-10:00 MWF to 4:00 MWF. During this time the prints will be discussed and films will be viewed. In addition to this time the student will be expected to do his shooting and developing outside of class and will be scheduled for four hours in the darkroom, during which time he is to do his printing. The scheduling of the darkroom time makes it necessary to limit the class to ten students. The student will supply his own material.

The Art Department will offer a seminar, open to any upper classman, on Italian Renaissance Art. It will meet at 9:00 MWF.

C.S.C. Announces Three Test Dates

The U.S. Civil Service Commission today announced three test dates for 1972 summer jobs in Federal agencies.

Candidates whose applications are received by December 3, 1971, will be tested on January 8, 1972; those whose applications are received by January 7 will be tested February 12; and those whose applications are received by February 2 will be tested March 11. Applications postmarked after February 2 will not be accepted.

Complete instructions for filing, and information on opportunities available, are contained in CSC Announcement No. 414, Summer Jobs in Federal Agencies, which may be obtained from any area office of the Commission, many major post offices, most college placement offices, or from the U.S. Civil Service Commission, Washington, D.C.

Applicants rated eligible in 1971 need not take the written test again unless they wish to improve their scores. They will be sent a special form by December 1 to update their qualifications and indicate their availability for employment in 1972.

Very Clever

Continued from page 1

body littered scene of violence to the peaceful serene sky, Russ evokes the feeling of release, the subsidence of pain. As the mutilated marine begins his escape from the unbearable torment of his wounds, he looks heavenward, forgetting what is around him, and focusing his attention on the billowing cloud that hovers above him. He utters simply, "Biggest cloud I ever saw." They are his last words.

As I thought over what I had witnessed, I couldn't help thinking that maybe creative artists know more of what they're about than I previously suspected when they droned on before the audience. How many of us are aware of the author when we read a novel—and should we be? Isn't it finally the work that is the most important thing? Mr. Russ showed us on one occasion that evening that he could have given us a performance, if he wanted to. I'm glad that he chose instead to give us an experience.

Andy's Tire Sales
4th & Washington Sts.
TEXACO PRODUCTS

UNION NATIONAL BANK
Huntingdon's Growing Bank
UNB
★ A FULL SERVICE BANK ★

The Good Ole Days

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 3, 1935

STUDENTS SOLVE SEX APPEAL PROBLEM IN ROUSING FORUM

The mighty problem with which Juniata long has wrestled was solved last Friday morning in a modicum of time by a student forum. The problem as every one knows, was, how to create more sex appeal in the Juniata Faculty.

This tremendous difficulty has always ranked with other ancient untieable Gordian knots, such as how to dispose of the college's excess finances, how to effect the removal of Prof. Connor's mustachios, how to curb Dr. VanOrmer's inveterate tendency to repeat himself, to say nothing of the more important problem of working out a code language to decipher our revered President's handwriting. The successful solution of the first colossal difficulty by student reform, will undoubtedly lead to an attempt at the others, it is believed.

George Clemens, as chairman of the forum, opened the discussion with a concise statement, as to Juniata's known deficiency in respect to the sex appeal of the college faculty. He felt such a condition was lamentable and avoidable. As a tentative suggestion he put forth the idea that a public ban should be placed on the wearing of any apparel of the vintage of 1928 or older. Since Merle Heffner was already on his feet waving both hands for attention, Mr. Clemens yielded. Heffner brought forth the suggestion that the discussion should be limited to the female part of the faculty. Chris Wenger demanded attention. He disagreed violently with Mr. Heffner and wanted to know if men didn't have sex appeal, what did they have?

After a fierce argument order was again restored. In the instant of calm, Margaret Long arose and asked a return to nature on the part of the faculty, exclaiming that the complete freedom of the natural man was most appealing. Next Woods Robinson declared that sex appeal was a matter of being upright in a changing world and stated he, as a college student of 1935, was happy. Just what the relation was every one failed to see.

The solution which was unanimous and without discussion came from Mark King, who arose and in a wild and flaming burst of oratory propounded the startling thesis that it was impossible to teach old dogs new tricks and therefore proposed that the faculty be dismissed and that a committee of Horace Klenk, John Long and Floyd Wright be sent to Hollywood to select a new one.

Prayer for Human Concern

by Dr. Jose Nieto

Oh God, where are you? Where are you when people suffer and despair? Where were you in the earthquakes of Chile and Peru? Where were you in the senseless and and devastating sea-waves that smothered young child and adult alike in Pakistan, where human life and cattle were wasted and thousands sick and starving unto death. Where are you in the midst of the inhuman war abroad in Vietnam, and at home, in the midst of the slum, the deprived, the helpless, the Negro and the White?

Something is rotten on this earth of yours; something is very sick in society and private life.

We do not want to blame you, but we question you, question your actions and your love.

Were you in the awesome destructive power of the earthquakes or were you the earthquake? Were you in the immense gigantic waves or were you the waves? This we do not know, Oh od! In fact we do not know whether you still exist. Didn't you die in Jesus Christ for love of mankind? Are you life or death, or both or none? Are you good or evil, or both or none? Are you beyond life and death and untouched by good and evil? If so, do our prayers mean anything to you? Do you interfere in human affairs or are we coercively ruled by the laws of nature or by the relativity of these laws which we experience as absolute in our lives? These are but a few awful questions which are bogging our minds and our trembling and restless hearts, and we are afraid there is no answer. Your answer is silence. Yes we are growing accustomed to the silence of you God, but we cannot be accustomed to the silence of you as the God of love.

We do not ask for miracles, we do not ask for the impossible dream of the true brotherhood and freedom of mankind, but we ask you for strength to carry out this dream of ours which you perhaps instilled in our fragile hearts long ago before we even realized that we were men. Man is a lonely creature in a lonely universe, if you God, are not aware of us. We stand alone on our two feet gazing toward the future, but is there a future without hope?

We are just beginning to celebrate another Advent Season which is the season of hope in the Christian Church. We join with the Prophets, the dreamers, the visionaries of the Old and New Testaments and all mankind looking forward to the redemption of this earth. We do not ask you for Heaven or Paradise, but give us this Earth once again unpolluted and clean, where with peace and love we may start over again and have a taste of that beautiful dream-symbol of the Messianic Age and its Prince of Peace: Christ the Child-Man, and his love for mankind.

CURRICULUM

Old is good
And new is bad,
Stir things up
And we get sad.
Change is awful,
Progress worse,
The end is always
In a hearse.
Hurry! Backtrack
Lest we sink,
Horrors, we might
Have to THINK!
Prepared by:
The Freshman Task Force
To Save Stagnation
For Juniata

Fashion-styled Leisure Footwear
Daniel Green comfy Slippers sold at
Westbrooks Shoe Store

THE JUNIATIAN

VOL. XLVIII, NO. 11 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | December 15, 1971

John Fike Resigns As Vice-President

Dr. John N. Stauffer, president of Juniata College, announced today that John T. Fike has submitted his resignation as vice president and treasurer of the college effective Jan. 15, 1972. Dr. Stauffer noted that Mr. Fike plans to enter private business in Lakeland, Florida, a project on which he has been working for some time.

In accepting Mr. Fike's resignation, Dr. Stauffer stated, "It is with very deep regret that I accept John Fike's decision. He has been largely responsible for the financial management of Juniata College for 19 years. On behalf of the Board of Trustees and the College community, I want to express our deep gratitude for his faithful and earnest efforts, and we wish him well in his new endeavor."

Since 1952 Fike has been treasurer of Juniata College with the responsibility for managing the college's investments, endowment and acquisitions. He was named a vice president by the Board of Trustees in 1963.

A native of Somerset, Pennsylvania, he attended Somerset High School and in 1935 received a B.S. degree from Juniata College. Following his college graduation, he managed The Tire Retreading Co. in Somerset, Pa., until 1938 when he joined his father in operating the Fike Tire Service in Waynesboro, Pa. From 1949 to 1952 he served as business manager of Bridgewater College in Virginia, before coming to Juniata College.

In all communities in which he has lived, Mr. Fike has been active in alumni, civic and church affairs. He has served as president of Juniata College alumni groups in Somerset and Waynesboro, as a deacon of the Waynesboro Church of the Brethren, a president of the Waynesboro Rotary Club, as a director and secretary of the Bridgewater (Va.) Rotary Club, and as a leader in work for crippled children in Franklin County, Pa.

Formerly a borough councilman in Huntingdon, he has been chairman of the Commission of Stewards at the Stone Church of the Brethren as well as secretary-treasurer of the Huntingdon Rotary Club and a director of Huntingdon Business and Industry, Inc.

Currently serving as treasurer of the Middle Pennsylvania District of the Church of the Brethren and the Stone Church, he is a director of the Union National Bank and Trust Company as well as a member of the Huntingdon Borough Planning Committee and the Eastern Association of College and University Business Officers.

Mr. Fike is married to the former June E. Hoover of Waynesboro, who is also a Juniata College graduate. Their son, John, who is working in Elgin, Ill., and their daughter, Nancy, who is married to R. Joel Knepper of Mount Union, are also graduates of Juniata College.

GRASS ROOTS

Compiled by Kim Hershberger and Donna Trelease

Each week, the Grass Roots staff selects, at random, the name of a Juniata student, and ask him to contribute an article, impromptu, concerning anything he chooses. What follows is the result of this week's chance soliciting:

Sketch by Sharon Chilcoat

The cold shadow of the cloud swept across the distant gold and orange splattered mountain side. I had ridden into the barrens where grow only small pine trees, shrubs and grass. The landscape was broken only by an occasional lifeless tree. There were no farms or houses in sight. The deep blue sky, with contrasting black and billowing white clouds being swept along by the biting cold wind, added to the desolate yet beautiful loneliness and I felt alone.

The wind blew, the sun shone and I saw in a moment all my dreams and hopes; and I was unafraid, yet, still I was alone.

by Jeanine Bender

Spoofy Doof Makes Big Hit With Kids

photo by Bruce Bordner

Kim Kochin reads to follow Spoofydoofs.

by Patrick Minnick

The Spoofy Doofs' Funnybone, a children's play produced under the auspices of Student Executive Council to aid the Huntingdon Art League was shown December 4, 5, and 7 to the obvious delight of approximately 550 youngsters between the ages of 4 and 12.

The plot dealt with the Spoofy Doofs, a group of laughing children, who attempted to give a funnybone to the Hurry Scurry, a frowning adult. Audience participation was emphasized by members of the cast who ran through the seats asking children where the Hurry Scurry could be found. Another added enticement to the complete enjoyment of the production was the distribution of lollipops to the children.

Mrs. Doris Goehring, faculty assistant to the production, expressed her gratitude to Mr. Kalos at the Clifton who cancelled the Saturday Matinee, thereby eliminating any conflicts with the showing of The Spoofy Doofs' Funnybone. A donation of 25 cents was requested from the audience, although it was not mandatory. Contributions from the viewers came to over one hundred dollars which was given to the Huntingdon Art League.

Mrs. Goehring also noted that two Juniata students, Paulette Boyer and Vicki Harris had done commendable jobs as directors of the production.

READING FESTIVAL

The Fall Reading Festival will perform in Shoemaker Gallery on Wednesday, November 10, 1971, at 8:15 p.m. The program will include: Scenes from "Othello" as read by Richard Hunter and William Hofelt. Selected poems of James B. Elmore, "The Bard of Alamo" by Gerald Croce. Selected poems of William Butler Yeats as read by Bruce Davis.

J.C. Purchases Reynolds Building for Ceramics

Juniata College has purchased the H. T. Reynolds and Sons, Inc., building supply complex, located at Cold Springs Road and College Avenue.

In announcing the acquistion, Dr. John N. Stauffer, president of the college, stated that the property will be improved since it will become part of the college campus and is adjacent to residential areas. He also stated, "The cost of the acquisition is covered by capital gift funds; it is not covered by student fees."

At least one of the structures on the property will be demolished when the college obtains full ownership. Several college functions will be accommodated in the remaining facilities. These include the ceramics program of the Art Department.

According to Dr. Stauffer, "For some time there has been a need for more space in which to store and mix clays and kilns of a size which cannot be accommodated in Carnegie Hall where the Shoemaker Gallery and art studios are located."

Mr. Alexander T. McBride, Assistant professor of art, is in charge of the fine arts program, and the ceramics courses are taught by Mr. Jack G. Troy, a part-time Assistant Professor.

photo by f. c. mason

Chas. Albright and Judy Swartley examine their work at J.C.'s newly acquired pot shop.

A second use of parts of the property will be for storage of materials by the buildings and grounds department, along with equipment such as mowers and snow plows.

The quonset building and storeroom have been turned over to the college, and the ceramics program is in the process of moving there. The rest of the property will be turned over to the college in April.

Crafts Room Makes New Addition to Ellis Hall

by Anne Dutlinger

The Crafts Room has opened in Ellis Hall in order to provide the students with the space and materials to develop skills in such crafts as candlemaking, block printing, weaving, tie-dye, batik, woodcarving, and leathercraft. The room is open at different times during the day and night, managed by students with different crafts skills and interests. There are books on each respective craft along with the supplies. The books were obtained through a donation by the Student Government, and the initial purchase of supplies was possible through the funding by the Center Board. The success of the Crafts Room will depend upon the interest of the students. It should be realized that the room is as much a place to learn and experiment as is any academic pursuit and is in no way any less legitimate. It is as important to fulfill one's creative potential as it is to expand one's philosophy. You do what you think, and you are what you do. More students are needed to help keep the crafts room open, for there are times that remain unfilled by the present volunteers. The Crafts Room is located in Ellis Hall beside the bookstore.

photo by f. c. mason

John Knouse prepares to make candles in the new Ellis Hall crafts room.

NOTICE

JUNIATIAN READERS

"The Juniatian" will not be published on December 22 or December 29, 1971, or on January 5, 1972, in keeping with stated staff policy which allows for the discontinuance of publishing during vacation and examination periods.

The next "Juniatian" Volume XLVIII, No. 12, will appear on January 12, 1972.

Letters to the Editor

Letters to the editor should be addressed to: Editor, The Juniatian, Box 667, Juniata College, Huntingdon, Pa. 16652. The editors reserve the right to print only non-libelous and responsible content and to edit all letters and commentaries submitted to The Juniatan. The staff also reserves the right to publish all full signatures unless the writer can supply valid reason for omitting his name.

To the editor:

A lonely Vietnam veteran lies wounded in a hospital. He has come home. There are no flags waving, no parades honoring his return and no songs written about his bravery. All he seems to hear and see are cries about this "immoral war." He thinks no one really cares about the sacrifices he has made for his country. . .

Someone does care about the wounded Veterans. You care, and so do millions of Americans who appreciate the hardships endured by these men. Over 30,000 wounded are still hospitalized. How can we show our gratitude to these gallant men as they face the tough road ahead to rehabilitation?

The answer is Project Appreciation.

Project Appreciation is a united effort by patriotic citizens to demonstrate how we care. Organized by Young Americans for Freedom, Project Appreciation distributes thousands of Appreciation Kits to wounded Vietnam veterans in hospitals. These kits are filled with personal items (toothpaste, pens, writing paper, etc.) that the veterans need so badly.

Coming voluntarily from generous citizens, the Appreciation Kits are a tremendous morale booster to our men.

Young Americans for Freedom is particularly well-suited to head up this project. As the largest anti-Communist youth organization —with 66,000 members in over 800 chapters—these young patriots are volunteering their time to pack and deliver the kits to the hospitals. Unlike the far left radicals who can only criticize our boys, YAFers are grateful citizens.

Reaching these wounded veterans is only possible when enough good citizens like yourself support it financially. Each Appreciation Kit costs $9.20. We need many contributions of $9.20, $18.40, $55.20, $92.00 and $181.00. Keep in mind, these Kits contain personal items not provided by the government. . . Will you help?

Can Project Appreciation repair a GI's shattered limbs? No, of course not; but in a small way Project Appreciation is letting our servicemen know Americans do care.

Open your heart to our wounded veterans. Please help.

Sincerely,
Martha Mitchell

Finding their way to the office in the basement of Ellis Hall has been a major complaint of all "Juniatian" staff members. Due to frequent thefts in the bookstore, getting to the Juniatian office has become like negotiating a maze. In the evening the office cannot be entered from within the building. In the rain and snow the members of the paper must trudge about outside Ellis Hall to find a way of getting to the office.. It seems rediculous that it must be this way. Clearly the building was poorly planned if situations like this must occur. It seems a simple solution to the problem is all that is required. If the thefts are the big problem Will Brandau makes them out to be, then let the doors be replaced with stronger ones for more security. But let's stop fooling ourselves. This building was built for the studnts of the college; it should not be locked up like a prison, as it is now. I, for one would like to see this rather sticky situation cleared up once and for all.

photo by Rick Replogle

Cathy Podgorski meditates as she gives blood to the Huntingdon Bloodmobile.

Lime

by Edward Kinchley Evans

Like a tied-tongue affliction. it was embarrassing to see the death of a Myth in the recent documentary which flickered twice over the silver screen at Alumni Hall. As if unable to believe that fame is fleeting. The American Dreamer (a film recording the death throes of Dennis Hopper) lit up briefly Friday, December 3, sputtered and recaught Saturday night, December 4, before finally extinguishing itself in it's own slippery effluvia.

This particular "strip-tell it like I am—tease" was made after "Easy Rider" and before Hopper's new movie "The Last Movie" was released. He seemed to be running his dirt clogged fingernails across the blackboard nerves of all his underlings who were responsible for not knowing exactly what he was 'seeing' in his mind's eye and obviously 'not getting' it on the forty hours of film shot way down up yonder in the mountains of Peru, set location for "The Last Movie." Constantly pulling at his beard as if this action might in some way aid him in formulating all the deep thoughts he was thinking about "creativity and stuff like that," Dennis eyed the camera, rolled his dark American eyes, and ominously squeeked. . . . .that if his new movie was not accepted for the Masterpiece it was, then he was just afraid that his High Hopes for an enlightened audience 'out there,' well, they just weren't there yet.

On posters, scattered throughout the frames of "The American Dreamer,' Andy Warhol's solemn presence proclaimed the death of the written word. Doing an unintentional Charlie McCarthy. Dennis, our boy chick, chortled something that sounded like "man . . reading is dead!"

I do not know if you are familiar with Warhol or his work, but Andy is no young Christ dispensing magic touches to purify the unclean. He is rather on in years (age wise), has read (it's very easy to say . . don't eat . . if your own belly is surfeited), and has reached that stage of enlightenment where the old proverb . . . one picture is worth a thousand words . . . has been altered and re-welded together. With an acetylene vision, Warhol has perfected the suicidal weapon of self-indictment. He places the chosen victims in front of a stationary camera with a tape recorder and unmercifully allows them to talk extemporaneously for as long as their vanity will permit.

For a few brief moments, they glitter like Exotic Creatures caught in the spiderweb sky of the Underground Press, then, under the placid eye of the unfeeling machine

continued on page 4

Perspective on Curriculum

by Karl K. Kindig

As it now stands, the College places some form of restriction upon twenty-five of the thirty-four units required for graduation under the New Curriculum. In addition to four Homan Existence (two Historical and two Analytical), two Modes of Thought, the Writing Program, of Emphasis. The remaining nine units may be taken as electives. At the next faculty meeting (January) the Program Committee will present a proposal which if passed will alter this configuration.

The Committee found that there may be students who wish to include certain units, which have been used to satisfy some other curricular requirement in the Program of Emphasis. For example, a student may wish to pursue a Program which could (or even should) logically include a unit of Human Existence-Historical, a unit which (obviously) may be used to satisfy his Human Existence requirement. The question which arises from this situation is whether a single unit may be used to satisfy more than one requirement, i.e., can a unit be listed in two places on a transcript.

In analyzing this question the Committee found that to answer absolutely "no" would be somewhat discriminatory against those students who wished to follow "value centered" Programs of Emphasis and would be inconsistent with the most flexible uses of the College's resources. However, to allow unrestricted double listing could give those students who did so as many as nineteen electives, thus creating a bias against those students whose Programs do not lend themselves to value centered units. In resolving these two extremes the Committee proposes that students who can justify the inclusion of units into their Program of Emphasis which are also used for satisfying other curricular requirements be permitted to do so in an "extended Program." In other words, the student would be permitted to include these units in addition to the required fifteen, not in place of them. Thus a student may receive graded credit for these units if they can be justified as a legitimate extension to his Program of Emphasis.

